

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

The aim of this work is to present a complete digest, under one arrangement, of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the territory and state of Iowa from its organization in 1838 (the first case reported being decided, however, in 1839) until its March term, 1887. Cases finally decided at that term on rehearing are also given, so far as they are to appear in Volume LXX of Iowa Reports. All the cases in that volume are included except a few which were first announced at the March term.

In view of the fact that the federal courts in Iowa follow and administer the Iowa law so far as the determination of cases before them depends upon the construction or application of the state constitution or statutes, or upon state decisions which have become a settled rule of property, and that in certain classes of cases the decisions of the state Supreme Court are subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, it has been thought advisable to incorporate notes of all published opinions of such courts in cases tried in, or appealed from, Iowa, so far as they relate to Iowa law or to subjects peculiar to this state. Such cases will, it is believed, be found especially interesting and valuable in relation to assignments for the benefit of creditors, chattel mortgages, municipal bonds, and public land grants in Iowa.

The work is founded upon a thorough examination, one by one, of all the cases within the scope thus suggested. During this examination full and separate notes were made of every point in each case, and in the form in which it was thought the case ought to be stated under the title or subdivision to which the point related. When all the cases had been thus examined, and the notes written out, all the notes relating to each title were brought together, classified under convenient sub-headings and arranged in systematic order, and then entirely re-written with reference to each other, so as to form, as far as possible, a connected, consistent statement, in successive paragraphs, of the law as announced by the courts. The whole matter of the book has, therefore, been twice written, and has then been revised, before putting it in type, after which the proof was carefully read and the references were verified so that they might be made entirely accurate.

In choosing main titles under which to arrange the matter the author has not followed any theoretical notions of his own, but has yielded to general usage, so far as that is well established. Beyond this, the grouping of subjects in the Code has been given some weight, such arrangement having been in use, practically unchanged, since the adoption of the Code of 1851, and being, therefore, presumably well known to the profession. Thus, under ESTATES OF DECEDENTS are collected, in appropriate subdivisions, the cases relating to executors and administrators, distribution, descent and dower. Under the head of CRIMINAL LAW have been gathered the cases relating to the whole topic, including the general doctrines of criminal responsibility, the definitions of particular crimes with the rules as to allegation and proof peculiar to each, and the cases as to criminal procedure in the district court, and also in inferior courts. Under JUSTICE OF THE PEACE will be found the whole body of decisions relating to the jurisdiction and procedure of justices in civil cases, including proceedings on appeal from, or writ of error to, their courts. Under COURTS the organization and jurisdiction of particular courts of record are considered, as also their terms, records, rules, etc.

The body of the decisions relating to proceedings in courts of record in this state in civil cases is arranged under the following main heads, found in their proper alphabetical order, with other main headings, to wit: ACTIONS, relating to the form of action, survival, etc.; VENUE, or the place of bringing action, including change of venue; LIMITATION OF AC-TIONS, or the time within which action must be brought; CONTINUANCE; PARTIES; ORIGINAL NOTICE, or the commencement of action; APPEARANCE; PLEADINGS; PROCEDURE, or the form and method of trial and the return of general and special verdicts in courts of original jurisdiction; INSTRUCTIONS; JUDGMENTS; DEFAULTS; EXECUTIONS, including levy, exemptions, sales, redemption and sheriff's deed; COSTS; EXCEPTIONS; NEW TRIALS; APPEALS, covering the entire subject of appeal to the supreme court in civil cases, and the procedure and practice on such appeal.

It has been thought best to arrange matter systematically, under well-known general heads, rather than divide it up under a number of smaller main titles not so likely to suggest themselves to all as proper heads under which to look for the subject-matter. Thus under MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS are given the cases relating to public and quasi corporations, in general, and also, under proper sub-heads, those relating particularly to cities and towns, counties and townships, their organization and government, powers and liabilities. School districts are placed, however, with the rest of the school system, under SCHOOLS. Under NEGLIGENCE, the cases stating the general doctrines of that subject, including contributory negligence and negligence of fellow-servant, are placed, whilst under RAILROADS are collected the numerous cases relating to the liability of those corporations for negligence of their officers, agents and employees, as well as those relating to their organization, right of way, construction, operation, etc. The cases as to the peculiar rules determining the liability of carriers of goods and passengers, applicable to railroads in common with other corporations or persons engaged in the business of transportation, are all placed under the general head of CARRIERS.

The subject-matter embraced in each title is, where it is extensive enough to make subdivision desirable, classified under sub-headings and smaller divisions, all printed in analytical form under the main heading, and carried through at the top of the page by corresponding numbers and letters, so that any part of the subject may be readily found; and the matter is further subdivided and rendered accessible by catchwords, in bold-faced type, at the beginnings of paragraphs. These catch-words are applicable to succeeding paragraphs until other such words intervene.

In the endeavor to refer to each case on every point on which a lawyer might desire to see that opinion, it often happens that a case is cited to a proposition not to be found in the head-note. It also frequently happens that propositions are given from opinions where they are stated merely as dicta, or by way of argument. It has not seemed advisable to attempt to discriminate between cases as to their respective authority, and where they are inconsistent, that fact is made apparent, but the cases are allowed to speak, each for itself, unless one has formally overruled another, when that fact is stated. Sometimes a point discussed in a dissenting opinion, but not in the principal opinion in the case, is digested, but the fact that it is found in a dissenting opinion is always stated. Beyond this, no notice is taken of dissenting opinions, nor of the fact of dissent, that not being a matter of any importance in determining what cases it will be desirable to consult on any particular point. In short, this work is intended as a guide to the reported cases.

Where decisions are based upon statutory provisions, such provisions are either set out in foot-notes, or briefly referred to in the statement of the decision. If made under statutes different from those now in existence, that fact is stated. A few cases are upon statutory provisions so entirely obsolete that no statement thereof is made, and these and a few other cases in which, for peculiar reasons, no principle is discussed or decided, are not digested, although they are preserved in the table of cases.

In stating the cases the aim has been to give not merely the abstract legal proposition decided or referred to, but briefly the vital fact or facts to which such proposition is applied. While avoiding the prolix and complicated statements of facts which are sometimes made, tending to confuse rather than to enlighten, it has been sought to avoid also that bald announcement of legal rules, many of them long since trite and axiomatic, which are of but little assistance in guiding the lawyer to the cases really in point on the question under investigation. The utility of modern case law lies largely in the application of familiar rules to peculiar states of facts rather than in the repetition of well established propositions; and while it has been the constant aim to secure the greatest practicable brevity, it has not been thought wise to sacrifice clearness.

Where a case relates to different subjects it has been unhesitatingly put under each, unless it forms one of a group of cases, closely related; in that event the aim has been to collect all together in one place and by a cross-reference incorporate them into other titles to which they may be pertinent, the object being not so much to economize space as to make it possible to bring all the cases relating to the same particular matter into one statement, and enable the person consulting the book to be sure, after following a limited and definite line of search, that he has found all the cases relating to the point in hand. General cross-references suggesting an indefinite and unlimited search, which will often prove fruitless, have been entirely discarded, except where the whole of the matter under another title is to be indicated, and cross-references are to definite sections or subdivisions where the very matter referred to is to be found.

It is sometimes thought that the alphabetical arrangement of the contents of a digest renders an index unnecessary; but it is evident that there are many subjects to which some reference is found under different titles, which cannot properly be made distinct titles in themselves, and yet to which it is important to be able to turn at once. For instance, there may be cases referring to crops under various titles, such as real property, executions, conveyances, mortgages, landlord and tenant, etc., but it would not be practicable to have that as a distinct title, bringing under it a heterogeneous collection of cases without any unity of principle. The references in the index under that word will show what sections of each subject relate to crops.

Cases are referred to by names of parties and volume and page of the report where the case commences. References to volume LXX of Iowa Reports are necessarily left blank in the first volume, which goes to press before that volume of reports is in type, but in the second volume many, if not all, of such references can be by pages, and probably the pages of all such cases can be inserted in the table of cases before it finally goes to press. In any event cases from that volume can readily be found by reference to the table of cases in the volume itself, when issued.

In view of a lack of uniformity in the reports as to the method of giving names of cases, some general rules have been adopted. In case of partnership names, or names of coparties, the first only is used. In case of corporate names the first significant word is given in full while others are abbreviated where practicable, enough being retained, if possible, to preserve the individuality of the name, but the name of the place is omitted where it is not the first word. Where a firm or corporate name commences with the christian name of an individual, that is discarded and the surname only is preserved. In giving names of counties, the name comes first followed by "county." Cities and towns are designated by name without prefixing or adding "city of" or "town of." The names of school districts being obscure, and seldom remembered, these corporations are designated as "District Tp," or "Independent Dist.," those being the first words of the names authorized by statute (Code, § 1716) for such corporations, a usual abbreviation being adopted for the second.

A table of all the cases in the Iowa Reports, and such cases decided by the federal courts as are included in this work, is added, the cases being arranged alphabetically, as to defendants' as well as plaintiffs' names. The peculiar features of this table are that, in the first place, it shows, by title and section, where each case is referred to in the digest, so that it is not necessary to look up each reference to find under what subject the case is stated; in the second place, it shows by volume and page each reference to that case on each particular subject, in subsequent Iowa cases, and whether in the subsequent case it is followed, cited, distinguished, questioned, or overruled. The subsequent history of the case, on the very point referred to, is thus shown. For instance, the case of Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24 Iowa, 515, has been cited a number of times with entire approval, as to points therein decided with reference to damages and negligence, while it has been lately overruled on a point relating to limitation of actions. The table of cases accordingly shows on what subjects it has been cited and on what subject overruled. Much pains and great labor have been bestowed upon this feature, and it is believed it will be found exhaustive and very valuable. It combines under one alphabetical arrangement all the advantages of an ordinary table of cases and a table of cases cited, overruled, etc., such as is sometimes separately given.

This work was commenced by the author more than six years ago, and he has been continuously, though not exclusively, engaged upon it to the present time. He now offers it to the profession, believing it to be as full, complete, accurate and concise as he is able to make it.

In conclusion the author takes pleasure in acknowledging the kindness of Hon. E. C. Ebersole, the present Reporter of the state Supreme Court, by whom he has been favored with sheets of Volume LXIX of the state reports in advance of publication, and a list of cases to appear in Vol. LXX, thus enabling him to insert in their proper places the cases from those volumes. Promptness in the publication of the decisions has made it possible to bring this digest down to a very recent date.

Statement of, for MECHANIC'S LIEN, see that title, §§ 48-49.

Accounting, see that heading in Index.

1. What constitutes: A charge for money due on an executed contract may form one of the items of a running account: Buford v. Funk, 4 G. Gr., 498.

2. Items may be properly included as a part of a current account, although there exists between the parties a special contract as to the rate of charge for such items: Mills v. Davies, 42-91.

3. An objection that a finding in an action upon an account is not on an issue submitted, because it shows that several items were furnished under a contract between the parties, is not well founded, because a recovery could be had upon the account, although the items were furnished under a contract: Haywood v. Woods, 28-563.

4. The account in a particular case held to be an open account: Wing v. Page, 62-87.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

I. FORM AND EFFECT; WHO MAY TAKE.

II. WHO MAY MAKE THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

III. LIABILITY OF OFFICER.

IV. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF TAX DEEDS.

As to the recording, see RECORDING ACTS.

I. FORM AND EFFECT; WHO MAY TAKE.

1. Not essential: While the acknowledgment is necessary for the admission of the instrument to record, it is not essential to its validity as between the parties or as to persons having notice in fact: Gould v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 82; Miller v. Chittenden, 2-315, 360; Blain v. Stewart, 2-378; Dussaume v. Burnett, 5-95, 104; Brinton v. Seever, 12-389; Haynes v. Seachrest, 13-455; Carleton v. Byington, 18-482; Simms v. Hervey, 19-273, 287; Lake v. Gray, 30-415; Morse v. Beale, 68-463.

2. The want of acknowledgment cannot be made a ground for objecting to the introduction of an instrument in evidence: Jones v. Berkshire, 15-248.

3. The instrument would be valid as between the parties, and also as to third parties, provided notice could be brought home to them: Ibid.

If not acknowledged, or the acknowledgment is defective, the instrument cannot be recorded; or, if recorded, the record will not impart constructive notice: See RECORDING ACTS, II.

4. Form of certificate:¹ What sufficient: The exact language of the statute need not be followed by the officer in his certificate, but words of the same import are sufficient: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1-413; Tiffany v. Glover, 3 G. Gr., 387; Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5-157.

5. Therefore, held, that the words "well known" were sufficient in place of "personally known," and the words "the within named," etc., sufficiently referred to the parties as being "the identical persons whose names are affixed," etc.: Bell v. Evans, 10-353.

6. A certificate which does not state that the party acknowledging the instrument was "personally known" to the officer "to be the identical person," etc., or use words of similar import, is fatally defective: Reynolds v. Kingsbury, 15-238; Brinton v. Seever, 12-389.

7. The omission of the word "personally" before "known" renders the certificate defective: Gould v. Woodward, 4 G. Gr., 82.

8. But such omission is not fatal where the other words used necessarily imply personal knowledge in the official: Todd v. Jones, 22-146; Rosenthal v. Griffin, 23-263.

9. The word "voluntary" is of the essence of the acknowledgment, and in the absence of that or an equivalent word the certificate will be invalid: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1-413; Newman v. Samuels, 17-523.

10. But the fact that the party acknowledged the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed may be shown by the tenor and form of the certificate, as well as by the use of the very words of the statute: Dickerson v. Davis, 12-353.

11. The essentials of a certificate of acknowledgment considered generally: Bell v. Evans, 10-353.

12. The omission of even an essential word, where it is apparently a mere clerical error, will not invalidate the certificate: Scharfenburg v. Bishop, 35-60.

13. The certificate is not to the genuineness of the signature, but to the fact that the party acknowledged the instrument, and the acknowledgment is sufficient although the signature may have been written by another for the grantee: Morris v. Sargent, 18-90.

14. Evidence: The certificate is prima facie evidence of the fact of acknowledgment, but is not conclusive, and may be overcome by other evidence, the burden being upon the party seeking to rebut the effect of the certificate: Ibid.; Van Orman v. McGregor, 23-800; Borland v. Walrath, 33-130.

15. If a mortgage is duly acknowledged, the introduction thereof in evidence, accompanied by the notes referred to therein as executed by the same party, is prima facie sufficient to establish the execution of the mortgage and also of the notes: Mixer v. Bennett, 70—.

16. The certificate of the officer, and his testimony as to the acknowledgment, are entitled to great weight. The presumption is

1. The title of the court or person before whom the acknowledgment was taken;
2. That the person making the acknowledgment was personally known to at least one of the judges of the court, or to the officer taking the acknowledgment, to be the identical person whose name is affixed to the deed as grantor, or that such identity was proved by at least one credible witness, naming him;
3. That such person acknowledged the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed.

Who may take.—Who may make.

very strong in his favor: Bailey v. Landingham, 53-722.

17. The certificate of the notary public as to the acknowledgment by the grantor, and the positive testimony of such officer as to the fact of such acknowledgment, will prevail over the denial, on the part of the grantor, of the fact of making such instrument. Deeds, mortgages and other instruments requiring an acknowledgment before an officer should not be set aside without clear and satisfactory evidence, and the seal and acknowledgment of the officer should in such cases be given proper consideration: Herrick v. Musgrove, 67-63.

18. Parol evidence: It is not proper to show by parol evidence, for the purpose of sustaining an acknowledgment, that matters required by statute to be done were done, although not shown by the certificate: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4-381.

19. But parol evidence may be introduced to show fraud in obtaining an acknowledgment, or when the certificate is alleged to be false, to show that the deed never was acknowledged: Ibid.

20. If the certificate does not recite the essential facts, it is not competent to prove such facts by extrinsic evidence: Ibid.

21. Therefore, under the provisions of the act of 1846, requiring the certificate of acknowledgments by married women to show that the wife was made acquainted with the contents of the conveyance, and that she relinquished her dower, held, that a conveyance by a married woman, in which the acknowledgment did not show such facts, was void as to her, and that the requisite facts could not be shown by parol testimony: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4 G. Gr., 162.

22. Effect of acknowledgment, in regard to the admission of the instrument in evidence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 578-584.

23. Who may take: An acknowledgment before a deputy clerk acting in the name of his principal is good: Abrams v. Ervin, 9-67.

24. An acknowledgment certified to by an officer interested therein (as a member of the firm of grantees) is void, and the record of such instrument will not impart notice: Wilson v. Traer, 20-231.

25. While the acknowledgment of an instrument taken before the grantee as an officer will not be valid, yet the mere fact that the person for whom the acknowledgment is taken has an interest in the property conveyed, will not necessarily render the acknowledgment void, although it might be a circumstance tending to show fraud: Dussaume v. Burnett, 5-95.

26. Official title: The official title of a notary public is, "A. B., a notary public for — county," etc., and a failure to set forth the name of the county renders the certificate void. The fact that the name of the county appears from the impression of the seal will not remedy the defect: Willard v. Cramer, 36-22.

27. Notaries public in this state have jurisdiction only within the respective counties for which they are appointed, and the title of each must be defined to be a notary public of some county, naming it. The certificate must show the county of the notary public making it, and the failure of the certificate to so state will not be cured by the fact that the county appears in the seal, which is not required to show that fact: Greenwood v. Jenswold, 69-53.

28. But this rule does not apply to the official signature to the jurat of an affidavit: Stoddard v. Sloan, 65-680.

29. While the certificate should set forth the title of the court or officer before whom the acknowledgment is made, there is no requirement that the name of the officer shall be set out in the body of the certificate: Fogg v. Holcomb, 64-621.

30. When no seal of the officer or certificate as to his official character is attached to the certificate of acknowledgment, as contemplated by statute, it is not valid: Jones v. Berkshire, 15-248.

31. Amendment of certificate: Whilst a notary continues in office, it is competent for him to amend his certificate of acknowledgment, to supply a defect, by making a new one, provided it is in accordance with the real facts: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53-101.

II. WHO MAY MAKE THE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

32. Attorney in fact: Prior to the act of 1858 an acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage by an attorney in fact, as his voluntary act and deed, would be the acknowledgment, in law, of his principal: Sourden v. Craig, 26-158.

33. Municipal officer: Where a deed offered in evidence purported to have been executed by one Q., as mayor of the city of D., having the seal of the city affixed and duly attested by the recorder, and was properly acknowledged and recorded, the certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment showing that Q. was personally known to him as the identical person whose name was affixed to the deed as president pro tempore of the city council, and acting mayor of the city of D., held, that such deed was prima facie proof that Q. was at the time acting mayor of the city, and, coupled with what the court might take judicial notice of on this subject, rendered the introduction of the deed in question competent without further proof as to the official character of the said Q.: Middleton Savings Bank v. Dubuque, 19-467.

34. Officers of corporation: Where an assignment of a judgment in favor of a bank was signed by persons designating themselves as president and secretary, but the acknowledgment thereof did not state that they were such officers, held, that the assignment was not sufficient to establish the official character of the persons whose names were attached thereto or show that they had authority to act for the bank: Klemme v. McLay, 68-158.

35. By married woman: Where the certificate of acknowledgment to a trust deed appeared regular and in due form, but the evidence showed that the notary had certified to the acknowledgment of the same by the wife without requiring her personal presence, but upon a previous verbal authority given by her, held, that the validity of the deed could not be questioned for that reason by the wife as against parties who had loaned money upon the strength of the security, regular upon its face: McHenry v. Day, 13-445.

III. LIABILITY OF OFFICER.

36. Negligence: The fact that a notary makes a false certificate as a result of negligence will not render him liable. Whatever liability there is exists by reason of statute: Scotten v. Fegan, 62-236.

37. Wilful misstatement: In an action against a notary for damages under the statute, it must be alleged that he knowingly misstated a material fact: Ibid.

38. Damages: The officer is only liable for such damages as are caused by his wrongful act and necessarily connected with it: Wyllis v. Haun, 47-614.

39. Where it does not appear that the officer taking the acknowledgment knowingly misstated a material fact, as, for instance, that the person making the acknowledgment was the identical person whose name was affixed to the instrument, the officer will not be liable. The law does not make the officer taking the acknowledgment a guarantor that the person signing the instrument is the person who is the owner of the land referred to therein: Browne v. Dolan, 68-645.

IV. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF TAX DEEDS.

40. Acknowledgment essential: The acknowledgment of a tax deed being essential to its validity, held, that such a deed acknowledged before a person who was county judge at the time of the abolition of that office, and who was, by provision of law, continuing to act as county auditor ex officio until a county auditor should be elected, was void: Goodykoontz v. Olsen, 54-174.

41. Legalizing acts: As the act to legalize defective acknowledgments (see Code, § 1966) applied only to cases where there was a legal deed antecedent to any attempt to acknowledge, it had no effect to render valid a tax deed which was previously invalid for want of acknowledgment: Ibid.

IV. SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS.

V. ACTIONS IN REM AGAINST BOATS OR VESSELS.

Assignment of causes of action, see ASSIGNMENT.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, see that title.

Action to recover REAL PROPERTY, see that title, II.

Action to recover personal property, see REPLEVIN.

I. WHAT DEEMED AN ACTION; SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS; SUBMISSION IN ACTION AND WITHOUT ACTION.

1. Civil actions include everything except those cases which come under the criminal jurisdiction of the court: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8-40.

2. The term civil action includes ordinary proceedings and also proceedings in equity: Kramer v. Rebman, 9-114.

3. The granting of letters of administration by a county court held not to constitute another action pending so as to defeat the jurisdiction of the district court which would otherwise attach: Waples v. Marsh, 19-381.

4. Where a note provided for an attorney's fee, in case action was brought thereon, held, that filing the note as a claim against the estate, the claim being resisted, was sufficient bringing of action to entitle plaintiff to the attorney's fee: Davidson v. Vorse, 52-384.

5. Special proceedings: Proceedings to disbar an attorney are special proceedings: State v. Clarke, 46-155.

6. Under the statutory provision (Code, § 2520) that the provisions concerning the prosecution of a civil action shall be followed in special proceedings not otherwise regulated, so far as applicable, held, that proceedings to condemn property for a work of internal improvement should be governed, as far as practicable, by the rules governing ordinary actions: Forney v. Ralls, 80-559.

7. Thus it was held that the provisions of the civil code as to change of place of trial were applicable in an appeal in the circuit court in a proceeding to condemn land for a right of way: Whitney v. Atlantic Southern R. Co., 53-651.

8. This provision was applied also to proceedings to disbar an attorney: State v. Clarke, 46-155, 159.

9. Submission without action: Under statutory provision (Code, § 3408) for submission of a question in difference which might be the subject of a civil action without an action upon an agreed statement of facts, held, that pleadings were not necessary: Donald v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 52-411.

10. The statutory provision that in such case it must be shown by affidavit that the controversy is real and the proceeding is in good faith to determine the rights of the parties, is jurisdictional, and in the absence of compliance therewith a court cannot take cognizance of the case: Keeline v. Council Bluffs, 62-450.

11. Submission in action: Where pending the trial of a cause the facts were agreed upon by the parties "to save expense and to simplify the issue" upon which the court should render judgment, held, that it was the duty of the court to give such judgment, whether legal or equitable, as the facts agreed upon should be deemed to warrant or require: Logan v. Hall, 19-491.

12. Where a party has submitted a cause upon an agreed statement of facts, the court should enter such judgment as to his rights under the facts agreed upon as will establish the respective rights of the parties: Kraft v. James, 64-159.

Submission to ARBITRATION, see that title.

II. FORM OF ACTION; PROCEEDINGS ORDINARY AND EQUITABLE; CHANGE OF KIND OF PROCEEDING; SEPARATE TRIAL OF EQUITABLE ISSUES.

As to trial of equitable defenses see PRACTICE, II, d.

13. All technical forms of action and of pleading are abolished: Heichew v. Hamilton, 3 G. Gr., 596.

14. Although forms of proceedings are abolished, yet pleas in abatement, such as to the jurisdiction, or of another action pending, are still proper and legitimate: Rawson v. Guiberson, 6-507.

Form.

15. Under the equity procedure the distinction as to the form of stating an action of trespass and one of trespass on the case is immaterial: Brown v. Hendrickson, 69-749.

16. Ordinary and equitable proceedings: The legislature has no power to abolish the distinction between pleadings at law and in equity. Such distinction is defined and recognized by the constitution: Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Gr., 224.

17. By the provisions of the Code, it was intended to assimilate and make uniform the procedure in all law and equity cases. The changes introduced by the Code were to be applied equally to both: Shepard v. Ford, 10-502.

18. The term "civil actions" includes proceedings in equity as well as ordinary proceedings: Kramer v. Rebman, 9-114.

19. What actions to be in equity; foreclosure of mortgage: The provision (Code, § 2509) that an action to foreclose a mortgage shall be by equitable proceedings is not in conflict with the constitutional provision guarantying the right of trial by jury. Such right was never recognized in suits in equity: State v. Orwig, 25-280; Clough v. Seay, 49-111.

20. Action on a mortgage and to recover judgment on the note secured thereby is not an improper union of legal and equitable proceedings: Cooley v. Hobart, 8-358.

21. To foreclose mechanic's lien: All persons interested must be made parties to the proceedings before they can be affected by the decree: Jones v. Hartsock, 42-147, 153.

22. Held, that an action at law might, by consent of parties, be tried in connection with equitable actions to enforce mechanics' liens against the same defendant, and one judgment rendered therein adjusting all claims between them: Hines v. Whitebreast Coal, etc., Co., 48-296.

23. Under Revision, § 4183, by which an action for a mechanic's lien was to be prosecuted as an ordinary proceeding, held, that subsequent incumbrancers need not be made parties, and that even though not made parties they could not bring action to redeem, and that in such cases there was no equity of redemption as in case of a mortgage: State v. Eads, 15-114; and see Shields v. Keys, 24-298, 308.

24. Even if in such action there is a misjoinder of causes of action, objection thereto is deemed waived unless made as provided elsewhere in reference to misjoinder of actions: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 68-490.

25. Divorce: An action for divorce being equitable, the right to a trial by jury does not exist, and the parties are entitled to a trial de novo in the supreme court: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

26. Other cases of equitable relief: Under the statutory provision (Code, § 2508) that plaintiff may prosecute his action by equitable proceedings in all cases where courts of equity, before the adoption of the Code, had jurisdiction, and must so proceed in all cases where jurisdiction was exclusive, held, that reformation of an instrument to correct a mistake could not be granted in an action at law: Adams v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 58-491.

27. The statutory provision (Code, § 3331) allowing a nuisance to be abated at law does not abrogate the equitable remedy before existing by way of injunction: Bushnell v. Robeson, 62-540.

28. Where plaintiff has an election to bring an action at law or in equity, and brings it in equity, it is error to transfer the cause on motion of the opposite party to the law docket: Gribben v. Hansen, 69-255.

29. Where the prayer of a petition in an action for the recovery of real property was for judgment establishing in plaintiff an estate in fee-simple in the land and giving him the immediate possession thereof, and determining and quieting the title, and for judgment for a specific sum, held, that as a judgment for possession, together with damages for detention, amounted, as between the parties, to all that was asked for in the prayer, it was not error to overrule a motion to transfer the cause to the equity docket: Byers v. Rodabaugh, 17-53.

30. Where an auxiliary injunction was issued to prevent garnishees from paying over money upon intervention under the statutory provisions for injunction in ordinary proceedings, and every issue made could be and was tried at law, held, that the auxiliary injunction did not change the action from one by ordinary to one by equitable proceedings, and the court might try the case as an action at law: Pool v. Paul, 23-421.

31. Habeas corpus proceedings: Under the statutory provision (Code, § 2513), that in all cases not otherwise provided for, plaintiff must prosecute his action by ordinary proceedings, the action for the writ of habeas corpus was to be tried as an ordinary action at law: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43-633; Drumb v. Keen, 47-435.

32. Effect of error as to proper form of proceeding: An action erroneously brought at law may be changed to an action in equity without leaving the court: Holmes v. Clark, 10-423, 427.

33. Relief will not be denied because plaintiff has addressed his petition to the wrong side of the court if he is entitled to relief: McDole v. Purdy, 23-277.

34. The fact that plaintiff has improperly commenced his action by equitable proceedings when it should have been by law will not prevent his having an injunction under the provisions of the statute in such cases applicable to law actions: Mills v. Hamilton, 49-105.

35. Error, how remedied: An error in commencing an action in equity instead of at law, or vice versa, should be corrected by motion (Code, §§ 2514-2516). It is not a ground of demurrer: Conyngham v. Smith, 16-471; Brown v. Mallory, 26-409; Wright v. McCormick, 22-545; Pella v. Scholte, 21-463.

36. That plaintiff has a full, speedy and complete remedy at law is not proper ground for demurrer. The remedy is by motion to have the action changed into the proper proceeding: Savery v. Browning, 18-246; Traer v. Lytle, 20-301; Gray v. Coan, 23-344; Gibbs v. McFadden, 39-371; Independent School Dist. v. Independent School Dist., 41-321.

37. Where an amendment is made during the trial, changing the nature of the action, motion to change the cause to the proper docket should then be made, and not a motion to strike the amendment from the files, on that ground: Weaver v. Kintzley, 58-191.

38. The fact that an action is in equity instead of at law is not fatal. Defendant may have the action tried as an action at law, and failing to avail himself of that right he cannot complain: Lewis v. Soule, 52-11.

39. A party who fails at the proper time to object to the prosecution of an action in equity which should have been at law, by moving to transfer it to the law docket, is presumed to have waived objection on that ground and to have assented to the cause proceeding as an equitable action, and in such case such relief as equity might render in a proper case might be given: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33-422, 504.

40. Change of proceeding to proper docket: The motion to change the case to the proper docket, as authorized by Code, §§ 2514-2516, cannot be made after filing an answer, nor at the time of filing an answer to an amended petition, when the fact of error in the proceedings was apparent but not taken advantage of at the time of filing an answer to the original petition: Moore v. District T'p, 28-425.

41. Objection that the action was brought by the wrong kind of proceedings cannot be taken advantage of after judgment: Hatch v. Judd, 29-95.

42. If the proper steps to effect the change are not taken in the court below, the remedy is regarded as waived: Parshall v. Moody, 24-814; Green v. Marble, 37-95; Knott v. Tinker, 39-628.

43. Generally a judgment in an equitable proceeding may be sustained if objection to the form of proceeding has not been made in the manner prescribed by the statute, though the action should have been by ordinary proceeding; but if upon the merits of the case the relief granted would have been denied at law and ought not to have been given in an equitable proceeding, the judgment will not be sustained: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33-422, 489.

44. Where an action is improperly prosecuted by equitable proceedings, a failure to object thereto as provided in Code, § 2516, operates as a waiver of a jury trial: Ibid., 490.

45. Probate proceedings: Under the statutory provision (Code, § 2519) that an error as to the kind of the proceedings is waived by a failure to move for its correction at the proper time, held, that where proceedings in the circuit court, which should have been brought in probate, are entitled in equity or at law, a motion to change to the proper docket is the only remedy: Ashlock v. Sherman, 56-311; McName v. Malvin, 56-362; First Nat. Bank v. Green, 59-171; Goodnow v. Wells, 67-654.

46. On appeal: An objection to the form of the proceeding cannot be first raised on appeal: Tugel v. Tugel, 38-349; Gould v. Hurto, 61-45.

47. Error of the court in sustaining a motion to transfer to the equity docket will not be ground of reversal on appeal, where it does not appear that the party excepted to such action or demanded a jury trial: State v. Craig, 58-238.

Further as to form of action on APPEAL, see that title, §§ 993-995.

48. Equitable issues:¹ The issue must be made before the transfer to the chancery docket can be ordered by the court. The discretion of the court is a legal one and is reviewable: McHenry v. Sypher, 12-585.

49. A case properly commenced by ordinary proceedings is not to be transferred to the equity docket on filing an answer setting up equitable defenses, but either party may have such equitable issues tried by equitable proceedings: Byers v. Rodabaugh, 17-58.

50. Where defendant in an action to recover real property brought his bill in equity, setting up certain equitable defenses, and asking that the action at law be enjoined until the determination of such equitable defenses, held, that it was not necessarily an improper exercise of discretion to postpone the legal action: Purington v. Frank, 2-565.

51. The equitable issues which either party elects to have tried by equitable proceedings may be, and under ordinary circumstances should be, first tried and settled: Hackett v. High, 28-589.

52. After the equitable issues are thus tried, any legal issues remaining are to be disposed of in the manner provided for the disposal of such issues: Rosierz v. Van Dam, 16-175; Van Orman v. Spafford, 16-186; Kramer v. Conger, 16-434; Corbin v. Woodbine, 33-297.

53. But it is not imperative that the equitable issue be tried first. That issue should be first tried which may result in rendering a further trial unnecessary: Morris v. Merritt, 52-496.

54. To entitle a defendant to a trial of such equitable issue by equitable proceedings, such issue must be one heretofore exclusively cognizable in equity. (Decided under Rev., § 2617): Walton v. Gray, 29-440.

55. In a particular case, held, that the issues raised by defendant were such as to entitle him to have them tried in equity: Marling v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 67-331.

56. Where parties who are made defendants interpose a defense that is purely equitable, the case may properly be tried as an equitable action: Gresham v. Chantry, 69-728.

57. Where plaintiff seeks to recover real property in an action at law, he cannot recover upon proof of an equitable title, and if he asks any equitable relief it is not error to hold his petition insufficient on demurrer, and it would be unavailing in such case to transfer the cause to the equity docket: Kittingham v. Blair Town Lot, etc., Co., 60-280.

As to interposing equitable defenses in an action at law, see PLEADING, V, f.

58. Where an answer to a petition at law set up both legal and equitable defenses, and no separation of the legal and equitable issues was had on the trial, held, on appeal, that it would be treated as an equitable action: Van Orman v. Merrill, 27-476.

And see APPEAL, §§ 993-995.

59. Joinder of legal and equitable actions: By agreement parties may have proceedings in a law action joined to and tried with those in an equitable action in which the parties are not the same, but the action still remains one at law: Hines v. Whitebreast Coal, etc., Co., 48-296.

As to joinder of causes of action in general, see PLEADING, IV.

¹ Code, § 2517. Where the action has been properly commenced by ordinary proceedings, either party shall have the right, by motion, to have any issue heretofore exclusively cognizable in equity tried in the manner herein-after prescribed in cases of equitable proceedings; and if all the issues were such as were heretofore cognizable in equity, though none were exclusively so, the defendant shall be entitled to have them all tried as in cases of equitable proceedings.

Right accrues, when.—Survival.

III. RIGHT OF ACTION ACCRUES, WHEN;
COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.

As to the time limited for bringing actions, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

As to the method of commencing actions, see ORIGINAL NOTICE.

60. Action accrues, when: A right of action does not accrue for a wrongful act until the party complaining has suffered injury therefrom. Therefore held, that action against a clerk for taking an insufficient stay bond did not accrue until the stay expired: Steel v. Bryant, 49-116; Moore v. McKinley, 60-367.

61. An action on a promissory note brought before the expiration of the days of grace cannot be maintained: Seaton v. Hinneman, 50-395; Whitney v. Bird, 11-407.

62. Demand: It is only in case where demand is necessary to the creation of plaintiff's right that it is necessary to allege a demand. Where the duty for the breach of which suit is brought arises without demand, such demand need not be pleaded in order to show a cause of action accrued: Zimmerman v. National Bank, 56-133.

As to when demand must be alleged and proven in an action of REPLEVIN, see that title, §§ 18-26.

63. When action deemed commenced: An action may be considered as begun for some purposes when the petition is filed; for instance, for the purpose of issuing a writ of attachment: Hagan v. Burch, 8-309; Reed v. Chubb, 9-178; Elliott v. Stevens, 10-418.

64. In general an action is deemed commenced when the notice is served upon defendant and not when placed in the hands of the officer for service: Parkyn v. Travis, 50-436.

65. Thus, where the notice was placed in the sheriff's hands for service April 1st, but it was not served until April 3d, and the right of action accrued April 2d, held, that the cause of action had accrued before suit was commenced: Ibid.

And see further, ORIGINAL NOTICE, §§ 58, 59, and ATTACHMENT, §§ 5-7.

For the purpose of determining whether action is commenced within the period allowed by the statute of limitations, it is deemed commenced when the notice is placed in the hands of the sheriff for service with intention that it be served immediately: See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, §§ 171-177.

Presentation of claim against county: An action against a county on an unliquidated demand cannot be brought until the claim has been presented to the board of supervisors: See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, §§ 188-208.

IV. SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS;¹ ASSIGNMENT.

66. Right of action or defense survives: Any rights of remedy or defense existing in a party pass to his representatives on his death: Harper v. Drake, 14-533.

67. An action for libel will survive: Carson v. McFadden, 10-91.

68. Although an action for slander will survive against the personal representatives of defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover, as against such representatives, exemplary or punitive damages: Sheik v. Hobson, 64-146.

69. An action for injury to the person will survive: McKinlay v. McGregor, 10-111.

70. A servant's right of action for personal injury against his master survives the death of the servant: Mumm v. Owens, 2 Dillon, 475.

71. An action for seduction brought by the female herself survives: Shafer v. Grimes, 23-550.

72. An action for divorce is abated by the death of the parties, and with it all claim for alimony: Barney v. Barney, 14-189; O'Hagan v. O'Hagan's Ex'r, 4-509.

73. If a counter-claim is properly maintainable in favor of two defendants, the death of one of them will work no abatement thereof: Moorehead v. Hyde, 38-382.

74. A deposition taken after plaintiff's death upon notice served before his death cannot be used in subsequent proceedings in which the personal representatives are substituted, and should be stricken from the files on motion: Kershman v. Suchela, 59-93.

¹ Code, § 2525. All causes of actions shall survive, and may be brought, notwithstanding the death of the person entitled or liable to the same.

Assignment.—Against boats and vessels.

75. Assignment: All causes of action which survive under the statutory provision above referred to are assignable: Gray v. McCallister, 50-497.

76. A cause of action for a personal tort is assignable: Ibid.; Weire v. Davenport, 11-49; Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64-518.

77. An assignment absolute in form vests plaintiff with the title and property in the claim, and is sufficient to enable the assignee to bring action thereon in his own name, although the assignment to him is merely in trust: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 63-275.

And further as to assignment of causes of action, see ASSIGNMENT.

78. Right of action for injuries causing death:¹ In determining whether the cause of action accrues to the person injured or only to his legal representatives, the test is, whether he lived after the injury, and not the length of time he lived thereafter. If he lived but a short time, the cause of action accrued to him as actually as it would have done, had he lived a month or a year thereafter. (Overruling Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24-515): Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68-470; Ewell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 29 Fed. Rep., 57.

79. At common law, no action could be maintained for an injury resulting in death, and the right of recovery for such injuries exists, if at all, only by reason of the law of the place of the injury: Hyde v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 61-441.

80. Under laws of another state: Therefore, held, that the personal representatives of the person whose death was caused by an injury in Missouri, where the statute does not authorize a recovery in such cases by the personal representatives, could not maintain an action for such injury in the courts in Iowa: Ibid.

81. A right of action for personal injury arising under the laws of this state, being assignable in this state, an action may be brought here by an assignee thereof, although the assignment is made in a state where the common law rule prohibiting such assignments is still in force: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-296.

82. Where the right of action accrues by virtue of the statute of one state, the action may be maintained in another state, if not contrary to the public policy or laws of the place where suit is brought: Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 65-727.

83. Therefore, where the death which was the subject of the action was caused in the state of Illinois by the negligence of a railway company, and the statutes of Illinois gave to the administrator of deceased the right of action for such injury, held, that the courts of Iowa, within which defendant was also operating its line of railroad, might obtain jurisdiction, and appoint an administrator to maintain a suit for the recovery of the damages allowed by the statutes of Illinois: Ibid.

84. Action against corporation: A corporation is liable in a civil action for wrongful acts of its servants, done in its employment and producing death. Its liability, however, would not probably be held to exempt the immediate agent from liability: Donaldson v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18-280.

85. Where an employee of a railroad company received injuries through the wrongful act of a co-employee, resulting in death, the company was held to be the "perpetrator" within the language of Rev., § 4111, and civilly liable: Philo v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 33-47.

Measure of damages: See DAMAGES, II, g.

V. ACTIONS IN REM AGAINST BOATS AND VESSELS.

86. State jurisdiction: The jurisdiction of federal courts of admiralty is exclusive of the jurisdiction of the state court to entertain a proceeding in rem against a boat on a cause of action cognizable in admiralty, and the provisions of the Revision (corresponding to Code, § 3432 et seq.) assuming to confer such jurisdiction upon the state courts are unavailing for that purpose. (Overrul-ing Trevor v. Steamboat Ad. Hine, 17-349); The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall., 555; Walters v. Steamboat Mollie Dozier, 24-192.

¹ Code, § 2526. The right of civil remedy is not merged in a public offense, but may, in all cases, be enforced independently of, and in addition to, the punishment of the latter. When a wrongful act produces death, the damages shall be disposed of as personal property belonging to the estate of the deceased, except that if the deceased leaves a husband, wife, child or parent, it shall not be liable for the payment of debts.

Against boats and vessels.—Signature.

87. Petition: Under the provisions of the Revision, held, that the petition in such a proceeding in rem need not aver that the boat was within the jurisdiction of the state at the time suit was commenced. It is the service of the warrant that brings the property within the jurisdiction of the court. If the contract for the breach of which action is brought is violated within the waters of this state, and the boat is seized under warrant properly issued, the court will have jurisdiction although such contract was made elsewhere: Baker v. Steamboat Milwaukee, 14-214.

88. What charges enforceable: Under the provisions of Code of '51, which made certain charges a lien against the boat, held, that the seizure and sale of the boat under the laws of another state did not divest it of such lien: Haight v. Steamboat Henrietta, 4-472; Ogden v. Ogden, 13-176.

89. Also, held, that the boat was liable for money collected from consignments of goods for freight due a railroad company from whom the goods were received to be forwarded to their destination, and that such transaction was a "contract relative to the transportation of" freight: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Steamboat Woodsides, 10-465.

90. The use of a barge may constitute a supply for which a claim against the boat may be enforced in such proceedings: Steamboat Kentucky v. Brooks, 1 G. Gr., 398.

91. It is sufficient to allege that the contract was made with the boat: West v. Barge Lady Franklin, 2-522.

92. Under the provisions of Code of '51, held, that the remedy intended was not designed solely for the benefit of the party furnishing the supplies, but that a lien could be transferred by assignment and enforced by the transferee: Strother v. Steamboat Hamburg, 11-59.

93. Under the provision (Code, § 3445) that any raft found in the waters of the state shall be liable for all debts contracted by the owner, agent, clerk or pilot thereof on account of work done or service rendered for such raft, the lien referred to will attach under a contract with the pilot, although between him and the owner there is an agreement that the former shall bear all the expenses: Hanson v. Hiles, 34-350.

94. Jurisdiction: A warrant and seizure of a boat thereunder is essential to confer jurisdiction upon the court. The proceeding is one in rem: Ham v. Steamboat Hamburg, 2-460.

95. Discharge of lien: Under the statutory provisions for a discharge, held, that a formal entry of discharge under the bond was not necessary to render the principal and sureties liable thereon. Nor need the bond be formally approved if it is accepted by the officer and the boat released: White v. Tisdale, 12-75.

96. A judgment may be rendered against the boat, and at the same time against the sureties on a bond on which the boat has been discharged: Ogden v. Ogden, 13-176.

AFFIDAVITS.

1. Signature: An affidavit is defined by statute (Code, § 3689) to be a written declaration under oath. This clearly implies that it should be signed by the affiant: Crenshaw v. Taylor, 70—.

2. The jurat or certificate need not state the name of the person signing or swearing to the affidavit: Stone v. Miller, 60-243.

3. It is not necessary that the jurat expressly show that the person sworn is the person who subscribed to the affidavit. A jurat in the following form: "subscribed in my presence and sworn to before me," giving the date, held sufficient: Stoddard v. Sloan, 65-680.

4. The signature to a jurat by an officer writing his name with the designation, "Notary Public," is sufficient without adding the name of the county in and for which he is a notary. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that he is a notary for that county: Ibid.

5. Where an affidavit is headed with the name of the state and county, and the signature of the notary is authenticated with a seal, such signature is sufficient if it contains the name of the notary with the addition "Notary Public," without stating the state or county for which he is notary: Stone v. Miller, 60-248.

6. Where the venue of the affidavit is not indicated, it will be presumed that the oath was administered within the county in which the justice of the peace administering it had jurisdiction, that being the county in which the action was pending and in which the pleading was filed: Snell v. Eckerson, 8-284.

7. Although, in the caption, the affidavit is entitled of one county, while it appears to have been sworn to before a notary public in another county, the presumption is that the notary public took the affidavit within his own jurisdiction, and the caption will not be sufficient to show that it was sworn to without such jurisdiction: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 67-691.

8. Taken out of state: The fact that the officer before whom an affidavit is made, out of the state, is authorized to administer oaths may be established aliunde: Levy v. Wilson, 43-605.

9. While the laws of other states will be presumed to be the same as the laws of this state, requiring the seal of the notary to have engraved thereon the name of his state, yet where the court receives and acts upon an affidavit for change of venue sworn to before a notary public of another state, whose seal does not bear the name of his state, it will be presumed that some showing was made that the seal was such as required by the laws of the state where the jurat was executed: Goodnow v. Litchfield, 67-691.

10. Amendment: Where an affidavit offered in evidence is authenticated by the signature and seal of a notary public, but the jurat does not refer to the seal, the notary may amend the jurat: Hallett v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 22-259.

I. APPOINTMENT AND REVOCATION.

- a. General fact of agency.

1. Assent of parties necessary to agency: The relation of principal and agent cannot be created unless by contract. Therefore, in a particular case, where it was sought to hold a corporation as agent, and the evidence merely showed that three of its officers had acted as such agent, the fact was held not to be sufficiently established: Storm Lake Bank v. Missouri Valley L. Ins. Co., 66-617.

2. To constitute a person an agent, there must be consent on the part of the agent, either expressed or by words, or inferable from something done: First Nat. Bank v. Free, 67-11.

3. Loan agent is the agent of the borrower: The party from whom an application is made to a loan and trust company for the purpose of effecting a loan, is the agent of the borrower and not of the company. Notice to such an agent would not therefore be notice to the company: Thomas v. Desney, 57-58.

4. Messenger taking money to creditor: The fact that a creditor accepts money sent him by a debtor through a messenger does not constitute the messenger the agent of the creditor in such sense that, if such messenger subsequently receive money from the debtor and fail to pay it over, the loss will be that of the creditor: Fisher v. Schiller Lodge, 50-459.

5. Finding customer: Where a dealer in agricultural implements took orders or propositions, as he had opportunity, for the sale of a particular threshing machine, and forwarded them to the manufacturer, who either accepted or rejected them, and, if he accepted, shipped the machine to such dealer, who delivered to the purchaser and accepted the payment, forwarding the money or notes received to the manufacturer, held, that the dealer was, as to sales effected, the agent of the manufacturer; and that any suit growing out of such a sale was a suit growing out of or connected with the business of such agency: Milligan v. Davis, 49-126.

6. Declarations of the agent to prove agency: To bind a person by the representations of one claiming to be his agent, such agency must be shown otherwise than by the agent's own declarations. One may prove his agency by his own oath, if the authority is conferred by parol, or it may be established in many ways, as by the declarations or admissions of the principal; but it cannot be by the declarations alone of the person assuming thus to act: Moffitt v. Cressler, 8-122.

7. Acts and declarations of the agent are not admissible for the purpose of proving the agency: Clanton v. Des Moines, O. & S. R. Co., 67-850.

8. The extent of the power and authority of an agent cannot be established by declarations of the supposed agent: Bigler v. Toy, 68-687.

9. Before the declarations of an alleged agent can be admitted in evidence against his principal, some evidence that he was authorized to act for his principal in relation to the matter in hand must be introduced: Drake v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 70-—.

10. For the purpose of supporting a contract made by an agent, the fact of agency cannot be proven by the admissions of the person claiming to act as agent: Whitescarver v. Bonney, 9-480.

11. The authority of an agent cannot be proved by the agent's declarations alone; they are not admissible for that purpose: Graul v. Strutzel, 58-712; Renwick v. Bancroft, 56-527.

Further as to admissibility of declarations of agent, see EVIDENCE, §§ 240-254.

Further as to how far declarations of the agent are binding upon the principal, see infra, III, c.

12. A party cannot be bound by the claim of another that he is acting as his agent, without knowledge that he was so claiming. Nor will the understanding in the community as to the fact of agency be conclusive as against the party sought to be held as principal: Milligan v. Davis, 49-126.

13. Admissible evidence to prove agency: Where a party attempts to escape liability for the non-delivery of goods by proving delivery to an agent, he is not limited to showing that he had sufficient reason to believe the existence of the agency, but may show circumstances tending to prove the agency of which he had no knowledge at the time. It is the fact of agency, and not the knowledge of that fact, which is in controversy: Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 9-487.

14. While the authority of a supposed agent cannot be established by his own declarations, yet if the agency has been otherwise proved, then the declarations of the agent, within the scope of his authority, which constitute a part of the transaction or res gestæ, are admissible: Winch v. Baldwin, 68-764.

15. Several instances of employment as a special agent would not be sufficient to prove a general agency: Ibid.

16. Authority to do one act: Authority given at one time to an agent engaged in making repairs on defendant's house is not sufficient to authorize one to presume, a year afterwards, that the authority still continues: Green v. Hinkley, 52-833.

17. Authority to bind by note, how shown: The authority to make, indorse, renew or accept negotiable paper may be inferred from the course of business, and from the fact that similar transactions have been repeatedly recognized by the principal as done by his authority; the general rule being that the principal is bound by actually authorizing the act, or by leading those with whom the agent actually dealt in his behalf to believe, as reasonable men, that authority had been actually given, or by subsequent ratification: Whiting v. Western Stage Co., 20-554.

18. While the fact of agency cannot be inferred from the acts of the agent alone, yet, as bearing upon that question, such acts are proper to be considered in connection with his testimony and other facts: Hall v. Aetna Mfg. Co., 30-215.

19. Present authority not inferable from former: The declarations or admissions of an agent bind the principal only when made during the continuance of the agency in regard to a transaction then pending. An authority to make an admission is not necessarily to be implied from an authority previously given in respect to the thing to which the admission relates: Osgood v. Bringolf, 32-265.

20. Former approvals: Under the facts of a particular case, held, that an agent for the sale of land was not given authority to sell, except on the approval of the contract by the principal. In such case the fact that former sales have been approved as made, would not give rise to authority to make further sales without approval: Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 62-309.

21. Agency distinguished from loan: Money was furnished to a party with which to purchase grain, and the understanding was, that his compensation should be a share of the profits remaining, after paying back the sum furnished, with eight per cent. interest. Held, not to be a loan, but a contract of agency, and that the grain, when purchased, belonged to the person who furnished the money: Van Sandt v. Dows, 63-594.

22. Fact of agency is for the jury: Where it is sought to bind a party by the acts of another as his agent, the fact of the agency, if controverted, should be submitted to and passed upon by the jury: Patton v. Bond, 50-508.

b. Revocation in general and the effect thereof.

23. Change of the firm name does not annul an agency which was conferred upon the same persons under another name: Billingsley v. Dawson, 27-210.

24. Power coupled with an interest: The power of sale conferred upon a creditor by a trust deed is a power coupled with an interest, which is not revoked by the death of the trustee, but may be executed by his administrator: Collins v. Hopkins, 7-468.

25. An agency is revocable at the will of the principal, unless the power conferred upon the agent be given for a valuable consideration, or as a security, or is coupled with an interest. Where the principal had given to the agent authority to raise a donation for a particular purpose, with an agreement that the agent should be entitled to a certain per cent. of the subscriptions as compensation, held, that the agency was not coupled with an interest and might be revoked at pleasure: Smith v. Cedar Falls & M. R. Co., 30-244.

26. Presumption as to continuance: Whether the agent's authority is general, or special and unlimited as to time, the presumption as to those previously dealing with him is, that it continues until there is notice of revocation: Whiting v. Western Stage Co., 20-554.

27. Notice of revocation: A revocation of the power of attorney by act of the principal does not take effect until notice of the revocation is given; but dissolution of such power by act of law, as by the death of the principal, takes place instantly upon such death, and the estate vests in the heirs, or devisees, or creditors, and their rights cannot be impaired by an act of the agent after the principal's death: Vance v. Anderson, 39-426.

28. Completion of agency: An agency terminated by the completion of the business for which it was organized is completed by operation of law. Where an agent for the purchase of land turned over to the principal the contract for the conveyance, and received his fees, held, that his agency terminated, and was not revived by the fact that the vendor sent to him the note for the balance of the purchase money for collection.

Revocation.— Authority.

Such an agent is not therefore estopped from acquiring a tax title to the premises after transferring the contract for the same to the principal: Moore v. Stone, 40-259.

29. Power to bind after revocation: The doctrine that a discharged agent may, under some circumstances, bind his former principal to the extent of his former authority, has no application beyond the claims the agent himself has upon the property, or rights formerly intrusted to him: Baudouine v. Grimes, 64-370.

30. Revocation amounting to a breach of contract: The principal cannot violate a written contract of agency before there has been a breach on the part of the agent. If an agent undertakes to sell within a limited time, and at certain rates, and for a compensation agreed upon, and makes reasonable endeavors to effect a sale, the owner of the property cannot, during the time mentioned, revoke the authority conferred, or sell the property himself, without making to the agent compensation for the services rendered. If it is shown that by an act of the owner a sale, which the agent might have made, was hindered or prevented by the owner, the agent will be entitled to all the compensation that such sale, if made, would have entitled him to receive: Attix v. Pelan, 5-836.

c. Revocation by death of principal.

31. Power of attorney to convey: An agency to sell and convey land in the name of the principal, not coupled with an interest, is revoked by the death of the principal, and a sale and conveyance made thereafter by the agent, although without notice of such death, is void: Lewis v. Kerr, 17-73; Vance v. Anderson, 39-426.

32. Agency intended to continue after death: An agency intended to continue after the principal's death, while it may be valid as far as executed during his life-time, is discontinued after the death of the principal, and the agent thereafter will become a mere custodian of the property remaining in his hands, without any rights thereto against a duly appointed administrator: Crispin v. Winkleman, 57-523.

33. Effect on collateral securities held by agent: Where negotiable notes were turned over to an agent to be held as collateral security for the payment of notes which such agent held for collection against the principal in behalf of other parties, held, that the death of the original owner did not terminate the agency so as to entitle his administrator to recover from such agent the proceeds of the notes, for the reason that the notes in the hands of such agent were thereby in the possession of the parties for whose benefit they were held: Bennett v. Stoddard, 58-654.

34. A collection agent cannot enforce the collection of his principal's notes after the death of the principal, and is not liable for failure to collect such notes where the makers became insolvent after the principal's death. Darr v. Darr, 59-81.

II. EXTENT OF AUTHORITY.

a. In general.

35. Acts done in the scope of authority: A principal is only liable for the acts of the agent done in the scope of his authority, and not for other acts of the same person, done as the agent of another: Jones v. Turck, 33-246.

36. In order to bind the principal it is necessary that the contract of the agent shall be within the scope of his authority as agent; it is not enough that the contract be made in regard to the business of the agency: Richmond v. Greeley, 38-666.

37. General authority: Though as between the principal and agent the powers of the agent may be limited, it frequently occurs that his powers are not limited, when the rights of third persons intervene, if the principal has so acted as to induce third persons to act upon the assumption of more extended or unlimited powers: Keenan v. Missouri State Mut. Ins. Co., 12-126.

38. Private instructions: The authority of a general agent may be regarded by the public as measured by the usual extent of his general employment. So far as the public is concerned, his authority cannot be limited by private instructions as to the manner of executing his agency: Davenport v. Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co., 17-276; Bartholomew v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 25-507.

39. General business authority; negotiable paper: The general authority of an agent to transact business will not be held to confer the power to make the principal a party to negotiable paper. And the power to do some things with reference to such paper cannot be enlarged by construction to authorize the agent to do other, though somewhat similar, things: Whiting v. Western Stage Co., 20-554.

40. But the authority to make, indorse, renew or accept negotiable paper may be inferred from the course of business, and from the fact that similar transactions have been repeatedly recognized by the principal as done by his authority, the general rule being that the principal is bound by actually authorizing the act, or by leading those with whom the agent dealt in his behalf to believe, as reasonable men, that authority had been actually given, or by subsequent ratification: Ibid.

41. General scope of business: The doctrine which protects third persons, who have been injured by an agent's acts in excess of his authority, does not apply, unless the agent is acting in the business intrusted to him, and substantially according to the instructions of his principal: Mather v. Gilliss, 1-242.

42. An agent authorized to make purchases for his principal will bind his principal to purchases of the general kind and class authorized, unless the person dealing with the agent knows that the agent is violating special instructions: Adams v. Boies, 24-96.

43. The principal is bound by the unauthorized acts or engagements of a general agent only when they are entered into within the apparent scope of his employment: Huker v. Myrick, 69-189.

44. Power to warrant: Where an agent has general powers for the sale and warranty of machines, his authority cannot be restricted to the making of warranties in writing, unless it is shown that the parties with whom he dealt had notice of such restriction: Murray v. Brooks, 41-45.

45. Established agency; presumption: Where a general agency is established, the person contracting therewith will not be required to prove that the agent intended to bind his principal by a transaction within the scope of his authority: Brett v. Bassett, 63-340.

46. Presumption from the class of agency: If a party has but one class of agents, the appointment of a person as agent may be regarded as conferring the powers usually exercised. If there are different classes of agents, with distinct powers, the mere appointment of a person as agent will not confer on him any greater powers than those of the class to which he is shown to belong: Strickland v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 66-466.

47. Custom; when admitted to show authority: The custom of other insurance companies with reference to appointment of agents is not admissible to show the extent of the power granted to an agent by his company, where it is not shown that the party dealing with the agent had knowledge of such custom, or that the custom was so general that knowledge of it must be presumed: Bradford v. Homestead F. Ins. Co., 54-598.

48. Bank as collecting agent: One who deposits with a bank for collection negotiable paper, payable at a distant place, is chargeable with the custom of banks to intrust it to other banks for collection at the place where payment is to be made. The bank receiving the paper becomes responsible to the principal as agent, with authority to employ another bank to collect it, and is not liable for the negligence of its correspondent in making such collection, if it has used reasonable care in the selection of the correspondent: Guelich v. National State Bank, 56-484.

49. Custom to sell on credit: A party relying upon authority of an agent to sell on credit, based upon commercial custom in a particular business, has the burden of showing such custom and proving that the credit given was not unreasonable: Payne v. Potter, 9-549.

50. General custom: One who deals with an agent in a manner different from the general custom of such agent has the duty upon him to ascertain the extent of the agent's authority in such dealing: Tidrick v. Rice, 13-214.

51. Evidence of custom will not be admitted to vary the express terms of the authority given the agent: Wanless v. McCandless, 38-20.

52. Authority of special agent: Where an agent acts under express or special authority, whether written or verbal, the party dealing with him is bound to know what the authority of the agent is, and its legal effect; and if the agent exceed the boundary of his legal power, the act as concerning his principal is void: Payne v. Potter, 9-549.

53. It is incumbent on the persons dealing with a special agent to ascertain the scope and extent of his powers: Roberts v. Rumley, 58-301.

54. The exercise of power by a special agent is restricted to limits prescribed by the principal; and one dealing with such agent, with knowledge of a limitation on his power, cannot enforce a contract made by him for his principal which is beyond such limitation: Siebold v. Davis, 67-560.

55. The character of an agency is a question of fact for the jury, and even upon the evidence submitted to them, it is not proper for the court to instruct that, if the agent is not shown to be a limited agent, the jury should find that he was a general agent: Dickinson County v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 41-286.

56. Knowledge of contracting party: Where the extent of the agent's authority is in question, it is error to instruct the jury in such a way as to make the knowledge on the part of the contracting party as to the agent's authority the real point in issue: Ibid.

57. Power of attorney; defective execution: An agreement by an attorney for a principal, inoperative at law for want of a formal execution in the name of the principal, is binding in equity, if the attorney had authority. But not so if the agreement was never executed formally or otherwise, in the principal's name, or in the name of any person for him: Wilkinson v. Getty, 13-157.

58. Particular circumstances: Evidence in a particular case held not sufficient to show express or implied authority to bind the supposed principal to a contract entered into by the alleged agent: Cobb v. Hall, 49-366.

59. Acts of agent under particular circumstances found to be beyond scope of authority: Taylor v. White, 44-295.

b. Powers of agents construed.

60. Power of attorney: The rule that the terms of a power of attorney are to be construed strictly against the principal is not designed to enlarge or extend the power conferred, nor to change the construction of such power: Mathews v. Gilliss, 1-242.

61. Sale and exchange: Authority given to an agent to sell does not authorize him to exchange for other property: Haas v. Damon, 9-589; Hampton v. Moorhead, 62-91.

62. If such exchange is shown, it amounts to a proof of conversion without any proof of demand but the bringing of suit: Haas v. Damon, 9-589.

63. Sale on credit: Authority to sell does not, unless by custom in a particular business, authorize a sale on credit: Payne v. Potter, 9-549.

64. Where no authority for sale upon credit has been given by the principal, it will be sufficient excuse for a factor in failing to accept a proposition that the offer was for a sale upon credit: Durant v. Fish, 40-559.

65. An instrument authorizing an agent to sell all the land of his principal at a certain price per acre, a part to be paid at once, the rest on time, does not bind the principal, if the agent requires no part of the price to be paid at once: Mathews v. Gilliss, 1-242.

66. Receiving proceeds of sale: The authority to make a contract for the sale of lands will authorize an agent to receive so much of the purchase money paid in hand as the terms of the sale require: Alexander v. Jones, 64-207.

67. Authority to sell property and take a note in payment would not of itself include authority to receive payment after the note has been delivered to the principal. Payment of the note to the agent who accepted it would not of itself bind the principal to deliver it up: Draper v. Rice, 56-114.

68. Where an agent was authorized to sell land upon the payment of one-third of the purchase price in cash, held, that a contract of sale contemplating a payment of the cash portion of the purchase price at a future day was not within the authority of the agent, and was not binding upon the principal: Wanless v. McCandless, 38-20.

by the agent to advance the money did not validate the sale: Ibid.

70. In cases like the above, evidence of the custom that the cash purchase money should not be paid until the tender of the deed will not be admitted to vary the express terms of the agency: Ibid.

71. Receiving payment: If an agent or attorney holds a note for collection, he has no right to receive anything in payment but money, unless especially authorized to do so: Drain v. Doggett, 41-682.

72. Payment to a creditor's agent: If one who owes money on a written security pays to or settles with another as agent of his creditor, he must, at his peril, either see that such person is in possession of the security, or has special authority, or has been represented by the creditor to have such authority, although not in possession of the security: Tappan v. Morseman, 18-499.

73. Assignment by an attorney: It is incumbent upon the party relying upon an assignment, purporting to be executed by an attorney, to prove the authority of such attorney. As to the form of executing assignment by attorney, it is sufficient if he sign his name, adding the words "Attorney for ——" Ford v. Independent Dist., 46-294.

74. Waiver of stipulations: The stipulations of a contract cannot be waived by an agent who has no power or authority to waive them. Statements of such agent as to matters outside of the line of his employment will not be binding upon the principal: Davis v. Robinson, 67-355.

75. Signing name: In a particular case, held, that the agent or clerk of a partnership had not sufficient authority to bind the firm by signature of its name to a promissory note: Miller v. House, 67-737.

76. Sale of land: Where a land-owner gave an agent the terms upon which he would sell it, but refused to put the land exclusively into his hands, reserving the right to sell through other parties, if satisfactory propositions should be made, held, that a contract of sale made by such agent, upon the specified terms, was binding upon the principal, there being no intervening sale to any other party: Hopwood v. Corbin, 63-218.

77. To release mortgage: An agent having authority to lease property, to contract for the erection of buildings thereon, etc., and negotiate for the sale of the property, held not to have authority after such sale to release a mortgage given to secure the purchase money, nor to accept other property in part payment of such purchase money: Hakes v. Myrick, 69-189.

78. An agent having authority to collect is not authorized to release a mortgage securing the indebtedness upon the substitution of a new note for the one secured, nor to accept property instead of money in payment: Ibid.

79. To manufacture is not to sell: The authority to sell cannot be implied from the general authority to purchase hides and superintend the manufacture of same into leather: Holbrook v. Oberne, 56-324.

80. To sign checks is not to borrow: An authority given to an agent to sign checks on the bank for stock purchased would not of itself authorize a finding that the borrowing of money on credit was an act within the scope of the agency: Mordhurst v. Boies, 24-99.

81. To loan is not to collect: The authority to collect money cannot be inferred from the power to make a loan and to receive securities therefor: Austin v. Thorp, 30-376.

82. Power to sue: The power of an agent to contract in the name of his principal does not include, by implication, the power to bring an action upon such contract; Markham v. Burlington Ins. Co., 69-515.

83. To invest is not to sell: Authority given to an agent to invest money and look after the business generally, would not authorize the agent to sell the principal's property, even such as might be acquired as the result of the investment: Smith v. Stephenson, 45-645.

84. To use is not to sell: The fact that a woman, the owner of a team, allowed her son to use and to control the same, held not to raise any presumption of the right or authority of the son to sell the same without her consent: Hinkson v. Morrison, 47-167.

85. To sell is not to guaranty: An agent authorized to sell notes is not thereby authorized to guaranty them. All that will be implied from an authority to sell and dispose of notes is authority to sell in the ordinary and usual manner, that is, by the ordinary indorsement: Graul v. Strutzel, 53-712.

Powers construed.—Delegation of authority.

86. To waive incidents of breach of warranty: An agent having authority to make a sale and give a warranty, in which it is provided that the article is to be returned within a specified time, or the warranty will be deemed fulfilled, will bind his principal to the warranty if the purchaser offers to return the article within the specified time, but the agent waives the return strictly within the time: Pitsinowsky v. Beardsley, 37-9.

87. Authority to exceed printed warranty: Where machines are sold by an agent under a printed warranty, and there has been no breach of the terms of the warranty, the presumption is against the authority of the agent to extend the terms of the warranty. The presumption is that the agent's power to sell is to be strictly limited by the published terms of the sale given to each purchaser: Richmond v. Greeley, 38-666.

In general, as to power of agent to warrant, see SALES, IV.

88. Joint action of two or more agents: An authority conferred upon two or more agents can be performed by them only jointly unless a contrary intent appears. But if the instrument conferring the power shows an intention that a part of the agents may execute it, such execution is sufficient. In a particular case, where agents were given discretionary power in completing a contract, held, that they could transfer the contract under their power without assignment, and as it was necessary that the contract should be stamped to give it validity, it was presumed that the power to affix and cancel stamps was conferred: Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co. v. Stewart, 25-115.

89. Where power is intrusted to two or more persons, without the express provision that either one of them may exercise it, it can be exercised only by the concurrent action of at least a majority: Sioux City v. Weare, 59-95.

90. Power of physician of railroad: Where it was sought to recover from a railroad company a compensation for meals furnished to nurses and the relatives of an injured employee at the direction of the physician, held, that such recovery could not be supported without evidence of express authority of the physician to make such contract: Bushnell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-620.

Station agent: As to powers of station agent to bind railroad, see CARRIERS, §§ 1-3.

c. Delegation of authority by the agent.

91. Acts of sub-agent: As a rule, where the employment of a sub-agent is necessary, the agent, if he makes a fit and proper selection, is not responsible for the default of such sub-agent. But a factor or broker cannot delegate his authority. The principal may confer the power of delegation or substitution, and if that is shown, he must look to the substitute: Loomis v. Simpson, 13-532.

92. It is not necessary that a sub-agent should be known to his principal, or in any way recognized by his principal, in order to bind the latter. Authority is sometimes implied, from the very nature of the duties and powers committed to a general agent, to employ sub-agents, and when this is the case the principal is bound by the acts of the sub-agent: Gum v. Equitable Trust Co., 1 McCrary, 51.

93. Accountability for acts of sub-agent: A sub-agent is accountable to his superior agent when employed without the assent or direction of the principal. But if employed with the express or implied assent of the principal, the superior agent will not be responsible for his acts: Guelich v. National State Bank, 56-434.

94. Fellow-servant: Where it appeared that a railway company had a night clerk at its station in addition to the regular agent, held, that the agent was not responsible for the acts of the night clerk as a sub-agent: Robinson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 30-401.

95. Attorney engaging officer: Where an attorney procures an officer to render services for his client, the attorney is merely the agent of the party requiring the services, and, his agency being known, he cannot be held liable in the absence of an express contract to that effect: Doughty v. Paige, 48-483.

Bank collections: That a bank receiving paper for collection is not liable for negligence of correspondent to whom paper is sent: See supra, § 48.

96. Purchaser procured by sub-agent: Authority to sell real property at the agent's own discretion as to the price and terms of sale, authorizes the agent to employ a sub-agent to procure a purchaser at reasonable terms, and the principal will be bound by a sale so made: Renwick v. Bancroft, 56-527.

97. Attorney cannot delegate: An attorney-at-law cannot delegate to another attorney, authority to act for the principal in a matter confided to the care of the first attorney: Antrobus v. Sherman, 65-230.

III. LIABILITY OF PRINCIPAL AND OF AGENT RESPECTIVELY.

a. By contract.

98. Principal alone bound: If the agent has authority to make the contract, and does so in writing, disclosing therein his principal, and his own relation as agent, the principal alone will be bound, unless the intention is clearly expressed to bind the agent personally, notwithstanding the aforesaid relation: Baker v. Chambles, 4 G. Gr., 428; Harkins v. Edwards, 1-426.

99. The question of liability does not turn generally upon the form of the signature, but upon the fact whether the relation of principal and agent is fairly disclosed upon the face of the paper: Harkins v. Edwards, 1-426.

100. Agency not presumed: The legal presumption is, that where a party contracts, he binds himself personally, unless it is shown affirmatively that he acted and promised for a principal: Curts v. Scoles, 1-471.

101. Must act in the name of the principal: A contract by an agent is not valid against the principal, unless it appears that the agent had either a general or special authority to make such contract for the principal, and that he made it in the name of the principal: Lucas v. Barrett, 1 G. Gr., 510.

102. Agent bound: Where one having authority as agent signs a contract or promise, and his authority appears on the face of the instrument, he is not personally liable; but, if it does not appear that he acted as agent, or he had not authority, he renders himself personally responsible. An executor or administrator is personally responsible on a note given by him in that capacity, as he has no authority to bind the estate: Winter v. Hite, 3-142.

103. Where one contracts in his own name for the act of another, he becomes thereby personally bound, unless it appears from the contract itself that he did not intend to bind himself personally. Therefore, where it appeared that a party signed his name to a subscription for stock in a corporation, adding words indicating that it was to be paid for by another, held, that he was personally liable upon such subscription: Langford v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 59-283.

104. Payment to agent without knowledge of agency: Where the purchaser of property from an agent, without notice or knowledge of the agency, allowed judgment to be rendered against himself in garnishment as debtor of such agent for the purchase money unpaid, held, that he was not liable to the principal for the same debt in another action: Eclipse Wind Mill Co. v. Thorson, 46-181.

105. Agent holding himself out as principal: A person dealing with an agent in regard to personal property intrusted to him by his principal, without knowledge that the agent is not the real owner, but supposing him to be such owner and the principal in the transaction, will possess all the rights that he would have acquired had the transaction been with the real principal: Erickson v. Bell, 53-627.

106. Pretended principal: An agent, who attempts without authority to make a contract binding upon a principal, binds himself thereby: Andrews v. Tedford, 37-314.

107. An agent contracting in behalf of a principal having no legal existence renders himself liable. So held in a case of contract, entered into by defendants as executive committee of an unincorporated association: Lewis v. Tilton, 64-220.

108. Undisclosed principal; rights and liabilities: A principal may be held liable for money had and received on a bill of exchange drawn by his agent without disclosing the principal: Thurston v. Mauro, 1 G. Gr., 231.

109. The right of a party to maintain a suit in equity against an unnamed principal, when the agent acted within the scope of his authority, seems to be well founded: Davison v. Davenport Gas, etc., Co., 24-419.

Liability.—By contract.

110. A contract by an agent in his own name, which would not be binding on the principal, may nevertheless be enforced by the principal against the party contracted with: Darling v. Noyes, 32-96.

111. It is not improper for an agent, in the absence of instructions on that point, to act without disclosing his agency, and the fact that he does so will not release the principal from responsibility to the agent himself for the liability incurred in so acting: Nixon v. Dorney, 49-166.

112. The mere fact that the principal is not disclosed by no means prevents him from being bound by the contract, provided it is understood that the agent is acting as such and not as principal: Young v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 45-377.

113. Agent's signature: A person cannot be rendered liable on a bill of exchange or promissory note, unless his name or the style of his firm is subscribed to some portion of it as a party. Simply the signature of a person acting as agent, with the word "agent" added to such signature, will not render the undisclosed principal liable thereon: Thurstow v. Mauro, 1 G. Gr., 231.

114. Descriptive words; consideration: A note given for a policy of insurance, not appearing on its face to be other than the individual note of the makers, and signed with individual names, to which are affixed the words of official designation, "president," "secretary," "director," etc., is personally binding upon such makers as individuals, even though it be shown that the policy was issued to a school district, and that the makers were the officers of such district. The fact that it has been given for such purposes will not defeat it for want of consideration: American Ins. Co. v. Stratton, 59-606.

115. Face of note showing official capacity: Where the note shows upon its face that it is executed in an official capacity, the maker is not personally liable, although his signature is not supplemented with his official designation: Lyon v. Adamson, 7-509; Harvey v. Irvine, 11-82.

116. A note in which the signers were described as "committeemen for the erection of a school-house in district," etc., but which was signed simply with the ordinary names of such officers without the official designation, and did not purport to bind the district, held binding upon the makers individually, and not upon the corporation: Bayliss v. Pearson, 15-279.

117. Signature in official capacity: Where a note in which the obligatory words were "we promise," was signed "for the Dubuque Times Co., Ferd. S. Winslow, Treasurer," there being such a corporation in existence, capable of contracting and appointing an agent, held, that the note was that of the company and did not bind the treasurer individually: Wheelock v. Winslow, 15-464.

118. So where a similar note was signed "Ferd. S. Winslow, Treas. Dub. T. Co.," held, that the case was one of those where the agent disclosed his principal and purported to bind him only, and did not become personally liable: Ibid.

119. Agent not bound: If the name of the principal and the relation of agency be stated in the writing, and the agent is authorized, the principal alone is bound, unless the intention is clearly expressed to bind the agent personally: Harkins v. Edwards, 1-426.

120. Parol evidence to bind agent: Parol evidence is not admissible to show that an agent who signs in his representative capacity so as to bind the principal intended thereby to bind himself, although parol proof may be admitted to show that the execution of the instrument is without authority, and hence not binding on the principal: Ibid.

121. Parol to vary the meaning of signature: The agent of an undisclosed principal cannot vary the meaning of his signature to a written contract by parol evidence tending to show that it was understood he acted only for an unnamed principal and was not personally liable: Bryan v. Brazil, 52-850.

122. Where a person in executing a contract describes himself as agent, without disclosing his principal, the contract becomes a personal obligation of the maker and no one else. So where a contract was signed by defendants designating themselves as officers of the "school board," but not purporting to bind any school district, nor describing themselves as officers of any particular school district, held, that parol evidence was not admissible to show that the contract was intended to be that of the school district of which they were officers: Wing v. Glick, 56-473.

123. Parol to explain signature to order: Parol evidence is admissible to explain that the person who signed orders for the delivery of goods was acting as the agent of another party, to whom the goods were delivered: Lyons v. Thompson, 16-62.

124. Parol to explain abbreviations affixed to name: Where the maker of a note affixes initials to his name, he may show by parol evidence the meaning of the initials if unintelligible. He may thus show them to mean that he signed the note as the president of the corporation, in whose office the note purported to be executed, and that the instrument is the obligation of such corporation: Lacy v. Dubuque Lumber Co., 43-510.

125. Note need not show agent's authority: In case of an indorsement by an agent whose authority is conferred by parol or by independent writing, it is not necessary to show upon the face of the instrument how the agent came by his authority: Bettis v. Bristol, 56-41.

Attorney: As to individual liability of attorney when acting for his client, see ATTORNEYS, §§ 77-84.

b. By conduct in general.

126. Knowledge of agency: If one, acting under direction of another, takes possession of property which he has no right to, he will be liable to the owner of such property in an action to recover it, unless the owner has knowledge that the wrongful act was done by such person as the agent of another, in which case the owner must look to the principal: Robertson v. Phillips, 3 G. Gr., 220.

127. If a party deals with an agent knowing him to be such, but in form treats him as a principal, and is defrauded by such agent, he is not entitled to look to the principal to make good the loss but to the agent simply: Hiskey v. Williams, 40-499.

128. Fraud of agent: One who is induced by the fraud of an agent to give a receipt in full, when only part of the debt is paid, is not estopped from asserting his claim against the principal, by the fact that a settlement was made between the principal and such agent, based upon the receipt, in which the agent was allowed the full amount of the receipt: Noble v. Steamboat Northern Illinois, 23-109.

129. Where the agent is acting in the direct line of his employment, his acts must be considered as the acts of his principal. The principal is liable for the act of his agent in procuring a signature to a note made payable at a different date from that represented to the persons signing the note: Hopkins v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 57-203.

130. If the party dealing with the agent suffers by reason of the fraud of the agent in a transaction which has been ratified and affirmed by the principal, the principal is bound to make him compensation for the injury sustained; but, in order to recover from the principal, it must be shown that the party dealing with the agent was injured by reason of the fraud: Mitchell v. Donahay, 62-376.

131. An agent having authority to sell with a certain warranty may yet bind the principal to a different warranty, when it appears that the agent made a contract under such different warranty, and sent to the principal an order for the goods, which were shipped by the principal, who through the fraud of the agent did not know of the change in the warranty: Davis v. Danforth, 65-601.

132. Fraud upon agent: Where an agent is deceived by the false entries of a public officer, the law will treat the principal as the one really deceived, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, will hold the officer liable to the principal in damages: Perkins v. Evans, 61-35.

133. Authorized acts: A person known to be an agent of an incorporated society, and receiving money in its behalf, is not personally responsible for his authorized acts: Emonds v. Termehr, 60-92.

134. A mere agent should not be made defendant to a suit against his principal, for acts done by him in the scope of his authority, unless the agent is charged with fraud: Lyon v. Tevis, 8-79.

135. Demand by agent; replevin; authority: In an action for the recovery of personal property, where demand was made by plaintiff's agent for the property, held, that such agent was not required to show his authority for making the demand, unless demand was made upon him to do so, and his authority questioned by the defendant: Barlow v. Brock, 25-308.

136. Discharge of principal: The fact that in an action against the principal upon a contract made in his name by an agent, the principal is held not liable, for the reason that the agent has not so executed the contract as to bind the principal, does not show, in an action against the agent who was not a party to the former proceeding, that he is liable in his individual capacity: Armstrong v. Borland, 35-537.

137. Assumed principal liable by estoppel: Where a contract was made by an agent without disclosing his agency, and afterwards another party assumed to be the principal in the transaction, and acted as such, held, that such party could not afterwards be heard to deny that he was so in fact: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63-490.

138. Torts of agent: A master is not liable for the torts of his servant committed after the service for which he was employed is ended, and he has received his discharge, and this rule is not affected by the fact that the tort was committed soon after the employment had ceased: Yates v. Squires, 19-26.

139. Where a servant employed to guard a brewery, and for that purpose furnished with a pistol, shot and killed a person who had been creating a disturbance therein, but was at the time of the shooting outside the building and retreating therefrom, held, that the act was not in the line of the servant's duty, and the master was not responsible: Golden v. Neubrand, 52-59.

c. Declarations and admissions; res gestæ.

140. Admissions or declarations: The admissions of an agent are not receivable in evidence against his principal, unless they constitute a part of the res gestæ: Verry v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 47-549; Treadway v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 40-526.

141. Declarations of an agent not made at the time of a transaction, nor in relation to it, are not admissible as evidence against the principal: Lucas v. Barrett, 1 G. Gr., 510.

142. Declarations of a conveyancer, employed only for that purpose, are not binding upon the party employing him: Hurd v. Gallaher, 14-394.

143. Declarations of a railway engineer, made after the happening of an accident which it was claimed caused an injury, as to such accident, held not binding upon the principal, although he was still in the employ of the principal: Treadway v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 40-526.

144. In order that the principal shall be bound by statements and representations of his agent, they must be made while he is engaged in the business of the agency and must relate to that business: Hakes v. Myrick, 69-189.

Further as to how far acts and declarations of agent are admissible against the principal and how far they are part of the res gestæ, see EVIDENCE, §§ 240-254.

145. A declaration in regard to a charge being excessive, made by a person authorized to collect such charge, is proper to be shown in evidence in connection with the inquiry whether or not the payment was voluntary: Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 31-187.

146. Within scope of authority: An agent will not bind his principal by representations made in a matter not within the scope of his authority: State v. Haskell 20-276.

147. Declarations of an agent, authorized to receive a bond from one upon whom an agency is being conferred, and shown to be a part of that act, will be received in evidence as against the principal, notwithstanding any special limitations upon the authority of such agent, not brought to the knowledge of the party dealing with him: Howe Machine Co. v. Snow, 32-433.

148. Where it appeared that a railway superintendent had charge of the operation and repairing of the road, held, that a letter by him with reference to a cattle-guard was not within the scope of his authority, and did not constitute an admission binding upon the company: Livingston v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 35-555.

149. The declarations of one of defendant's car repairers as to his knowledge of defects in such car, made while he was standing by, after the occurrence of the accident resulting from such defect, and while not engaged in the performance of any duty for the defendant, held not to be declarations made in the line of his duty, and in relation to matters under his charge, in such sense as to be binding upon defendant as showing knowledge by it of the defects causing the injury: Verry v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 47-549.

150. Where an agent acted only as a messenger of insured to procure policies of insurance, which were already contracted and paid for, his representations that the property was not occupied were held not to be binding, and that something more than the representations of the supposed agent were necessary to establish his authority: Williams v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 50-561.

Further as to how far agent may bind insurance company by declarations, waivers, etc., see INSURANCE.

151. Injury by railroad; agent's offer to arbitrate: The tort of the principal cannot be proven by evidence of the statements of an agent in connection with his offer to arbitrate. The declarations of a road-master of a railroad, while offering to submit to arbitration the liability of the company for injuries to stock, are not admissible in evidence: Mundhenk v. Central Iowa R. Co., 57-718.

152. Declarations of agent who was present but took no part: An agent who was present at a negotiation but took no part therein, and is intrusted with no duty in reference thereto, cannot bind his principal by any statement or representation which he may afterwards make with reference to such transaction: Wolf v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 64-380.

153. While the business continues: The declarations of an agent, to bind his principal, must be made during the continuance of the agency, and in regard to a transaction then depending, et dum fervet opus: Peck v. Parthen, 52-46.

154. A party who authorizes another to negotiate a sale for him, even though the latter is not authorized to complete the sale, is bound by representations made in the course of such negotiations: Hornish v. Peck, 53-157; Lindmeier v. Monahan, 64-24.

155. The agent's declarations are only binding upon the principal when made about a matter within the scope of his employment, and when actively engaged in the duties of that employment: Gimbel v. Salomon, 54-389.

156. The above doctrine applied in regard to the statement of an agent that his principal was a member of a certain firm: Ibid.

157. Estoppel by declarations of agent: Where a note was left with an agent for collection, and upon inquiry of such agent by the surety, it was stated that the note had been paid by the principal, held, that if the surety had suffered detriment by reason of such representation, the principal would be estopped thereby from recovery against the surety: Thornburgh v. Madren, 88-380.

And see ESTOPPEL, §§ 102-109.

d. Notice to, and knowledge of agent.

As to NOTICE in general, see that title.

158. Notice to an agent, while acting within the sphere of his agency, is notice to the principal: Warburton v. Lauman, 2 G. Gr., 420; Jones v. Bamford, 21-217; Thompson v. Merrill, 58-419.

159. Where the agent of a railway company received, accepted and paid for ties sold to the company, after notice of a lien by express contract upon the ties for the purchase money of the land from which they were cut, held, that the company was affected by such notice, and took the ties subject to the obligation to pay the amount of the lien: Slater v. Irwin, 88-261.

160. Knowledge of an agent of facts connected with the negotiation in which he acts for his principal is to be deemed the knowledge of his principal: Huff v. Farwell, 67-296.

161. Where a draft was sent to a bank for collection, the knowledge acquired by the bank in connection with the collection of such paper, and affecting its validity, was held to be the knowledge of the principal: Delaware County Bank v. Duncombe, 48-488.

162. Notice to an agent, who is procuring the conveyance of land held under a tax title, that there was fraud in the tax sale, rendering it void, is notice to the principal: Crumb v. Davis, 54-25.

163. Although knowledge of the agent is regarded as the knowledge of the principal, the rule must be confined to the particular transaction in which the agent is authorized to act: Second Nat. Bank v. Curren, 86-555.

164. Knowledge acquired by a notary public, not in connection with his business as an insurance agent nor while acting as such, but merely incidentally while transacting other business, and not sufficiently near to the time of his acting as insurance agent to justify any inference that he had the knowledge acquired as notary public in mind and acted upon it, will not impute notice to the insurance company of facts thus known to the agent as notary public: Stennett v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co., 68-674.

165. Where a land agent and abstractor, through whom a loan was effected, and mortgage taken as security, had knowledge of a mortgage by a prior owner of the land, which he had reason to believe was by mistake executed on other premises, instead of the premises in question, held that his principal, the mortgagee, would be bound by such prior mortgage, and it might be reformed as against him: Sowler v. Day, 58-252.

166. Information gained before agency: Information acquired by an agent long before the existence of the agency, and not in connection with any business of the principal, and not retained by him at the time of transacting the business of the principal, cannot be considered notice to the principal: Yerger v. Barz, 56-77.

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES BETWEEN PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

a. Duties and liability of agent towards principal.

167. Belong to principal: One who holds a note in judgment in his own name as agent for another is not the owner of such property, but the ownership is to be deemed to be in the principal: Beaver Valley Bank v. Cousins, 67-310.

168. Misrepresentation as to money received: Where an agent, who has received money or notes in payment for property sold, re-invests the same in land at an overvaluation, and leads the principal to suppose that the land bought was in full exchange for the value of the property sold, he will be answerable for the amount actually received from the sale, although he is not guilty of any fraudulent representations: Briggs v. Hartman, 10-63.

169. Demand upon agent for funds: Where money has been properly received by an agent for his principal, he is not liable in an action until a demand has been made therefor by his principal: Alexander v. Jones, 64-207.

170. Agent's mistake: If one who is an agent for compensation, by mistake satisfies a mortgage of his principal upon receipt of a less sum than that actually due, he is liable to his principal for the difference. In such case the principal may recover from the debtor the amount unpaid, but if the agent pays it, he may have the same right to recover it from the debtor: Kempker v. Roblyer, 29-274.

171. If the land owner justly relies upon his agent to whom he has furnished money to discharge an incumbrance, and the land is lost without his knowledge and wholly by the fault of the agent, the agent will be liable for the full value of the land at the time it is lost: Blood v. Wilkins, 43-565.

172. Negligence of factor: Under the circumstances of a particular case, a factor, who sold his principal's grain for future delivery, was held guilty of negligence in not requiring a margin to be advanced in accordance with the custom of the board of trade where the sale was made: Howe v. Sutherland, 39-484.

173. Principal's negligence: A principal cannot recover, from his agent, money paid out by the latter through mistake or oversight, if it appears that no loss would have resulted to the principal if he had used due care to protect himself: Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Walker, 49-273.

174. Violation of instructions: Where a principal furnished his agent machines to be sold on condition that payment was to be secured by "undoubted paper," and that the agent should take, along with the negotiable paper, property statements, held, that it was not enough for the agent to rely wholly upon such statements, without regard to their truth or falsity, and that the fact that the agent did so was no defense to an action brought against him by the principal to recover the amount of a worthless note accepted by the agent: Robinson Machine Works v. Vorse, 52-207.

175. Care of goods: If a principal ships a machine to his agent, who receives it in good order, the agent will be liable for all damage done to it, in the absence of reasonable care on his part: Bartle v. Phelps, 89-498.

176. Loss without fault of agent: In an action against an agent to recover a sum of money alleged to have been received from the principal and to be still in the possession of the agent unaccounted for, held, that it was error to render judgment against the agent for the whole amount, when it appeared that a part of the money had been expended upon the work for which the money was intrusted to the agent to expend, although the result of such expenditure had been destroyed without the fault of the agent: Iowa County v. Huston, 89-823.

177. Property set apart for principal: If an agent in good faith sets apart a sum of money or chose in action, and treats it as the property of and belonging to his principal, equity will regard it as the property of the principal, so far as it concerns the parties, or a third person who has not acquired a prior or paramount lien. In setting apart a note as the property of the principal in this manner, assignment by indorsement is not necessary. Any act, whether in writing or not, showing clearly that the title has passed from the agent to the principal is sufficient. Hence the creditors of an agent cannot subject to the payment of his debts, property which the agent has already equitably transferred to his principal, by procuring title to be made directly in the principal's name, the principal having accepted the transaction, although the agent may have acquired the property in payment of an indebtedness due himself: Perry v. Smith, 15-202.

178. Conversion and sale of principal's property by agent: Where plaintiffs shipped to an agent certain plows, to be sold on commission, and the agent turned the same over to the defendants in payment of his own pre-existing indebtedness, held, that the plaintiffs might replevin the property from the defendants: Thompson v. Barnum, 49-392.

179. Burden of proof: The allegation that an agent whose duty, by virtue of his employment, is to disburse or account for funds received, did receive a certain sum, and that a portion thereof has not been accounted for or returned, is sufficient to throw upon the agent the burden of showing that the amount was lost without fault or negligence on his part. The burden of proof as to any particular fact in such a case is upon one party or the other, depending upon whether it relates to the cause of action or to the defense: Becket v. Iowa Improvement Co., 67-387.

180. Offsetting agent's claims: When a principal seeks relief in a court of equity, against an agent, for misappropriation of money, etc., the latter is entitled to affirmative relief, in the same suit, relative to his accounts and transactions as agent: Clark v. Lee, 21-274.

Trust relation: That an attorney occupies a trust relation towards his client, preventing him from acquiring any adverse rights, see ATTORNEYS, §§ 63-74.

b. Compensation of the agent.

181. Compensation forfeited by fraud: When the agent is guilty of an intentional gross fraud upon the principal, in the transaction of his agency, and the principal is put to the expense of litigation to secure his rights, the agent forfeits his rights to compensation for his services. But this does not apply to money paid to third persons for their services: Vennum v. Gregory, 21-328.

182. Advances by a commission merchant: Where advances are made by the consignee, or commission merchant, the consignor cannot direct a sale at his pleasure. In the absence of express agreement, the consignee has the right to sell at such time as he sees proper, to the extent and in payment of his advances: Butterfield v. Stephens, 59-596.

183. No lien without possession: The lien of a factor upon goods consigned to him under an agreement that he is to sell them and apply the proceeds to repay previous advances to the consignor, does not attach to specific property, until it comes either actually or constructively into his possession. Therefore, where plaintiffs, as commission merchants, had made advances to one V. on the strength of consignments to be made by him, and afterward, before the property intended to be consigned was actually shipped, and before the shipping receipts were forwarded to plaintiffs, it was seized by defendants under an attachment against V. as his property, held, that plaintiffs had no lien which they could enforce against the defendant's attachment: Hodges v. Kimball, 49-577.

184. Commission for sale of land: Facts in a certain case held sufficient to support a finding allowing plaintiff commission for the sale of certain land of defendant: Dubois v. Dubois, 54-216.

185. An agent or broker who is employed to sell property, at a designated price and upon stated terms, is entitled to his commission, when he has found a customer who is able and willing to take the property upon such terms, whether the sale is consummated or not: Blodgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 63-606; Cassady v. Seeley, 69-509.

186. Where the agent is simply to find a purchaser, he will be entitled to his commission, when he produces a customer who is ready and willing to buy, and with whom the principal enters into negotiations which result in the purchase by him of the property: Ibid.

187. The question whether in such case the agent is entitled to his commission, depends upon whether the person who afterwards purchased does so as a result of the negotiations which the agent induced him to enter into. But such a question is one of fact for the jury: Hanna v. Collins, 69-51.

188. An agent does not become entitled to compensation under a contract for the sale of lands at a fixed price, and on specified terms, where he has not procured a purchaser, but has merely induced a purchaser to enter into negotiations with the principal, and such negotiations result in the sale of the property at a different price, and on different terms, and the principal did not know that he was dealing with a customer produced by the agent: Blodgett v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 63-606.

189. Excess as commission: Under an agreement that a real estate agent should have, as compensation for the sale of real property, whatever amount was realized for the property in excess of a certain sum, and nothing was said as to incumbrances, held, that the owner of the property was bound to remove incumbrances: Wisehart v. Dietz, 67-121.

190. Compensation for sales of machinery cannot be recovered unless such sales are within the terms of the contract: Williams Harvester Co. v. Pope, 69-523.

191. Where the manufacturer of agricultural implements agreed to send such implements as ordered to his agent, but stipulated that he should not be held responsible to the agent for failure to furnish such implements, where the demand exceeded the supply, held, that a judgment against the manufacturer for failure to furnish implements, there being no averment nor proof that implements were ordered, nor that the manufacturer did not use his best efforts to furnish such implements, was erroneous: Ibid.

192. Right of agent to reimburse himself: An agent is not permitted to speculate with property intrusted to him. Even if he is entitled to reimburse himself for the sums actually expended for his principal, with the interest, he cannot acquire absolute title to property taken in trust for his principal, on account of a mere failure of the principal to reimburse him for his outlays, unless he has first made a full and clear statement of such outlays to his principal: Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Perry, 65-709.

As to compensation, etc., of ATTORNEYS, see that title.

c. Good faith from agent to principal.

193. Adverse interest of agent: While an agent cannot act so as to bind his principal, when he himself has an adverse interest, yet an assignment made by a firm to a creditor may be accepted by one of the members of the firm as agent for such creditor: Randolph Bank v. Armstrong, 11-515.

194. Tax title adverse to principal: Before an agent having charge of real property can acquire a tax title on such property adverse to his principal, there must be an unambiguous relinquishment of the agency. The mere fact that the principal has failed to furnish means to pay the taxes will not justify the agent in procuring and holding such a title: Bowman v. Officer, 53-640.

Good faith.

195. Adverse interest of agent: A land agent who has procured and put on file a mortgage to secure an anticipated loan, which is not, in fact, effected, cannot acquire valid title to such property from another source, while such mortgage remains as a cloud upon the title: Smeltzer v. Lombard, 57-294.

196. The rule that an agent will not be permitted, during his agency, to put himself in a position which is adverse to his principal, is for the protection of the principal, and the principal is the only party who can avoid a contract made in violation thereof. If he chooses to authorize his agent to transact his business in violation of this rule, or afterwards ratifies its violation, other parties will not be heard to question such acts of the agent. Therefore an agreement by which the agent is to receive a commission from a third person, for a purchase made in behalf of his principal, is binding on such third person, who knows the agent's relation to his principal: Leekins v. Nordyke, etc., Co., 66-471.

197. Profit on purchases for principal: An agent whose contract is such that he is to receive a certain sum for land purchased for his principal, may make whatever profit for himself he can, provided there be no fraud in the transaction, and it is immaterial to his principal what price he pays for the land: Anderson v. Weiser, 24-428.

198. Purchase from principal: While an agent employed to sell the property of his principal is charged with the duty of obtaining the highest price he can fairly get, yet if he himself becomes the purchaser and the principal the seller, he is under no obligation to assist the principal in obtaining the highest price. His agency thereupon ceases. He is not bound to disclose to the owner the value of the property, and see to it that he obtains a full price: Collar v. Ford, 45-331.

199. Fraud: Where an agent for the sale of lands, by fraudulent concealment of the facts as to the value, demand for the lands, etc., procures a conveyance to him of the lands for less than their value, while he is negotiating a sale thereof at a much higher price, and which sale is consummated after the conveyance to him of the lands, he will yet be liable to his principal for the proceeds of the sale, if it was for a fair price, less what he has paid over to the principal, with interest on the amount found due: Stoner v. Weiser, 24-434.

200. Where an agent for the sale of lands effected a sale for the full amount, and reported to his principal a much less amount, obtaining the conveyance to himself, under the representation that it would be more convenient, the principal is entitled to recover the excess over the amount recovered: Wilt v. Graham, 33-599.

201. Where the principal relies upon the agent as to the value of the property, and the agent purchases for himself from the principal at an inadequate price, the transaction is fraudulent, and the sale may be set aside: Ingle v. Hartman, 37-274.

202. Bank dealing with its president: Where a contract for the delivery of stock is made with the president of a bank, for the bank, and the stock to be delivered is in the possession of the president, the president would be regarded as holding for the bank, and the stock would be considered as the bank's property: Markley v. Rhodes, 59-57.

203. Member of firm negotiating purchase from firm: A member of a firm, vendors of personal property, may act as the agent of one who buys of the firm, and, as such, file a bill of sale for record, and manage the vendee's interest in the property for him: Thomas v. Hillhouse, 17-67.

204. Agent for two principals: Where an agent, by authority of the principal, collected money coming to the principal, and, by consent of such principal, paid it over to another, whose agent he also was, held that the money so collected and paid over should not be recovered from the agent by the principal in whose behalf it was paid, although the contract under which it was paid was void for mistake: Montgomery County v. American Emigrant Co., 47-91.

205. Agent dealing with principal under an assumed name: Where an agent for the sale of land wrote a letter to his principal in the name of another person, making an offer for the purchase of the land, and the principal then advised with such agent as to the acceptance of the offer, and did accept in pursuance of the advice thus given, and the agent thus procured title at a price much less than the value of the land, held, that equity would set aside the sale as fraudulent: Seymour v. Shea, 62-708.

V. RATIFICATION.

206. Parol ratification under written contract: Although the authority of an agent may be in writing, yet, if he exceeds his authority, and the principal ratifies the act, the principal will be bound, whether the ratification be in writing or not. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a ratification: Mathews v. Gillis, 1-242.

207. In general: If a party, on learning that a contract has been made in his name by a person acting as his agent, though without authority to make such contract, does not repudiate the same, but assents to it, it will constitute a ratification. If the assumed agent has no authority to bind, his alleged principal can only be bound by ratification or adoption of the act. Such ratification may be implied as well as expressed, but the principal is not bound to disaffirm in order to avoid liability. There may be such circumstances as that the silence of the principal may amount to an implied ratification, but the principal is then bound by a positive affirmation, or what amounts to such, and not by a mere failure to disaffirm: Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Greene, 22-508.

208. Accepting benefits: While perhaps there can be no ratification by the principal of an act not done avowedly for him, yet where one of two persons takes the title to property, and pays the taxes thereon, and the title is afterwards adjudged to be in the other, and the latter accepts the benefit of such payment of taxes, he is bound to repay the same to the person who made the payment in the first place: Goodnow v. Stryker, 61-261.

209. Accepting the benefits of a sale, or proposition for a sale, made by or through an agent, ratifies the transaction and charges the principal with its burdens: Milligan v. Davis, 49-126.

210. While the rule is that the principal who accepts and retains the beneficial result of a contract made by the agent is estopped from denying the authority of the agent to make it, the fact that property or money received by the agent without authority remains in the agent's possession will not prevent the principal from refusing to be bound by unauthorized acts of the agent: Hakes v. Myrick, 69-189.

211. One may become bound by a contract, which another has without authority assumed to make in his name, by knowingly accepting its benefits or by failing to repudiate it within a reasonable time, after he has been informed of the act. He may also become bound by giving his assent to it, or by an express contract subsequently made to perform the contract. In the one case the law conclusively presumes a ratification from the circumstances. In the other the party is bound, because he gives his consent to the act: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67-14.

212. Knowledge of unauthorized act: A principal cannot be held to have ratified an unauthorized act done in his behalf unless he has knowledge of the act: Tod v. Benedict, 15-591.

213. One who avails himself of the benefits of an unauthorized contract made in his behalf is bound by all the terms of such contract, whether known to him or not. Therefore, where an agent who had authority to warrant was superseded by another without such authority, and the former, after the expiration of his agency, made a sale with warranty, taking notes which were transferred to and accepted by the principal, held, that such principal was bound by the contract of warranty made in connection therewith: Eadie v. Ashbaugh, 44-519.

214. Delay of the principal in disaffirming acts of the agent, assumed to be done by his authority, will not constitute a ratification, where the principal has no knowledge of the unauthorized acts: Hakes v. Myrick, 69-189.

215. An unauthorized contract will not be binding upon a principal until it is shown that the principal knew that the agent had so contracted, and that the principal, after being so informed, permitted the property to remain under the control of the agent: White v. Morgan, 42-113.

216. Failure of the principal to object to acts done in pursuance of supposed consent of agent will not amount to a ratification of such consent, unless the fact of such consent was known to the principal: Decorah Woolen Mill Co. v. Greer, 49-490.

217. Where the agent of an insurance company only claimed to have power to receive applications to be forwarded, and it was not shown that the company knew of his acts outside of his powers, held that they would not be bound by failure to object to a permission given by such agent to the insured to use an explosive on the premises: Bartholomew v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 25-507.

218. Ratification must be complete: One who wishes to avail himself of the unauthorized acts of another must adopt the whole of such acts or none. But where the agent is duly appointed, whatever he does beyond his authority may be ratified, or if not ratified, is void, without affecting the validity of the authorized acts: Davenport Savings, etc., Ass'n v. North Am. F. Ins. Co., 16-74.

219. The principal cannot, of his own mere authority, without the consent of the other party, ratify a transaction by his agent in part and repudiate it as to the rest; he must either adopt the whole or none. A ratification of a part ratifies the whole of that particular transaction of the agent: Krider v. Trustees, 31-547.

220. Therefore, where the president of a board of trustees executed as agent for such trustees a note for money borrowed, and to secure the same executed a mortgage upon the property of the corporation, held, that the ratification of the execution of the note ratified the execution of the mortgage: Ibid.

221. Partial ratification: Where a person assumes without authority to act as the agent of another, the principal cannot be bound at all, unless he ratify the act. In such a case he cannot accept the act in part and repudiate it in part. But the principle does not apply when the agent is duly appointed and vested with special or limited powers. In such case the principal may accept the benefits of acts which the agent was authorized to do, without being bound by the unauthorized acts of the agent, of which he had no knowledge when he accepted the benefits of the transaction: Roberts v. Rumley, 58-301.

222. Where a contract wholly unauthorized is an entirety, and the principal takes the benefit of it, he must take an obligation which is a part of it. If the principal accepts the benefit of a portion of the contract, in ignorance of other terms thereof, he must, on learning the full terms of the contract, promptly disaffirm by returning the benefit received or he will be bound by the whole: Beidman v. Goodell, 56-592.

223. Sale subject to approval: Under the facts of a particular case, held, that an agent for the sale of land was not given authority to sell except on approval of the contract by his principal. In such a case the fact that former sales have been approved as made, would not give rise to authority to make further sales without approval: Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 62-809.

224. Long silence implying ratification: Where a person pledged the entire stock of goods of another to the creditor of his supposed principal, and such creditor, after retaining possession for two years, disposed of the goods, held, that it might be inferred from the silence of the principal and his failure to complain of, or disaffirm the act, that the agent had such power: Farwell v. Howard, 26-331.

225. Unauthorized lease; accepting rent: Where the agent without authority made a lease, and rent thereunder was afterwards accepted by the principal, held, that the lease was binding upon the principal: Chamberlain v. Collinson, 45-429.

226. Sale of land: Where the owner of real and personal property executed a power of sale which did not in terms authorize the sale of real property, but it appeared that such owner intended to give to the agent power of attorney to sell the land, and the land was sold accordingly and the consideration received and retained, held, that the sale was binding upon the owner: Rook v. Jimeson, 67-202.

227. In case of an unauthorized sale of land by an agent, held, that the principal had so ratified said contract as to make it binding upon him: Chamberlin v. Robertson, 31-408.

228. Acceptance of note: The act of a person in accepting a note made in his favor is sufficient ratification of the agency of the person taking the note in his name: Crouce v. Capwell, 47-426.

229. Where the principal accepts notes taken by an agent he cannot deny the power of such agent to act for him, and is bound by the contract of the agent in pursuance of which the note was given: Farrar v. Peterson, 53-420.

230. Further acts after ratification: The act of the principal in accepting a note executed and delivered to him by one having no authority will not constitute the person thus acting an agent of the principal in such sense as to authorize him to receive payment and bind the principal by an agreement to deliver up the note: Draper v. Rice, 56-114.

231. Particular cases: Under the facts of a particular case, held, that the principal had ratified the acts of the agent in transferring a certain certificate of purchase, and could not afterwards question the assignee's right thereunder: Hannum v. Benton, 54-396.

232. Under particular circumstances, held, that although an agent employed in selling agricultural implements had not the authority to purchase a team with which to prosecute his business, yet that the circumstances showed a ratification of such purchase sufficient to render the principal liable upon a promissory note given for the team: Warder v. Pattee, 57-515.

233. Ratification by agent having general powers: A principal will be bound by the acts of an agent having general powers in ratifying a previous transaction, and appropriating the proceeds thereof to the principal's use, although such prior transaction was with the knowledge of the party with whom it was entered into, in violation of express instructions of the principal: Palmer v. Cheney, 35-281.

234. Ratification discharging agent from liability to principal: Where an agent to whom a draft was sent for collection, presented it for acceptance only, when it should have been presented for payment, and the indorser thereby became discharged, held that a subsequent direction by the principal to the agent to protest the draft, and a payment of the protest fees by the principal, would not amount to a ratification, so as to release the agent from his liability: First Nat. Bank v. Price, 52-570.

235. Where the agent intrusted with the disbursing of money for his principal renders an account of such disbursement, he has a right to expect his account will receive attention, and that any disapproval of his acts by the principal shall be made within a reasonable time. If the principal has possession of the accounts, and neglects to make examination, he will not be heard to say that he was not informed as to the agent's acts, and should not therefore be held to have ratified them: Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65-87.

236. Reasonable time to disaffirm: Where an agent without authority makes payment out of the funds of his principal, the question as to what constitutes a reasonable time within which the principal is required to object to such payment must be submitted for the jury to determine from the evidence: Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 59-448.

237. Effect of ratification: The ratification of an act by the principal has the same effect as a previous authority: Berryhill v. Jones, 35-335. Herriott v. Kersey, 69-111.

238. Where a public officer makes an unauthorized loan of public moneys, and takes a mortgage to secure it, the mortgagor cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage, nor can his privy in estate claim an interest in the lands mortgaged. And when the state ratifies such loan, the ratification has the same effect as an original authority, and makes the transaction valid from the beginning: State v. Shaw, 28-67.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

1. Lease of lands of: The legislature can fix and enforce the terms and conditions of a lease or sale of lands of the agricultural college belonging to the state: Smith v. Trustees, 28-500.

2. Right of way over lands: Proceedings had for the condemnation of a right of way over agricultural college land, to which the trustees of the college are properly made parties, will be binding upon a subsequent purchaser of such property: Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Bean, 69-257.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

1. Horse racing at fairs: The offer of a premium to the winner at a horse-race under the control of the society, is not in excess of the authority of such society under Code, § 1109, nor illegal under Code, § 1114, prohibiting gambling or horse-racing at such fairs: Delier v. Plymouth County Ag'l Soc'y, 57-481.

 ALIENS.

1. Right to own and hold property: The provisions of Const., art. I, § 22, that foreigners who are or may hereafter become residents of the state, shall enjoy the same rights in respect to the possession, enjoyment, and descent of property, as native born citizens, does not change the common law rule as to non-resident aliens, and a resident alien, to take advantage of its provisions, must be such at the time of descent cast: Stemple v. Herminghouser, 8 G. Gr., 408.

2. But this provision does not restrict the power of the legislature to extend the same privileges to other foreigners than those named: Purcell v. Smidt, 21-540.

3. It confers upon resident aliens the right to transmit as well as to acquire real property by descent: Ibid.

4. At common law an alien could not acquire real estate by purchase so as to convey a good title to his vendee: Ibid.

5. The act of 1858 respecting aliens (Rev., §§ 2483-2493), so far as it relates to personal property, is probably only declarative of the common law, and in this state, as at common law, aliens are capable of acquiring, holding and transmitting movable property in like manner as citizens: Ibid.; Greenheld v. Morrison, 21-538.

6. Taking by descent or devise: Prior to the adoption of the state constitution of 1846, the common law rule was in force, and although it was then provided by statute that real property should descend in equal shares to the children, nevertheless, an alien child had no inheritable blood and could not take by descent; and the subsequent constitutional provision above referred to only changed the rule as to aliens who were aliens at the time of descent cast: Stemple v. Herminghouser, 8 G. Gr., 408; Krogan v. Kinney, 15-242.

7. Also, held, that the provisions of the Revision above referred to were intended to apply only to residents in this state or the United States, except in the single instance of a devise by will to a non-resident alien who should afterwards become a resident: Krogan v. Kinney, 15-242; Rheim v. Robbins, 20-45.

8. Such provision giving aliens, wherever resident, the right to take or acquire property by bequest or devise, upon condition, in case of non-residents, that they shall become residents of this state, was retrospective as well as prospective: Purcell v. Smidt, 21-540.

9. The judges of the court were divided on the question as to the capacity of a non-resident alien to acquire real estate in this state by descent under the statutory provisions above referred to: Greenheld v. Stanforth, 21-595.

10. Such statutory provisions gave aliens resident in the United States who had declared their intention of becoming citizens, and all aliens resident in this state, the right to acquire real property by descent or purchase, the word purchase meaning acquisition by bargain and sale for a consideration; and this provision was prospective: Purcell v. Smidt, 21-540.

11. This statutory provision also gave every alien, wherever resident, the right to acquire real estate by bargain or sale from persons holding an absolute title, provided he in good faith sold the same within ten years to a person capable of holding an absolute title. And the heirs at law of the non-resident alien purchaser took a valid title subject to the same necessity of selling. This provision was retrospective: Ibid.

12. Subsequent to this decision the court united in adhering to the doctrine that under the statutory provision referred to a non-resident could not inherit: Brown v. Pearson, 41-481.

13. Under the statutory provisions just referred to, under which it was decided that an alien non-resident could not take lands in this state by inheritance, held, that the non-resident alien heirs of such owner could not inherit any share of such property, but that the whole would pass to heirs who were resident citizens of the state: King v. Ware, 53-97.

14. Under these provisions an alien resident could take nothing by will unless he, subsequent to the making of the bequest, became a resident: Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66.

15. Granting of lands to: The disposal of the public land within the state being expressly reserved to the United States, a grant by the United States to an alien will confer upon him an inheritable estate: King v. Ware, 53-57.

16. Dower: The provisions of the Revision gave an alien married woman the same rights of dower as if a resident, provided her husband was capable, at the time of his decease, of holding an absolute title to lands in this state: Purcell v. Smidt, 21-540.

17. Married woman: The citizenship of the husband determines that of the wife: Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66.

18. Child born abroad: By the common law allegiance is not a matter of individual choice. It attaches at the time and on account of birth, and under circumstances in which the family owes allegiance and is entitled to protection: State v. Adams, 45-99.

19. Where a person removing to Canada was and had been for several years a citizen of this country, held, that he remained such citizen notwithstanding his removal to and subsequent death in Canada, and that his son born in Canada became a citizen of the United States, and that the child of such son, when brought with him to this state, was a citizen of this state without naturalization of his father or himself: Ibid.

20. Involuntary military service on the part of a citizen of this country, resident in a foreign country, in behalf of such country in a war between the two countries, and the acceptance of bounty for such service, is not sufficient to deprive him of the rights of citizenship: Ibid.

21. Residence at time of independence: The doctrine of the American courts seems to be that all persons domiciled in this country on the 4th day of July, 1776, and who remained here after the treaty of peace in 1783, became citizens. The English courts have held that the right of citizenship did not attach until the treaty of peace in 1783, and that all persons domiciled here at that time became citizens: Ibid.

VOL. I—8

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

I. EFFECT OF MATERIAL ALTERATION.

a. *With fraudulent intent.*b. Innocent alteration.

II. WHAT DEEMED MATERIAL.

III. EVIDENCE; BURDEN OF PROOF.

I. EFFECT OF MATERIAL ALTERATION.

a. With fraudulent intent.

1. Defeats recovery: A material alteration of the terms or conditions of commercial paper, made by the holder thereof with a fraudulent intent, will defeat recovery thereon: Robinson v. Reed, 46-219.

2. Where a certificate of deposit was issued with blank as to the rate of interest, and a holder thereof, on transferring it to a purchaser, represented that the rate was left blank by mistake and that ten per cent. had been agreed upon, which amount was thereupon inserted in the blank by a third person, the statement as to the agreement for ten per cent. interest being false, held, that such alteration was fraudulent and would defeat recovery by the transferee on the certificate, or on the claim for the amount deposited, without regard to the certificate: Woodworth v. Anderson, 68-508.

3. As against bona fide purchaser: A material alteration of a note may be shown, even as against an indorser for value before maturity: Charlton v. Reed, 61-166.

4. Where a promissory note was fraudulently altered by the payee by inserting the words "one hundred" in the blank preceding the amount, and the figure "one" after the dollar mark, so as to change it into a note for one hundred and ten dollars instead of ten dollars, and the blank for the place of payment was also filled, there being nothing on the face of the note to indicate these alterations, held, that the note was void even in the hands of an assignee in good faith and before maturity: Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Clark, 51-264.

5. Restoration of the instrument: After such fraudulent alteration the party guilty thereof cannot restore the instrument to its former condition and then recover thereon: Robinson v. Reed, 46-219.

6. Innocent holder after restoration: An instrument which has been fraudulently altered, but afterwards restored to its original form before coming into the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, will be valid in his hands: Shepard v. Whetstone, 51-457.

7. Forgery: A material alteration may constitute forgery: Snyder v. Reno, 88-329.

b. Innocent alteration.

8. Renders instrument void: This court has adopted the rule that any material alteration of a promissory note by the holder thereof avoids the note, and no action can be maintained thereon, even though the alteration be made innocently and without fraudulent intent: Eckert v. Pickel, 59-545; Murray v. Graham, 29-520.

9. Recovery on original consideration: If the alteration has been innocently made without a fraudulent purpose, the payee may recover in an action brought upon the original consideration: Sullivan v. Rudisill, 63-158; Krause v. Meyer, 32-566; Murray v. Graham, 29-520.

10. And he may establish the original consideration by any evidence, written or oral, which is not vitiated by the alteration of the instrument: Morrison v. Huggins, 53-76.

11. The fact that an alteration is made as the result of a mistake, or false information imparted to the holder, will not prevent his recovery on the original consideration, even though the false information was conveyed to him by an agent, if such agent was a stranger to the note: Krause v. Meyer, 32-566.

12. Where the alteration is not fraudulent, the original debt is not destroyed, and the party may recover thereon and maintain an action to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the same: Clough v. Seay, 49-111.

13. Action of a party in changing the date of an instrument, to correspond to what was supposed to be the understanding of the parties, does not preclude parol evidence as to what the real date was: Barlow v. Buckingham, 68-169.

14. Recovery on original instrument: Where the alteration was made by one of the makers, acting, as he believed, under proper authority, with the payee's knowledge, and the change was made in good faith, held, that a recovery could be had upon the note as originally delivered: Murray v. Graham, 29-520.

15. Restoration to original form: Where an alteration, although material, is, as made, adopted through ignorance as a method of accomplishing an authorized result, it may properly be stricken out by the party making it before change in the possession of the instrument, and the instrument will remain valid in its original form: Horst v. Wagner, 48-378.

16. So held, where the payee of a note, intending to transfer it to a third person, erased his own name and wrote that of the intended transferee in the body of the instrument, but before delivery canceled such alteration and restored the note to its original form: Ibid.

17. Alteration by consent: If the alteration is made with the knowledge and consent of the maker at the time of such alteration, the instrument does not become void, and if, with knowledge of the alteration, he advises the purchase of the note by another, he cannot afterwards raise objection on account of such alteration as against such purchaser: Grimstead v. Briggs, 4-559.

18. Ratification: Where it appeared by the evidence of the party who would be affected by the alteration, that such alteration accorded with the contract which the parties had made, and that they performed it as altered, and acknowledged themselves bound by it, held, that no objection on the ground of the alteration could be raised by a person not a party to the instrument, as affecting its validity: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714.

19. Where a mortgage was altered by insertion of additional property after its execution by one of the joint mortgagors, but prior to its execution by the other, held, that it was valid against both mortgagors as to property included therein before the alteration, and as to the property subsequently inserted, it was void against the one who had already executed it but binding as to the other: Van Horn v. Bell, 11-465.

20. The burden of showing ratification of a material alteration is upon the party seeking to recover upon the instrument as altered: Bell v. Mahin, 69-408.

II. WHAT DEEMED MATERIAL.

21. Different legal effect: An alteration which does not give the instrument a different legal effect will not avoid it; Briscoe v. Reynolds, 51-673.

What deemed material.—Evidence; burden of proof.

22. What changes material: The insertion in a note of a provision making the interest payable annually is a material alteration: Marsh v. Griffin, 42-403.

23. Striking out the word "surety" after the name of one of the signers of a note is a material alteration: Laub v. Paine, 46-550.

24. Writing the word surety above the name of an indorser in blank who is not payee, indorsee, or assignee, is a material alteration: Robinson v. Reed, 46-219.

25. An alteration of a note, by changing the word "order" to "bearer," is material: Needles v. Shaffer, 60-65.

26. Where a note was executed "payable at the ——— National Bank ———," held, that an alteration thereof by erasing the word "national" and inserting the name of a bank not a national bank, doing business in a county not that of the maker's residence, rendered the note void: Adair v. Egland, 58-314.

27. So, where, in a similar note, the blanks were afterwards filled so as to designate the true place of payment, held, that the alteration was material and sufficient to defeat recovery on the note: Charlton v. Reed, 61-166.

28. The question of the materiality of an alteration is one for the court, and where one who held a contract of insurance had altered an indorsement on the back thereof, which was in fact a contract with another party, held, that plaintiff's contract would not be avoided by such alteration if material, and under the facts of this case, the court should have instructed that the alteration was immaterial. But if there was such alteration of the contract by plaintiff as to affect and enlarge his contract, such alteration would avoid it: Robinson v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 25-430.

29. Additional signatures: The signing of a promissory note by one as surety, after the execution by the original maker, if done without the consent of such maker, is a material alteration which will defeat the instrument: Sullivan v. Rudisill, 63-158.

As to the effect of adding or striking off a name upon the liability of the surety, see SURETYSHIP, II, c.

30. The addition of the name of another maker to a bill or note after its delivery, without the knowledge and consent of the other makers, is a material alteration such as will discharge the original makers, without inquiry as to whether the alteration is beneficial or injurious to them: Dickerman v. Miner, 43-508; Hall's Adm'x v. McHenry, 19-521.

31. But the law will presume that the additional signer knew the effect of his signature, and he will be held liable upon the note: Dickerman v. Miner, 43-508.

32. Alteration not deemed material; Where a note was conditioned upon the fulfillment of an agreement by the payee, an acknowledgment written upon such note by one of the makers, stating a performance of the condition by payee, signed by the maker, held, not to constitute an alteration of the instrument such as to avoid it as against a co-maker: Jackson v. Boyles, 64-428.

33. Bill of sale: The execution and delivery of a bill of sale creates a title and right to possession in the grantee, and where such possession has been assumed, it may be maintained, notwithstanding the alteration of such instrument subsequent to its execution: Ransier v. Vanorsdol, 50-130.

34. Evidence in particular cases: The materiality of an alteration in a mortgage in a particular case considered: Williams v. Barrett, 52-637.

35. Evidence held sufficient to show alteration of a receipt: Wilson v. Fulliam, 50-123.

As to what is a sufficient alteration to discharge a surety, see SURETYSHIP, II, c.

III. EVIDENCE; BURDEN OF PROOF.

36. The mere appearance of a note is not sufficient to establish an alteration such as will render it void: Harlan v. Berry, 4 G. Gr., 212.

37. Presumption: An alteration, particularly if made with a different colored ink from that of the instrument and the signature, will throw suspicion upon the note and cast the burden of proof upon the party offering it; but the mere fact that words in the body of the instrument, without erasure or interlineation, appearing to have been written when the remainder of the note was written, or in a space left to receive them, are written in a different handwriting and in a different ink from that of the body and signature, are not sufficient to raise the presumption of alteration: Jones v. Ireland, 4-63.

38. If any ground of suspicion is apparent on the face of the instrument, the law presumes nothing, but leaves the question of the time when it was made, as well as of the person by whom, and the intent with which it was made, as matters of fact to be ultimately found by the jury, upon proof to be adduced by the party offering the instrument in evidence: Ibid.

39. The mere fact that different parts of an instrument are written in different ink and a different handwriting does not afford sufficient evidence of alteration to require explanation: Wilson v. Harris, 85-507.

40. The alteration being shown, will be presumed to have been made by plaintiff, and with a fraudulent intent, unless such facts are disproved by him: Robinson v. Reed, 46-219.

41. Burden of proof: If the execution of an instrument is not denied, the burden of proving alteration therein is upon defendant: Van Horn v. Bell, 11-465.

42. The execution of a county warrant in suit not being denied, held, that the burden was upon defendant to show that the alteration therein was made without the knowledge and consent of the county: Warren v. Chickasaw County, 13-588.

43. The burden of proof is upon the party relying upon the alteration as a defense to prove it: Odell v. Gallup, 63-253.

44. An allegation by defendant that a written contract upon which plaintiff relies has been altered since its execution is an allegation of new matter of defense and does not cast upon plaintiff the obligation to explain such alteration until evidence with reference thereto has been introduced by defendant: Wing v. Stewart, 68-13.

AMENDMENTS.

See that title in index.

ANIMALS.

As to obligation to fence against stock and sufficiency of fences, see FENCES.

1. Cattle running at large: In this state cattle are free commoners, and may lawfully be permitted to run at large; and the rule of the common law, that every man is bound to keep his cattle within his own inclosure or be responsible in damage for injuries arising from their being abroad, is not applicable to the condition and circumstances of the people, and is not in force: Wagner v. Bissell, 8-396; Heath v. Coltenback, 5-490; Alger v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 10-268; Russell v. Hanley, 20-219; Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 34-506.

2. Therefore, the owner of land can only maintain an action for trespass by cattle, by showing that his fence was such as is required by statute: Frazier v. Nortinus, 34-82.

3. But if cattle, after breaking over a sufficient fence into one field, go thence into another of the same owner, through a fence which is not sufficient, the action for their trespass upon the second field will lie: Herold v. Meyers, 20-378.

4. Damages: The owner of the land may have his remedy by action against the owner of the stock, as provided in Code, § 1452, or by distraining the animals. If he pursue the former course the ordinary rules as to proof, etc., apply, and he need not have the damages ascertained by the township trustees, as provided in § 1454: Quinton v. Van Tuyl, 30-554.

5. A land owner in a county where stock is prohibited from running at large is not relieved of his obligation to maintain partition fences, and if stock rightfully in an adjoining inclosure escape upon his land by reason of his failure to maintain such fence, he cannot recover damages from the owner of the stock: Duffees v. Judd, 48-256.

6. If animals, though lawfully on adjoining land, escape therefrom and do damage, and their escape is not in consequence of the neglect of the person suffering the damage, their owner is liable therefor. It is not necessary that the fence surrounding the land of the person injured is throughout a lawful fence, if it is shown to have been such at the place where the cattle broke through. And this will be true where the owner of the adjoining land and the owner of the cattle are the same person and the fence broken through belongs to him: Noble v. Chase, 60-261.

7. Trespass: Cattle, when they of their own accord go upon the unfenced land of another, do not render their owner liable to an action by the owner of the land, and the owner of the cattle may rightfully enter to remove them; and if they have crossed the unfenced land of one and gone on to that of another, they may be driven back across the land they crossed in entering: Camp v. Flaherty, 28-520.

8. Negligence: The statute (13 G. A., ch. 26) making the owner of stock running at large liable for damages done by it, did not make it unlawful for stock to run at large, and therefore did not debar the owner of such stock from the recovery of damages against a railroad company for injury to such stock through negligence: Kuhn v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 42-420.

9. Cattle being free commoners, the mere fact of permitting them to run at large is not a ground of imputing negligence to the owner: Haughey v. Hart, 62-96.

10. The right of the owner of cattle or other stock to pasture them upon the commons is a permissive and not an abstract right. And while the owner of an inclosure cannot maintain an action for trespass against the owner of cattle entering thereon from the commons, unless his fence is such as is required by statute, yet there is no obligation on his part to fence, and there can be no recovery for injuries to the cattle from feeding upon growing crops: Herold v. Meyers, 20-378.

11. Male animals: The owner of a thoroughbred cow, which is got with calf by an ill-bred and unpedigreed bull, unlawfully running at large, may recover damages from the owner of such bull, which are to be measured by the difference in the value of the cow, for the purpose of breeding of fine stock, before meeting such bull, and afterwards: Crauford v. Williams, 48-247.

12. The provision as to stallions is not applicable to colts until they are of such age as to be troublesome to mares or dangerous to be at large: Aylesworth v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 30-459.

13. Upon improved land: The fact that an eighty-acre tract of land is surrounded by a single ploughed furrow, and includes a few acres under cultivation, will not render it all improved or cultivated land within the meaning of Code, § 1452; but in such cases the owner of the land may recover damages from the owner of cattle who herds and confines them upon such land: Otis v. Morgan, 61-712.

14. Submission of question to vote: Provisions authorizing a submission of the question whether swine and sheep should be permitted to run at large were held to be merely an exercise of police power, and therefore not unconstitutional as not having a uniform operation, nor as depending for their validity upon a popular vote: Dalby v. Wolf, 14-228.

15. A similar provision in 12 G. A., ch. 144, and 13 G. A., ch. 26, making the question whether that act should be in force in any county depend upon a vote of the people of the county, was held unconstitutional, and the act was held to be in force in all the counties of the state without such adoption: Weir v. Cram, 37-649; Little v. McGuire, 38-560; Hallock v. Hughes, 42-516.

16. Stock; meaning of term: The statutory provision (Code, § 1450 as amended), that the word stock shall include cattle, horses, mules and asses, is only applicable in the connection in which it is used, and is not to be deemed a limitation upon the meaning of the word as found in other statutes. As generally used it includes swine as well as the animals referred to: State v. Clark, 65-336.

17. Distrain: It is only persons whose lands are inclosed by a lawful fence who are authorized to distrain domestic animals injuring their premises. If lands are not so inclosed there is no right to distrain, and possession acquired by such distrain is unlawful. The rightfulness of the distrain may therefore be inquired into in an action of replevin; it is not a matter for the exclusive determination of the fence viewers. But if the distrain is found to be legal, the property may be remanded to the distrainer and the damages may be assessed by the township trustees, subject to the right of appeal as provided for in §§ 1454 and 1455: Syford v. Shriver, 61-155.

18. The fence viewers are not given special authority to inquire into and determine the lawfulness of fences inclosing the premises trespassed upon by cattle, and that matter may be determined in an action of replevin to recover the animals from the person making distrain, when it is claimed that his premises are not surrounded by a lawful fence: Ibid.

Sale of distrained animals.

19. The servant of a land owner, who distrains stock as agent of such owner, may justify as such agent, in an action of replevin brought against him to recover the stock: Bearinger v. O'Hare, 26-259.

20. Sale of distrained animals: The statute (Code, § 1447) does not contemplate that the officer making a sale of distrained animals shall have a process in order to make the sale provided for: Dalby v. Wolf, 14-228.

21. Hearing before fence viewers: Upon the hearing before fence viewers to assess the damages caused by stock running at large, the question as to whether the stock was improperly at large, as well as the amount of damage done, is before the fence viewers, and such question may also be considered on appeal from their action: Duffees v. Judd, 48-256.

22. Estrays: An estray is an animal whose owner is unknown, and therefore a person cannot take up an animal as an estray when the owner of such animal is known to him. In such case the owner may replevin without tendering costs: Walters v. Glats, 29-437.

23. By Code, § 1464, relating to what animals may be taken up as estrays, a distinction is contemplated between a broken and an unbroken animal. The former may be taken up if running in the highway: Knudson v. Gieson, 88-234.

24. An animal stolen from its owner and afterwards abandoned by the thief may lawfully be treated as an estray, especially under the language of Code, § 1456: Kinney v. Roe, 70—.

25. The sole object of the notice to the officer provided by Code, § 1520, in case of estrays, is to advise the owner of the property, when examining the estray book, of the loss or accident, and when he has actual knowledge of the loss without such notice there is no necessity for it: Howes v. Carver, 3-257.

26. Dogs may be personal property and have value, and such value may be shown in an action for injury thereto: Anson v. Dwight, 18-241.

27. Aside from the statutory provision (Code, § 1485), a person who has in his charge a vicious dog, knowing his character, and fails to restrain him, is absolutely liable for an injury inflicted. It makes no difference whether the person has charge of the animal as owner or only bailee: Marsel v. Bowman, 62-57.

28. A person who has a dog in his possession or harbors him on his premises, as owners usually do with their dogs, is to be considered the owner within the meaning of the statutory provision (Code, § 1486) declaring such owners liable for damages committed by dogs. In determining the question of ownership the jury must consider the party's former treatment of the animal, his declarations concerning him, and the habits of the dog as to staying at such person's place: O'Harra v. Miller, 64-462.

29. To justify the killing of a dog, caught in the act of worrying or killing sheep, etc., or attacking or attempting to bite any person, as provided in Code, § 1485, the dog must be not only trespassing, but actually engaged in one of the acts mentioned: Marshall v. Blackshire, 44-475.

As to appeals in criminal cases, see CRIMINAL LAW, III, 14.

As to appeals from justices' courts, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V.

Appeals from various officers and boards are treated under the titles in which the proceedings themselves are discussed.

As to the jurisdiction and organization of the supreme court, see COURTS, I, a.

As to appeals from the state supreme court to the supreme court of the United States, see COURTS, §§ 68-72.

I. RIGHT OF APPEAL AND WAIVER THEREOF.

1. Must affirmatively appear: The supreme court can entertain an appeal only when a judgment has been rendered from which an appeal may be taken. The judgment must be affirmatively shown, and the court will dismiss the case where it does not appear that such judgment has been rendered, even though the parties fail to present the objection; for, being jurisdictional in its nature, the parties cannot waive it by silence or consent: Green v. Ronen, 59-83; Groves v. Richmond, 58-54.

2. Where the record shows a verdict to have been rendered, but does not show that a judgment has been entered thereon, the appeal should be dismissed: Heath v. Groce, 10-591; Pittman v. Pittman, 56-769.

3. By what law determined: The right of appeal is governed by the law in force at the time judgment was rendered: Rivers v. Cole, 88-677; Davenport v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 37-624.

4. Another remedy: The fact that there is another remedy for the error complained of does not take away the right of appeal from an erroneous judgment or decision in cases where an appeal is authorized: Wilson v. Shorick, 21-332.

5. Waiver by accepting benefits; estoppel: A party who accepts the benefits of an adjudication, so far as favorable to him, thereby waives his right to appeal therefrom: Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 55-157; Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 44-201; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Byington, 14-572.

6. The acceptance of a portion of the judgment admitted to be due will not waive the right to appeal from a part of the judgment claimed to be erroneous: Upton M'f'g Co. v. Huiske, 69-557.

7. If the right of appeal has been waived the appeal will be dismissed on motion: Independent Dist. v. District T'p, 44-201.

8. Whether such question can be raised by motion after the appeal has been determined, doubted; but under the peculiar facts of a particular case, held, that there had been no such acceptance of benefits as to constitute a waiver: Crane v. Guthrie, 48-698.

9. Acceptance of fine: Under a statute allowing to the prosecution an appeal from the action of a justice of the peace in criminal cases, held, that the acceptance by the county treasurer of the fine imposed by the justice would not deprive the state of the right to appeal: State v. Tail, 22-140.

 Right of.—From what judgments, orders, etc.—Final judgments.

10. Payment of judgment: A party who has paid a judgment against him cannot afterward appeal from such judgment: Borgalhouse v. Farmers', etc., Ins. Co., 36-250.

11. An appeal cannot be maintained after the judgment complained of has been satisfied, if such satisfaction is made solely for the purpose of relieving property from the lien of such judgment. Such a satisfaction must be considered voluntary: Hipp v. Crenshaw, 64-404.

12. Involuntary payment; under protest: Payment of the judgment, to prevent its satisfaction by sale of real property under execution which has already been levied thereon, will not constitute such voluntary payment as to defeat the right to appeal: Grim v. Semple, 39-570.

13. So held, also, as to payment made after the taking of appeal and under protest to prevent sale of property under special execution: Burrows v. Stryker, 45-700.

14. Acceptance of tender: Where the amount of a tender was paid into court and judgment was rendered for plaintiff for that amount, from which he appealed, claiming an additional sum as interest, and plaintiff, after the announcement of the judgment and signing of the bill of exceptions, had accepted the amount of the tender, held, that the right of appeal was not thereby waived: Dudman v. Earl, 49-37.

15. It will not amount to a waiver of an appeal that money paid in to the clerk by the opposite party is applied in part by the clerk in satisfaction of a claim for an attorney's lien, without the knowledge of appellant, where he, as soon as he becomes aware of the fact, repudiates the transaction, and pays back to the clerk the amount so paid in: Jewell v. Reddington, 57-92.

16. Change of venue by consent: Where, after perfecting his appeal from a judgment, the party consented to a transfer of the case to another court for trial, held, that the appeal was thereby waived: Lillie v. Skinner, 46-329.

17. Issuance of execution: The issuance of execution after perfecting the appeal and filing transcript and abstract in supreme court, on which execution nothing was realized, held not to be a waiver of the appeal, on which the appeal would be dismissed on motion: Hornish v. Peck, 53-157.

18. Filing transcript in another county: The right to appeal is not waived by filing transcripts of the judgment in other counties so as to make it a lien on property in such counties: Tama County v. Melendy, 55-395.

19. Action to enjoin judgment: An action in equity to enjoin the collection of a judgment waives the right to appeal from such judgment: Gordon v. Ellison, 9-317.

20. The bringing of a second action waives any error in dismissing a former action brought for the same indebtedness: Ibid.; Liebuck v. Stahle, 66-749.

21. Judgment procured by the party appealing: A party will not be allowed to appeal from a judgment which he caused to be rendered on his own motion: Hughes v. Feeter, 23-547.

22. Taking stay of execution is, by statute (Code, § 3063), made a waiver of the right to appeal: Seacrest v. Newman, 19-323.

II. FROM WHAT JUDGMENTS, ORDERS, ETC., APPEALS ARE ALLOWED.

a. Final judgments or decisions.

23. Forfeiture of bail bond: An order declaring a bail bond forfeited, and taxing costs to defendant, is a final judgment in such sense that an appeal may be taken therefrom: State v. Conneham, 57-351.

24. A decree in a partition proceeding, settling the rights and interests of the parties, is final in its nature, and may be appealed from before the division of the property in accordance therewith is actually made: Williams v. Wells, 62-740.

25. Decree for an accounting: Where, in an equitable action, plaintiff sought to have a deed set aside and also asked to have an accounting, and a decree for a reconveyance was made with an order of reference for an accounting, held, that an appeal from the decree for reconveyance might be taken, and that therefore an appeal from the decree for accounting would not bring up the question as to the correctness of the decree for reconveyance: McMurray v. Day, 70—.

26. Void judgment: The fact that a judgment is entered wholly without authority, as, for instance, by a person not qualified as judge, before whom the trial is had by consent, will not prevent the correction of the error on appeal, although the judgment itself is absolutely void: Petty v. Durall, 4 G. Gr., 120.

27. Judgment by default: An appeal may be taken from a judgment by default: Doolittle v. Shelton, 1 G. Gr., 271; Woodward v. Whitescarver, 6-1.

28. An order denying to the district attorney the right to appear for the county, where the county is a party, is a decision from which an appeal may be taken: Clark v. Lyon County, 37-469.

29. Arrest of judgment: An order of court arresting judgment is not such a final judgment as that an appeal may be taken therefrom: Wallis v. Sparks, Mor., 20.

30. An order punishing for contempt cannot be reviewed by appeal. The method of revision is by certiorari. (See Code, § 3499): Dunham v. State, 6-245.

31. This special provision controls the general provision as to appeals, and extends to contempts by disobedience of injunction, as well as other process: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2-69.

32. When cross-bill is pending: An appeal may be taken from a decree which determines the rights of the parties to property in controversy, even though a cross-bill be still pending: Lucas v. Pickel, 20-490.

33. Ministerial act: Under a statute allowing an appeal from "all decrees and decisions of the county court," held, that an appeal could not be taken from the mere ministerial act of the county judge: Kennedy v. Cress, 19-42.

b. Final orders in special proceedings.

34. Order vacating a judgment: A final order in a proceeding to vacate a judgment for fraud is a "final order in a special proceeding, affecting a substantial right therein," from which an appeal may be taken (Code, § 3164): Dryden v. Wyllis, 51-534.

35. Certiorari proceeding: An appeal will lie in a certiorari proceeding from a decision granting the writ and ordering a stay of proceedings in the court to which the writ issues: Iake v. Newton, 54-586.

36. Revocation of permit to sell liquor: An order of a district judge, made under Code, § 1535, revoking a permit to sell intoxicating liquors, is a final order in a special proceeding, affecting a substantial right, from which an appeal may be prosecuted: State v. Schmidt, 65-556.

c. Intermediate orders.

37. Must affect the merits: An appeal will not lie from an intermediate order or ruling, as upon questions of practice or the admission or exclusion of evidence, but only from such judgments or orders as determine the rights of the parties to the relief or remedy asked, or to a substantial right as to the course of proceedings, whereby the cause is determined or is tried in a manner not authorized by law. The decision appealed from must be one affecting the merits of the case. (Explaining McCoy v. Julien, 15-371): Richards v. Burden, 31-305.

38. Erroneous action of the lower court in allowing a party to introduce additional evidence, when an equity case is remanded to the lower court for a decree in harmony with the opinion of the supreme court, is not a ruling so materially affecting the final decision as to authorize an appeal therefrom before final decision is rendered. It cannot be said that there will necessarily be an adjudication against the party complaining by reason of such error: Garmoe v. Sturgeon, 67-700.

39. Continuance: An order of continuance is a mere intermediate order, not materially affecting the merits, and an appeal does not lie therefrom: Jaffray v. Thompson, 65-323.

40. A finding of facts, even though considered as an intermediate order, is not considered as so far prejudicial to the substantial rights of the party to whom it is adverse that an appeal can be taken therefrom before final judgment: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

41. Order as to prosecution in disbarment: The ruling of the court in a disbarment proceeding, in refusing to compel a member of the bar to prosecute the case, is not such as that an appeal can be taken therefrom: Byington v. Moore, 70—.

42. Setting aside order: The sustaining of a motion to set aside an order made in a case directing the payment of a sum of money from one party to the other, held to be a ruling from which an appeal might be taken: Guthrie v. Guthrie, 71—.

43. The ruling on a motion to suppress depositions cannot be reviewed on appeal before final judgment: Baldwin v. Mayne, 40-687.

44. Change of venue: Appeal cannot be taken from an order granting or refusing a change of venue: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56-709.

45. On such an appeal the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction, and will refuse to entertain the case, although no objection on that ground is made by either party: Groves v. Richmond, 58-54.

46. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, the fact that the action is brought in the wrong county will not render the overruling of a motion for a change of venue such ruling as may be reviewed upon appeal before final judgment: Horak v. Horak, 68-49.

47. But where the motion for change of venue was treated as raising the question whether the action on a bail bond was properly brought in the county where the suit was commenced, and by that county, for the use of the school fund, or whether it should not have been brought in and by another county, held, that the decision of that question would be treated in the same manner as though made upon a demurrer, and an appeal therefrom would be entertained: Lucas County v. Wilson, 59-354.

48. If, however, the ruling upon the motion for change of venue is properly excepted to, an appeal from the final judgment will bring up the ruling for review if it was adverse to the party appealing: McCracken v. Webb, 36-551; Allerton v. Eldridge, 56-709.

49. Intermediate order reviewed on appeal from final judgment: In general, error in intermediate orders upon questions of practice, the admission of evidence, etc., from which an appeal cannot be directly taken, may be urged upon appeal from the final judgment: Richards v. Burden, 31-305.

50. But in such cases, the error in the intermediate order will not be considered unless the record shows that a final judgment was rendered: Shannon v. Scott, 40-629; Jordan v. Henderson, 19-565.

51. An intermediate order may be reviewed on appeal from the final judgment taken within the proper time after the rendition of such judgment, although the time for appeal from such intermediate order separately has elapsed. The failure to appeal from an intermediate order, even when such appeal is allowable, will not waive the right to have such order reviewed on appeal from final judgment: Jones v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 36-68.

52. An appeal from final judgment brings up for review all intermediate rulings to which exceptions are taken. So held as to a ruling setting aside a default: Palmer v. Rogers, 70—.

53. An order requiring security for costs cannot be appealed from, but appeal may be taken from an order dismissing an action for failure to give such security: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38-446.

54. Order not contemplated by law: Where an intermediate order was one which the law did not contemplate, held, that it would be presumed that such order would not affect the final decision, and an appeal therefrom would not lie: Battell v. Lowery, 46-49.

55. Ruling on demurrer: An appeal may be taken from the ruling on a demurrer if the party against whom the ruling is made excepts and elects to stand on his demurrer or pleading, as the case may be. It is not necessary that it appear that final judgment has been rendered: Cowen v. Boone, 48-350.

But if the party pleads over or amends, he thereby waives any error in the ruling. See PLEADING, XIV, e.

56. A plaintiff, to whose petition a demurrer has been sustained, has the right to appeal, unless it appears that such right has been in some manner waived: Hampton v. Jones, 58-317.

57. An appeal may be taken from the action of the court in overruling plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's answer and dismissing the action upon plaintiff's refusing further to plead, and giving a judgment for costs against plaintiff: Arnold v. Kreutzer, 67-214.

58. Motion to strike: A ruling striking matter from a petition on motion, thus preventing plaintiff from introducing evidence of matter thus alleged, may be reviewed by appeal before final judgment: Stanley v. Davenport, 54-463.

59. The fact that the cause is still pending below does not prevent the supreme court from determining an appeal from an intermediate order involving the merits: Ibid.

60. A refusal by the court to sustain a motion to strike out a part of a petition not designed to show a distinct cause of action is not a ruling from which direct appeal will lie: Specht v. Spangenberg, 70—.

61. The ruling on a motion to strike a petition of intervention from the files on the ground that the original action had been settled, held, to be an intermediate order from which an appeal would lie: First Nat. Bank v. Gill, 50-425.

62. Ad quod damnum: An appeal in an ad quod damnum proceeding from a decision of the court overruling a motion to set aside the verdict and quash the writ, held proper without final judgment being rendered: Burnham v. Thompson, 35-421.

63. Dissolution of attachment: An appeal lies from an order dissolving or sustaining an attachment: Johnson v. Butler, 1-459.

64. But such appeal does not bring up the main case for review, except so far as material to the understanding and disposition of the order from which the party appeals: Berry v. Gravel, 11-135.

65. Judgment against garnishee: An appeal may be taken from a judgment against a garnishee: Bebb v. Preston, 1-460.

66. Dissolution of injunction: An appeal will lie from the action of a court in dissolving an injunction granted by a judge in vacation (although at that time the action of the judge in granting it could not be reviewed): Trustees v. Davenport, 7-218.

67. The action of a judge allowing or refusing an injunction in vacation may be reviewed by appeal therefrom (an express statutory provision having changed the law under which Monticello Bank v. Smith, 25-248; Jewett v. Squires, 30-92; In re Curley, 34-184, and other cases, were decided): Bennett v. Hetherington, 41-142.

68. Appointment of receiver: An appeal may be taken from an order appointing or refusing to appoint a receiver: Callanan v. Shaw, 19-183.

69. Recommitment of cause to arbitrators: An order recommitting a cause to arbitrators is a decision from which an appeal lies: Brown v. Harper, 54-546.

70. Substitution of other defendants: An order of court substituting other defendants in a case and releasing the original defendants may be appealed from, and such appeal may be prosecuted even though after such substitution the new defendants have procured a transfer of the case to the circuit court of the United States: Sunberg v. District Court, 61-597.

71. Dismissal of appeal from justice's court: Where, in an appeal to the circuit court from the judgment of a justice of the peace, a motion was made to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction on the ground that the amount in controversy was not sufficient, held, the action of the court in overruling such motion and taking jurisdiction was a determination affecting the final result, and that an appeal therefrom might be taken: Curran v. Excelsior Coal Co., 63-94.

72. Dismissal of habeas corpus proceedings: Under a statute authorizing an appeal from a county court to the district court, upon the merits, of any matter affecting the rights and interests of individuals, held, that an order of the county court overruling a motion to dismiss proceedings under a writ of habeas corpus, was not a final judgment from which an appeal would lie: Smith v. Bigelow, 19-459.

III. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY NECESSARY TO AUTHORIZE APPEAL; CERTIFICATES; INTEREST IN REAL ESTATE.¹

a. Amount in controversy.

73. Determined by the pleadings: To justify an appeal it must appear from the pleadings that it was possible for the court, consistently therewith, to render judgment ¹Code, § 3173. . . . But no appeal shall be taken in any cause in which the amount in controversy between the parties, as shown by the pleadings, does not exceed one hundred dollars, unless the trial judge shall certify that such cause involves the determination of a question of law upon which it is desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court, but this limitation shall not affect the right of appeal in any cause in which is involved any interest in real property.

Amount in controversy.

against one of the parties to the action for more than one hundred dollars: Madison v. Spitznogle, 58-369.

74. When the amount in controversy appears by the pleadings to exceed one hundred dollars an appeal may be taken, and it is immaterial that, upon the trial, the evidence does not support the claim to that amount: Ormsby v. Nolan, 69-180.

75. The allegations and not the prayer of the pleading govern in determining the amount in controversy: Cooper v. Dillon, 56-367.

76. The amounts of the original claim and a counter-claim cannot be added together in determining the amount in controversy under this section: Madison v. Spitznogle, 58-369; Fox v. Duncan, 60-321.

77. Where defendant concedes a part of the claim, the amount in controversy is the part not admitted: Thompson v. French, 57-559.

78. Tender: Thus, if by tender defendant reduces the amount of plaintiff's claim which is contested to not exceeding one hundred dollars, there can be no appeal without a certificate: Marlow v. Marlow, 56-299.

79. If plaintiff's claim is admitted and a counter-claim interposed, the counter-claim determines the amount in controversy: Alsip v. Hard, 38-697.

80. Where defendant claims a credit of more than one hundred dollars on a claim for less than that amount, but does not interpose a counter-claim, the amount in controversy does not exceed the plaintiff's claim: Kurtz v. Hoffman, 65-260.

81. Part of claim abandoned: Where the plaintiff claims more than one hundred dollars, but no evidence is introduced in support of a part of it, so that such part may be deemed abandoned, such part will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy: Ibid.

82. Consolidation of actions: Where an appeal from a judgment in a justice's court was consolidated with another action pending in the circuit court, so that the aggregate amount in controversy exceeded one hundred dollars, held, that there might be an appeal: Brock v. Barr, 70—.

83. Interest on judgment included: Where an action to set aside a previous judgment for one hundred dollars and costs was brought a year after the rendition of such judgment, held, that the interest accrued on the judgment would be included in determining the amount in controversy: Dryden v. Wyllis, 51-584.

84. Where writ of error was brought in the circuit court to review the judgment of a justice of the peace for one hundred dollars, held, that interest accrued on the judgment before suing out the writ of error would be included in determining the amount in controversy in the circuit court, and that the amount involved exceeded one hundred dollars: Holmes v. Hull, 48-177.

85. But in case of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace for one hundred dollars, held that the amount in controversy in the circuit court was to be determined by the pleadings in the justice's court, and that interest on the justice's judgment could not be included: Hays v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64-593.

86. Costs taxed in the case and included in the judgment cannot be considered in determining the amount in controversy. That depends upon the pleadings: Hakes v. Dott, 54-17; Bradenberger v. Rigler, 68-300.

87. Costs in justice's court: In an appeal from the action of a circuit court on appeal from a judgment before a justice of the peace, the costs in the justice's court cannot be included in determining the amount in controversy in the circuit court: Arderly v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65-723.

88. In an action of replevin wherein defendant does not claim ownership of the property but only an interest therein, less than one hundred dollars in value, such interest and not the entire value of the property determines the amount in controversy: Mohme v. Livingston, 54-458; Davis v. Upright, 54-752.

89. Appeal dismissed: Where the amount in controversy does not exceed one hundred dollars, and there is no certificate of the judge, the appeal will be dismissed: Harrington v. Pierce, 38-260.

90. Amount must appear, to defeat jurisdiction: As the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in every case not falling within the exception of the statutory provision as to amount in controversy, the fact as to the amount to bring a case within the exception and defeat the jurisdiction of the supreme court on appeal, must affirmatively appear: Babcock v. Board of Equalization, 65-110; Henkle v. Keota, 68-334.

Certificate as to question involved.

b. Certificate as to question involved.

91. Must state the question: It is not sufficient that the certificate of the judge states that the case "involves the determination of a question of law," etc., but it must state the question of law upon which the decision of the supreme court is desired. (So held in pursuance of a rule of court requiring the question to be set out, overruling in this respect Fell v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 43-177, decided before the adoption of such rule.) If the question is not thus set out where a certificate is necessary, the appeal will be dismissed: King v. Derby, 51-11; Wetz v. Austin, 51-342; Minnich v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51-363; Throckmorton v. Horton, 52-737; Dawley v. Houck, 53-783.

92. And such rule of the court is not void as limiting the jurisdiction of the court further than authorized by statute: Wilson v. Iowa County, 52-339.

93. The question must be one of law, as distinguished from one of fact, and the certificate must specifically point out the questions of law, which must not be mingled with questions of fact: Gillooby v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 61-53.

94. It is not sufficient that the certificate states that "a question" is involved; it must state that the case involves "a question of law:" Kierulff v. Adams, 40-31.

95. Questions presented in a particular case held not to be questions of law: Landers v. Boyd, 59-758.

96. Mere abstract questions: The statute does not contemplate that mere abstract questions of law shall be certified, but only such as are decisive of the case: Eckert v. Pickel, 59-545.

97. Certificate must intelligibly state the questions without the record: The certificate must point out the questions upon which it is desirable to have the opinion of the court in such a way as to be intelligible in and of themselves, without requiring the court to examine the whole case and determine what the questions are: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 63-514.

98. The certificate must be sufficiently explicit and definite to explain itself without reference to the record or any part of it: Meeker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64-641; White v. Beatty, 64-331; Bower v. Kavanaugh, 62-757.

99. The questions certified should embrace statements of the specific facts which are to be taken into consideration by the court; it is not sufficient to refer generally to the facts as shown by the evidence: Brown v. Petrie, 56-209.

100. A certificate of the judge which fails to indicate the specific question or questions to be determined, but presents the whole case and every question involved therein, without showing what they are, or what one or more of them it is deemed desirable to present for determination, is not sufficient: Dunn v. Zoller, 61-227.

101. The certificate must contain the abstract question of law which it is desired the supreme court shall determine. It will not make an examination of the record in order to determine what ruling it is desired to review: Buchanan County Bank v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 62-494; Long v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64-541.

102. A question of law should be plainly set out in the certificate: McLenon v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 69-320.

103. The certificate should point out the question to be determined and recite the facts upon which the question of law arises, so that it may be determined without resorting to the evidence in the case. It is not sufficient to refer the court to the record and ask it to determine whether there was error in particular matters: Ibid.

104. The certificate must set out and define the question which it is thought desirable to have determined, and the question set out should be so explicit as to render an examination of the record unnecessary: Ben-nett v. Parker, 67-451.

105. It is not proper to certify a general question which cannot be fully determined without a search of the entire record and a determination of two or more questions: Wheaton v. Foster, 58-661.

106. Where the certificate stated that there was a question of law involved in certain instructions which involved more than one question, and did not point out which one it was desired to have determined, held, that it was not sufficient: Gregg v. White, 55-744.

107. While it was not the intent that only a single question should be certified, the several questions must be so stated that the supreme court can readily ascertain the point to be determined, and that it is a question of law. Questions of law and fact cannot be mingled together under the guise of a question of law: Centerville v. Drake, 58-504.

108. The certificate in a particular case held sufficient: Nichols v. Wood, 66-225.

109. Examination of the record: The court will sometimes look at the record for the purpose of determining whether the question certified properly arises in the case, and will refuse to consider the question if it appears that it has not been properly raised: Swails v. Cissna, 61-698; McLenon v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 69-320.

110. The court will not, upon a certificate, consider an instruction differing from that which appears by the record to have been given in the case: Cunningham v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 67-514.

111. The court cannot answer questions certified, but which are not presented in the record: Ibid.; Miller v. Buena Vista County, 68-711.

112. And the court will not consider a certificate sufficiently specific which requires examination of the record to determine what the question certified is: Votaw v. Corwin, 62-39.

113. Certificates held defective: A certificate of a question as to whether judgment could be rendered for a party "upon the agreed statement of facts filed in the case," held not sufficient: Dawley v. Houck, 53-733.

114. Held, in a particular case, that the certificate did not sufficiently point out the question of law upon which the opinion of the supreme court was desired: Fitch v. Flynn, 58-159.

115. In cases which come before the supreme court only upon a question certified by the judge of the lower court, the supreme court has jurisdiction only to determine such questions of law as may be certified. If the question certified is one of fact, it cannot be determined: Hanna v. Collins, 69-51.

116. Must set out question: A certificate which does not set out the question of law upon which it is desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court, is not sufficient: Bradenberger v. Rigler, 68-300.

117. A certificate is not sufficient which asks whether certain action was erroneous "in view of all the evidence in the case:" Gillooby v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 61-53.

118. Where the appellant's abstract failed to show that the judge's certificate stated that it was desirable to have the opinion of the supreme court on the question certified, held, that the supreme court did not acquire any jurisdiction by the appeal: Milliken v. Daugherty, 59-294.

119. Sufficiency of evidence: While the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict may, in a certain sense, be said to be a question of law, yet it is not such a question as can be certified: Hudson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 59-581.

120. Questions must be such as arise and are argued: It is not the province of the supreme court to decide questions certified but not argued, nor questions argued but not certified, nor questions certified and argued where it is shown that they do not arise in the case: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59-606.

121. Questions not certified: Only such questions as are presented in the certificate will be considered: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51-676; Miller v. Haley, 66-260.

122. The supreme court has no jurisdiction in such cases to determine any questions except those certified: Arderly v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65-723.

123. Questions presumed to have arisen: Where the question is certified by the trial judge, it will be presumed that it arises in the case unless it is shown affirmatively otherwise: Noble v. Chase, 60-261.

124. It will be presumed that the facts are correctly found, whether any finding appears of the record or not, unless the contrary appears: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51-676.

125. The court will not go back of the record to determine whether an assumption of facts therein is warranted: Miller v. Haley, 66-260.

Certificate as to question involved.

126. Or whether the case involves the question of law stated in the certificate: Curran v. Excelsior Coal Co., 63-94.

127. Presumption as facts; remanding: The presumption being that the court found the fact upon which the question of law is based, and that such fact appeared of record, upon a determination of the question of law the case may be remanded for final judgment, and the party will not be entitled to a further trial unless on account of newly-discovered evidence: Andrews v. Burdick, 64-692.

128. Provisions constitutional; cases in equity: The statutory provision requiring a certificate in cases involving less than the amount named applies to chancery cases as well as actions at law, and as thus applied is not unconstitutional, as depriving a party in such cases of a right of appeal and trial de novo. It amounts simply to a restriction or regulation of appeals in such cases: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714; Johns v. Pattee, 61-898; Teager v. Landsley, 69-725.

129. Time of making certificate: The certificate of the judge must be made at the time of the trial and before the adjournment of the term of court at which the judgment is rendered: Fallon v. District T^p, 51-206; Independence v. Purdy, 48-875; Rose v. Wheeler, 49-52; Lomax v. Fletcher, 40-705; Rivers v. Cole, 38-677; Hershfield v. First Nat. Bank, 39-699; Nicely v. Rogers, 39-441.

130. The parties cannot by stipulation provide that the certificate may be made in vacation: Fallon v. District T^p, 51-206.

131. The certificate must be given at the time of the trial, unless delayed upon order or for cause: Angus v. Shannon, 60-311.

132. The certificate must be signed by the trial judge at the term at which the case is tried. A signature afterwards made nunc pro tunc will not give the supreme court jurisdiction, even though the failure to sign the certificate at the term was an oversight on the part of the judge: Hinesley v. Mahaska County, 69-511.

133. The certificate cannot be properly made until the case is finally disposed of, as by the ruling on a motion vacating a judgment and granting a new trial: Hickok v. Buell, 51-655.

134. The making and filing of a certificate during the same term but subsequent to the rendition of judgment is not sufficient; it must be made by the time the final judgment is rendered: Foye v. Walker, 62-251.

135. Where the certificate was filed after judgment, but it did not appear when it was signed, held, that the appeal would be dismissed: Hakes v. Dott, 54-17.

136. Where the certificate was entitled of a proper term, but did not show when it was made, nor that it was made at the time of the trial, or even during the term of the trial, held, that it was not sufficient: Babcock v. Chickasaw County, 60-752.

137. Where it appears that the certificate was signed at the proper term, it will be presumed that it was also filed in proper time: Long v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64-541.

138. Not a matter of right: The purpose of the law in requiring a certificate in such cases was to prevent appeals in such cases in which the amount is trifling, unless there is an important question of law involved which should be decided in order that the decision may serve as a precedent, and the trial judge should not give a certificate unless he deems such question to be involved: Meeker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 64-641.

139. Cannot be stipulated for: The parties cannot stipulate that the judge shall give a certificate in such cases. It is not a right of the unsuccessful party to have the certificate, and it can only properly be made where the judge believes it to be desirable for the proper administration of justice, that some specified question in the case should be settled by the court of last resort: Fallon v. District T^p, 51-206.

140. Appellant cannot question the correctness of a certificate given by the trial judge, stating the questions on which the opinion of the supreme court is desired. The court is not bound to give any certificate at all, and if the appellant does not get the questions certified which were tried, he is not bound to appeal: Hager v. Adams, 70—.

141. The certificate is jurisdictional: The sufficiency of the certificate is a jurisdictional matter, and if it is not sufficient the court will take notice of it, although the objection is not made; White v. Beatty, 64-331.

 What questions considered.

c. Cases involving an interest in real estate.

142. Right of public highway: Where the case involves the right of the public to occupy and use real estate as a highway, an interest in real estate is involved within the meaning of the statutory provision above: McBurney v. Graves, 66-814.

143. Establishment of lien: The fact that it is sought to establish a lien, special or general, upon real estate, does not make the case one involving an interest in real property, authorizing an appeal without regard to the amount in controversy: Colyar v. Pettit, 63-97; Johns v. Pattee, 61-898.

144. Therefore, held, that an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien was not within the exception: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714.

IV. WHAT QUESTIONS WILL AND WHAT WILL NOT BE CONSIDERED ON APPEAL.

1. Question not raised in the court below.

145. New objections not considered: An objection not made or question not raised in the court below cannot be considered on appeal: Dean v. Hall, 4 G. Gr., 425; Hintermeister v. State, 1-101; Mumma v. McKee, 10-107; State v. Groome, 10-308; Berry v. Gravel, 11-135; Rockwell v. Kimball, 11-524; Elder v. Littler, 15-65; Starry v. Starry, 21-254; Kruck v. Prine, 22-570; McNaught v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30-336; Evans v. Hawley, 35-88; Stanberry v. Dickerson, 35-493; State v. Cuddy, 40-419; Price v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 42-16; Trayer v. Reeder, 45-272; Davis v. Nolan, 49-683; Argall v. Pugh, 56-308; Wetmore v. McMillan, 57-344; Wire v. Foster, 62-114; Babcock v. Board of Equalization, 65-110; Goodnow v. Plumb, 67-661.

146. A party is not to be surprised in the supreme court by new objections and issues not made in the court below, based upon defects of which he was not advised by motion or otherwise in the lower court, and which it would have been in his power to remedy had objection been taken thereto in proper time and manner: Patterson v. Stiles, 6-54.

147. The supreme court has only appellate jurisdiction, and can only review and decide questions which have been made in and decided by the lower court: McGregor v. Gardner, 16-588.

148. An objection cannot be considered on appeal which is different from that made in the court below: Oliver v. Depew, 14-490.

149. Where an affidavit is tendered, and the court refuses leave to file it on the ground that if filed it would be insufficient, such refusal cannot be supported on the ground that at the time the party offered the same it was not yet sworn to: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44-335; Swan v. Bournes, 47-501.

150. It may be that failure to object to misconduct of the attorney in stating to the jury facts as to which there is no claim that they are shown in the evidence will not deprive the opposite party of his right to raise such objection on appeal: Whitsett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67-150.

151. No change of base: A party must, on appeal, stand in the posture in which he placed himself in the lower court. He cannot change his base after the appeal: Garland v. Wholebau, 20-271.

152. No new issues: An issue not raised in the court below cannot be urged for the first time in the supreme court: Latterett v. Cook, 1-1; Brazelton v. Jenkins, Mor., 15.

153. The objection to plaintiff's recovery that his claim is within the statute of frauds, not having been raised below by demurrer or answer, cannot be raised on appeal: Lower v. Lower, 46-525.

154. Ruling cannot be supported on ground not urged below: A ground not urged in the court below cannot, on appeal, be relied upon to sustain a ruling of that court, which is erroneous on the ground upon which it is based: Knapp v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 65-91.

155. Service of notice: Objections to the service of the notice will not be considered on appeal where the record facts fail to show any ruling thereon in the lower court: Des Moines v. Layman, 21-153.

156. An objection to jurisdiction not raised in the court below cannot be raised upon appeal unless the record shows the case to be coram non judice: Bridgman v. Wilcut, 4 G. Gr., 563.

Question not raised in the court below.

157. An objection which does not go to the jurisdiction of the court below, but merely to plaintiff's right to bring action, will not be considered on appeal unless made in the lower court: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633.

158. Although the objection that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter or parties may be raised for the first time in the supreme court, yet if it appears that the lower court had jurisdiction of the parties, but only erred as to the kind of proceedings adopted, the objection cannot be first raised on appeal: Gould v. Hurto, 61-45.

That such objection is waived unless raised by motion, see ACTIONS, §§ 35-39.

159. Where it appears that there is a want of jurisdiction in the court below, or where the ruling made is in excess of the authority or power of the court, it is the duty of the supreme court to recognize such want of jurisdiction, even if no objection be made: Groves v. Richmond, 53-570; St. Joseph Mfg. Co. v. Harrington, 53-380.

160. An objection to a pleading not raised by motion or demurrer in the court below, and passed upon by it, cannot be considered on appeal: Ruddick v. Patterson, 9-103; Williams v. Sill, 12-511; Clews v. Traer, 57-459; Davis v. Burt, 7-56; Gifford v. Ferguson, 19-166; McCoy v. Cornell, 40-457.

161. So held as to a defect in verification not objected to in the lower court: Moses v. Riadon, 46-251.

162. Objection that the petition is not sufficiently specific cannot be urged for the first time on appeal: Davis v. Walter, 70—.

163. Objections to the form of the pleading cannot be taken for the first time on appeal. If not taken below they will be deemed waived: Willson v. Harris, 68-443.

164. An objection that the relief granted is not asked in the pleading cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. It should be raised in some manner in the court below, in order that the party may have opportunity to amend his pleading if defective: Iowa Lumber Co. v. Foster, 49-25; Williams v. Wilcox, 66-65.

165. Issues not raised: Where the parties have themselves tried a case on the theory that the question presented on the trial is raised by the pleadings, the court may properly submit such question to the jury, and a party cannot complain on appeal that no such issue was raised by the pleadings: Hoyt v. Hoyt, 68-703.

166. Error in granting change of venue to an improper court will be reviewed on appeal, although the party did not, in applying for the change, designate the court to which a change was sought: Sayles v. Deluhrey, 64-109.

167. A defense not pleaded in the court below will be disregarded on appeal: Thomson v. Lee County, 22-206; Barlow v. Brock, 25-308.

168. A variance between the allegations and the proofs cannot be first raised on appeal: Singer v. Given, 61-93.

169. Swearing the jury: The supreme court will not disturb a judgment upon the ground that the jury in the cause was not sworn when such question was in no way raised in the court below: State v. Schlagel, 19-169.

170. Objections to evidence not raised in the court below cannot be first taken on appeal: Johnson v. Miller, 69-562.

171. If incompetent evidence is not objected to by the prisoner at the time it is produced, its admission cannot afterward be made ground for reversal: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

172. In the absence of objection at the time and a showing of prejudice, the fact that one who read testimony reduced to writing to the jury in a criminal action was not sworn to do so correctly, cannot be urged as an objection on appeal: State v. Polson, 29-133.

173. An objection to the competency of a witness not made in the lower court cannot be first urged on appeal: Schmidt v. Littig, 69-277.

174. Evidence which is competent as determining the rights of the parties, and which might have been made admissible by the amendment of the pleadings on the trial, if not objected to then, cannot afterwards be objected to in the supreme court on appeal as not admissible under the issues raised by the pleadings: Council Bluffs Lodge v. Bilups, 67-674.

Question not raised in the court below.

175. A party cannot, on appeal, object to evidence on a different ground from that interposed in the court below: Luke v. Bruner, 15-3; Iowa Homestead Co. v. Duncombe, 51-525.

176. The record must show that the introduction of evidence was objected to upon the same ground urged against it upon appeal: Childs v. McChesney, 20-481.

177. A party having alleged one objection to evidence on which it is improperly excluded, cannot, on appeal, allege other objections thereto in support of the action of the court below: Lines v. Lines, 54-600.

178. For instance, under the objection that evidence is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial under the pleadings, he cannot urge that it was improperly admitted in rebuttal: Davidson v. Dwyer, 62-332.

179. When the admission in evidence by the defendant of a deed void upon its face is objected to on other grounds, which are overruled, the plaintiff may upon appeal offer such objection to its validity, when the record shows that the court found for the defendant solely upon the evidence of the deed, and that plaintiff excepted to this finding and made it a ground of a motion for a new trial: Ferguson v. Heath, 21-488.

180. Objections to instructions: If specific objections are taken to instructions, even though a general objection would have been sufficient, the party cannot raise other objections on appeal: Price v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 42-16.

181. The objection that more than two paragraphs of the instructions are written on the same page, contrary to a statutory direction, cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court: Davenport v. Cummings, 15-219.

182. The form of the judgment cannot be objected to for the first time upon appeal: Barlow v. Brock, 25-308.

183. Where there is but a general exception to a judgment below, and the court is not asked by motion or otherwise to correct it, the appellant will not be heard to allege objections to the form of the judgment on appeal: Robinson v. Keith, 25-321.

184. A motion to vacate an injunction cannot be first made after appeal: Bishop v. Carter, 29-165.

185. Motion non obstante: A question which can only be raised by motion for judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be first raised on appeal: Coonrod v. Benson, 2 G. Gr., 179.

186. Objections deemed waived: Objections not made in the court below will be considered waived, and the judgment in an action at law will not be reversed on appeal upon a point not presented to, nor passed upon by, the court below: Iowa Homestead Co. v. Duncombe, 51-525.

187. By pointing out specific objections a party is deemed to have waived any objections not pointed out: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38-448.

188. New arguments or authorities may be presented on appeal, although no new question can be raised: District T^p v. French, 40-601.

189. New reasons: Failure of the party objecting to the action of the lower court, to urge a good reason in support of his point or objection, will not prevent the supreme court from considering such reason and basing its action thereon: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67-712.

190. The fact that the appellate court reaches its conclusions upon grounds different from those upon which the court below bases its judgment will have no effect as to such judgment if the conclusion reached is the same: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70—.

191. All objections appearing of record may be urged: A party has the right to make, in the supreme court, all objections which legitimately arise on the record, whether made in the court below or not, except in cases where it is required that objections urged in the court below shall be stated in writing or made to appear of record: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61-265.

192. Therefore held, that the question of the sufficiency of affidavits to support a motion for change of venue was properly before the supreme court on appeal, although no objection thereto appeared of record, the party appealing having duly excepted to the ruling on the motion: Ibid.

How questions are sufficiently raised.— Motion below to correct error.

2. How questions are sufficiently raised.

a. *Motion in the court below to correct the error.*¹

193. When necessary: Any objection to erroneous action of the court below which might have been corrected in that court if attention had been called thereto, will not be considered if first raised in the supreme court: Garvin v. Cannon, 53-716.

194. So held, as to an objection which might have been raised in the lower court by motion in arrest of judgment: Smith v. Warren County, 49-336.

195. So held, also, in regard to the objection that the judgment was excessive, no motion to correct such error having been made in the court below: Black v. Boyd, 52-719; Dickey v. Harmon, 26-501; Finch v. Billings, 22-228; Keller v. Jackson, 58-629.

196. So held, also, where the objection that the judgment below was improperly entered in vacation was not made in that court: Carmichael v. Vandebur, 50-651.

197. Motion to set aside default: A judgment by default will not be reviewed in the supreme court until a motion to set it aside has been made and overruled in the court below: Hunt v. Stevens, 25-261; Savings Bank v. Horn, 41-55.

198. Thus, objection to judgment by default, that the notice was not served in time to render defendant in default, cannot be raised on appeal if no motion to set aside default was made below: Pigman v. Denney, 12-396; McKinley v. Betschel, 12-561.

199. So held, also, as to objections to judgment by default, on the ground of defective manner of service, or defect in the notice itself: Van Vark v. Van Dam, 14-232; Bethel v. Leay, 14-592; Downing v. Harmon, 18-535; Decatur County v. Clements, 18-536; Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 27-363.

200. But before the enactment of the statutory provision above referred to, held, that an error apparent on the face of the pleadings in rendering judgment on default for more than plaintiff was entitled to recover, might be corrected on appeal, although there was no objection in the lower court or effort made to have the error corrected: Gower v. Carter, 3-244.

201. Errors in taxation of costs cannot be urged in the supreme court unless motion for retaxation has been made in the court below: Hemphill v. Salladay, 1 G. Gr., 301; Yeager v. Circle, 1 G. Gr., 438.

202. Motion for retrial by defendant served by publication: As the statute gives to a defendant served by publication only a right to retrial upon motion within a specified time, he cannot, on appeal, object to the sufficiency of the service, unless such motion for retrial has first been made and overruled in the lower court: Berryhill v. Jacobs, 19-346; S. C., 20-246.

203. Reason of the provision: The statutory provision above referred to was designed to prevent the expense and delay of appeal where the error relied upon is a mere irregularity, mistake, or omission on the part of some ministerial officer, or the court itself, which could readily be corrected in the trial court on motion: Pigman v. Denney, 12-396.

204. Other cases, applying the statutory provision, are as follows: Robison v. Saunders, 14-539; Barnes v. Hayick, 15-602; Carleton v. Byington, 17-579; Boyd v. Rutledge, 25-271; Coakley v. McCarty, 34-105; Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37-290.

205. Mistakes of clerk cannot be urged as objections to the judgment on appeal unless a motion to correct such error has first been made in the lower court: Daniels v. Clafin, 15-152.

206. Applicable in appeals from justices' courts: The same provision is applicable in case of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court: Smith v. Parker, 28-359; Leonard v. Hallem, 17-564.

207. But not in case of writ of error from the judgment of a justice of the peace which is entered without jurisdiction: Holmes v. Hull, 48-177.

208. What deemed sufficient calling attention of court to error: Where a motion for change of venue is resisted on the ground that the court to which it is proposed to send the case has no jurisdiction of such cases, and notwithstanding such objection the change is granted to such court, the error may be reviewed on appeal, although no motion to change the order and send the case to a court which would have had jurisdiction is made by the objecting party: Sayles v. DeLuhrey, 64-109.

¹ Code, § 3167. A mistake of the clerk shall not be ground for an appeal until the same has been presented and acted upon by the court below.

§ 3168. A judgment or order shall not be reversed for an error which can be corrected on motion in an inferior court, until such motion has been made there and overruled.

Motion for new trial.—Finding of facts.

209. Statute not applicable: Such provision applies only to such errors as without motion would not be called to the attention of the lower court: Brown v. Rose, 55-734.

Exceptions, when necessary and how taken, see that title.

b. Motion for new trial.

210. Not necessary: The statutory requirement above referred to as to the necessity of motion in lower court to correct error before urging it on appeal, applies only to such errors as, without such motion, would not be called to the attention of the lower court. Another statutory provision¹ renders a motion for new trial in the lower court unnecessary in order to authorize the appellate court to review any judgment or order of the court below: Brown v. Rose, 55-734; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42-177.

211. Before the enactment of this statutory provision, held, that a judgment would not be reversed, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, when a motion for a new trial upon that ground had not been made in the court below: Brayton v. Boone, 19-506.

212. But the question was unsettled whether a motion for a new trial was necessary to bring up for review errors of law occurring at the trial: Presnall v. Herbert, 34-539; Rindskoff v. Lyman, 16-260.

213. A motion for new trial was, however, held not necessary in order to enable the supreme court, on appeal, to review a decision upon the admissibility of evidence properly excepted to, when such decision virtually disposes of the whole case: McCoy v. Julien, 15-371.

214. This provision affects the remedy, and hence is not unconstitutional as applying to actions arising before its passage: Johnson v. Semple, 31-49.

215. Nor is it in conflict with Const., art. 5, § 4, providing that in actions at law the supreme court shall be a court for the correction of errors. Previous to the enactment of this provision, that court would review, as matter of law, the ruling of the lower court upon a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and this act simply authorizes the court to treat the case as if such motion for a new trial was made and entered, and may be regarded as a standing motion in all cases: Coffin v. City Council, 26-515.

216. Where exceptions are duly preserved in the course of the trial, they may be brought up on appeal, although the motion for new trial is stricken from the files because filed too late: Beems v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-150.

217. The necessity of a motion being made below to correct errors, etc., is not removed by the provision making motion for new trial unnecessary to secure the review of a cause in the supreme court: Webster v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 27-315.

218. Under this provision, however, errors of law committed by the judge might be reviewed on appeal without any motion for new trial: Delvee v. Boardman, 20-446; Presnall v. Herbert, 34-539.

219. Nor does such provision dispense with the necessity of taking exceptions to rulings objected to: Root v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29-102; Eason v. Gester, 31-475.

220. Where defendant moved in arrest of judgment, and thereupon, in order to cure the defect insisted upon, plaintiff amended his petition, and introduced certain evidence to which a demurrer was sustained, the judgment arrested, and defendant recovered costs, held, that no motion for a new trial was necessary in order to present the exceptions, duly taken, on appeal: Coates v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 18-277.

c. Finding of facts.

221. How reviewed: Before the enactment of a statutory provision on the subject,¹ it was held that, in order to enable the supreme court, on appeal, to review the correctness of the findings of the court below upon the facts, exceptions must have been taken to such findings and a new trial asked for: Kelso v. Ely, 11-501; Gillett v. Foreman, 11-512.

¹ Code, § 8169. The supreme court may review and reverse, on appeal, any judgment or order of the district or circuit court, although no motion for a new trial was made in such courts.

Finding of facts.—What the record must show.

222. Before the enactment of this statutory provision there was, in an action at law tried by the court without a jury, no way of securing the review on appeal of the conclusions of the court upon the evidence, unless there was a special finding of facts by the court, except by a motion for new trial based upon the ground that the judgment was against the evidence, and an exception to the ruling on such motion: Warner v. Pace, 10-391; Corner v. Gaston, 10-512; Roberts v. Hoyt, 12-345; Allman v. Gilbert, 14-538; Robison v. Saunders, 14-539; Reynolds' Heirs v. Miller, 14-97.

223. The certificate referred to in the statutory provision set out below cannot be made by the judge in vacation, unless by agreement of parties. The term "judge" means the same as if the word "court" had been used: Luse v. Des Moines, 22-590.

224. In the absence of the certificate, or an agreement of the parties, the supreme court cannot, on appeal, review the conclusion of the court upon the evidence: Wormley v. District T'p, 45-666.

225. It is only when the evidence is all before the supreme court, that it can review a finding of the court below as to a question of fact: Van Riper v. Baker, 44-450.

226. Assignment of errors: This section does not dispense with assignment of errors: Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154.

227. Trial de novo on appeal: The section is applicable only in actions at law, and therefore does not interfere with the provisions for securing a trial de novo in equity cases: Ibid.; Vinsant v. Vinsant, 47-594.

A finding of facts must be made by the court on request of either party, where the trial is to the court in a law action: See PRACTICE, II, c.

228. As the finding of the court upon a question of fact in an action at law has the force of a verdict of a jury, the admission of improper evidence in such a case will be a ground for reversal, as fully and to the same extent that it would be in an action tried by a jury, where it does not appear but that such improper evidence was considered by the court in its final determination of the case: Jaffray v. Thompson, 65-823.

3. What the record must show in order that a question may be reviewed.

229. Final action: Where the abstract does not show what the final action of the court was, nor that any appeal has been taken, the court cannot determine the appeal: Pittman v. Pittman, 56-769.

230. A party complaining of erroneous rulings must make it appear from the record that judgment was rendered against him: Shannon v. Scott, 40-629.

231. Must show prejudice: The supreme court will not reverse a cause for error committed below, unless it is affirmatively shown by the record that such error was actually prejudicial to appellant: Blackburn v. Powers, 40-681; Fulmer v. Fulmer, 22-231.

That a case will not be reversed for error without prejudice, see infra, §§ 332-336.

232. Matters not of record: Evidence, instructions, etc., not made part of the record will not be considered on appeal: Daniels v. Langdon, 52-741.

233. Where the supreme court cannot determine from the record what issues are before it, the case may be remanded, in order that the parties may replead: Lyon v. Tevis, 8-79.

Oral evidence, how preserved, see EXCEPTIONS, II.

Shorthand notes of evidence, how made part of record, see EXCEPTIONS, §§ 76-83.

234. How fully the evidence must be set out: In order that rulings on the admission of evidence may be reviewed upon appeal, it is not necessary that all the evidence be presented in the record. It is only necessary that the record shall show the rulings admitting or excluding the evidence, the purport of the evidence so passed upon, and the ground of objection: Smith v. Johnson, 45-308.

¹ Code, § 3170. Where a cause is tried by the court, it shall not be necessary, in order to secure a review of the same in the supreme court, that there should have been any finding of facts or conclusions of law stated in the record, but the supreme court shall hear and determine the same whenever it shall appear from a certificate of the judge, agreement of parties or their attorneys, or, in case the evidence consists wholly of written testimony, from the certificate of the clerk, that the transcript contains all the evidence introduced by the parties on the trial in the court below.

What the record must show.

235. The evidence in full is required in law actions only when, as an objection to the judgment, it is urged that the verdict is not supported by the testimony. Upon no other question would it be proper to take all the evidence to the supreme court on appeal. The supreme court will pass upon the correctness of instructions or rulings as to the admission or rejection of testimony when the bill of exceptions contains a statement that there was evidence tending to prove the facts to which the instructions are applicable, or states evidence, not necessarily in full, about which the question as to the admissibility of evidence arises: Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60-473.

236. A general statement in a bill of exceptions as to what the party sought to establish, without a statement of the exact evidence offered, will not be sufficiently definite to enable the court to pass upon an exception to a ruling on such evidence: Cousins v. Westcott, 15-253.

237. A statement in a bill of exceptions that it contains the substance of the evidence is not sufficient where it is necessary, in order to authorize the court to pass on the action of the court below, that it shall have before it all the evidence in the case: Thompson v. Mumma, 21-63; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 21-835; Lea v. Roads, 22-408; McKenzie v. Kitler, 27-254; Jemmison v. Gray, 29-587; Davis v. Card, 33-592; Hubbard v. Epperson, 40-408; Walker v. Beaver, 50-504.

238. Where the bill of exceptions, after setting out evidence, continued, "being all the evidence offered by the plaintiff to sustain the issue on his part," held, that it sufficiently appeared that the evidence was all in the record to enable the supreme court to review the ruling of the lower court on a motion for nonsuit: Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

239. Where it is necessary that the record shall be shown to contain all the evidence, such fact must appear from the judge's certificate and not merely from his reference to such a certificate made by the shorthand reporter: Walker v. Beaver, 50-504.

240. When insufficiency of evidence is relied upon as ground for new trial in the lower court, and the motion is overruled, the ruling cannot be reviewed unless the record contains all the evidence: State v. Lyon, 10-340; State v. Hockenberry, 11-269; Parsons v. Chapman, 11-294; McCool v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 17-461; Garber v. Clayton County, 19-29; Beal v. Stone, 22-447; McKenzie v. Kitler, 27-254; Smith v. Cedar Falls & M. R. R. Co., 30-244; Davis v. Card, 33-592; Everett v. Union Pacific R. Co., 59-243; Crystal v. Des Moines, 65-502.

241. The supreme court will not disturb a verdict, on appeal, for insufficiency of evidence to support it, if it has not all the evidence before it: Barker v. Kuhn, 38-392.

242. Where the evidence on which the court below acted is not before the supreme court, the action of the lower court cannot be inquired into so far as it purports to be based upon the evidence: Skiff v. Mershon, 7-79.

In equity cases, in order that there may be a trial de novo on appeal, the record must show that it contains all the evidence offered or introduced on the trial: Infra, §§ 1085-45.

In criminal cases, see CRIMINAL LAW, §§ 1674-1676.

243. Impeaching evidence: In order that the action of the lower court in rejecting evidence offered to impeach a witness may be reviewed, the record should show the evidence given by the witness and what it was proposed to prove for the purpose of impeachment: Shephard v. Brenton, 20-41.

244. Rulings upon evidence; prejudice must appear: Where the answers to questions objected to, or sought to be elicited by such questions, are not shown by the record, the supreme court cannot review the ruling of the lower court in sustaining or overruling such objections. It must affirmatively appear that the action of the court, even if erroneous, was prejudicial: Mays v. Deaver, 1-216; Speers v. Fortner, 6-553; Hanan v. Hale, 7-153; Willey v. Hall, 8-62; Lucas v. Jones, 44-298.

245. When evidence is admitted over objection thereto: In reviewing the action of the court in overruling an objection to a question, the material inquiry is not whether an improper question was asked, but whether improper testimony was received, and error cannot be made to appear until it is shown that the question objected to was answered, and what the answer was: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155; Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10-337; State v. Keeler, 28-551; Manny v. Woods, 33-265; Mosier v. Vincent, 84-478.

246. It must be made to appear what the witness testified to, and that such testimony was material and prejudicial: Oliver v. Depeur, 14-490; Bradley v. Kavanagh, 12-278.

247. Where a record is admitted over an objection thereto, but the record is not made to appear in the bill of exceptions, the ruling cannot be reviewed: Oliver v. Depeur, 14-490.

248. The record must disclose facts affirmatively showing that the admission of evidence over objection was error to the prejudice of the party objecting, to warrant reversal on that ground: Green v. Cochran, 43-544.

249. But where evidence is admitted over the objection of a party it will be presumed that the court considered it, and that, if it was erroneously admitted, prejudice resulted: Leasman v. Nicholson, 59-259.

250. Where the whole of the testimony of the witness is not given in the bill of exceptions, or in the record; nor the fact in any way negatived that the witness was a professional one, or for some reason entitled to give an opinion, an objection that a question called for an opinion of the witness will not be held to have been erroneously overruled, as it may have been groundless in fact: Higley v. Newell, 28-516.

251. When evidence is excluded: In order to determine whether prejudice has resulted to a party by the exclusion of evidence offered by him, the answers, or the facts proposed to be proved by the witness in response to the question asked, must be made to appear. Unless prejudice be thus shown, the error in sustaining objection to the question or the evidence offered will not be ground of reversal: Jenks v. Knott's Mexican Silver Mining Co., 58-549; Gronan v. Kukuck, 59-18; Bays v. Hunt, 60-251; Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60-473; Klaman v. Malrin, 61-752; Shellito v. Sampson, 61-40; State v. Montgomery, 65-488.

252. The court must be advised by the record of the character of the proposed evidence and the facts which the party desiring to introduce it claimed would have been established by it: Votaw v. Diehl, 62-676.

253. When the purpose of a question is not disclosed by the record, the supreme court will not interfere with the ruling of the court below in excluding it: State v. Ross, 21-487.

254. Where the bill of exceptions is so indefinite and uncertain that it cannot be determined what the evidence excluded was, to which objection is made, the supreme court will not, on appeal, pass upon the correctness of the action of the lower court: Hunt v. Daniels, 15-146.

255. A ruling of the court in refusing to require the production of a written instrument cannot be reviewed on appeal unless it appears that the instrument would have tended to establish the issue on the part of the party calling for it: Greenough v. Sheldon, 9-503.

256. Error of the court in excluding evidence will be deemed without prejudice unless the record shows that such evidence was material to the issues: Atkins v. Anderson, 63-789.

257. But if the record states what the evidence rejected tended to prove, such statement will be presumed to be true, and will enable the appellate court to determine whether such rejection, if erroneous, was material: Spaulding v. Adams, 63-497; Chase v. Scott, 83-309.

258. If the materiality of the evidence sought to be introduced is apparent on the face of the question asked, it is not necessary that it appear that the party seeking to introduce it state what he expects to prove thereby; but if this is not apparent the party seeking to introduce the evidence must state what he expects to prove and thus make the materiality of the question appear: Mitchell v. Harcourt, 62-349; Votaw v. Diehl, 62-676.

259. What necessary to enable court to review instructions: So much of the evidence should be set out in the record as relates to the exceptions, that their applicability may appear, but it is not absolutely essential that all the evidence should be set out. Instructions which are erroneous and misleading in any possible view will be reviewed, although the record does not present all the evidence: Stevenson v. Greenlee, 15-96; Murphy v. Johnson, 45-57.

260. Evidence to support instructions: As an instruction may not state all of an abstract proposition of law, and yet be correct as applicable to the facts of the case, the supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of instructions without some statement of the facts which the evidence tended to establish being before it: Mudge v. Agnew, 56-297.

261. The supreme court cannot pass upon the correctness of the action of the lower court in giving or refusing instructions, unless the evidence upon which such instructions are based appears of record and is appropriately brought before such court: Potter v. Wooster, 10-384; Wilcox v. McCune, 21-294.

262. As instructions, abstractly correct, may be properly refused if not applicable under the evidence, a party complaining of the refusal to give an instruction must bring before the court on appeal the evidence showing such applicability: Cutter v. Fanning, 2-580; Gover v. Dill, 3-337; Hanan v. Hale, 7-153; Frost v. Inman, 10-587; Wisner v. Brady, 11-248; Paden v. Griffith, 12-272; Wilcox v. McCune, 21-294; Chase v. Scott, 33-309.

263. The refusal of instructions which might have been proper under a certain state of the proof will nevertheless not be held erroneous on appeal when the evidence is not all before the court: Shephard v. Breyton, 20-41.

264. The court cannot, upon appeal, pass upon the pertinency of instructions given, unless all the evidence is before it: Nollen v. Wisner, 11-190; Preston v. Walker, 26-205.

265. The presumption is that instructions were correctly given, and that there was evidence introduced on the trial to authorize them, unless the absence of such evidence is made to appear: Bridgman v. Steamboat Emily, 18-509; State v. Rice, 56-431; Roby v. Appanoose County, 63-113.

266. The court cannot say that an erroneous instruction was without prejudice, unless such fact affirmatively appears: Carlin v.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 31-370; Potter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 46-399; Roby v. Appanoose County, 63-113.

267. In order to secure the review of instructions properly excepted to, it is only necessary that the record present so much of the evidence as will show that facts to which instructions are applicable were before the court. And what is usually necessary is a statement in the bill of exceptions that there was evidence tending to prove such facts: Kelleher v. Keokuk, 60-473.

268. When all the instructions must appear: The supreme court cannot reverse a criminal case for failure of the court to properly instruct the jury, when it has not before it all the instructions and evidence: State v. Hamilton, 32-572.

269. To warrant a reversal on account of refusal of the lower court to give instructions asked, it must appear that those given are all before the appellate court: State v. Johnson, 19-230; Bower v. Stewart, 30-579; Chase v. Scott, 33-309; State v. Nichols, 38-110; Moody v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 41-284; State v. Stanley, 48-221; State v. Williamson, 68-351; Huff v. Aultman, 69-71.

270. If an instruction given is so far erroneous that any modification thereof properly presenting the law would have been in conflict with it, the error will be ground for reversal although all the instructions are not before the court; but it will be otherwise if there might have been, in another instruction, modifications or limitations such as, with the instruction complained of, would have correctly presented the law: Bland v. Hixenbaugh, 39-532.

271. Verdict against instructions: The granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the instructions will not be reviewed unless the instructions appear in the record: Caffrey v. Groome, 10-548; Briggs v. Hartman, 10-63; Beal v. Stone, 22-447; Howell v. Snyder, 39-610.

272. Affidavits for change of venue: Where the affidavits on which a change of venue is asked in a civil case are before the court, it will presume that it has before it all the evidence upon which the court acted. In such case the opposite party cannot file counter-affidavits, and in the absence of any showing it will not be presumed that affi-ants were produced in court and subjected to a cross-examination: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61-265.

273. Findings of fact by the court below will be presumed correct and supported by the evidence, if the evidence is not all before the supreme court: Napier v. Wiseman, 8 G. Gr., 246; Hamilton v. Walters, 8 G. Gr., 556; Rosseau v. Fine, 1-98; Snell v. Kimmell, 8-281.

274. An order of the lower court will not be interfered with on appeal where the supreme court has not before it all the evidence upon which the lower court acted: Krause v. Hampton, 11-457; Adams v. Peck, 14-508.

275. The granting of a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence will not be interfered with, on appeal, if it does not affirmatively appear that all the evidence on which it was granted is before the appellate court: Souden v. Craig, 20-477; S. C., 21-380.

276. Statement of judge as to evidence: Where a judge, in overruling a motion for a new trial, certifies that the newly-discovered evidence on which a new trial is asked is cumulative, such statement will be regarded, on appeal, as true, when the evidence itself is not before the court: Seymour v. Hoyt, 23-19.

277. A judgment will not be interfered with, on appeal, because not warranted by the evidence, unless all the evidence is before the appellate court: Green v. McFaddin, 5-549.

Action of the lower court will, on appeal, be presumed to have been supported by evidence, if the evidence is not all before the appellate court: See Infra, §§ 286-296.

V. WHAT WILL AND WHAT WILL NOT WARRANT REVERSAL.

a. Presumptions of regularity.

278. In favor of action below: Every reasonable presumption is to be entertained in favor of the ruling of the court below and the correctness of its judgment: Davis v. Moffitt, 4 G. Gr. 92; Hendrie v. Rippey, 9-351; David v. Lealie, 14-84; Morris v. Steele, 62-228; Hintrager v. Kiene, 62-605.

279. This presumption in favor of the action of the court below will prevail unless overcome by something appearing of record:

Brobst v. Thompson, 4 G. Gr., 135; Speers v. Fortner, 6-553; Scofield v. Ford, 56-370.

280. The supreme court cannot presume facts upon which to base error. Every fair presumption should be in favor of the court below: Lawson v. Campbell, 4 G. Gr., 413.

281. It will be presumed that the action of the lower court was regular and authorized, unless the contrary appears: Bower v. Webber, 69-286.

282. The presumption is in favor of the action of the lower court, and it will be interfered with only where it affirmatively appears that some prejudicial error has been committed: Hunt v. Higman, 70—.

283. Therefore, where a motion was made to strike out a part of a deposition as immaterial, and was submitted with the case, it not appearing that any ruling was made thereon, held, that, although the evidence was erroneous, it would be presumed that the court did not consider it: Ibid.

284. An appellate court is always bound to exercise presumptions in favor of the judgment it reviews, unless it is shown that the law and justice have been violated by such judgment: State v. Hopkins, 67-285.

285. Where the record does not show what the issues in the case were, such issues will be presumed as would render the action of the court proper: Holland v. Union County, 68-56.

286. It will be presumed that there was sufficient testimony to support the judgment rendered unless the contrary appears: Brady v. Malone, 4-146; Hefferman v. Burt, 7-320; Jennings v. Conn, 11-542; Willett v. Millman, 61-123; Phillips v. Phillips, 46-708.

287. It will be presumed, in favor of the finding of the court, that lawful evidence authorizing such finding was introduced and considered. So where, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, judgment was rendered by default, and it did not appear that the mortgage and note were introduced in evidence, held, that such fact would be presumed: Henry v. Evans, 58-560.

288. The supreme court will not, for the purpose of reversing a cause, presume that the proof established a state of facts which would render the decision of the court below erroneous, if a state of facts can be supposed under which such decision would be correct: Crane v. Ellis, 31-510.

289. Where the record shows some evidence on which a ruling could be supported, it will be upheld, no evidence to the contrary appearing: Blythe v. Blythe, 25-266.

290. Where there is nothing in the bill of exceptions showing the existence of grounds on which a motion for new trial is based, it will be presumed in support of the action of the court in overruling such motion that such grounds were not shown to exist: Keys v. Francis, 28-321.

291. Where no finding of facts is made, the presumption is that the court found such facts as will justify the conclusion of law, and the conclusion will not be held erroneous unless there is a finding of facts from which error affirmatively appears, or error appears otherwise from the record: Oskaloosa v. Pinkerton, 51-697.

292. Where it does not appear upon what facts the decision of the lower court was based, such a finding of facts will be presumed as will support the decision: Fouts v. Pierce, 64-71.

293. Where the judgment below is based upon an authentication of a judgment from another state, which is insufficient, the presumption will be entertained that there was other evidence sufficiently showing such judgment, unless the contrary appears: Clemmer v. Cooper, 24-185.

294. Where it appears that attorneys' fees were taxed, after rendition of judgment in the case, as they might properly be, it will be presumed that such taxation was made upon proper evidence being introduced, although it does not appear that there was any such evidence: Kelso v. Fitzgerald, 67-266.

295. In the absence of a showing in the record to the contrary, the supreme court will presume that there was before the lower court sufficient evidence to justify the finding that defendant had been duly and legally served with process: Kent v. Coquilard, 67-500.

296. Where appellants were defaulted, and the record did not show what proof was introduced to sustain the bill, held, that it would be presumed there was enough evidence to support the averment upon which judgment was rendered: Semple v. Lee, 18-304.

297. Where the decree recites that certain matters essential to the jurisdiction of the court were made to appear, it will be presumed on the appeal that they were made to appear in the proper manner and that the court rendering such decree performed its duty: Jewett v. Miller, 12-85.

298. The supreme court will presume in favor of the regularity of the proceedings below, even though such proceedings are not shown by the record: Dixon v. State, 3-416.

299. Where the record showed that the trial was not by jury, held, that it would be presumed that a jury was waived, although that fact did not appear: Hawkins v. Rice, 40-485.

300. Error must affirmatively appear: Error will not be presumed, and the party alleging the existence of error to his prejudice must make it affirmatively appear: Hudson v. Matthews, Mor., 94; Isett v. Oglevie, 9-813; Way v. Lamb, 15-79; Messer v. Reginnitter, 32-312; Stewart v. Bishop, 33-584; State v. Foster, 40-303; Thompson v. Winnebago County, 48-155; Pottawattamie County v. Marshall County, 56-410.

301. Where error was assigned on appeal in admitting in evidence a certain order, and the record certified "that the order cannot be found among the files," held, that as the supreme court could not know what the order was, it could not say that it was error to have admitted such order in evidence in the court below: Carpenter v. Parker, 23-450.

302. Where a motion to discharge defendant because of unlawful arrest was unsupported by any evidence at the time, held, that an order overruling such motion would not be reversed on appeal: State v. Ross, 21-467.

303. Must be clearly manifest: Wherever error is complained of, it should be made to appear not only affirmatively but with reasonable certainty: Randolph Bank v. Armstrong, 11-515; Gantz v. Clark, 31-254.

304. Presumption in favor of record: Where an abstract showed an interlineation with a pen, and it appeared that the finding of the court below would not have been justified unless the allegation of the petition was such as shown by the abstract as amended by the interlineation, held, that in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it would be presumed that the abstract as thus amended was correct: Mahaska County v. Ruau, 45-328.

305. Defect in the record: Error cannot be presumed from mere omission or defect in the transcript. It must appear affirmatively. Unless it does so appear, the presumption of law is that the proceedings of the court below were legal and proper: Mackemer v. Benner, 1 G. Gr., 157.

306. Where a demurrer to a portion of the counts of an answer was sustained, and no action as to other counts appeared of record, but they might properly have been stricken out, held, that it would be presumed they were stricken out and that the action of the court was proper: District T'p v. Smith, 30-9.

307. Presumption as to pleadings: Where there was a cross-petition, and the case was tried as though a reply thereto had been filed, held, that the court would presume there was such reply, although none appeared in the record: Hervey v. Savery, 48-313.

That the same presumption obtains on appeals from justices' courts, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, § 102.

308. Where ruling does not appear: If it appears that a motion or demurrer was filed in the lower court, but it does not appear that any ruling was made thereon, it will be presumed that such motion or demurrer was waived: Sigler v. Woods, 1-177; Busick v. Bumm, 8-63; Boardman v. Beckwith, 18-292; State v. Ross, 21-467; First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 41-518; Moore v. Gilbert, 46-506.

309. Incidental rulings: The presumption in favor of the correctness of the rulings of the court below is especially applicable to those questions which are ever recurring and depend for their solution upon the discretion of the court: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Torry, 30-85; Thompson v. Burnham, 35-411.

310. Acts done in court in the progress of the case are presumed to be in accordance with law unless the contrary is made to appear. A presumption as to the regularity of the proceedings of the lower court will always be exercised, and error in such proceedings must be affirmatively shown to warrant a reversal: McCue v. Wapello County, 56-698.

311. Facts presumed: The presumption to be entertained in support of the ruling of the lower court requires that, if it would be correct under any presumable state of facts not inconsistent with the pleadings and the record, it shall be upheld: Ward's Heirs v. Cochran, 38-432; Johnson v. Mantz, 69-710; Stone v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 69-787.

312. The supreme court will not presume a state of facts upon which to found error, but if the record is silent and a state of facts can be supposed upon which the action of the lower court would be correct, the supreme court will adopt that view of the case which is consistent with the correctness of the ruling made: Freher v. Geeseka, 5-472.

313. Where sufficient ground appears upon which the judgment of the court below can be upheld, it will be presumed that the judgment was rendered on such ground: Frederick v. Mitchell, 1-100; State v. Gibbs, 39-318; Steel v. Miller, 40-402.

314. One of several grounds: If there be several grounds upon which a ruling may have been based, it will be upheld if any of such grounds are sufficient to support it, and if, among several insufficient grounds, one would be sufficient under certain conditions that may have existed, the supreme court will presume that such conditions existed and that the ruling was based thereon: Worthington v. Olden, 31-419.

315. Where a case is submitted to the jury on two issues, and a verdict is returned in favor of one of the parties which is sustainable on one of the issues upon the evidence introduced but not by any evidence in support of the other, it will be presumed that the verdict was upon the issue upon which there was evidence supporting it, and any error of the court below in refusing to take the other issue from the jury will be deemed to have been error without prejudice: Calder v. Smalley, 66-219.

316. Where an instruction was correct as to one question of fact involved and incorrect as to another, and it appeared that, under the evidence, the second question could not have been found as assumed in the instruction without the verdict being contrary to the evidence, held, that it would be presumed the verdict was found upon facts in harmony with the first branch of the instruction, and the error as to the other branch was without prejudice: State v. Sanders, 30-582.

317. If no ground can be discovered nor is pointed out, upon which the action of the court can be upheld, the presumption of regularity will be overcome: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-359.

318. Where but one ground of objection is urged, it must be presumed the ruling was on that ground, though erroneous: Emery v. Emery, 54-106.

319. Admission of evidence: If evidence may have been admissible under some aspects which the case may have assumed, and all the evidence is not before the court, it will be presumed that there was a state of facts authorizing the admission of the evidence objected to: Chase v. Scott, 33-309.

320. Where it appears that evidence was excluded, but it does not appear upon what ground, it will be presumed that there was some ground therefor, where the evidence is not all before the court: Cook v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 37-426.

321. If objection to evidence is sustained, and the record does not show the ground of the objection, if the evidence is vulnerable to any objection, it will be presumed that was the one made and sustained: Hoben v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 20-562.

322. Where no other evidence than that appearing in the record could legitimately have been presented in the court below, it will not be presumed that the action of the court was based on anything not appearing of record: McGovern v. Keokuk Lumber Co., 61-265.

323. Giving of instructions: In passing upon the correctness of the action of the trial court in refusing instructions as not applicable to the facts of the case, the presumption will be in favor of the correctness of the ruling of the court in the absence of evidence showing it to be erroneous: Stier v. Oskaloosa, 41-358.

324. A case will not be reversed for refusal to give instructions asked where it does not appear what instructions were actually given: Moody v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co., 41-284.

325. Where it appears that instructions were given which were not before the court, which might have modified or changed those given which are insisted upon as being erroneous, the court cannot presume that there were not other instructions correcting any error in the one relied upon as being erroneous: State v. Stanley, 48-221.

326. Where the evidence is not all before the court, the action of the court in dissolving an injunction will not be reversed, but it will be presumed that a sufficient showing was made to justify the action of the court below: Gray v. Montgomery, 17-66.

327. Where the evidence is not all before the court, it will be presumed that there was evidence sufficient to support the verdict: State v. Pitman, 38-252.

328. The same presumptions of regularity obtain in favor of the proceedings in a case in equity as in an action at law. Unless the contrary appears, it will be presumed that the decree was authorized by the evidence: Garner v. Pomroy, 11-149.

329. Where instructions are objected to as not applicable to the evidence, and the evidence is not all before the court, on appeal, it will be presumed that there was evidence to which the instructions were applicable, rather than the contrary: Blackburn v. Powers, 40-681; Gantz v. Clark, 81-254.

330. Where instructions would be correct under a possible state of facts, and the evidence is not all before the court, it will be presumed that the evidence was such as to justify the giving of the instructions: Rice v. Des Moines, 40-638; State v. Hemrick, 62-414; Wallace v. Robb, 87-192.

331. Where the evidence upon which the court below has acted is not all before the supreme court, it will be presumed that the action of the lower court was proper under the evidence: State v. Postlewait, 14-446; McIntosh v. Kilbourne, 87-420; Laughlin v. Main, 63-580.

b. Error without prejudice; what is and what is not; effect of.

See CRIMINAL LAW, §§ 1661-1665.

332. Ruling not reviewed unless prejudicial: An exception will not be regarded in the supreme court unless the ruling has been on a material point, and prejudicial to the rights of the party excepting: Bremer County Bank v. Eastman, 34-392.

333. A judgment will not be reversed for an error committed by the trial court, unless appellant has been prejudiced thereby: Tuck v. Singer M'f'g Co., 67-576.

334. One of two co-parties cannot object on appeal that a judgment against them jointly is erroneous because a judgment against his co-party was not proper, such co-party not having appealed: Hoadley v. Hammond, 63-599.

335. A case will not be reversed where it appears that no right of the party appealing has been prejudiced, no matter what error may have been committed: Smith v. Eaton, 50-488.

336. A party cannot, on appeal, complain of rulings which are in his favor, or a judgment so far as it is in his favor: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70; Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600.

337. Rulings to which party consents: The exclusion of evidence, by the consent of a party, cannot be made ground for reversal: Wilson v. McAdams, 10-590.

338. Waiver of error: Where improper evidence is permitted to remain in a criminal case, without objection, the error in its admission is waived: State v. Stickley, 41-232.

339. The action of the court in requiring additional security on a replevin bond, held not to be ground for reversal, as such order could not affect the validity of the judgment when rendered on the merits, and the error, if any, was waived by the compliance therewith: Prichard v. Hopkins, 52-120.

340. Where defendant was by the court ordered to answer, and thereafter obtained an extension of time within which to answer, and, upon his failure to comply, default was entered against him, held, that any error in the first order requiring defendant to answer was error without prejudice: Rock v. Wallace, 15-379.

Amending or pleading over by the party against whom a ruling is made on motion or demurrer will constitute a waiver of any error in such ruling: See PLEADING, XIV, e.

341. Upon the overruling of a party's demurrer, he may either stand thereon and have a review of the ruling of the court by appeal, or he may plead over, thereby waiving his right to appeal, or in case no further pleading on his part is necessary to raise the issue, he may waive the issue on the demurrer by proceeding to the trial of the cause. By insisting on judgment for want of pleading or for refusing to proceed with the trial of the cause, the adverse party may require the unsuccessful party to either stand upon his demurrer or waive it, and, if he elect to stand upon his demurrer, judgment may be entered against him, which may be final, in case the decision of the court is affirmed on appeal. But, if no such judgment is entered, the affirmance upon appeal will not debar the unsuccessful party from pleading over or proceeding with the trial, as the case may be: Tyler v. Langworthy, 87-555.

342. Application by a party for the reconsideration by the court of its ruling on a motion for a new trial will not waive error committed in such ruling and prevent the party from taking advantage thereof on appeal: Anderson v. Cahill, 65-252.

343. Error in former action: Where suit was brought against several defendants for damages arising from illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, and the owner of the property in which the business was conducted was made a joint defendant, and a judgment by default was rendered against one of the sellers, the owner asking to be allowed to defend for such party; and afterward, a change of venue being first had as to the owner, judgment was rendered against him making the first judgment a lien against his property, held, that he could not on appeal in the latter case raise any error committed in refusing him leave to defend in the former case: Putney v. O'Brien, 53-117.

344. Party cannot object to action secured by him: A party having objected to evidence, which was thereupon admitted only for a particular purpose, cannot afterwards complain on appeal that such evidence should have been admitted for other purposes: Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-216.

345. Where justice has been done: Where it appears that justice has been done, and that a new trial would result in the same verdict or the same judgment, the action of the court in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of errors of law committed, will not be reversed on appeal: Dawson v. Wisner, 11-6.

346. If the court below has erred in the decision of a legal proposition, and the supreme court can see that with the necessary correction the verdict on the second trial must be the same as the first, then the granting of a new trial by the lower court might be reversed; but if it is not manifest that upon such correction of error the second trial would result as the first, the action of the lower court in granting a new trial will not be interfered with: Braddy v. Lumery, 11-29.

347. While a verdict will not be sustained that is clearly against erroneous instructions, yet, in a particular case, as the court below did not so regard it, and it appeared that substantial justice was done by the verdict, held, that it would not be reversed for that reason alone: Allison v. King, 25-56.

348. Judgment will not be reversed because of an alleged erroneous instruction by the court, when the judgment is more favorable to the appellant than a fair construction of the evidence justifies: McNally v. Shobe, 22-49.

349. Where the jury were not sufficiently instructed as to the measure of damages, but it appeared that their verdict was not beyond the just sum that plaintiff ought to recover as lawful damage, held, that the judgment should not be reversed: Cooper v. Central R. of Iowa, 44-134.

350. A judgment will be affirmed upon appeal if it is correct, although the reasons given for it by the court below may have been erroneous: Jamison v. Perry, 38-14; Whiting v. Root, 52-292.

351. A cause will not be reversed because of an inconsiderable error in the amount of the judgment rendered: Callanan v. Shaw, 24-441; Keokuk County v. Howard, 42-29.

352. Remission of excess: Where a judgment is rendered for an amount in excess of that due, but on appeal the successful party offers to remit the excess over the proper amount, the judgment will not be reversed: Morrill v. Miller, 8 G. Gr., 104.

And see infra, §§ 956-972.

353. Failure to give nominal damages not ground for reversal: Where substantial justice has been done, a new trial will not be granted for a failure of the jury to award nominal damages: Watson v. Van Meter, 48-76.

354. The supreme court will not reverse a judgment because nominal damages were not allowed, even though it appears that the appellant was entitled thereto: Rowley v. Jewett, 56-492; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Findley, 59-591; Case Threshing-Machine Co. v. Haven, 65-359; Watson v. Moeller, 63-161.

355. The supreme court will not reverse a judgment where the error alleged therein involves no more than nominal damages: Wire v. Foster, 62-114.

356. An omission to assess nominal damages, where there is a mere technical right of recovery, is not ground for reversal: Norman v. Winch, 65-263.

357. Although a case will not be reversed where the only right involved is that to nominal damages, yet if it does not appear that no more than nominal damages could be recovered, the refusal of the court to allow any recovery may be reversed: Madison County v. Tullis, 69-720.

358. That error is prejudicial must affirmatively appear: A party appealing from a ruling of the lower court must not only show affirmative error but also error prejudicial to his substantive rights: Fulmer v. Fulmer, 22-230; Blackburn v. Powers, 40-681; Brewington v. Patton, 1-121.

359. Where the evidence in an action triable de novo was not properly certified, and was on motion stricken from the abstract, held, that the court would not consider an alleged error of the court below in dismissing plaintiff's petition, for the reason that even if there was error in the ruling it could not be determined, in the absence of the evidence, whether plaintiff was entitled to recover: Hoy v. Cowgill, 52-711.

360. Where it is claimed that the jurors have taken improper considerations into account in determining their verdict, prejudice must be shown, or sufficient ground must appear for presuming prejudice, to warrant a reversal on account of refusal of the lower court to grant a new trial on that ground: State v. Woodson, 41-425.

Error without prejudice.

361. Error appearing, presumed prejudicial: Error in the admission of evidence will not be deemed to have been without prejudice if such evidence is material. The admission of incompetent evidence has been held to be error without prejudice in cases where it appears that the judgment or verdict could not have been different had the evidence been excluded, but no such ruling has been made where the evidence held to be unlawful constituted the whole of the proof of the party offering it, or added to the weight of the testimony in his behalf: Smith v. Johnson, 45-308.

362. When there has been error, a presumption of prejudice arises, and if the record fails to satisfy the supreme court that no prejudice has been caused, then such error cannot be disregarded: Potter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 46-399; Strobel v. Moser, 70—.

363. Where a conflict in the instructions arises out of one instruction which should not have been given, but which, by mistake, was handed to the jury, and such instruction is inconsistent with others given, although it is not shown that such erroneous instruction was considered and had an effect upon their decision, it will be presumed that it was considered, and the verdict will be set aside: Carlín v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 31-370.

364. If the instruction contains an erroneous enunciation of law, and is merely defective in not stating enough, or not giving all the modifications to which it is subject, it may be presumed, in the absence of a showing that all the instructions are before the court, that its defects were cured by other instructions; but if it is such that any modification thereof properly presenting the law would have been in conflict with it, the error therein will be ground for reversal although all the instructions are not before the court: Bland v. Hixenbaugh, 39-532.

365. An erroneous instruction will not be deemed to be without prejudice unless the fact appears affirmatively: Roby v. Appanoose County, 63-118.

366. If the instruction is erroneous or misleading, it will be presumed that there was evidence to which it was applicable, and that it therefore was prejudicial: Harrison v. Charlton, 37-184.

367. If error in admitting evidence appears, it must be affirmatively shown to be without prejudice to warrant its being disregarded: George v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 53-503.

368. Prejudice will be presumed from an erroneous ruling upon a motion for change of place of trial: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220.

369. While a presumption of prejudice will arise from a legal error, yet such presumption may be overcome; and where it is made to appear affirmatively that no prejudice did or could have resulted from the error, the case should not be reversed therefor: Dunne v. Deery, 40-251.

370. Error without prejudice in general: A judgment will not be reversed in consequence of errors which do not operate injuriously upon the party seeking reversal: Granger v. Buzick, 3 G. Gr., 570.

371. A case will not be reversed on account of error in the action of the court below which has worked no prejudice to the appellant: Union Ag'l, etc., Ass'n v. Neill, 31-95; Wile v. Wright, 32-451; Hamilton v. Floyd, 20-598; Crawford v. Paine, 19-172; Bell v. Byerson, 11-233.

372. Errors subsequently cured: Where an action of the court is at the time erroneous (as for instance in admitting a written instrument without proper proof of the signature), yet if subsequent evidence is such as to render the action of the court proper thereunder, there is no ground for reversal: Davenport v. Cummings, 15-219.

373. Judgment in favor of the party beneficially interested will not be reversed on account of error of the referee in finding in favor of a party not entitled: Williams v. Brown, 28-247.

374. Errors which have ceased to be prejudicial: A judgment will not be reversed which, however erroneous when made, has, by reason of a change in circumstances, ceased to be prejudicial to the complaining party: State ex rel. v. Waterloo Savings Bank, 39-706.

375. The supreme court will not reverse a case in behalf of a party where the right which he seeks to protect, if it ever existed, has expired: Cutcomp v. Utt, 60-156.

376. The improper substitution of a new appeal bond on an appeal from a justice of the peace, held to be error without prejudice where judgment on such appeal was for the party appealing and giving the bond: Ham-mitt v. Coffin, 3 G. Gr., 205.

377. Where persons bound over to await the action of the grand jury bring a proceeding, by habeas corpus, to test the correctness of the action of the magistrate, and being remanded to custody thereupon appeal from such order, a subsequent indictment by the grand jury for the same offense will render the decision in the habeas corpus proceeding immaterial and the appeal will be dismissed: Witmore v. Burgan, 70—.

378. Refusal to strike out immaterial matter in a pleading, upon motion, cannot be reviewed upon appeal: Abbott v. Striblen, 6-191.

379. Rulings upon demurrer, when deemed without prejudice: The fact that a demurrer based on an insufficient ground is erroneously sustained, will not be ground for reversal, where there could have been no recovery upon the count of the petition to which the demurrer was directed: Childs v. Dobbins, 61-109.

380. Where the lower court, in ruling on a demurrer to a petition, erroneously sustains it as to some portions thereof, but the action is determined in favor of plaintiff, and he is given the relief demanded, the ruling on the demurrer will be considered as error without prejudice: Scott v. Union County, 63-583.

381. The fact that the court erroneously sustains a demurrer to a count of the answer is error without prejudice, where the issue raised by such count is elsewhere presented and passed upon by the jury: McKeever v. Jenks, 59-300.

382. Where a demurrer to a petition was overruled and plaintiff thereupon filed an amended petition setting out the cause of action fully, held, that any error of the court in overruling the demurrer was without prejudice to the defendant: Gillis v. Matthews, 4 G. Gr., 254.

383. Where a demurrer to a portion of an answer was overruled, but under the instructions the issue thereby presented was, by implication, excluded from the jury and not considered by them, held, that the error, if any, in the ruling on the demurrer was without prejudice: Flanagan v. McWilliams, 52-148.

384. Where a demurrer is erroneously sustained upon one ground, and overruled upon another as to which it should have been sustained, the action of the court will be reversed on appeal in order that the appellant may be enabled to take such action as he might have taken in the lower court if the demurrer had been sustained on a proper ground: District T^p v. Independent Dist., 63-188.

And see, as to affirmance on other grounds, infra, §§ 916-918.

385. Error in striking defendant's answer from the files, on motion, is cured by subsequently allowing defendant to prove the defense alleged, when the evidence fails to establish the same: McNamara v. Estes, 22-246.

386. Refusal to allow an amended answer to be filed will be deemed error without prejudice, where it appears that all the facts alleged in the amended answer might have been proven under the original answer: Hough v. Housel, 20-19.

387. Allowance of an amendment which works no prejudice to the party appealing cannot be made a ground for reversal: Tabor v. Foy, 56-539.

388. Incompetency of a juror: Where an objection to a juror based upon his having a previously formed opinion with reference to the facts relating to a certain issue in the case was overruled, held, that such ruling would be error without prejudice where it appeared that the facts as to that issue in the case were not in controversy: Albia v. O'Harra, 64-297.

389. Error without prejudice in the rulings upon evidence: Where, from the instructions or from other parts of the record, it is made to appear that error in the admission of testimony has worked no prejudice to the party objecting, the cause should not be reversed on that ground: Woodward v. Horst, 10-120.

390. A cause will not be reversed for the admission of evidence which cannot have been prejudicial to the party complaining, even though such evidence was inadmissible: Quinton v. Van Tuyl, 30-554; Cooper v. Mills County, 69-350.

Error without prejudice.

391. Where, under the issues and the evidence, plaintiff could not recover, even had defendant introduced no evidence whatever, any error in the admission or exclusion of evidence cannot be complained of by plaintiff: George v. Eason, 69-461.

392. Where it appears that answers to questions which were properly objected to were favorable rather than adverse to the party objecting, the overruling of the objection will be considered as error without prejudice: Andrews v. Woodcock, 14-397; Drath v. Deitz, 15-436.

393. A judgment will not be reversed for improper rejection of testimony when the court is satisfied that justice has been done and that there is no reason to believe that a different result would be reached upon a new trial: Pelamourges v. Clark, 9-1.

394. Where the jury have returned their verdict against a party seeking to recover, any error in the admission of evidence having a tendency merely to limit the extent of his recovery will be error without prejudice: Chambers v. Grout, 63-342.

395. The admission of unimportant and irrelevant evidence, if without prejudice, will not operate to reverse a case on appeal, though such admission may have been error: McKenzie v. Kitler, 27-254; Curl v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 63-417.

396. Where immaterial evidence was admitted, in the main without objection, held, that the judgment would not be reversed because an inconsiderable portion thereof was admitted over the party's objection: Weitz v. Ewen, 50-34.

397. The admission of immaterial evidence will not constitute reversible error where it does not appear that it did or could have affected prejudicially the rights of appellant: Walsh v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 30-133.

398. Admission of evidence in a particular case, held error without prejudice: State v. Mecherter, 46-88.

399. Error in admitting evidence held cured by a subsequent admission, by the party objecting, of the fact which the evidence tended to prove: Murray v. Wells, 57-26.

400. The supreme court will not reverse a case for the rejection of testimony which, if admitted, could not have changed the verdict: Robinson v. Keith, 25-331.

401. The exclusion of a deposition will not be made a ground for reversal, where it appears that it does not tend to prove or disprove any fact in issue between the parties: Kelly v. Ford, 4-140.

402. Exclusion of testimony which could not possibly have tended to establish the defense will not be ground for reversal on behalf of defendant: State v. Hallett, 63-259.

403. Error in refusing to exclude evidence will not be sufficient ground for reversal where the result must have been the same if the evidence had been excluded: Brayley v. Ross, 33-505; Courtwright v. Strickler, 37-382; Jaques v. Sax, 39-367.

404. A cause will not be reversed for the admission of evidence which does not cast any greater burden upon the opposite party than he would have had without the admission of such evidence: Barker v. Kuhn, 38-392.

405. Admission of improper evidence as to a matter which is self-evident or of common observation known to all men, and in accord with such common observation, cannot be considered prejudicial: State v. Smith, 46-670; Kline v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 50-656.

406. The admission of evidence and giving instructions as to a certain matter, held to be error without prejudice, in view of the fact that the successful party was entitled to recover without regard to such evidence and instructions: Langford v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 59-283.

407. Where a record shows affirmatively that evidence which was improperly introduced did not influence the result or prejudice the party complaining, the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal: Amsden v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 13-132.

408. Where the supreme court are unable to see that evidence erroneously admitted could have had any effect on the jury prejudicial to the party complaining, the error will not be considered sufficient ground for reversal: Holt v. Brown, 63-319.

409. The exclusion of evidence will constitute error without prejudice where the witness is afterwards allowed to testify fully as to the matters called for by the question objected to: Keough v. Scott County, 28-387; State v. Geddis, 42-264; Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42-274; Ham v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co., 61-716; Reed v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 57-23.

410. Error in excluding evidence is cured by afterwards admitting it: Abell v. Cross, 17-171.

411. So if the witness testifies on cross-examination as to the matters with reference to which his testimony is erroneously excluded on direct examination, the error is cured: State v. Nelson, 58-208.

412. Error in allowing the introduction of a portion only of a deposition, held to be error without prejudice in view of the fact that the entire deposition was afterwards introduced: Bixby v. Carskaddon, 63-164.

413. The overruling of a motion to suppress a deposition is error without prejudice, where the witness testifies in person on the trial and such testimony is more favorable to the party complaining than that in the deposition: Curry v. Allen, 60-387.

414. Judgment will not be reversed for erroneous admission of evidence to establish a fact which is sufficiently established by other and competent evidence: Ellwood v. Wilson, 21-523; McCrary v. Deming, 88-527; Le Grand Quarry Co. v. Reichard, 40-161; Wallace v. Wallace, 62-651; State v. Shelton, 64-383; Jackson v. Boyles, 64-428.

415. Where a deposition was admitted over the objection of the opposite party, and without such deposition there was ample evidence to support the verdict and judgment of the court, held, that the admission of such deposition, if error at all, was error without prejudice: Stone v. Ballingall, 41-291.

416. Erroneous admission of evidence will not be ground for reversal where, in view of other evidence properly admitted, and the verdict of the jury, it is clear that the error did not affect the result: Belair v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 43-662.

417. A judgment will not be reversed for error in admitting testimony to prove title when the title is subsequently established by competent evidence: Des Moines v. Casady, 21-570.

418. Error in rejecting evidence will be deemed to have been without prejudice where the facts to be proven by such evidence are otherwise fully established: Lowe v. Lowe, 40-220; State v. Woodson, 41-425; Hoadly v. Hammond, 63-599.

419. The exclusion of cumulative evidence as to a fact otherwise fully established will be error without prejudice: State v. Pratt, 40-631.

420. Held, that defendant was not prejudiced by the rejection of testimony which had been once introduced and was again offered to the jury: Smith v. Howard, 23-51.

421. So where immaterial evidence was allowed as to the measure of damages, but it appeared from the nature of the verdict that no prejudice could have resulted from its admission, held, that the cause would not be reversed on account of such mere abstract error: Hubbard v. Mason City, 60-400.

422. Where the jury has failed to allow exemplary damages, any error in the admission of evidence as to malice will be error without prejudice: Brown v. Hendrickson, 69-749.

423. The admission of evidence upon a prosecution for murder, tending to show malice and deliberation, held error without prejudice in view of the fact that defendant was convicted only of manslaughter: State v. Middleham, 62-150.

424. Where a witness, in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, gave evidence tending to show malice, and a cross-question to such witness by defendant's counsel was overruled, held, that as defendant was convicted only of assault and battery, the error, if any, was without prejudice: State v. Graham, 51-72.

425. A cause will not be reversed on appeal upon the ground that the evidence is not admitted in the proper order or for the reason that a fact which should be proved in the first instance by one party is established by the testimony of the other: Cook Mfg Co. v. Randall, 62-244.

426. Where the record does not show what evidence was admitted or excluded, the court cannot determine whether appellant was prejudiced by any ruling of the court in reference thereto: Lucas v. Jones, 44-298.

427. If, in answer to an improper question, matter is elicited not responsive thereto, the error of the court in overruling an objection to the question will not justify a reversal on the ground of prejudice from the part of the answer not responsive to the question. In such case the court should be asked to strike out the irresponsive matter: Hatfield v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-434.

428. A verdict will not be set aside because in conflict with evidence which is irrelevant and immaterial, even though admitted without objection: Scott v. Morse, 54-732.

429. A cause will not be reversed on the ground that an objection to an improper question has been overruled, if the question itself was not followed by an improper answer: State v. Groom, 10-303.

Error in ruling upon objections to evidence will be deemed to be without prejudice, unless it appears that the questions were answered, and that such answers were prejudicial, or that if improperly excluded the evidence would have been material: See supra, §§ 244-258.

430. Error in the admission of improper evidence is error without prejudice if the court plainly directs the jury to disregard such evidence: Cook v. Robinson, 42-474. And see, further, INSTRUCTIONS, §§ 255-261.

431. Error without prejudice in giving instructions: A case will not be reversed for the giving of an erroneous instruction which could not have worked any prejudice to the complaining party: McKay v. Leonard, 17-366; Clagett v. Conlee, 16-487; Ocheltree v. Carl, 23-394; Hunt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26-363; Horr v. Reed, 20-591; Thompson v. Blanchard, 2-44; Blackburn v. Powers, 40-681; State v. Hart, 67-142.

432. The giving of an irrelevant instruction will be considered error without prejudice where it could not have been detrimental to the party complaining: Sullivan v. Finn, 4 G. Gr., 544.

433. Where the result could not have been different if erroneous instructions which were given by the court had not been given, the giving of such instructions will be deemed error without prejudice: Farwell v. Salpaugh, 32-582.

434. The failure to give a correct instruction will not be reversible error, if, even had the instruction been given, the result must have been the same, and any other verdict would properly have been set aside: Cedar Falls & M. R. Co. v. Rich, 33-113; Olson v. Neal, 63-214.

435. The refusal to give a correct instruction as to a matter properly before the jury will be error without prejudice if the jury specially find that the facts on which the instruction was founded did not exist: Martin v. Algona, 40-390; Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48-228.

436. While instructions should apply to the facts proved, yet, although they have no such application if they could have no effect upon the verdict, they will afford no ground for reversal, however erroneous; but if erroneous, and it appears that they could have had an influence prejudicial to the interests of the excepting party, the judgment will be reversed: McGregor v. Armill, 2-30.

437. The giving of an erroneous instruction which, under the testimony, could work no prejudice to the party complaining, will not be regarded as reversible error: First Nat. Bank v. Brees, 39-640.

438. Where it is clear from the verdict that the jury have not been misled by an erroneous instruction, the giving thereof will not be ground for reversal: Gwinn v. Crawford, 42-63; Peake v. Conlan, 43-297.

439. In a particular case, held, that while an instruction was improper for the reason that there was no evidence to support it, the giving of it was, under the circumstances, error without prejudice: Parkhurst v. Masteller, 57-474.

440. Error in giving an instruction will be error without prejudice where the verdict of the jury is in favor of the person complaining: Dunham v. Dennis, 9-543.

441. Where an erroneous instruction as to a particular matter is given, but from the verdict it is apparent that the jury have adopted a view of the case which renders such matter immaterial, the error will be considered as without prejudice: Hall v. Stewart, 58-681; Hall v. Ballou, 58-585.

442. Error in the giving of an instruction will be without prejudice where it appears that the jury have made such a finding upon the facts that such instruction can have had no influence upon the result: Keyser v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 61-175; Lathrop v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69-105.

Error without prejudice.— New trial.

443. Where an instruction in stating the liability of defendant fails to notice a limitation on that liability, but the evidence clearly shows the non-existence of such limitation, the error in failing to state the limitation will be deemed to be without prejudice: Brentner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-530.

444. Where instructions were given as to the right of plaintiff to recover exemplary damages, which were claimed to be erroneous, held, that as, under the circumstances, plaintiff was not entitled to actual damages, the instruction was, if erroneous, error without prejudice: Myers v. Wright, 44-38.

445. Where the verdict necessarily implies the finding of every fact as established which under the law is required to establish right to recovery, there is no ground to set aside the verdict, even though under the instructions plaintiff was required to prove in addition, as a condition of his right to recover, another fact which was not essential: Tuck v. Singer Mfg Co., 67-576.

446. Error in general instructions to the jury as to matters of law will be deemed error without prejudice where the verdict of the jury is special, having no connection or relation whatever with any principle of law: Wilkinson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 30-119.

447. Where the jury has, by special findings, determined every fact necessary to authorize judgment, error in giving or refusing instructions as to the legal conclusions to be drawn from such facts will constitute error without prejudice: Boals v. George, 30-601.

448. It is not error to refuse instructions asked which are substantially given in the charge of the court: Wilhelm v. Fimple, 31-131. And see INSTRUCTIONS, II.

449. A party cannot claim that he has been prejudiced by the failure to instruct at his request as to what his rights would have been under a condition of things which the verdict shows conclusively did not exist: Wilhelm v. Fimple, 31-131.

450. Judgment will not be reversed because of an erroneous instruction given by the court below when the controlling question in the case was fairly left to the jury, and correctly decided by them: Bondurant v. Crawford, 22-40.

451. If a party complains of erroneous instructions he must not only show the error, but that it resulted to his prejudice, and for that purpose it must appear that judgment was rendered against him: Shannon v. Scott, 40-629.

452. Where it is evident that improper instructions could have reasonably misled the jury to appellant's prejudice, the court will reverse the case and order a new trial, but not so where the prejudice is not manifest: Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2-463.

453. The giving of an erroneous instruction held not to be error without prejudice in a particular case: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58-195.

As to what the record must contain in order to authorize the court to pass upon errors in instructions, see supra, §§ 259-270.

c. Action of lower court in granting or refusing new trial.

In general, as to granting or refusing new trials, see NEW TRIALS.

454. Discretion not interfered with: A motion for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and such discretion will not be interfered with, on appeal, unless it is manifest that it has been improperly exercised: Freeman v. Rich, 1-504; Ruble v. McDonald, 7-90; Pickering v. Kirkpatrick, 32-163.

455. The discretion of the lower court in granting or refusing a new trial will not be interfered with upon light grounds or for trivial causes: Langworthy v. Meyers, 4-18.

456. Such discretion should not be controlled except in a clear case of abuse: New York Piano Forte Co. v. Mueller, 38-552.

457. Although an erroneous decision of the lower court on an application for a new trial may be made a ground for review and correction on appeal, yet a strong case must be presented to authorize the interposition of the supreme court: Brazelton v. Jenkins, Mor., 15.

458. A wide latitude is given to the discretion of the lower court in granting or refusing new trials, and this discretion will not be interfered with except where palpable injustice has resulted to the party making the application, which injustice must be made manifest: Hendricks v. Wallis, 7-224.

459. The action of the court in sustaining a motion for a new trial rests largely in its own discretion, which cannot be interfered with unless an error plainly appears. The supreme court is inclined to support rulings granting a new trial rather than subject them to close and critical examination: Donahue v. Lannan, 70—.

460. The presumption is in favor of the ruling of the trial court on a motion for new trial: Conklin v. Dubuque, 54-571; Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-348; Hill v. Densinger, 61-240.

461. Where new trial is refused; sufficiency of evidence: The supreme court must be fully satisfied that the discretion of the court below has been improperly exercised in refusing a new trial, before it will disturb such ruling and pass upon the insufficiency of the testimony: Freeman v. Rich, 1-504.

462. The supreme court will not, on appeal from the action of the trial court in refusing a new trial, consider the weight of the testimony: Lloyd v. McClure, 2 G. Gr., 139.

As to sufficiency of evidence to support the verdict in criminal cases, see CRIMINAL LAW, §§ 1677-1683.

463. Conflict in evidence: The action of the lower court, in overruling a motion for a new trial based on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, will not be interfered with, on appeal, if the conflict in the testimony is great, and its weight is not clearly against the verdict: Ackley v. Berkey, 22-226.

464. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the action of the court below in overruling a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed, on appeal, unless a clear case of abuse of discretion is made to appear: Hubbell v. Ream, 31-289.

465. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the supreme court will not interfere with the action of the lower court in refusing to set aside the verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence: Chambers v. Brown, 69-218.

466. Where the evidence is conflicting, and the court below, which heard the evidence, with full opportunity for observing the manner and appearance of the witnesses, has overruled a motion for a new trial on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, the supreme court will not interfere: Snyder v. Eldredge, 31-129; Mahaney v. Bell, 42-883.

467. The discretion of the trial court in overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the evidence will not be reversed where there is a conflict in the testimony: Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14-363; Brockman v. Berryhill, 16-183; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 22-508; Pierce v. Walker, 23-424; McCabe v. Knapp, 23-308; Callanan v. Shaw, 24-441; Schrimer v. Heilman, 24-505; Hull v. Alexander, 26-569; Sherman v. Western Stage Co., 24-515, 554; Garland v. Wholeham, 26-185; Todd v. Branner, 30-439; Snyder v. Nelson, 31-238; Bergert v. Davenport City R. Co., 34-571.

468. Verdict against manifest justice: When the court conscientiously believes that a verdict is against the truth or the weight of the submitted evidence, a new trial should unhesitatingly be ordered; but to justify such inference the mind should be brought irresistibly to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a free, sound and unbiased exercise of judgment on the part of the jury, and that manifest injustice would result if the verdict is permitted to stand: McKay v. Thorington, 15-25.

469. Whenever a verdict is clearly, not doubtfully, against the manifest justice of the case, it is the duty of the trial judge unhesitatingly to set it aside; but where there is a conflict of evidence, and the jury, being clearly charged as to the law, have found a verdict which the trial court has refused to set aside, the supreme court will not interfere: Smith v. Williams, 23-28.

470. Manifest error: The error in overruling a motion for new trial must be clearly manifest to warrant a reversal: Bellamy v. Doud, 11-285.

471. Verdict against immaterial evidence: To justify the granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, such want of evidence must relate to a material issue legitimately raised by the pleadings. The refusal of the lower court to grant a new trial when the objection is that the verdict is contrary to immaterial evidence, though admitted without objection, will not be reversed or disturbed on appeal: Parker v. Hendrie, 8-263; Scott v. Morse, 54-732.

472. Verdict supported by evidence: It is not the province of the supreme court to overrule both the jury and the lower court in a conclusion reached by them as between conflicting evidence: Sloan v. Central Iowa R. Co., 62-728.

473. Where the verdict finds support in the evidence the supreme court will not reverse the action of the court below in refusing to grant a new trial, although it believes that the preponderance of evidence is the other way: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-348.

474. Excessive verdict: The court below, having a full opportunity of understanding whether the verdict is excessive, should fearlessly assume the responsibility of setting it aside on that ground, but the supreme court will be very reluctant to disturb verdicts in this respect: Bower v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 42-546.

475. Where, in an action for personal injuries, the jury has rendered a verdict which the court below has refused to set aside as excessive, the supreme court will not, ordinarily, interfere: Brown v. Jefferson County, 16-339.

As to remitting amount deemed excessive, see infra, §§ 956-972.

476. What the record must show: The supreme court cannot undertake to say that the lower court has abused its discretion, either in granting or refusing a new trial, unless the whole case is presented to it by the record: Barker v. Brown, 15-70.

And see supra, IV, 3.

477. Action of lower court overruled: If the verdict is clearly in conflict with the evidence, and works manifest injustice, the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial may be overruled on appeal: Sadler v. Bean, 38-684.

478. Where there is no doubt as to the incorrectness of the verdict, the supreme court will grant relief therefrom by overruling the action of the lower court in refusing a new trial: Martin v. Orndorff, 20-217.

479. Where material findings of fact in a special verdict are wholly unsupported by the evidence, and the court below has overruled a motion for new trial, the supreme court will reverse the judgment: McCarty v. James, 62-257.

480. Where it clearly appears that the verdict is in conflict with the evidence, the supreme court will, on appeal, reverse the decision of the trial court in overruling a motion for a new trial based on that ground: Lester v. Sallack, 31-477.

481. Passion or prejudice: But such decision will not be disturbed unless so barren of support as to warrant the finding that it was the result of passion or prejudice: Schermer v. Gendt, 52-742.

482. Verdict not the result of free and unbiased judgment: Where the mind is brought inevitably to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a free, honest, and unbiased exercise of judgment on the testimony submitted, and that manifest injustice will result if judgment is rendered thereon, the court below should grant a new trial; and where such a case is made clearly apparent to the supreme court, a new trial will be ordered, though refused by the court below: Jourdan v. Reed, 1-135; Fawcett v. Woods, 5-400; Byington v. Woodward, 9-360.

483. Discretion subject to review: The discretion of the court in granting or overruling a motion for new trial is a legal one, and must be exercised according to the rules of law: Stewart v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 11-62; Stockwell v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co., 43-470.

484. An error of the court in granting or refusing a new trial on a legal proposition is reviewable on appeal with no more presumption in its favor than a ruling made in any other stage of the case: Byington v. Woodward, 9-360.

485. Where the court below, in granting or refusing a new trial, misstates a legal proposition, it is as much the subject of revision as any other question. In such cases the granting or refusing the motion is not a question of discretion, but is to be determined upon the law applicable to the case: Stewart v. Ewbank, 3-191; Riley v. Monohan, 26-507.

New trial.

486. While in most cases the question of the granting of a new trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court, and such discretion will not be interfered with, yet, if the grounds for a new trial appear of record and come within the well recognized rules of law, the action of the court in refusing a new trial may be reversed: Jones v. Fennimore, 1 G. Gr., 134; Shaw v. Sweeney, 2 G. Gr., 587; Humphreys v. Hoyt, 4 G. Gr., 245; In re Will of Coffman, 12-491.

487. Other grounds for new trial: Where the ground for new trial is accident or surprise, or that injustice has been done, the trial court is vested with a large discretion which will not be interfered with on appeal unless the error affirmatively appears: Hill v. Denzlinger, 61-240.

488. The action of a trial court in passing upon misconduct of counsel as a ground for new trial will be sustained on appeal unless it clearly appears to have been erroneous: Sunberg v. Babcock, 66-515.

489. Whether a new trial should be granted for misconduct of the jury is left largely to the sound discretion of the trial court, which is in a much better position to determine whether the rights of the parties have been affected by such misconduct than the supreme court can be, and if the lower court has determined that there should be another trial on that ground, its discretion will not be interfered with unless it is made to appear very clearly that there has been an abuse of discretion: Perry v. Cottingham, 68-41.

490. Where, upon the allegations of misconduct of the jury made as a ground for a new trial, there is a conflict in the evidence, the finding of the court in ruling upon such motion must have the same force as its finding upon any other question of fact arising in an action at law: Watson v. Stotts, 68-659.

491. The supreme court will not interfere with the action of the court below in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury where there is a conflict in the evidence as to the nature of such misconduct: Todd v. Branner, 30-439.

492. A new trial will not be granted on appeal when a witness has given material evidence without being sworn, unless it be shown that the party complaining, or his attorney, did not know of the fact until after the verdict: Riley v. Monohan, 26-507.

493. Where new trial is granted: An order granting a new trial may be reviewed: Stewart v. Eubank, 8-191; Cook v. Sypher, 8-484; Newell v. Sanford, 10-396.

494. But the supreme court will exercise a presumption in favor of the correctness of the ruling of the court below, and will not interfere with an order granting a new trial where it does not affirmatively appear that the action is erroneous: Boardman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 32-391.

495. It is a constant practice in the supreme court to refuse to disturb the action of the court below when a new trial is granted, although the ruling of the lower court would also have been upheld if the new trial had been refused: Ibid.; McKay v. Thorington, 15-25.

496. When the trial court determines that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and ought to be set aside on that ground, the case must be a very clear one to warrant an appellate court in interfering with its action: Moran v. Harris, 68-390.

497. Where the trial judge has determined that the fair administration of the law demands that a new trial should be granted for any cause which the law recognizes as a ground for a new trial, his action will be interfered with on appeal only when it is shown that he has abused the discretion with which the law vests him: Rogers v. Winch, 65-168.

498. The action of the court in setting aside a verdict and granting a new trial will not be interfered with where it does not appear that the discretion reposed in the trial court has been abused or erroneously exercised: Laverenz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-321.

499. Where it appears that the court below, with a full knowledge of all the circumstances transpiring at the trial, has ordered a new trial, the supreme court will not interfere therewith unless error in the action of the court is made affirmatively to appear: Finley v. David, 7-3.

500. The supreme court seldom interferes with a ruling of the court below in granting a new trial, and would not be justified in doing so except in a clear case: Lytton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-338.

New trial.

501. A stronger case should be made to justify the interposition of the supreme court when a new trial has been granted, than where it has been refused: Ruble v. McDonald, 7-90; Newell v. Sandford, 10-396; Shepherd v. Brenton, 15-84; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 21-335; Chapman v. Wilkinson, 22-541; White v. Poorman, 24-108; Roberts v. Jones, 30-525; Forney v. Ralls, 30-559; Pickering v. Kirkpatrick, 32-163; Boardman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 32-391; Tegeler v. Jones, 33-234; New York Pidno Forte Co. v. Mueller, 38-552; Howell v. Snyder, 39-610; Conklin v. Dubuque, 54-571.

502. Where the trial court has set aside the verdict and granted a new trial, the supreme court will not be inclined to set aside the ruling on appeal: Robinson v. Bacon, 24-409.

503. Where a court grants a new trial on the ground that the jury were confused and misled by the instructions, the supreme court will not interfere: Reeves v. Royal, 2 G. Gr., 451.

504. An order granting a motion for a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal when the grounds alleged are fairly supported and there is nothing to show abuse of discretion: Sanders v. Clark, 22-275.

505. While it is true that a stronger showing should be made to justify an interposition of the supreme court when a new trial has been granted than when refused, yet, where the court in ordering a new trial misapplies a legal proposition, such ruling should be reviewed where made upon motion for new trial, the same as upon the ruling on any other legal question, and in so doing the discretion of the trial court as to granting new trials is not interfered with: Mehan v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-805.

506. No discretion is reposed in the court in determining whether or not evidence which is relied on to entitle the party to a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence, is cumulative, and a ruling of the court in granting a new trial upon the showing as to such evidence will be reviewed as readily as though the court had refused to grant the new trial: Manson v. Ware, 63-345.

507. If the verdict is contrary to instructions, and the lower court has granted a new trial on that ground, its action will not be disturbed on appeal, nor the instructions given be reviewed. It is the duty of the jury to regard the instructions as the law, and find a verdict accordingly, whether they be right or wrong: Caffrey v. Groome, 10-548; Savery v. Busick, 11-487; Jewett v. Smart, 11-505; Taylor v. Cook, 14-501; Porter v. Thomson, 22-391.

508. Where, under the evidence, it is apparent that the jury has disregarded an instruction of the court, the supreme court will reverse the action of the lower court in failing to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial on that ground: Nichols v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-154.

And further as to duty of jury to follow the instructions, see INSTRUCTIONS, III, e.

509. The action of the lower court in setting aside a verdict will not, in general, be interfered with on appeal on the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence: Engs v. Priest, 65-232.

510. Abuse of discretion must appear: Where a new trial is granted by the lower court on the ground that the verdict is not sufficiently supported by the evidence, the action of such court in determining such question will not be disturbed on appeal unless it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion in such ruling: Hill v. Denslinger, 61-240; Stewart v. Dunlap, 61-248; Conklin v. Dubuque, 54-571; Pickering v. Kirkpatrick, 32-163; Able v. Frazier, 43-175; McNair v. McComber, 15-368.

511. And where the verdict has been set aside by the court below as not supported by the evidence, and a new trial granted, it will require a stronger showing to warrant the interference of the appellate court than when a new trial asked on similar grounds has been refused: Jenkins v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 32-97.

512. Action of the court in sustaining a motion for new trial on the ground of surprise will not be reversed unless the supreme court is well satisfied that such discretion has been abused: Schumaker v. Gelpcke, 11-84.

513. Conclusive preponderance of evidence: To authorize the reversal of the decision of the court below setting aside a verdict on account of insufficiency of evidence, there should appear such conclusive preponderance of evidence in its support as would show that injustice would be done: Worthington v. Olden, 81-419; Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Green, 21-335.

514. The case must be very clear to warrant the appellate court in interfering with the action of the trial court in setting aside a verdict as contrary to the evidence: Moran v. Harris, 63-390.

515. Error and abuse of discretion must be made to appear to justify a reversal of such action of the lower court: Brett v. Bassett, 63-340.

516. Excessive damages: The supreme court will hesitate long before interfering with the action of the trial court in setting aside a verdict on the ground that the damages found by the jury are excessive and appear to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice: White v. Beck, 64-122.

517. Weight of evidence; manifest injustice: While there is no question as to the right of the supreme court to set aside a verdict and award a new trial when the verdict is against the weight of evidence or the truth of the case, yet, to justify such interference, the mind should be brought irresistibly to the conclusion that the verdict was not the result of a free, sound and unbiased exercise of judgment on the part of the jury, and that manifest injustice would result if the verdict should be permitted to stand: McKay v. Thorington, 15-25.

518. Mistake as to legal proposition: The discretion with which the court is clothed as to granting a new trial is a legal discretion, and its exercise must accord with the rules of law. If a new trial is granted upon insufficient cause, or for reasons in conflict with the law, such action will be regarded as an abuse of the discretion of the court, and will be reversed on appeal with the same freedom as if made at any other stage of the trial: Ruble v. McDonald, 7-90; Shepherd v. Brenton, 15-84; Stockwell v. Chicago, C. & D. R. Co., 43-470.

519. Although it will require a stronger case to warrant the supreme court in reversing the action of the court below where a new trial has been granted than where it has been refused, yet, if the evidence is clearly and explicitly supported by the verdict, the action of the lower court in granting a new trial may be reversed: Cedar Falls & M. R. Co. v. Rich, 83-113.

520. Concurring verdicts: Where several trials have resulted in the same verdict and the trial court has refused to set the last one aside as against the evidence, it would require a very strong case to justify an interference by the appellate court: Burlington Gas Light Co. v. Greene, 28-289; Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14-363; Terpenning v. Gallup, 8-74; Hollenbeck v. Marshalltown, 62-21.

521. Where concurring verdicts have been rendered and the last one is allowed to stand by the trial court, this fact will authorize the presumption on the part of the supreme court that another trial would result in the same way: Penn v. McLaughlin, 36-538.

522. However, a second verdict concurring with the previous one which has been set aside as against the evidence, by no means concludes the court from again granting a new trial, and especially when the second application is based upon a different ground from that contained in the first: Jourdan v. Reed, 1-135.

523. Where a verdict was set aside because one juror had not concurred therein, and upon a subsequent trial the same verdict was rendered, held, that the fact that the result had been concurred in by twenty-three jurors would have much weight in sustaining the action of the court below in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence: State v. Cross, 12-66.

d. Verdict of jury.

524. Not interfered with if supported by evidence: The supreme court will not on appeal disturb the verdict of the jury as against the evidence on a question of fact, if there is any evidence to support it: Harger v. Spofford, 46-11; Cole v. Coskery, 63-526; Witter v. Little, 66-431.

525. To warrant a reversal on that ground the verdict must be clearly against the weight of evidence: Booth v. Small, 25-177; Harper v. Madren, 21-407; Ayres v. Hartford Ins. Co., 21-193.

526. To justify the interference of the supreme court with the verdict of the jury on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence, it must appear that it is clearly and manifestly unsustained by the evidence: Starker v. Luse, 33-595.

Verdict of jury.

527. The supreme court interferes very reluctantly with the verdict of a jury, and never unless it is clearly unsupported by the evidence or has been otherwise improperly reached: Miller v. Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co., 39-304.

528. In particular cases, held, that the verdict was not so lacking in support as to warrant a reversal: Royal v. Smith, 40-615; Smith v. Wagaman, 58-11; Manning v. Meredith, 69-480.

529. Where the court instructed the jury that to warrant a verdict on a particular issue in behalf of one of the parties, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory and conclusive in his favor, and a verdict was rendered for such party on such issue, held, that the supreme court would not on appeal set aside such verdict on the ground that the evidence was conflicting, if it appeared that the jury might, without bias or prejudice, have concluded that in their minds the evidence was of such a character: Hoadley v. Hammond, 63-599.

530. Where the evidence is conflicting the supreme court will not set aside the verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence: Hall v. Hunter, 4 G. Gr., 539; Pilmer v. Branch of State Bank, 19-112; Jones v. Jones, 19-236; Eason v. Webster, 20-591; Reeves v. Reeves, 20-597; Ellwood v. Wilson, 21-523; Law v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 32-534; Maxon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67-226.

531. Where there is a conflict in the evidence and the verdict is not palpably against the weight of evidence, the appellate court will not interfere: Crabtree v. Messersmith, 19-179.

532. Where the determination of a question upon the evidence involves the credibility of contradictory witnesses, it is a matter peculiarly for the jury: Peck v. Hendershott, 14-40.

533. The rule that the supreme court will not on appeal interfere with the verdict of the jury when there is a clear conflict in the evidence, is applicable in criminal as well as civil cases: State v. Falconer, 70—.

534. Honest and unbiased judgment of jury: Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the supreme court will not on appeal interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is well satisfied of the insufficiency of the evidence to convince the reason, conscience and judgment of the triers: Todd v. Braner, 30-439.

535. Unless there is some foundation for the conclusion that the findings of the jury are not the result of honest, intelligent and unbiased judgment on their part, the supreme court will not disturb their verdict: Martin v. Algona, 40-390.

536. Preponderance not controlling: Where there is a mere conflict in the evidence, even though it strongly preponderates against the verdict, and there is a conviction in the minds of the supreme court that a different result would more nearly accord with justice, these facts are not sufficient to justify it in directing a new trial: Garretty v. Brazell, 34-100.

537. Where the evidence is conflicting the supreme court will not set aside the verdict of a jury, although they might have been better satisfied upon the evidence with a different result: White v. Clark, 39-333; Starker v. Luse, 33-595.

538. And this will be true even if the supreme court is clearly of the opinion that if it had been called to pass upon the evidence it would have reached a different conclusion from that reached by the jury: Hyde v. Lookabill, 66-453.

539. A strong preponderance of evidence against the verdict, and a conviction that a different result would more nearly accord with justice, are not sufficient to justify the supreme court in ordering a new trial, where they are not satisfied from the absence of evidence to support a verdict that it was not the result of a free, honest, unbiased and intelligent exercise of judgment and conscience on the part of the jury, and that justice will fail if the verdict is not set aside: Garretty v. Brazell, 34-100; Parker v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co., 34-399; Myers v. Dresden, 40-660; Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42-274.

540. Question of negligence: If the conclusion of negligence can be, by the jury, reasonably drawn from the circumstances, such conclusion will not be interfered with on appeal, although the opposite conclusion appears to the court to be the more reasonable; but if the general result appears to be wrong, and the jury, as appears from their special findings, are unable to assign any certain or tangible ground for their conclusion, the court should interfere: Ford v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69-627.

541. Question of fraud: It being the peculiar province of the jury to determine questions of fraud in fact, when alleged, the supreme court will not, on appeal, interfere with a judgment on the verdict in a case involving fraud, where it does not appear that the jurors could not, in the exercise of their unbiased and intelligent discretion, have properly found as they did: Votaw v. Diehl, 62-676.

542. Where the question is as to whether a transaction was fraudulent, the supreme court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury, who had the opportunity to see the witnesses and judge of their credibility, unless the evidence is so against the verdict as to raise a presumption of passion or prejudice on part of the jury: Enneking v. Scholtz, 69-473.

543. Passion or prejudice must appear: Where there is a conflict in the evidence the supreme court will not set aside a verdict unless it appears that it is the result of passion or prejudice: Melhop v. Doan, 36-630; Moore v. Moore, 39-461; First Nat. Bank v. Charter Oak Ins. Co., 40-572; Hall v. Ballou, 58-585; French v. Reel, 70—; Gibson v. Fischer, 68-29.

544. To authorize a reversal on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence there must be such failure of proof as to raise the presumption that it was the result of passion or prejudice and not of an intelligent and honest exercise of discretion by the jury: McCormicks v. Fuller, 56-43.

545. Verdict set aside: It is with reluctance and caution that an appellate court interferes with the verdicts of juries. Where there is reasonable doubt, or a conflict of evidence, the verdict will be upheld; but if there is no such doubt or conflict, the duty to set aside the verdict is plain; and in the case under consideration the verdict was set aside: McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20-388.

546. And in particular cases, held, that the verdict was so clearly contrary to the evidence that the judgment upon such verdict should be reversed: Martin v. Orndorff, 20-217; Lester v. Sallack, 31-477; Miller v. Mutual Benefit Ins. Co., 34-222.

547. Where there is an entire want of evidence to support or establish a fact essential to the verdict, a judgment based upon such verdict will be reversed on appeal: Carlin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37-816.

548. If the verdict is clearly unsupported by the evidence and appears to have been the result of passion or prejudice, the supreme court will not hesitate to reverse on that ground: Woodward v. Squires, 39-435.

549. The supreme court will reverse the case where, under the law as given the jury by the court, the verdict is contrary to the undisputed evidence: Eckerd v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70—.

550. Excessive verdict: A judgment will not be interfered with as excessive where it is within the province of the jury to determine under all the circumstances the amount that plaintiff is entitled to recover, as for instance where exemplary damages are allowable: Dynes v. Robinson, 11-187.

551. It is the province of the supreme court on appeal to set aside a verdict which is excessive and remand the case for trial by another jury. The court will, however, usually not make an absolute order remanding the case for another trial in such cases, but will allow plaintiff to elect whether he will take another trial or accept a certain amount which would not seem to the court to be open to the objection of being excessive: Cooper v. Mills County, 69-350.

And further as to remitting excess, see infra, §§ 956-972.

552. Verdict contrary to instructions: A verdict in conflict with the instructions will be set aside on appeal without regard to their correctness. The instructions are the law of the case for the jury: Sullivan v. Otis, 39-828; Morss v. Johnson, 38-430; Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601; Farley v. Budd, 14-289; Browne v. Hickie, 68-330.

And see further, on this point, INSTRUCTIONS, III, e.

553. If instructions are conflicting the verdict will not be set aside if in harmony with the correct instructions: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

Finding of facts by court.

e. Finding of facts by court.

554. Presumption in favor of: The finding of facts by the lower court in a trial before it has the same presumption in its favor in the supreme court upon appeal as are entertained in favor of the verdict of a jury: State v. Haskell, 20-276; Mallory v. Luscombe, 81-269; Hambell v. O'Neal, 89-562; Clark v. Reynolds, 46-674.

555. Where an action by ordinary proceedings is tried by the court without a jury, the supreme court will not try the case anew on appeal, and will not interfere on account of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the lower court, except where the circumstances are such as would warrant the setting aside of the verdict of a jury: Dove v. Independent School Dist., 41-689.

556. In all actions or special proceedings not triable de novo on appeal, the finding of the lower court upon questions of fact stands as the verdict of a jury and will not be disturbed on appeal unless clearly unsupported by the evidence: Hamilton v. Iowa City Nat. Bank, 40-307; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154; Knox v. Hanlon, 48-252; Smith v. Walker, 49-289; In re Will of Donnelly, 68-126.

557. The findings of fact by the court must be clearly and manifestly unsustained by the evidence to justify the appellate court in granting a new trial on this ground: Berryhill v. Jones, 35-335; Fouts v. Pierce, 64-71.

558. To authorize a reversal in such case there must be such want of testimony in support of the findings of the lower court as to raise the presumption that the finding is not the unprejudiced and honest exercise of the discretion of the court: Vogel v. Wadsworth, 48-28; Root v. Gay, 64-399; Woodman v. Dutton, 57-442; Ross v. McQuiston, 45-145.

559. Practically there can be but two modes of trial in the supreme court. One is de novo, which obtains in equity cases, and the other is the one which has uniformly prevailed in actions at law, which is that, unless satisfied that the verdict or finding of the court is the result of passion or prejudice, the supreme court will not interfere: Gibson v. Fischer, 68-29.

560. In passing upon the question whether the finding of the court below is supported by the evidence, the supreme court can only inquire whether there was evidence upon which the court below, in the honest and intelligent exercise of discretion, could have rendered such a finding. The finding of the lower court is in this respect regarded as the verdict of the jury: Goldsmith v. Wilson, 68-685.

561. Conflicting evidence: A finding of facts by the lower court will not be disturbed on account of insufficiency of the evidence to support it, where the evidence is conflicting: Harris v. Heackman, 62-411; In re Railsback's Heirs, 54-459; Hallam v. Haywood, 21-398; McIntosh v. Livingston, 41-219; Watkins v. Swiggett, 41-684; Perry v. Cottingham, 63-41.

562. Every presumption is in favor of the finding of the court below on the evidence, and such a finding will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that it is not sustained by the testimony: Brainard v. Van Kuran, 22-261.

563. Unless it appears that a finding of facts by the court below is so manifestly against the evidence as to demand a reversal, the supreme court will not interfere with such finding, although if trying the case for itself it might have reached a different conclusion: Williams v. Brown, 45-102; Starker v. Luse, 38-595.

564. It is only when the finding of facts by the lower court is clearly and manifestly in conflict with the evidence that the appellate court is warranted in interfering therewith: Ruble v. Atkins, 39-694.

565. The supreme court will not, in a law case, reverse the judgment of the court below based upon a finding of facts, if there is any evidence upon which such finding can be sustained: Leighton v. Orr, 44-679.

566. It is only where the finding evinces passion or prejudice, and cannot be supported under any reasonable view which may be taken of the evidence, that it should be set aside on appeal: Van Steenburg v. Milford Water Power Improvement Co., 64-711.

567. The question before the court on appeal, where there has been a finding of facts in a law action, is not whether the finding is sustained by the evidence, but whether there was evidence tending to support such finding: Altman v. Farrington, 45-620.

Findings by referee.—Judgment without finding of facts.

568. When the evidence submitted to the court below leaves a question of fact in doubt, the supreme court will not reverse the finding: Weller v. Hawes, 19-448.

569. When the finding of the court below is not sustained by the testimony a new trial will be awarded: Keokuk County v. Alexander, 21-377.

570. Finding not conclusive if judgment thereon reversed: Where final judgment is rendered in favor of a defendant, he cannot appeal from a finding of facts which is against him. But if defendant has properly objected to the correctness of such finding, it is not proper, in case of a reversal on plaintiff's appeal, to render judgment against defendant thereon without opportunity for a new trial: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 68-70.

And see infra, §§ 917-920.

571. Conclusion of law: A finding by the lower court, which is merely a conclusion of law from the facts, there being no dispute or controversy as to the facts themselves, is reviewable on appeal, and is not conclusive in the same sense that a finding of fact is: Northwestern Coal Co. v. Bowman, 69-150.

The record: To warrant the review of findings of fact by the lower court, the entire evidence must be brought before the supreme court on appeal, otherwise the finding of the lower court will be conclusive: See supra, § 273.

f. Findings by referees.

572. Presumption in favor of: The finding of facts by a referee has the same force as the verdict of a jury, and will not be disturbed upon appeal unless clearly against the evidence: Whicher v. Steamboat Ewing, 21-240. And see REFERENCE, §§ 27-29.

573. Nor unless there is an absence of evidence to sustain it: Brainard v. Simmons, 67-646.

574. It will not be set aside on a conflict in the testimony: Carson v. Cross, 14-463.

575. It will not be held as unsupported by the testimony unless there is such absence of proof as to authorize the conclusion that it was not the result of honest, intelligent and unprejudiced judgment: Taylor v. French Lumbering Co., 47-462.

576. Where it was impossible from the evidence to determine whether a referee's report was correct or not, held, that it would be allowed to stand: In re Heath's Estate, 58-86. And see REFERENCE, §§ 80-83.

g. Judgment without finding of facts.

577. Not reviewable on the facts: The supreme court has no more power to review the judgment of a court below upon a trial by the court where there is no finding of facts, than it has to review the verdict of a jury: Warner v. Pace, 10-891. (But by statute a motion for new trial is no longer necessary in either case to secure a review.)

578. Where an equity cause is not triable de novo on appeal, the court will not interfere with the judgment unless there be such absence of testimony as to authorize the reversal of a judgment upon the verdict of a jury: Mellinger v. Parsons, 51-58.

579. Where the cause is tried to the court without a jury, a judgment of the court stands as a general verdict of the jury, and will not be interfered with unless palpably against the weight of evidence: Woods v. Gevecke, 28-561.

580. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the court will not set aside a judgment because it is not supported by the testimony: Boone County v. Wilson, 41-69.

581. To authorize the supreme court to reverse a judgment on the ground of want of evidence for its support, there must be such absence of proof as to warrant the conclusion that the decision of the lower court was the result of passion or prejudice: Murray v. Wells, 57-26; Melendy v. Rice, 94 U. S., 796; Patterson v. Seaton, 70—.

582. In the absence of a special finding of facts by the court, it will be presumed that the judgment is based upon facts which in the proper exercise of judicial discretion the court below could have found under the evidence: Bower v. Webber, 69-286.

583. The supreme court may review the findings of the court below in like manner as it may re-examine the verdict of a jury, but for that purpose the entire evidence must be taken up. This takes the place of a motion to set aside the verdict of the jury for the reason that it is not supported by the evidence: Snell v. Kimmell, 8-281.

 Procedure.—Parties.—Time for appeal.

VI. PROCEDURE.

a. Parties.

584. Must be party to the record: One who has not had himself made a party to the record cannot appeal from the judgment, although having an interest therein: Borgalt-hous v. Farmers', etc., Ins. Co., 36-250; Ferguson v. Board of Supervisors, 44-701.

585. If a person having an interest in the result desires to question the action of the court, he should apply to be made a party. Until he is thus made a party, he is in no way liable for costs, and therefore cannot be allowed to interfere with the rights of the original parties in the suit by appeal: State ex rel. v. Jones, 11-11.

586. If such a person should apply to be made a party and his application be refused, such refusal might be investigated upon appeal: Phillips v. Shelton, 8-545.

587. Where the complainant simply asks to redeem, a senior incumbrancer may appeal from an improper order in permitting the redemption, so that he does not get the full amount due on his mortgage, although he did not answer the bill: White v. Hampton, 13-259.

588. The parties for whose benefit suit is brought or defended under Code, § 2549, are not parties in such sense as to have the right of appeal: Fleming v. Mershon, 36-413.

589. In an action against the unknown owners of certain land, held, that there could be no appeal on behalf of the land, or the owners thereof, unless some one appeared in the action and made himself a party as the owner: Fuller v. Unknown Owner, etc., 9-430.

590. A party who has not appealed cannot insist upon other or different relief from that awarded him in the court below: Alexander v. Buffington, 66-360; Devoe v. Hall, 60-749.

591. A party not appealing can have no relief: Huff v. Olmstead, 67-598; Lamb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 70—.

592. Parties who do not join in the appeal cannot present questions affecting their claims or interest not involved in the questions arising upon the appeal as taken by appellant. They can have no modification of the decree: Butler v. Barkley, 67-491.

593. Co-parties: It is essential in an appeal from the decree in a partition proceeding taken by one defendant, that notice of appeal be served upon his co-defendant, otherwise the supreme court cannot review a ruling which would necessarily affect the interest of such co-defendant, and the appeal will be dismissed: State v. Baldwin, 70—.

594. If co-parties, upon being served, elect to join in the appeal, they are entitled to all the benefits thereof, and may be allowed to file an assignment of errors, and be heard: Barlow v. Scott's Adm'rs, 12-63.

595. Where the supersedeas bond recited expressly that one of two defendants alone had appealed, and such defendant's name alone appeared in the heading of the notice of appeal, held, that he only could be considered as having appealed, although the body of the notice spoke of the appeal being by defendants: Webster v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 27-315.

596. One defendant cannot upon appeal complain of any error which results in injury only to his co-defendant: Eyre v. Cook, 9-185.

597. Where a defendant appealing from a judgment notifies his co-defendant as well as the plaintiff of such appeal, and the co-defendant does not refuse to join, it is presumed (under Code, § 3176) that such co-defendant does join in the appeal, and appellant may thereupon urge any objection as to the judgment against his co-defendant which ultimately affects his own liability: Engleken v. Webber, 44-558.

598. A deceased party cannot appeal nor can the right of his estate be adjudicated if an appeal in form is taken: Tracy v. Roberts, 59-624.

b. Time for appeal.

599. In computing the six months within which an appeal may be taken, the day on which judgment was rendered will be excluded and the corresponding day at the end of the time included: Carleton v. Byington, 16-588.

600. Therefore, held, that an appeal taken September 30, from a judgment rendered March 30, was in time: Parkhill v. Brighton, 61-103.

601. The service of the notice within the time specified is sufficient. It is not neces-say that it be filed with the clerk within that time: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23-66.

Time for appeal.—Perfecting appeal.

602. Securing the clerk's fees for a transcript is not necessarily a part of the perfecting of the appeal which must be completed within six months: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 56-347. But see infra, § 647.

603. An appeal from final judgment taken within the proper time will raise objections to previous proceedings in the case although more than the time prescribed for taking the appeal has elapsed since such previous proceedings: Holladay v. Johnson, 12-563.

604. Where judgment relates back: Where judgment is entered in vacation as of the preceding term, by agreement, the period for taking appeal will commence to run from the time the decision is, in fact, made, and not from the time to which by agreement it relates back: Carter v. Sherman, 63-689.

605. Where the judgment appealed from bore date more than the prescribed length of time before the taking of the appeal, but it appeared that the cause was held under advisement and decided in vacation and within the prescribed time, without any agreement that judgment should be entered as of the last day of the preceding term, held, that the appeal was not barred: Kendall v. Lucas County, 26-395.

606. Where a decree, in an action seeking to have set aside a deed of real property, and for a reconveyance thereof, and also for an accounting of rents and profits and improvements, was rendered for reconveyance upon payment by plaintiff of the sum paid, with interest, and also the value of the improvements, less rents and profits, etc., and the case was sent to a referee to take an account, held, that an appeal from the decree as to the reconveyance, etc., must be taken within six months from the time such decree was entered, and that the questions involved therein could not be raised on an appeal taken more than six months after that time, but within the six months after a final decree, based upon the referee's report, as to the accounting. Such decree is to be deemed final, although something further is required to be done afterwards: McMurray v. Day, 70—.

607. Ruling on motion for new trial: An appeal taken within six months from the decision of the court on a petition for a new trial, but more than six months from the rendition of the judgment upon the verdict, does not bring up for review the action of the court in rendering such judgment and its proceedings prior thereto, the appeal therefrom being barred: Cohol v. Allen, 37-449; Carpenter v. Brown, 50-451.

608. Where judgment is entered and afterward a motion for new trial is made and overruled, an appeal from the judgment must be taken within six months after the entry thereof, and an appeal from the overruling of the motion for a new trial will not raise any question not involved in the ruling upon such motion: Patterson v. Jack, 59-632.

609. An appeal in an equity case not taken until more than six months after the rendition of judgment, although within six months from the time of the overruling of a motion for a new trial, does not bring up for consideration in the supreme court any of the proceedings of the court prior to the filing of the motion, and therefore does not enable the court to try the case de novo: Bosch v. Bosch, 66-701.

c. Perfecting the appeal; notice; supersedeas bond, etc.

610. Service of notice: To give the supreme court jurisdiction, the service of notice upon appeal is as essential, where there is no voluntary appearance, as is the service of original notice in suits commenced in the lower court: McClellan v. McClellan, 2-312; Lewis v. Miller, 4 G. Gr., 95.

611. Service of notice of appeal upon the adverse party and upon the clerk is necessary to give the supreme court jurisdiction of the cause, and the fact of such service should be stated in the abstract: Phillips v. Follett, 69-39.

612. Appellant can have no relief on appeal as against a judgment in favor of a party not served with notice: Hunt v. Clark, 46-291.

613. Where the notice of appeal was directed to J. M. W. instead of to John M. W., and acceptance of service was made by the attorney of the proper person, held, that the defect was immaterial: Horst v. Wagner, 43-373.

614. The statute providing for service of notice of appeal makes no provision for service by leaving a copy with a member of the party's family, as is authorized in case of service of an original notice, and such a service will not be valid: Draper v. Taylor, 47-407.

615. Service of notice of appeal upon the wife of attorney for appellee is not sufficient. Such notice of appeal can be served only in the manner prescribed by statute: Webster v. Carson, 69-243.

616. Service of notice of appeal may be made by taking a written acknowledgment of service by the person upon whom it is served: Sanzey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68-542.

617. Service of notice of appeal on the deputy clerk, shown by an acceptance of service signed by him with the name of the clerk by himself as deputy, is sufficient notice of appeal: Ibid.

618. Service of notice cannot be made by a party to the action: Draper v. Taylor, 47-407; Marion County v. Stanfield, 8-406.

619. Previous to the enactment of the provisions of Code, § 3214, there was no method authorized for service of notice of appeal by publication: McClellan v. McClellan, 2-312.

620. Filing with clerk: It is not necessary that the notice be filed in the office of the clerk within the time allowed for perfecting the appeal: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23-66.

621. But, upon service of the notice, it should be filed or deposited with the clerk, and it thereupon becomes one of the original papers in the case and a part of the record. It is such a portion of the record as that it may be corrected by proper proceedings in the court in which it is filed, for instance, for the purpose of making it show the correct date of service upon the clerk: Brier v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 66-602.

622. New notice after delay in procuring appeal: Where four years had intervened between the taking of the appeal and the filing of the transcript, held, that the case would not be heard on motion of the appellant without additional notice to appellee, who had made no appearance: Byington v. Robinson, 16-591.

623. Substituted defendant: Where plaintiff appealed from an order substituting a third party in place of the sheriff against whom the action was brought, held, that the appeal might be prosecuted by plaintiff upon the sheriff without notice being served upon the substituted party, the substitution having been made on the joint application of the sheriff and such third party: Sunberg v. Babcock, 61-601.

624. A notice of appeal from a judgment brings up all the objections properly saved on the trial of the cause, including the motion for a new trial: Gullihier v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 59-416.

625. Appearance in the supreme court is a waiver of any irregularity in taking the appeal: Romaine v. Commissioners, Mor., 357.

626. Such appearance is a waiver of notice: Morrow v. Carpenter, 1 G. Gr., 469.

627. Where there is no judgment rendered in the court below from which an appeal may be taken, consent of parties will not give the supreme court jurisdiction: Long v. Long, Mor., 381.

And further to the effect that consent will not confer jurisdiction where the lower court had no jurisdiction, see JURISDICTION.

628. Appearance in the supreme court by filing additional abstract, etc., will not waive objection on account of want of notice, if such appearance is made prior to the expiration of the time during which notice might be served: Brier v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 66-602.

629. Supersedeas bond: An appeal is not perfected by the filing of a supersedeas bond alone, but service of notice of appeal is also necessary, and until such notice is served, at least on the clerk, such officer should not recall an execution or issue an order to stay proceedings thereunder: Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 26-241.

630. An instrument is not a bond unless signed and sealed by the parties making it. In this respect a bond differs from a recognition: Cuddelback v. Parks, 2 G. Gr., 148. (By general statutory provisions, a private seal is no longer necessary to the validity of any instrument: Code, § 2112.)

631. Form: A bond, irregular in form, held sufficient as a statutory appeal bond: Field v. Schricher, 14-119.

Perfecting appeal.

632. In an appeal from the county court to the district court, held, that the bond, although not in strict conformity with the requisites of the statute, contained covenants sufficiently broad to charge the appellant and his sureties with all the costs to accrue from an unsuccessful prosecution of the appeal, and that it was therefore sufficient as a statutory bond: Whitehead v. Thorp, 22-425.

633. Under former statutes, held, that the supreme court had no authority to allow amendments to appeal bonds which were invalid because of a failure to obey the federal stamp law: Hugus v. Strickler, 19-412.

As to amendment of bonds, see BONDS.

634. In what cases bond may be given: An order of discharge in a habeas corpus proceeding cannot be suspended by supersedeas bond pending an appeal: State v. Kirkpatrick, 54-873.

635. Amount of bond: Where, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, a personal judgment for the amount claimed is rendered against defendant, and the lien is declared established upon the property, and the property is ordered sold upon special execution to satisfy the judgment, and it is directed that a general execution issue for any sum remaining unpaid after exhausting said property, the penalty of the appeal bond should be twice the amount of the judgment rendered. The value of property on which the judgment is especially declared a lien cannot be taken into account in fixing the bond: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 62-521.

636. Effect of bond: Where no supersedeas bond is filed, the appeal does not vacate or affect the judgment, and proceedings thereon are not stayed: Phillips v. Germon, 43-101.

637. A supersedeas bond is not essential in perfecting the appeal; it does not secure the clerk's fees for transcript, so as to render unnecessary the payment or securing of the same in order to perfect the appeal: Loomis v. McKenzie, 57-77.

638. The giving of a supersedeas bond does not supersede or render void a delivery bond previously given to secure the release of attached property: Williams v. Robison, 21-496; State v. McGlothlin, 61-312.

639. A supersedeas bond given in an action by a party claiming a public office, and who has been adjudged entitled thereto, does not suspend his right to exercise such office in pursuance of the judgment, and to receive the salary incident thereto; and therefore in an action on such supersedeas bond the sureties are not liable for salary accruing pending the suit: Jayne v. Drorbaugh, 68-711.

640. When an order has been determined to have been correctly made, it is then too late for a party to claim relief because he was not allowed to supersede it: Yetzer v. Martin, 58-612.

641. Liability on the bond: Where, on appeal, judgment as to one party appealing was affirmed, but as to the co-party reversed, held, that the party as to whom it was affirmed and his sureties were liable on their appeal bond: Knight v. Waters, 15-420.

642. Sureties on a supersedeas bond are not discharged by an entry in the supreme court, by consent, of a judgment by the terms of which extension of time of payment and stay of execution are granted. Their relation to the action is not such as gives them control over it, and the party has a right to do whatever the law authorizes in such cases: Drake v. Smythe, 44-410.

643. Where the appeal is simply dismissed, allowing the judgment in the lower court to remain in full force, such dismissal has the effect of affirming the judgment of the court below, and the parties to the supersedeas bond become liable thereon: Coon v. McCormack, 69-589.

644. Where the defense to an action on an appeal bond was that the judgment appealed from was fraudulently obtained by depriving defendant of his day in court, held, that such fact, if true, was no defense to the judgment rendered in the supreme court upon trial de novo, to which defendant appeared and in which he was heard, it not being alleged that such fraud prevented a full and fair trial on appeal: Knight v. Waters, 18-345.

645. The statutory provision that property levied upon shall be released upon the filing of a supersedeas bond, it seems, refers only to personal property: Swift v. Conboy, 12-444.

646. The language of the statute (Code, § 8186) relating to rents and damages which are to be covered by the bond is a specification only as to the conditions of the bond; and if such condition is not contained in the bond, the party executing it cannot in an action thereon be held liable for rents or profits accruing during the appeal: Gill v. Sullivan, 62-529.

647. Fee for transcript: The appeal is not perfected until the fees for transcript are paid or secured, and giving a supersedeas bond cannot be regarded as "securing" such fees; and held, that after service of notice of appeal and filing of supersedeas bond, but before paying or securing costs of transcript, appellant had the right to abandon his appeal, and that the trial court had authority to entertain application by such party for a new trial, and grant it: Loomis v. McKenzie, 57-77.

648. The time within which the appeal is to be perfected by paying or securing the fees for transcript is not fixed. Filing an abstract and having the cause docketed is evidence of good faith, and the cause will not be dismissed for want of transcript. While one must be furnished, if insisted upon by appellee, time will be given to do so, unless appellant or his counsel have had notice that one would be required, and through negligence have failed to furnish it: Fairburn v. Goldsmith, 56-347.

d. Effect of appeal upon pending proceedings.

649. Divests lower court of jurisdiction: An appeal from a final decree in a chancery case deprives the trial court of all further jurisdiction in the case until it is remanded. It cannot make an order retaxing the costs, or amending the record: Levi v. Karrick, 15-444; McGlaughlin v. O'Rourke, 12-459.

650. And this rule applies also in actions at law, when the entire cause is brought to, and pending in the supreme court on appeal: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 30-191; Carmichael v. Vandebur, 51-225.

651. Correction of record: The appeal does not so divest the jurisdiction of the lower court but that it may order a lost record substituted, or correct its record by supplying omissions, and do whatever else is proper to be done to enable the supreme court to review its alleged errors: Steiner v. Steiner, 49-70; Becker v. Becker, 50-139;

State v. Dillard, 52-749; Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 68-55; Mazon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 67-226; Buckwalter v. Craig, 24-215.

652. The court below may settle and sign a bill of exceptions after appeal is taken, if done within the time allowed for that purpose: Tiffany v. Henderson, 57-490.

653. The lower court retains jurisdiction after the taking of the appeal to perfect the record by giving the certificate as to the evidence introduced in an equitable case: Goff v. Hawkeye Pump, etc., Co., 62-691.

654. After the taking of appeal, a motion to amend the record cannot be entertained by the lower court without notice to the opposite party: Eno v. Hunt, 8-436.

Further as to correction of record, see infra, §§ 668-682.

As to proceedings in the lower court after determination of appeal, see infra, VII, f.

e. Record; transcript.

As to what papers, etc., are deemed part of the record by filing, and what must be made part thereof by bill of exceptions, see EXCEPTIONS, §§ 69-92.

655. Matters outside the record cannot be considered: The record of the proceedings in the lower court is the only basis for action in the supreme court. Extrinsic evidence cannot be considered: Bell v. Pierson, Mor., 21.

656. The supreme court has no original jurisdiction and cannot review or correct judgments of the lower court upon motion and affidavits outside of the lower court showing fraud in the procurement of the judgment: Powell v. Spaulding, 3 G. Gr., 417.

657. Even in an equity case, the supreme court cannot hear depositions taken after the trial of the case in the court below and never submitted to such court: Perkins v. Testement, 3 G. Gr., 207.

658. An amended return of service of notice cannot be filed originally in the supreme court: Pilkey v. Gleason, 1-85.

659. The record in the supreme court cannot be changed or explained by affidavits presented for that purpose, nor by the certificate of the clerk of the court below, except so far as such certificate is as to the matters appearing of record in his court: Musgrave v. Brady, Mor., 456.

Record; transcript.

660. Certificate of clerk: A certificate of the clerk as to what evidence was presented in an action tried by ordinary proceedings will not be regarded; such evidence must be made matter of record by being embodied in the bill of exceptions signed by the judge: Jordan v. Quick, 11-9; Garber v. Morrison, 5-476.

661. A paper cannot be made a part of the record by mere certificate of the clerk: State ex rel. v. Jones, 11-11; Harmon v. Chandler, 3-150.

662. The bill of exceptions filed in the trial court, a transcript of which is sent to the supreme court, cannot be contradicted by the certificate of the clerk of the trial court. So held where the bill of exceptions showed a note sued on to be non-negotiable, while the note filed by plaintiff's attorney after the trial of the cause, and certified by the clerk by copy to the supreme court, showed that it was negotiable: Daniels v. Gower, 54-319.

663. The supreme court cannot notice matters certified by the clerk of the lower court which do not appear of record in such court: Killion v. Killion, 9-329.

664. It is not the duty of the clerk to certify or set out the evidence offered, and the supreme court cannot act upon his statements as to what the evidence was. It must be embodied in a bill of exceptions properly certified by the judge: Potter v. Wooster, 10-334.

665. The certificate of the clerk that certain instructions were given and were objected to by appellant, held, not sufficient to raise the question as to their insufficiency: Knight v. Kelley, 10-104.

666. The certificate of the clerk as to what appears of record in his court will not prevail against the recital of the record itself as transmitted by him: Holmes v. Budd, 11-186.

667. Certificate of judge is not competent to contradict the recitals in a bill of exceptions: Pearson v. Maxfield, 47-135; Dedric v. Hopson, 62-562; Conner v. Long, 63-295.

668. Correction of record: Upon suggestion of diminution of the record, a party may have the record in the lower court corrected or amended by proper proceedings therein, and present the record as thus amended to the supreme court by supplemental abstract: Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63-55.

669. Mistake in the record as to date of service of notice of appeal on the clerk may be corrected upon motion in the court in which the notice is filed: Brier v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 66-602.

670. While evidence not offered or relied upon in the court below cannot be considered by the supreme court upon appeal, yet where the record as filed is incomplete, it is competent for the lower court, even after appeal, to order all the evidence submitted at the trial to be certified: Campbell v. Long, 20-882.

671. Where it was made to appear to the court by affidavit that the record was defective, held, that the court might, in the exercise of a sound discretion, remand the case for the purpose of ascertaining and embodying in a proper bill of exceptions the evidence upon which the former trial was had: Tasker v. Marshall, 4-544.

672. The record before the court must be taken as conclusive of the facts recited. If erroneous in any respect, the error should have been corrected by proper proceedings in the court below: Stiles v. Botkin's Estate, 30-60.

673. The record on which the case is to be tried on appeal must be made up in the court below. The supreme court will not, on motion, amend such record, as by inserting a finding of facts alleged to be lost: Dobbins v. Lusch, 53-304.

674. Lost records of the court below cannot be supplied by affidavit in the supreme court: Morris v. Steele, 62-228.

675. The substitution of a lost pleading in the court below is to be made in that court and not in the supreme court: Tomlinson v. Funston, 1 G. Gr., 544.

676. Correction of omissions or mistakes: Appeals are based upon the records of the cause remaining in the court below. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to correct mistakes or supply omissions in such records: Bartle v. Des Moines, 37-635.

677. A motion made in the supreme court, supported by affidavits, to strike out the bill of exceptions as not correctly embodying the evidence, cannot be considered: Hughes v. Stanley, 45-622.

678. Any correction of the record must be made in the court below. The transcript is the authoritative record in the supreme court, and, after being certified, it cannot be impeached by a certificate of the clerk of the court below, or by any extrinsic evidence: Gardner v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68-588.

Record; transcript.

679. Supplying lost records: The written evidence upon which an equity case is tried becomes a part of the record, and if it is lost, it is to be supplied by substitution. Such loss after judgment, and pending appeal, is not ground for a new trial: Loomis v. McKenzie, 48-416.

680. Where, after the taking of an appeal, the papers were lost without appellant's fault, held, that the court below should, on motion, have ordered substitution thereof: Steiner v. Steiner, 49-70.

681. Where a party, while his appeal was pending, filed in the court below a motion to supply his lost notice of appeal, which was done after the hearing of evidence with reference thereto, held, that as the evidence was conflicting, the order would not be disturbed: State v. Dillard, 52-749.

682. Where an additional transcript of a justice of the peace filed in the lower court in a proceeding by writ of error from the judgment of such justice of the peace was not sent to the supreme court with the transcript, but appeared to be lost, held, that the certificate of the judge and clerk were receivable to show that such amended transcript had been filed in the lower court: Coffeen v. Hammond, 3 G. Gr., 241.

Further as to correction or substitution of the record in lower court, see supra, §§ 651-654.

683. Partial record: If appellant presents a partial record which is, however, sufficient to clearly show the ruling appealed from, and it is manifest that the omitted parts could not aid the opposite party, the record will be sufficient to enable the court to pass upon the questions thereby raised: Hall v. Smith, 15-584.

684. A motion to strike evidence from the abstract because not preserved by a bill of exceptions, properly raises the question whether there was a bill of exceptions or not: Morris v. Steele, 62-228.

685. On such a motion the record must speak for itself and can neither be attacked nor supported by affidavits: Ibid.; Moriarty v. Central Iowa R. Co., 64-696.

686. The fact that the evidence is not so certified as to be properly a part of the record may be raised by motion to strike it from the record, but will not be a ground for affirming the judgment, as the record, without the evidence, may show error entitling appellant to reversal: Bracket v. Belknap, 40-704.

687. The supreme court will not strike the evidence from the abstract upon motion, where it is in considerable doubt as to what ought to be done, or where the proper ruling would require a somewhat careful and extended investigation of the abstract; it will either overrule the motion or require it to be submitted with the cause; and where such a motion is overruled, the court does not consider itself precluded from determining upon the submission whether the record is such that the case can properly be considered upon its merits, especially where appellee insists in his argument that it cannot: Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287.

688. Defects in record: An objection that the record on appeal does not properly embody the evidence cannot be supported by affidavit. If the objection does not appear on the face of the record, it may be amended upon suggestion of diminution, or if the record in the court below requires change to make it correspond with the facts, proper steps should be taken to amend it there: Hughes v. Stanley, 45-622.

689. That the entire record is not before the supreme court is not sufficient either to warrant the dismissal of the appeal or to strike from the files what is there. The extent to which a loss of a portion of the record will prejudice the parties will be considered on the final determination of the cause: Mayo v. Temple, 16-585.

690. If it should appear in a law case that the evidence is not all before the supreme court, it would not dismiss the appeal if there were questions which might be determined without all the evidence being before it: Balm v. Nunn, 63-641.

691. If the record is in such condition that the supreme court cannot determine from the pleadings what the issues are, it may remand the cause in order that the parties may have an opportunity to replead: Lyon v. Tevis, 8-79.

692. Evidence must be of record below: A bill of exceptions cannot be considered in the supreme court unless it is embodied in the record certified from the court below: Platner v. Mofford, 1 G. Gr., 476.

693. But if no question is made the court presumes the evidence presented in filing the abstract was properly preserved. If that fact is called in question by a denial, the court will go to the transcript to determine it: Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 60-112.

694. Even if it appears that the transcript contains a paper not properly identified by the bill of exceptions, this fact will not warrant the striking the whole bill of exceptions from the record: Hardy v. Moore, 62-65.

695. Where no steps are taken to strike from the files a portion of the record claimed to have been erroneously certified, it cannot be disregarded on final hearing: Edie v. Applegate, 14-273.

696. Any paper not spread out in full in the bill of exceptions must be referred to thereunder by some unmistakable reference. Depositions, reporter's notes, etc., need not be copied therein in full but should be clearly identified. Where the only identification of the evidence contained in the bill of exceptions was as follows: "here, let the clerk insert all the evidence, rulings, exceptions and objections," held, that what purported to be the evidence in the case should be stricken from the abstract and transcript on motion: Hill v. Holloway, 52-678.

And see further, EXCEPTIONS, §§ 98-120.

697. Although the record purports to contain all the evidence heard before a referee, yet if it does not appear that the evidence was preserved by a bill of exceptions, or a certificate of the referee, or otherwise identified, the court cannot consider that it has the evidence before it: Donovan v. Hayes, 62-36.

698. Where it is made to appear that the bill of exceptions was not presented to the attorney of the opposite party, as required by rule of the lower court, such bill of exceptions should be stricken out on motion in the supreme court: Christenson v. Central Iowa R. Co., 63-703.

699. To secure a review of a law action it is not essential that the evidence and instructions should be certified by the judge. It is sufficient that the evidence is properly made part of the record by bill of exceptions, and the instructions are identified by the bill of exceptions or in other proper manner: Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 60-112.

700. Parties may, by stipulation, agree as to what the evidence was on which the case was tried in the court below, for the purpose of having a trial on appeal upon errors assigned, although the case is equitable: Hutchinson v. Wells, 67-430.

701. Insufficient record: Where the evidence and instructions referred to in the bill of exceptions, and by it made part of the record, are not actually included in the transcript, for the reason that they are not found on file by the clerk, the supreme court cannot pass upon errors in rulings upon the evidence or instructions to the jury, it not appearing that the abstract corrects such defect: Bonney v. Cocke, 61-303.

As to whether instructions, motions, etc., are properly parts of the record, without being embodied in the bill of exceptions, see EXCEPTIONS, §§ 69-92.

702. Transcript of the record: While a bill of exceptions in an action by ordinary proceedings should be brought to the supreme court by copy, and not in its original form, yet an error in this respect only works a continuance to obtain a corrected transcript: Fernow v. Dubuque & S. W. R. Co., 22-528.

703. A bill of exceptions transmitted to the supreme court with the record but not embraced in it, nor certified to by the clerk as being a part of the record, cannot be considered: State v. Leis, 11-416.

704. It will not be a ground for striking the transcript from the files that it appears that it was delivered to the attorney of the party, where it is not shown that it was not afterward forwarded in the manner directed by the statute: Dedric v. Hopson, 62-562.

705. In equity cases: On appeal in a case tried by ordinary proceedings, a transcript should be sent up, but if tried by equitable proceedings upon written testimony, the depositions and papers are to be sent up in their original form: Baldwin v. Tuttle, 23-66.

706. If the original evidence is not certified up in such cases, the same presumption obtains in favor of the correctness of the ruling below as in an action at law: State v. Orwig, 27-528.

707. An objection that papers of record in the court below are certified to the supreme court by copy instead of in their original form should be raised in time to permit the other party to correct the error, if it be one, by filing the original papers. Such an objection not made before the final submission of the case will not be regarded: McDonald v. Farrell, 60-335.

Record; transcript.

708. Inspection of instruments: Where the objection made in the court below to the introduction of a contract in evidence was that its appearance indicated that it had been altered since its execution, and there was no evidence tending in any manner to explain such alteration, held, that the supreme court could not pass upon the sufficiency of such objection, where the appellant had not secured the transmission to the supreme court of the instrument to which the objection was made: Wing v. Stewart, 68-18.

709. Certificate of clerk: It is to be presumed that the papers certified by the clerk as a part of the record in the case were properly filed in such case, although the fact of their authenticity and connection with the transaction does not appear from the papers themselves: Mays v. Deaver, 1-216.

710. The certificate of the clerk to which he attaches loose and detached depositions in their original form, stating that the transcript contains the original depositions in the case, is not sufficient to enable the court to try the case anew: Wetherell v. Goodrich, 22-583.

711. Evidence presented in the record in an equity case, triable de novo, which is in no way certified or identified as that upon which the trial was had in the court below, will be stricken out on motion: Bracket v. Belknap, 41-592.

712. In an equitable action tried on written evidence, it is not necessary that such written evidence be embodied in and preserved by bill of exception, but the certificate of the clerk that it is all sent up is sufficient to enable the supreme court to act upon it: Ticonic Bank v. Harvey, 16-141.

713. A certificate of the clerk that the transcript contains all the evidence "appearing on file" will not be sufficient: Davenport v. Ellis, 22-296; Grant v. Grant, 46-478.

714. The certificate of the clerk that the record contains all the evidence offered in the court below, in a case tried wholly upon depositions and papers on file, is sufficient to enable the supreme court to consider the case on appeal; and the provisions of the amendment to Code, § 2742, requiring a certificate of the judge to be given at the trial term, has no application in such a case: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62.

715. Where the clerk certified as follows: "The depositions accompanying this transcript, marked A, B, C, D, and E, are all of the evidence in such case used on the trial thereof," and the depositions were found thus marked, held, that they were sufficiently identified, in the absence of a suggestion or showing of substitution: Chambers v. Ingham, 25-222.

716. Reporter's notes: In order to make the evidence as taken down by the shorthand reporter a part of the record, it must be transcribed by him, and filed in the court below: Gaylord v. Taft, 53-756; Lowe v. Lowe, 40-220.

717. The reporter's translation of his notes does not become a part of the record unless certified to by him as correct. A certificate of the judge, that the notes referred to in a bill of exceptions contain all the evidence, will not be sufficient: Richards v. Lounesbury, 65-587.

718. Where the judge certifies to a shorthand writer's transcript of the evidence, it is thereby sufficiently made part of the record, although the reporter was not appointed by the court, but acted at the request of one of the parties: Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66-629.

719. If there is a certificate of the judge to the reporter's notes, to the effect that they contain all the evidence introduced or offered in the case, it will be presumed that the statement is true, and that no evidence was afterwards introduced, although the judgment was not rendered until some time subsequent to the making of such certificate: Royer v. Foster, 62-321.

As to how reporter's notes are made part of the record, see EXCEPTIONS, §§ 77-85.

720. Failure to file transcript: The objection that appellant has not filed a transcript must be raised by motion and not after submission upon the argument: Simplot v. Duluque, 49-630.

The failure to file a transcript is a ground for affirmance on motion: See infra, VII, a.

The abstract.

721. An agreed abstract renders a transcript unnecessary: Hampton v. Moorhead, 62-91.

f. The abstract.

722. Form: The fact that what is filed and intended as an abstract is not so entitled or designated will not prevent the court from considering it if its nature is apparent: Noble v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 61-637.

723. Should contain what: It is not proper to set out in the abstract the entire testimony of witnesses, by question and answer, without excluding matter that is immaterial: Vaughn v. Smith, 58-553; Tootle v. Taylor, 64-629.

724. Nor should writs, services, and other writings not material to the case, be set out: Tootle v. Taylor, 64-629.

725. The abstract should show the fact of service of notice of appeal upon the opposite party and upon the clerk of the court, in order to show that the court has acquired jurisdiction of the case: Phillips v. Follett, 69-39.

726. Costs of improper abstract: Where the evidence as contained in the abstract was not abridged as required by the rules of the court, held, that appellant, although successful, should not be allowed the full cost of making the same: Chandler v. Fremont County, 42-58; Macomber v. Peck, 39-351; Martin v. Cole, 38-699; York v. Clemens, 41-95.

727. Where the party makes unnecessary costs in preparing the abstract by printing questions and answers in full, remarks of counsel, etc., and other matters not properly part of the record, such costs will not be taxed up in his favor: Byerlee v. Mendel, 39-383; Dye v. Young, 55-433; Poole v. Hintrager, 60-190; Donahue v. McCosh, 70—.

728. Costs of additional abstract: Where the court were satisfied that an abstract was not prepared in bad faith, or for the purpose of throwing the burden of preparing an additional abstract upon the opposite party, and that it fairly presented the questions to be determined, held, that the costs of an additional or amended abstract prepared by appellee should not be taxed to appellant: Brown v. Byam, 59-52.

729. Transcript may be unnecessary; reporter's notes: Where the abstract of appellant is satisfactory to the opposite party, there is no necessity for the clerk's transcript, nor for the transcript of the reporter's notes which have been properly filed in the original form in the court below. The appellant may make out his abstract from whatever source he sees fit: Hampton v. Moorhead, 62-91.

730. If the abstract is not controverted by appellee, the court will not look into the transcript of the original evidence, nor will it refuse to try the case simply because such transcript is not filed: Austin v. Bremer County, 44-155.

731. An agreed abstract; amendment: If an agreed abstract is presented, the case will be heard on that, and no amendment presented by one of the parties will be considered: Holmes v. Lucas County, 53-211.

732. What waived by agreed abstract: The agreement of the parties that a cause may be heard upon the abstract will not operate to waive statutory requirements as to appeal: Lewis v. Pearson, 50-702.

733. Stipulations waiving the transcript and providing that the case should be tried on an amended abstract of the parties, held not to waive the objection that the abstract did not appear to contain all the evidence, and that the court could not, therefore, try the case anew: Allen v. Hull, 56-767.

734. Case determined upon abstract: The supreme court does not look beyond the abstract where a case has been argued and submitted with an apparent understanding that such abstract contains all that is material to its determination: Montgomery County v. American Emigrant Co., 47-91.

735. Unless there is a disagreement in the abstracts, the supreme court does not examine the transcript, and the abstracts constitute the record. Where a certificate of the judge is necessary to entitle the party to appeal, it should be set out in the abstract: Barnes v. Independent Dist., 51-700.

736. The supreme court will not, as a general rule, look into the transcript except for the purpose of determining the correctness of the abstract, where that is disputed in the manner required by the rules of court, and will not consider objections not appearing on the abstract. (But this rule was not adhered to in this case, it being a criminal case): State v. Smouse, 49-634.

The abstract.

737. How correctness of abstract questioned: The correctness of the statements of the abstract cannot be impeached by a mere statement in argument: Van Winkle v. Iowa Iron, etc., Fence Co., 56-245; Rankin v. Miller, 43-11.

738. Where the abstract, although failing to show that a bill of exceptions was filed in the court below, contains matter which it could not properly contain unless made of record, the court will regard the appellant as claiming that it was made of record, and a direct statement to that effect will not be necessary. If the appellee desires to claim that no bill of exceptions was filed he must do so in an additional abstract: Thompson v. Silvers, 59-670.

739. Where the abstract filed by appellant purports to be an abstract of all the evidence, it will be assumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the evidence set out therein was properly made of record. If the opposite party wishes to claim that the evidence was not made of record, he should file an additional abstract so stating, and the statement of such additional abstract will be assumed to be true if not denied: State v. Tucker, 68-50.

740. Where appellant's abstract stated the taking of an exception, which was not denied in the amended abstract, held, that the court would consider that the exception properly appeared in the record: Palmer v. Rogers, 70—.

741. An abstract cannot be impeached or contradicted by a certificate of the clerk of the court below: White v. Savery, 49-197.

742. Nor can it be altered or changed by affidavit or certificate of the judge: Pearson v. Maxfield, 47-135.

743. A so-called amended abstract, setting out affidavits showing the judgment to be different from that contained in the abstract, will not be considered: Holmes v. Lucas County, 53-211.

744. Where an abstract purports to contain a copy of a paper which is part of the record, it is not necessary for it to state that what it sets out is the whole paper, but it will be presumed to be so unless the contrary is shown: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-359.

745. In the absence of a conflict of abstracts the court treats the abstract as the record in the case, and if it is not sufficiently intelligible to show the rulings made, the court acts upon the presumption that there is no error: Eldredge v. Bell, 64-125.

746. Motion to strike evidence from abstract: If the abstract sets forth evidence not made of record, the appellee may, on motion, have such evidence stricken therefrom: Mudge v. Agnew, 56-297.

747. If no question is made as to the filing of the bill of exceptions, the court presumes that the evidence has been properly preserved. If the appellee states in his abstract that no proper bill of exceptions has been filed, and moves to strike out the evidence on that ground, the court does not take the statement as true, but refers to the transcript for a determination: Wilson v. First Presbyterian Church, 60-112.

748. A statement in appellee's abstract that no exceptions were taken as set out in the appellant's abstract will be deemed true if not denied or avoided by appellant. Armstrong v. Nillen, 70—.

And see further, supra, §§ 684-687.

749. Court will not look beyond abstract: Where the evidence in a case was stricken from the abstract and the transcript as not being properly embodied therein, and leave was given to perfect the record, and a perfect transcript was filed, but no new abstract, held, that the court could only consider the original abstract with the evidence stricken therefrom: Weider v. Overton, 47-533.

750. Matter must be of record: The court cannot take the abstractor's statement of a fact where there is no claim that the fact appears from the record: Dickerman v. Lubiens, 70—; Anderson v. Leaverich, 70—.

751. Abstract of all the evidence: The court will not, against the objection of appellee, review a finding of facts made by a court, jury, or referee, unless the abstract purports to contain all the evidence introduced on the trial below: Andrews v. Kerr, 49-680; Price v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 42-16; Rice v. Plymouth County, 53-635; Walker v. Plummer, 41-697.

752. Where a review of the findings of a jury on the evidence is sought, the abstract should contain the statement that it contains all the evidence: Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72; Andreus v. Kerr, 49-680.

753. It is not sufficient that it appear that all the evidence is in the bill of exceptions: Rice v. Plymouth County, 53-635.

754. The fact that the abstract purports to contain "the evidence" is not sufficient to enable the court to presume that it has all the evidence before it. Such expression is not equivalent to "all the evidence:" Parsons v. Parsons, 66-754.

755. Where an abstract fails to state that all the evidence is before the supreme court, that court will not review the findings of the court below on a question of fact: Van Riper v. Baker, 44-450; Commercial Bank v. King, 47-64.

756. A statement in the abstract that it contains all the evidence will not enable the court to determine whether the judgment is against the evidence, if it does not appear by agreement of parties or certificate of the judge that all the evidence is in the record: Wormley v. District T'p, 45-666.

757. Where the abstract does not purport to be an abstract of all the evidence, an objection that the damages are excessive cannot be considered: Brant v. Lyons, 60-172.

758. Where the abstract shows that it does not contain all the evidence, the case will not be reversed if there might have been evidence supporting the judgment: Enix v. Miller, 54-531.

759. In a particular case, held, that the abstract did not show error, nor show the evidence upon which the allegation of error in the decision of the court below was based, and therefore that the judgment must be affirmed: Holwig v. Rowler, 50-96.

In cases triable de novo: That the abstract must state that it contains all the evidence in order that an equity case may be triable de novo, see infra, §§ 1046-1052.

760. What sufficient to show that the abstract contains all the evidence: The statement in the abstract to show that all the evidence is comprehended therein is sufficient, if the opposite party and the court are fairly apprised that the appellant claims that he has presented an abstract of all the evidence, and in such cases the court will presume that he has, unless appellee sets out additional evidence: Miller v. Wolf, 63-233.

761. In regard to the statement that the abstract contains all the evidence it will not be examined quite as critically as the certificate of the judge to the effect that the evidence offered as well as that introduced was made of record: Ibid.

762. Where an abstract contains a statement that it is an abstract of all the evidence, it is assumed, not only that this statement is true, but that the evidence was made of record by due certification, unless it is made to appear to the contrary; but where the certificate relied upon is set out, and appears to be insufficient, that presumption will not be entertained: Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287.

763. Where the abstract stated that "the foregoing evidence is by the court duly certified to be all the evidence offered by either party on the trial of this cause," held, that it would be presumed that the evidence had properly been made of record by a bill of exceptions: Macleod v. Geyer, 53-615.

764. A recital in the abstract that it was an abstract of all the evidence, and that within a proper time a bill of exceptions was filed embracing in the record the testimony set out, held sufficient to show that the evidence was before the court on appeal: Deere v. Needles, 65-101.

765. Where the abstract purported to contain all the evidence, and recited that the evidence was taken down in writing by order of the court, and made a part of the record, held, that there was sufficient to entitle appellant to a trial de novo: Stoddard v. Hardwick, 46-160.

766. Where depositions were referred to in the certificate of the judge as being marked by certain letters, and the abstract did not identify the depositions and documents printed therein as being referred to in the certificate, but it was alleged in an amended abstract, filed by appellant, that all the evidence offered, introduced or used in the trial was set out in the original and amended abstracts, which allegation was not denied, held, that the court could presume that it had all the evidence before it: Paine v. Means, 65-547.

767. Where the abstract stated that a party filed a garnishee's answer "as follows; omitting formal parts," no issue appearing to have been joined thereon, and therefore no evidence having been admissible, held, that this statement was sufficient to show that all the evidence on which the court acted in ruling upon a motion for judgment on the garnishee's answer appeared to be presented: Van Winkle v. Iowa Iron, etc., Fence Co., 56-245.

768. Where by the language of the abstract the opposite party and the court are fairly apprised that appellant claims that he has presented all the evidence, it will be assumed that he has done so unless the appellee sets out additional evidence in an amended abstract: Miller v. Wolf, 63-233.

769. Where a certificate of the judge that the record contains all the evidence is essential on appeal, if the abstract sets out the fact that the certificate was made on the date thereof, it is not necessary that such certificate be set out in the abstract: Yant v. Harvey, 55-421.

770. In a particular case, held, that appellant's abstract sufficiently purported to contain an abstract of all the evidence: Higgins v. Mendenhall, 51-135.

771. Must purport to contain all the evidence: An abstract which states that all the evidence in the case was reported and certified to by the reporter of the court, and duly certified by the court as being all the evidence offered in said trial, will not be sufficient to enable the court to try the case de novo if it fails to state that it (the abstract) contains all the evidence, that is, an abstract of all the evidence upon which the case was tried: Cassady v. Spofford, 57-237; Ward v. Snook, 61-610; Hall v. Harris, 61-500; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Findley, 59-591; Ohrt v. Ober, 51-540; Conwell v. House, 57-754.

772. If a party wishes to make it appear that his abstract is an abstract of all the evidence, that fact should be specifically stated in the abstract. It is not sufficient to set out in the abstract the certificate of the judge, or clerk, or reporter, showing that the evidence is all made of record in the lower court: Porter v. Stone, 62-442; Wisconsin I. & N. R. Co. v. Secor, 70—; Fulliam v. Muscatine, 70—; Woodrum v. Carraher, 69-145; Hasner v. Patterson, 70—.

773. While the abstract should purport to contain all the evidence it is not usually necessary nor desirable that it should, in fact, contain all the evidence: Huff v. Farwell, 67-298.

774. "Substantially," not sufficient: An abstract stating that "the testimony was taken on written deposition, and was essentially as follows," is not sufficient to show that the abstract contains all the evidence: Britt v. Case, 58-757.

775. The language of the record may be abbreviated in an abstract, but it is not proper for counsel to determine what are the facts established, or what is the effect of the evidence, or to substitute what they may consider as substantially the same: Blohm v. Sweeney, 66-604.

776. A statement in an abstract that it contains "all the evidence bearing upon or introduced to sustain the issues and findings as to which plaintiff appealed," held, not sufficient: Roe v. Wilmot, 51-689.

777. Setting out instructions: Where an abstract does not purport to set out the instructions, or any of them, in full, but simply sets forth parts of sentences of various instructions claimed to be erroneous, the court cannot pass upon their correctness: State v. Nichols, 38-110.

778. Where the abstract does not contain all the instructions given, alleged error in refusing an instruction cannot be considered: State v. Williamson, 68-351.

779. Abstract deemed true: The abstract filed by appellant, in the absence of an additional abstract, constitutes the record and is regarded as a verity. It takes the place of the transcript, and cannot be impeached or contradicted in any other manner or to any greater extent than the transcript could be: White v. Savery, 49-197.

780. If appellant's abstract is not denied by appellee, and shown to be untrue by an amended abstract, it will be assumed to be true: Ibid.; Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72; Hardy v. Moore, 62-65.

781. If appellee files an amended abstract, which is not denied, it will be assumed to be true: Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72.

782. If appellee's amended abstract is denied by another abstract filed by appellant, then the court will look into the transcript and determine its character: White v. Savery, 49-197.

783. In the absence of an amended ab-abstract denying the statements contained in appellant's abstract, the latter is deemed to be true, notwithstanding such a denial is made in the argument of counsel: Farmer v. Sasseen, 63-110; Weaver v. Kintzley, 58-191; Kendrick v. Eggleston, 56-128.

784. Where appellee discusses questions raised upon the instructions without objecting or suggesting that they are not truly set out in the abstract, his denial in the amended abstract, that the instructions given and refused are not properly set out, will not be considered: Roberts v. Leon Loan, etc., Co., 63-76.

785. Where the abstract on its face appears to be full and complete, the statement that it contains all the evidence cannot be overcome by a mere denial by appellee, so as to require an examination of the abstract, but he must set forth the omitted evidence: Andracs v. Kerr, 49-680; Allen v. Bryson, 67-591; Mielenz v. Quasdorf, 68-726.

786. The statement in appellant's abstract, that it contains all the evidence, will be presumed true, unless appellee files an amended abstract supplying the deficiency: Aller v. Pennell, 51-537; Huff v. Furvell, 67-298.

787. The party filing an additional abstract purporting to supply defects and omissions in the original abstract, thereby admits that the two abstracts together contain all the evidence given on the trial: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-520; Wilson v. Palo Alto County, 65-18.

788. Thus, where appellant's abstract purported to contain all the evidence, and appellee filed an additional abstract denying that fact, and denying that the evidence was properly abstracted, held, that appellant's abstract would be deemed correct, notwithstanding the denial, the appellee's abstract not showing wherein appellant's abstract was insufficient or incorrect: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62.

789. If an abstract states that it contains all the evidence, but an amended abstract is filed by appellee giving additional evidence, without claiming that, as thus corrected, the abstract does not give all the evidence, it will be presumed that the abstracts together bring all the evidence before the court: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 51-683.

790. Even if appellant's abstract contains no averment that all the evidence is found therein, if appellee files an amended abstract setting out evidence alleged to have been omitted from the original, without any statement or claim that the two abstracts together do not contain all the evidence, appellee cannot afterwards urge that the evidence is not all before the court: Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60-424; Starr v. Burlington, 45-87; Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220; Cummings v. Browne, 61-385; Balm v. Nunn, 63-641.

791. In such case, a claim by appellee that the evidence is not all before the court will not be considered, if not made until the argument: O'Brien v. Harrison, 59-686.

792. If appellant's abstract purports to contain all the evidence, the appellee must supply what he claims has been omitted: McArthur v. Linderman, 62-807.

793. Where the abstract of appellant does not purport to contain all the evidence, the appellee may set forth in his amended abstract other portions, coupled with the denial that with these additions the abstracts contain all the evidence, and will not be estopped from relying upon such statement in denial: Cartwright v. Copest, 60-195; Hall v. Harris, 61-500; Howe v. Jones, 66-156; Hassett v. Hassett, 66-304.

794. The appellee may, by an additional abstract, undertake to supply deficiencies in the appellee's abstract without thereby precluding himself from objecting that the evidence is not properly certified: Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287.

795. And if such objection is made it will be deemed true, unless appellant shows by an amended abstract that the evidence was properly certified: Roby v. Hall, 57-213.

796. Such statement, that the abstracts together do not present all the evidence, will be deemed true, unless denied by appellant: Love v. Donaldson, 63-631.

797. If an abstract is not denied by the appellee in an amended abstract, the record set out will be taken to be correct, as, for instance, it will be assumed that a bill of exceptions was filed. But if such facts are denied in an amended abstract, the denial will be taken to be true, in the absence of a transcript: Brainard v. Simmons, 58-464.

798. Unless an additional or amended abstract be denied it will be regarded as pre-sending the record correctly, and will prevail against the original abstract: Hart v. Jackson, 57-75; Ham v. Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co., 61-716; Lucas v. Jones, 44-298; Daniels v. Langdon, 52-741; Cole v. Coskery, 63-526; Maxwell v. La Brune, 68-689.

799. And this is true even though it seeks to eliminate something from appellant's abstract: Richardson v. Hoyt, 60-68; Burkhart v. Ball, 59-629; Kearney v. Ferguson, 50-72.

800. Service and filing of amended abstract: Where an amended abstract is served thirty days before the cause is submitted, it will not be stricken from the files because not served within the time required by the rules, where no prejudice could have resulted from the delay: Green v. Ronen, 62-89.

801. Where appellee's amended abstract was served twenty days before the case was submitted, and the motion to strike involved nothing but the cost of printing, held, that appellant sustained no prejudice from the delay in service and the abstract could not be stricken from the files: Davidson v. Carter, 55-117.

802. Where an additional abstract, filed after the filing of appellee's argument, was filed three months before the cause was submitted, and appellee had opportunity to examine it and correct any misstatements or error contained in it, and filed an additional argument based, in part, upon the record as made by the additional abstract, held, that such additional abstract might be considered: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

803. The fact that an amended abstract is filed without leave or notice is not ground for striking it from the files: Frost v. Parker, 65-178.

804. An amendment to appellant's abstract, rendered necessary by reason of a motion in the court below after the record was made up and the appeal taken, should not be stricken from the files because not served upon appellee: Peterson v. Adamson, 67-739.

805. It is not unusual to allow a party to file an amended abstract when he discovers his case is not fully presented in the original abstract. This should be done, however, before the case is submitted and at such a time as that the other party will not be prejudiced thereby: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-520.

806. Where a motion was submitted with the case asking the court to strike from the files an amended abstract and argument of the opposite party because not filed within the time agreed upon between the parties, held, that while the motion would be overruled, no costs would be taxed to the unsuccessful party for printing such abstract and argument: Keegan v. Malone's Estate, 62-208.

807. Appellant cannot, after the appellee has argued his case, amend his abstract without leave of court and thus substantially change the record upon which the case is submitted. If leave to amend is asked, it may be granted upon such terms as seem proper under the circumstances, but an amendment filed without leave after the filing of appellee's argument will be stricken out on motion: In re Caywood's Will, 56-301.

808. Appellant cannot file an additional abstract with his argument in reply except to controvert the correctness of appellee's additional abstract: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51-25.

809. Under some circumstances, doubtless, a submission may be set aside and the case would then be open for proper changes in the record, but an amended abstract filed after the case is submitted, without the submission being set aside, will not be considered: Fletcher v. Terrell, 50-267; Rogers v. Carman, 54-715.

810. An application by appellant to amend his abstract after the case is submitted, which application is not accompanied by a motion to set aside the submission, cannot be allowed: State v. Hamilton, 57-596.

g. Assignment of errors.

811. Necessary in a law case: In a law action an assignment of errors is absolutely essential to the consideration of the case on appeal, and it is immaterial that but one point is relied upon, and that this is apparent from the record and argument: Barnhart v. Farr, 55-366.

812. The court cannot consider objections not made in the assignment of error: Wood v. Whitton, 66-295.

Assignment of errors.

813. An objection not made in the assignment, but first raised in the argument, will not be considered: Roberts v. Cass, 27-225.

814. Not necessary in equity: In an equitable action triable de novo on appeal, an assignment of errors is not necessary: Hackworth v. Zollars, 30-433; Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

815. Where judgment is entered below on the admissions and allegations of the pleadings in an equity case, the cause on appeal is triable de novo on such allegations and admissions, and an assignment of errors is not necessary: Early v. Burt, 68-716.

816. On appeal from ruling on motion or demurrer: When an appeal is taken in an equity case from a ruling upon motion or demurrer, error must be assigned: Powers v. O'Brien County, 54-501; Patterson v. Jack, 59-632.

817. Trial of equitable actions upon assignment of errors: Where an equity case is not in proper form for trial de novo, it may be heard like an action at law on assignment of errors properly preserved by exceptions: Schmeltz v. Schmeltz, 52-512; Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 51-683; Jordan v. Wimer, 45-65; Lutz v. Kelly 47-307; Lynch v. Lynch, 28-326; Jones v. Clark, 37-586; Mallory v. Luscombe, 31-269.

818. Record must show error assigned: Where the record does not show that the ruling complained of in the assignment of errors was in fact made, such question cannot be considered: Borland v. McNally, 48-440.

819. What the assignment should show: An assignment of errors should plainly state the error complained of and not merely refer to the parts of the record wherein the objection complained of is said to appear: Wood v. Whitton, 66-295.

820. Assignments held insufficient: An assignment "that the court erred in its action in regard to the jury," held too indefinite: Hannon v. Chandler, 3-150.

821. An assignment that there was error in allowing the introduction of evidence objected to by plaintiff, and that the court erred in finding for defendant, held too indefinite: Garrett v. Wells, 63-256.

822. An assignment that "the court erred in overruling the defendant's exceptions to the report of the referee and entering judgment against defendant," held not sufficiently specific: Hoefer v. Burlington, 59-281.

823. An assignment that "the court erred in rendering judgment for appellee" is not sufficiently specific: Tomblin v. Ball, 46-190.

824. The assignment that a verdict is contrary to the law as given by the court is too general: Wood v. Hallowell, 68-377.

825. Assignments that "the court erred in admitting improper and rejecting proper testimony," and that "the court erred in admitting certain evidence of the defendant against plaintiff's objection," held not sufficiently specific: Merchants' Union Barbed Wire Co. v. Rice, 70—.

826. Assignments of error that the verdict is contrary to law, and that the court erred in admitting testimony on the trial, and that the court erred in excluding testimony on the trial, and that the court erred in overruling defendant's motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial, are not sufficiently specific: Armstrong v. Nillen, 70—.

827. Assignments held not sufficiently specific in the following cases: Haves v. Twogood, 12-582; Wilson v. Hillhouse, 14-199; Morris v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 45-29; Oschner v. Schunk, 46-293; Bardwell v. Clare, 47-297; McCormick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47-345; Nockles v. Eggspieler, 47-400; Moffatt v. Fisher, 47-473; Benton v. Nichols, 47-698; Betts v. Glenwood, 52-124; Black v. Boyd, 52-719; Brown v. Rose, 55-734; Wilson v. Klokenteger, 56-764; Low v. Fox, 56-221; Vanderberg v. Camp, 68-212.

828. Errors in instructions: Unless the particular points claimed to be erroneous in instructions are specifically designated, an assignment of error thereon will not be regarded: Peck v. Hendershott, 14-40; Brewington v. Patton, 1-121.

829. An assignment of error in giving certain instructions, in refusing certain others, and in modifying certain others, specifying them in each case, held sufficiently specific: Sherwood v. Snow, 46-481.

830. An assignment of errors in giving instructions, designating them by number, as "in instructing the jury that," stating in substance a brief proposition of law, held sufficient: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58-195.

831. An assignment of errors stating that "the court erred in giving on its own motion each of the instructions numbered," setting out the numbers of the instructions objected to, is sufficiently specific: Clark v. Ralls, 50-275.

Assignment of errors.

832. The assignment that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions mentioned by number, and each one thereof, and in giving others mentioned by number, and in giving each thereof, is sufficiently specific: Wood v. Whitton, 66-295; Hammer v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 70—.

833. Where several instructions present but a single proposition, the assignment that the court erred in refusing to give them and each of them specifically, points out the error objected to: Hathaway v. State Ins. Co., 64-229.

834. An assignment based upon instructions generally, without pointing out specific portions claimed to be erroneous, is not sufficient: Peck v. Hendershott, 14-40.

835. Where the assignment indicates clearly the instructions asked and refused, and that the court erred in refusing them, such assignment is sufficient without pointing out the particular objection relied upon: Schaefer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62-624.

836. Error in ruling on motion: Where a motion is made upon a statutory ground, and the overruling of the motion is assigned as error, such assignment will be sufficiently specific although the motion has specified more than one thing as constituting the irregularity complained of in the motion: Thomas v. Hoffman, 62-125.

837. Assignment of error in the overruling of a motion to dismiss, which motion was based on a single ground, held sufficiently specific: Nichols v. Wood, 66-225.

838. Error in ruling on motion for a new trial: A general assignment of error in overruling a motion for a new trial will not bring before the court the question whether the verdict finds sufficient support in the evidence, where that is only one of several grounds relied upon in the motion: Leekins v. Nordyke, etc., Co., 66-471.

839. A general assignment of error in overruling motion for new trial, when such motion was based on several different grounds, is not sufficiently specific: Reilly v. Ringland, 44-422; Richardson v. McCormick, 47-80; Stevens v. Brown, 60-403; Marsel v. Bowman, 62-57; Terry v. Taylor, 64-35; McCormick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47-345; Oschner v. Schunk, 46-293; Foley v. Kirkland, 66-227; Hasner v. Patterson, 70—.

840. An assignment of errors in overruling a motion for a new trial, where no specific grounds of error are pointed out, is not sufficient: Morris v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 45-29.

841. Where the error assigned was that the court erred in overruling the first, second and third grounds of defendant's motion for a new trial, and it appeared that the grounds referred to, while stated in three different ways, amounted to the same thing and embraced a single proposition, held, that the assignment was sufficient: Kitterman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69-440.

842. Error in ruling on demurrers: An assignment of error in the ruling of the court sustaining the several demurrers of different defendants, is not sufficiently specific: Bradley v. Johnson, 67-614.

843. Error in judgment: An assignment that the court erred in rendering judgment against the party who appeals could be valid only where the court below had rendered its decision in writing, stating the facts found and the conclusions of law thereon, or where the case had been tried by the court and the evidence was all brought up by a bill of exceptions: Dean v. White, 5-266.

844. Service and filing of assignment of errors: If the assignment of errors is filed at the time required, it cannot be stricken from the files, although not served or filed until appellee's argument is filed: Conner v. Long, 63-295.

845. Appeal will be dismissed if assignment of errors is not served in time. It seems that, if properly served on the appellee, he could not complain of the mere non-filing of the same with the clerk: Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 48-206.

846. An assignment of errors presented by appellant in connection with his reply to appellee's argument will not be considered: Betts v. Glenwood, 52-124.

847. An assignment of errors not filed within ten days before the first day of the term and not until appellant's argument is filed cannot be considered: Russell v. Johnston, 67-279.

848. Objection for want of assignment must be made prior to the final trial and submission or it will be deemed waived, although the court may, notwithstanding such waiver, require an assignment: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714.

849. An amended assignment, filed more than ten days before the term at which the cause is submitted, and duly served, will be considered: Kendig v. Overhulser, 58-195.

850. An amended assignment of errors which is not in time for the term to which the case was appealed, but was in time for a subsequent term to which the case was continued and at which it was tried, held to be filed in sufficient time: Brown v. Rose, 55-734.

851. Assignment made at end of appellant's argument, and not objected to by appellee until after the filing of his argument and within two days of the submission of the case, held sufficient: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57-307.

852. Assignments not argued: Assignments of error which are not discussed or insisted upon in argument will not be considered: Clise v. Freeborn, 29-110; Soward v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 30-551; Snyder v. Eldridge, 31-129; Hows v. Fostenson, 31-600; Abbott v. Board of Supervisors, 36-854; Cook v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 37-426; Hale v. Gibbs, 43-380; Huiras v. Berkeley, 51-701; Betts v. Glenwood, 52-124; Hepmon v. Dubuque, 52-713; Rice v. Plymouth County, 53-635; Smith v. Hickenbottom, 57-783; Clark v. Epworth, 61-750; Beeson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 62-173; Wood v. Whitton, 66-295; Wood v. Hollowell, 68-377.

853. The supreme court will not consider assignments of error not argued by counsel, even though they are stated in his argument: Manning v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-240; Patterson v. Seaton, 70 —.

854. An objection which is merely referred to in such way as might be sufficient as an assignment of errors, but is not argued, will not be considered: Goodnow v. Wells, 67-654.

855. Where the only argument made in support of an error assigned is a mere re-statement of the assignment, it will not be considered. If counsel are unable or unwilling to suggest cogent reasons in support of an alleged error, the court will not assume that duty: Marker v. Dunn, 68-720.

856. Where no reasons are given in support of an assignment, it will not be considered by the court: Parsons v. Parsons, 66-754.

857. Errors assigned but not referred to in the opening argument are deemed waived and cannot be referred to for the first time in appellant's reply: Renwick v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co., 49-664.

858. Where the assignments are referred to, and the general theory of the case is argued as inconsistent with the instructions given, and calling for the instructions refused, which giving or refusing is assigned as error, the assignment will not be deemed waived, although the instructions are not specifically discussed: Clark v. Ralls, 50-275.

h. Arguments.

859. Failure of appellant to file argument or brief will be considered an abandonment of the appeal: Mores v. Hanchett, 54-747; Dinning v. Bement, 54-156; Cline v. Phipps, 62-759; Lamp v. Sievers, 66-85.

860. In such case the decision of the lower court will be affirmed: Devore v. Adams, 68-385.

861. Although in an equity case the opening and closing on appeal may fall upon appellee, yet the failure of appellee to file an opening argument will not warrant the appellant in failing to file any argument whatever. If he does so, his appeal will be regarded as abandoned: Scott v. Neises, 61-62.

As to opening and closing in equity cases triable de novo, see infra, §§ 1082, 1083.

862. The supreme court will never decide questions which are not argued upon both sides, except when there exists an absolute necessity for their decision: McKern v. Albia, 69-447.

863. And the court will stop the consideration of a case not argued by appellee, upon reaching the conclusion that it ought to be reversed on any one ground: Deeds v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-164; Gilfeather v. Council Bluffs, 69-310.

864. Erroneous reasoning assigned as the ground of objection to action of the lower court will not prevent the court from considering a valid objection properly made in the lower court: Gilman v. Donovan, 59-76.

865. Filing of argument: An argument will not be stricken out on motion because not filed in time: Bartle v. Des Moines, 87-685.

866. But if the court is asked to do so, it will tax the costs to the party filing the argument after the proper time, unless the failure to file within the time prescribed by the rules has been reasonably excused: Renwick v. Bancroft, 59-116; Smith v. McFadden, 56-482.

867. While not striking the argument from the files because not filed in time, the court will, in a proper case, inflict penalties, or continue the case when asked to do so: Cox v. Forrest City & S. R. Co., 66-289.

868. Especially will the argument not be stricken from the files because not filed in time, where the party moving to strike does not desire to file any argument on his part: Kellam v. McAlpine, 63-251.

869. Arguments filed with the clerk after the case is submitted are, by order of the court, not sent to the justices: Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 56-520.

870. An argument improperly filed, as where appellee has improperly filed the opening argument, may be stricken from the files, but will not entitle the opposite party to judgment for costs: Devore v. Adams, 68-385.

871. Service of argument: Where a cause is submitted in a regular manner it will not be remanded upon the mere statement of opposing counsel in a petition for rehearing, that the argument was not properly served: Hall v. Harris, 61-500.

872. Where cases are argued together in the supreme court, in an oral argument, the court will look at the printed arguments in the cases to determine what portion of the oral argument was intended to be applicable to each, and a point raised in the oral argument will not be considered in a case the brief of which does not raise such point: Iowa Homestead Co. v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co., 63-285.

873. Taxation of costs: Where an argument contained numerous misleading errors, evidently due to want of time or negligence in reading the proof, held, that the costs thereof could not be taxed with the costs in the case: Fair v. Brown, 40-209.

874. References to abstract: It is improper in a printed argument to refer to matters contained in the abstract without giving the page of the abstract where such matters may be found: Herriott v. Kersey, 69-111.

875. Improper argument: It is improper for an attorney in argument to make a statement of facts outside of the record impeaching the judicial conduct of the judge before whom the case is tried: Paine v. Frost, 67-282.

876. Improper remarks by counsel in printed argument adverted to and criticised: Sax v. Drake, 69-760.

877. On motion of appellant, a portion of appellee's argument was stricken out on account of its abusive character: Cassidy v. Palo Alto County, 58-125.

VII. HEARING AND DETERMINING OF THE APPEAL.

a. Dismissal or affirmance on motion.

878. For failure to file transcript or abstract: In the absence of the certificate of the clerk below, excusing the failure to file a transcript on the ground that he has not had sufficient time to prepare it, the appellee may, by filing a certified transcript of the judgment, have the judgment affirmed on motion. The statutory provision to this effect is not merely directory, but must be complied with to entitle a party to be heard in the supreme court, unless waived by agreement or act of the appellee: Turner v. Hine, 37-500.

879. The provision of the rules of the court for affirmance on motion for failure of the appellant to file a printed abstract does not supersede the provision of the statute authorizing an affirmance on motion for failure to file the transcript with the clerk, but in the latter case appellee, to be entitled to an affirmance, must file a certified copy of the judgment as a basis of the court's action, which is not required where the failure is merely to file the printed abstract: Hunger v. Patterson, 37-501.

880. Appellee can only have the appeal dismissed or the judgment affirmed when notice of appeal has been served the proper length of time before the term; but a showing that the clerk was served in time will be sufficient to authorize an affirmance on motion for failure to file the transcript, without a showing that the party also was served: Pratt v. Western Stage Co., 26-241.

881. By subsequent statutory provision to that above referred to, the appeal is not to be dismissed or the judgment affirmed on account of failure to docket or file transcript, if it appears that the appeal was taken in good faith and not for delay, and an affirmance, where bad faith does not appear, will beset aside: Engleken v. Schultz, 40-708.

882. If appellee, upon being served with the abstract, or within a reasonable time thereafter, does not indicate to appellant that he desires a transcript, but insists thereon at the term at which the cause is to be submitted by filing a motion to dismiss or affirm, time will be given to procure a transcript, and if necessary a continuance for that purpose will be granted: White v. Savery, 49-197.

883. The court will not dismiss the appeal on motion for failure to file a transcript, but order the transcript to be filed and continue the case until it can be done: Manson v. Ware, 63-345; Aldrich v. Price, 57-151.

884. Failure to file a transcript can only be taken advantage of by motion to dismiss the appeal or affirm the judgment, and cannot be urged on final hearing: Holmes v. Hull, 48-177.

885. Setting aside affirmance: A judgment of affirmance may be set aside upon a proper showing such as to authorize such action: Scarf v. Patterson, 87-503.

886. If the motion to dismiss the appeal is overruled by the court pro forma, in order that it may be left for determination on the final submission, such action will not prevent its full consideration on the final determination of the cause: Green v. Ronen, 82-89.

887. Dismissed upon other grounds; when proper: Where it did not appear that a general verdict had been found or that judgment had been rendered, held, that the appeal ought to be dismissed on motion: Martin v. State F. Ins. Co., 58-609.

888. The existence of the judgment from which the appeal is taken is a jurisdictional fact, and if the existence of such judgment does not appear from the abstract, the appeal will be dismissed: Warder v. Schwartz, 65-170.

889. Affirmance or dismissal on motion will not be granted on the ground that the case is not triable de novo, and there is no assignment of errors. Such an objection can only be raised on final hearing: White v. Savery, 49-197.

890. An objection that the record, on appeal, does not sustain the errors assigned, can only be determined upon final hearing and not on motion: Balm v. Nunn, 63-641.

891. Cause remanded for repleading: When the record is in such condition that the supreme court cannot determine from the pleadings what issues are before it, the cause may be remanded in order that the parties may have an opportunity to replead: Lyon v. Tevis, 8-79.

892. Dismissal of appeal by appellant: A state may, as appellant, dismiss its appeal from a ruling of the lower court when it does not appear that such dismissal will prejudice the rights of the appellee: State v. Moriarty, 20-595.

893. Where a suit for mandamus was brought against the individuals composing the board of canvassers of an election to relocate a county seat (who were the county supervisors), and upon trial the mandamus was awarded from which defendants appealed, held, that the appeal could not be dismissed in the supreme court upon motion of a subsequently elected board of supervisors, such board being merely the nominal party: State v. Cavers, 22-848.

894. Where appellant is not entitled to prosecute the appeal, as, for instance, after payment of the amount of the judgment and acceptance of the same by the appellant, the appeal will be dismissed on motion: Independent Dist. v. District T^p, 44-201.

895. It is possible that where an appeal is prosecuted from an intermediate order affecting the merits, and the action is, in the meantime, prosecuted to final judgment in the court below, such fact might be brought to the attention of the supreme court as a ground for dismissal of the appeal: Stanley v. Davenport, 54-463.

Dismissal or affirmance.—Method in special proceedings.

896. Where appellant by motion and affidavit sought to show that pending the appeal appellee (the plaintiff) had accepted a sum of money in full settlement of the judgment recovered below, and appellant thereupon asked that the appellee should take nothing further in the cause and be barred from the further prosecution of the action, and that appellant be discharged from further liability, which motion was resisted on the ground that a part of the judgment had been assigned before settlement, and that there was fraud in obtaining the settlement, held, that the court could not grant the motion and appellant must either dismiss or prosecute his appeal: Simonson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-19.

897. To justify a dismissal of the appeal upon a showing that appellant has no further right to prosecute it, that fact should clearly appear. Where there is no doubt as to the facts, the appeal will not be dismissed: Lewis v. Tilton, 62-100.

898. Where a party appealed from a decree restraining his use of property for a certain purpose, and on motion it was made to appear that he had lost his interest in the property, held, that the appeal would not be further entertained for the purpose of determining the question of costs: Faucher v. Grass, 60-505.

899. Where the party in whose name the action is prosecuted appears on appeal by his affidavit and otherwise not to be the real party in interest and not to have authorized the prosecution of the action, the appeal may be dismissed. Such showing by the party in whose name the appeal was prosecuted will constitute a virtual abandonment of the appeal: Gresham v. Chantry, 69-728.

900. Where a motion to dismiss an appeal, because appellant is not entitled to prosecute it, is based upon facts as to which the affidavits filed by the respective parties are in conflict, the appeal will not be dismissed: Long v. Smith, 67-22.

901. Abatement by death: Where, pending an appeal in a divorce case, one of the parties dies, the action abates, both as to the claim for divorce and as to alimony: Barney v. Burney, 14-189.

902. The fact that the death of a party to the appeal is suggested to the supreme court and made a matter of record does not constitute a revival of the cause against the heirs or representatives of such party: Ibid.

903. Affirmance without prejudice: It is competent for the supreme court, in the decision of a motion addressed to its discretion, to order the affirmance of the judgment without prejudice to the rights of the appellant to a new trial in the court below: White v. Poorman, 24-108.

904. Where a decree had been affirmed by reason of the defective condition of the record preventing a trial de novo, and afterward it was sought to have a re-investigation of the case upon a perfected record, held, that the decree could not be reopened, but that in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, the court would order that such decree should not conclude the rights of either party in a new action: Van Orman v. Spafford, 20-215.

905. Second motion: A motion to dismiss an appeal is no bar to a motion for the same purpose made upon a new and more perfect record: Seacrest v. Newman, 19-323.

b. Method of trial of appeal in special proceedings.

906. Correcting assessments: An appeal in an action by special proceedings is to be tried according to the method provided for ordinary or for equitable proceedings according to the nature of the action: Davis v. Clinton, 55-549.

907. Probate of will: A proceeding for the probate of a will being a special proceeding cannot be tried in the supreme court de novo, but must be reviewed on errors assigned in the record: Ross v. McQuiston, 45-145; Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154; In re Will of Donnelly, 88-126.

908. An action to test the validity of a will is not triable de novo on appeal: Kelsey v. Kelsey, 57-383.

909. Summary proceedings: A trial de novo can be had only in equitable proceedings. In summary proceedings, as for instance to cancel a judgment, the supreme court only has jurisdiction for the correction of errors at law: Brett v. Myers, 65-274.

910. A habeas corpus proceeding will be heard on appeal on errors assigned as in an ordinary proceeding: Drumb v. Keen, 47-435.

Affirmance or reversal in general.

911. A proceeding to restore lost corners, as provided by statute, being a special proceeding involving merely a legal right, will be reviewed on appeal as an ordinary and not as an equitable action: In re Harrington, 54-33.

c. Affirmance or reversal in general; remanding; final judgment.

912. Want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter in the court below may be raised for the first time on appeal to the supreme court: Walters v. Steamboat Mollie Dozier, 24-192.

913. And the want of jurisdiction of the lower court may be taken notice of by the supreme court, although not raised: Groves v. Richmond, 58-570.

914. Where a change of venue was granted to a court having no jurisdiction to try the case, held, that the want of jurisdiction in the trial court could be urged in the supreme court, although not raised below, and the judgment was reversed: Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 59-485.

915. Under such circumstances the supreme court will not review the questions arising on the trial in the court having no jurisdiction: Bennett v. Carey, 57-221; Gilman v. Donovan, 59-76.

That in such case the cause will be remanded to the court improperly granting the change of venue, see infra, §§ 978, 979.

916. Affirmance where result is correct: Where the judgment of the court below is found to be correct, it will be affirmed although the reasons given therefor are erroneous: Whiting v. Root, 52-292; Jamison v. Perry, 38-14.

917. Cannot be affirmed on another ground: Where a motion to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial is overruled upon all the grounds urged except one, and on appeal the action of the court on this ground is held to be erroneous, the case will be reversed without inquiry as to whether the motion should not have been sustained on other grounds, the opposite party not having appealed with reference to the ruling on such grounds: Collins v. Brazill, 63-432.

918. Where a demurrer is erroneously sustained upon one ground and overruled upon another as to which it should have been sustained, the action of the court will be reversed on appeal in order that the appellant may be enabled to take such action as he might have taken in the lower court if the demurrer had been sustained on the proper ground: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 63-188.

No relief to party not appealing: See supra, §§ 590-592.

919. Nor to party successful below: A party against whom no judgment has been rendered cannot question the correctness of the proceedings in the lower court, and if the judgment is reversed, so far as it is in his favor he should not be bound thereby, so far as the proceedings are adverse to him, but should be given an opportunity for a new trial: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

And see supra, § 336.

920. Where a judgment contains two adjudications, one in favor of a party and one against him, and he appeals from the entire judgment, it will be presumed that he appeals from that portion adverse to him; and especially is this true where the relief sought by the appeal, if granted, would render the judgment of the court below nugatory. On such appeal, the judgment will not be interfered with in behalf of the party not appealing: Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600.

921. Entire reversal for error as to one count: Where error is committed as to only one of two counts upon which plaintiff recovers, but it does not appear clearly as to the amount recovered on each count, the entire judgment will be reversed: Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Walker, 49-273; Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67-712.

922. Where an ordinance provided for a fine for maintaining a nuisance, and a person was under such ordinance fined, and the abatement of the nuisance ordered, and the supreme court held that the ordinance, in so far as it provided for a fine, was in excess of authority and void, held, that it would not sustain so much of the judgment as provided for the abatement of the nuisance, but would reverse the whole judgment: Nevada v. Hutchins, 59-506.

923. Affirmance where several issues are involved: The affirmance of a general judgment is an affirmance thereof with respect to all the issues decided thereby, although the opinion be based upon but one of such issues: Finch v. Hollinger, 46-216.

924. Where a judgment is entire, it should be affirmed or reversed as to all the parties appealing: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5-157, 195.

925. Case remanded as to cross-action: A cause may be remanded for new trial as to a cross-action, with an order that such trial shall extend to that alone, and that the judgment on plaintiff's original action remain undisturbed: McAfferty v. Hale, 24-355.

926. Opinion of court on points which become immaterial: When a case is reversed upon errors in instructions and sent back for a new trial, the court will not express its opinion as to errors claimed to have been made in the admission or rejection of evidence which may not occur on a new trial: Gould v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 66-590.

927. The provision requiring the court to decide on each error assigned, construed: Baker v. Kerr, 13-884.

928. Effect of affirmance of ruling on demurrer: Where a demurrer was submitted without stipulation for either party to amend or plead over, and the action of the court in overruling the demurrer was excepted to, and judgment for the other party entered, held, that upon the affirmance of the ruling on the demurrer the judgment was final, and the unsuccessful party could not have the cause remanded for the purpose of pleading over: Grimes v. Hamilton County, 37-290.

929. In such a case the court will not, upon affirming the action of the court below, grant leave to the appellant to withdraw his demurrer and proceed to trial upon the merits: Dunlap v. Cody, 31-260.

930. The action of the supreme court in sustaining the decision of the court below overruling a demurrer will be final as against the unsuccessful party only where judgment has been entered against him in the court below for failure to plead or to proceed with the case: Tyler v. Langworthy, 37-555.

931. Effect of reversal; new trial: It is only where the facts are settled by agreement of the parties or by the finding of a court or referee, or by a special verdict of the jury, that upon reversal in the supreme court in an action triable by ordinary proceedings, the court may render final judgment for the party unsuccessful in the lower court. In other cases a new trial must be awarded: Artz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 88-298; Gray v. Regan, 87-688; Harwood v. Case, 87-692.

932. Where the facts are not thus determined, and the cause is reversed and remanded to the lower court, judgment should not there be rendered without a retrial: Harwood v. Case, 87-692.

933. Where a judgment rendered below upon a report of a referee was set aside, on appeal, as in conflict with the law and evidence, and the case was remanded, held, that the lower court should have proceeded in the same manner as though such report had been set aside upon motion there made: Gray v. Regan, 87-688.

934. When final judgment will be entered on reversal: The supreme court cannot render final judgment where it reverses a cause on the ground that a new trial should have been granted below. It can only enter up such judgment as the court below should have rendered: Payne v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47-605.

935. So held, in a case where a judgment was reversed because not supported by the evidence, and it also appeared that the evidence was substantially the same on a former trial in which judgment had likewise been reversed on the same ground: Ibid.

936. Upon a determination in the supreme court that there was error in refusing to admit certain testimony offered in the court below, the supreme court cannot proceed to render judgment as though the testimony had been admitted. The offered evidence might not be sufficient proof of the fact which it tended to establish, or might have been overthrown by other evidence. The issue must be again passed upon by the lower court: Mende'l v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 20-9.

937. Where defendant has not had an opportunity to defend in the court below, for example, in case of default upon service by publication, the supreme court will not, in case of reversal, enter final judgment, but remand the case for the purpose of allowing defense to be made: Doolittle v. Shelton, 1 G. Gr., 272.

938. Where defendant in the court below,

upon his demurrer being overruled, stood thereon and appealed, and the ruling was reversed, held, that he was not entitled to judgment in the supreme court, but that the case must be remanded, and the plaintiff would have leave to amend: Ware v. Thompson, 29-85.

939. Where the court below made a finding of facts unfavorable to defendant, and to which he excepted, and rendered judgment for defendant upon another question, and upon appeal by plaintiff the judgment was reversed, held, that as the correctness of the finding of facts could not be inquired into, although defendant also appealed, for the reason that there was no judgment against him, the court would not enter up judgment upon the finding of facts, but remand the case to the district court to retry the issues of law and fact: Boyce v. Wabash R. Co., 63-70.

940. The reversal on appeal of an order directing the issuance of a writ of possession on the ground that it is irregular merely, and not because the adverse party is entitled to possession, does not entitle such adverse party, on motion, to an order for a writ of restitution. If the writ of possession is yet undetermined, the right thereto cannot be decided upon a mere motion: Lombard v. Atcaler, 46-501.

941. Where the judgment upon a special verdict is reversed on an error below, the supreme court may render such judgment as should have been rendered below: Gilmore v. Ferguson, 28-422.

942. Where a case is reversed on the ground that upon a finding of facts made by the court, the judgment is erroneous as a matter of law, final judgment may be rendered on such finding: Shaw v. Nachtwey, 43-653.

943. In such a case the supreme court may remand the cause for final judgment in the lower court, and judgment below should be entered up without a retrial: Roberts v. Corbin, 28-355; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42-177.

944. Where a party has sued under a statute authorizing the recovery of treble damages, and the judgment in his favor is held to be erroneous on appeal, the supreme court cannot give him judgment for actual damages on a different cause of action: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67-712.

945. Effect of reversal for conflict between verdict and instructions: Where a judgment is reversed because the verdict is inconsistent with the instructions of the court and special findings thereunder, although the correctness of the instructions will not be considered, the supreme court will not render a final judgment on the special findings, and in accordance with the instructions, but will remand the cause so that the correctness of the instructions may be determined by an appeal from the judgment of the court on the special findings: Baird v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-121; S. C., 61-359.

946. Affirmance of judgment as modified: Where special findings were inconsistent with the general verdict, in so far as the latter included an allowance on one count of the petition, held, that the court could modify the judgment by striking therefrom the amount allowed on that count and affirm it as to the balance: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

947. Where final judgment should be entered: Where the judgment will affect the title to real estate, it should be entered in the lower court, and the case will be remanded for that purpose: Hait v. Ensign, 61-724.

948. What is the final judgment: If final judgment is rendered in the supreme court on appeal, it is the judgment of that court which constitutes the final adjudication of the cause and not the judgment of the court below: Griffin v. Seymour, 15-80.

949. Final judgment at subsequent term: The supreme court having reversed a cause and remanded it for a new trial will not, at a subsequent term, on motion of appellant, render judgment in his favor. In analogy to the rule as to the lower courts, entries or orders made at a previous term will only be changed to correct an evident mistake: Roberts v. Corbin, 26-315, 329.

950. Cancellation or correction of judgments: The supreme court has power, aside from any statutory provision, to correct or cancel judgments improvidently entered through mistake or oversight: Drake v. Smythe, 44-410.

951. Effect of judgment in supreme court: If appellee take a new judgment against appellant and sureties on his appeal bond, the former judgment is merged therein, and its lien destroyed: Swift v. Conboy, 12-444.

952. Before a statutory provision to the contrary, held, that where appellee on motion secured a judgment in the supreme court against appellant instead of a simple affirmance of a judgment of the lower court, such new judgment was subject to stay of execution in the same manner that the judgment in the lower court would have been: Peoria F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Dickerson, 29-98.

953. Judgment in supreme court on appeal bond; damages: Where there is not a money judgment in the court below against appellant, the supreme court cannot render such judgment on the appeal bond. Although the appeal may be taken solely for delay, yet it is only where the collection of money and the judgment therefor has been superseded by bond that the statute allows damages to be awarded against the party taking the appeal: Berryhill v. Keilmeyer, 83-20.

954. It is only where a judgment or order for the payment of money is appealed from, or where the damages can be accurately known to the supreme court without an issue or trial, that the court is authorized to award to appellee damages against appellant for taking the appeal: Branscomb v. Gillian, 55-235.

955. It appearing that appellant had been at the expense of printing abstract and argument, presenting the question raised by the appeal, held, that it was not proper to award damages against appellant for having taken the appeal: Ragan v. Day, 46-239.

956. Remitting excess, and final judgment in supreme court for balance: On an appeal in an action in which usury was pleaded as a defense, held, that plaintiff might remit the usury and take judgment in the supreme court for the principal, and that judgment might also be entered there for the ten per cent. penalty for the use of the school fund: Thompson v. Purnell, 10-205.

957. Where plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for injury to stock on defendant's railroad track, recovered double damages in the lower court, but on appeal it was considered that the service of notice was not sufficient to entitle him to double damages, held, that the case would be reversed unless plaintiff consented to a judgment for simple damages and submitted to pay the costs of appeal: Keyser v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 56-440.

958. Where the supreme court reversed a case for error in including certain items in the judgment therein, and, on a petition for rehearing, appellee offered to remit such portion of the judgment as was held erroneous and asked for judgment for the balance, held, that such offer would be accepted, even on rehearing, and a judgment for the balance was entered: Hyde v. Minneapolis Lumber Co., 53-243.

959. Where the attention of the court is called, upon a petition for rehearing, to the fact that there is error in the allowance of interest, and the opposite party offers to remit the excess, the judgment will be reduced to the proper amount without granting a rehearing, and the costs of the appeal will be taxed to the appellee: Gere v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 67-272.

960. Where the judgment is for too large an amount by reason of an erroneous assessment of interest, if the party recovering the judgment remits the amount of the excess, judgment may be affirmed with such correction, and it is not necessary that it be remanded: Brentner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-530.

961. Remitting in lower court: Where an offer to remit the excess in the judgment was made in the lower court, after service of notice of appeal, and the appeal was nevertheless prosecuted, held, that the successful party might, upon remitting the excess, have affirmance of the judgment in the court below with costs, but that if no such remission was entered, then the judgment would be reversed: Waggoner v. Turner, 69-127.

962. The successful party may, in the lower court, remit the amount of the excess or submit to a new trial: Kitterman v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 69-440.

963. Remittitur where verdict is excessive: Where the verdict is evidently excessive by reason of an error in assessing the amount of recovery, the supreme court may order the successful party to remit the amount of excess or submit to a new trial: Howe v. Sutherland, 89-484.

Affirmance or reversal in general.

964. In a particular case, held, that the amount of damages allowed in an action for personal injuries, although mental anguish was a proper element to be considered, was so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice, and appellee was allowed the option of accepting a less amount or submitting to a reversal: McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44-314.

965. A verdict in an action against a railway company for personal injuries being deemed by the supreme court excessive under the evidence in the case, and the result of prejudice, they directed that appellee might take judgment for a certain amount, and that if he had not elected to do so, within the time set, judgment should be reversed: Lombard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 47-494.

966. Where judgment was entered below for less than the amount of the verdict on the ground that it was excessive, held, that the cause should be reversed and remanded with direction to the lower court to allow plaintiff to accept such judgment or submit to a new trial: Noel v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co., 44-293.

967. A verdict will not be reduced in the supreme court on the ground that it is excessive unless such relief has been asked in the court below: Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-582; Dickey v. Harmon, 26-501.

968. Election to remit: While, if the verdict is excessive, it may be set aside on appeal and remanded, yet the court will not usually make an absolute order of remand, but allow the successful party to elect to take a certain amount which the court consider not excessive, or submit to a new trial: Cooper v. Mills County, 69-350.

969. Costs in case of remittitur: Where a judgment was modified in the supreme court on account of excessive interest having been included therein, but it did not appear that attention had been called to the error in the court below, held, that costs of appeal should be taxed to appellant: Bayliss v. Hennessey, 54-11.

970. Where the mistake in the judgment is such that it would probably have been corrected, if a motion therefor had been made, the costs will be taxed to appellant: Sanxey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68-542.

971. Where the judgment is excessive in amount, and it does not appear that any offer was made to remit the excess in the court below, costs of the appeal will be taxed to the appellee, although he may make the remission in the supreme court and prevent the case from being remanded: Payne v. Billingham, 10-360.

972. Where, before costs were made on appeal, the successful party offered in writing to remit all the judgment above a certain amount, which offer was refused, and, upon final hearing, the other party was allowed to recover more than the amount offered, held, that the costs of appeal were to be taxed to him: Montelius v. Wood, 56-254.

973. Decision of the case binding on second appeal: A decision upon appeal in a case constitutes the law of the case, and will not on a subsequent appeal of the same case be overruled or re-examined, however well satisfied the court may be that it is erroneous: Adams v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 55-94; Barton v. Thompson, 56-571; Simplot v. Dubuque, 56-639; Star Wagon Co. v. Swezy, 63-520; Ellis v. State Ins. Co., 68-578; District Tp v. Independent Dist., 69-88; Raridan v. Central Iowa R. Co., 69-527; Drake v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 70—; Davis v. Curtis, 70—.

974. Where the court has once definitely passed upon the case on one appeal, it will not, on a second appeal, reconsider its ruling thereon, unless there has been such change of the issues or other circumstances of the case as to raise a new question, touching the applicability of the former decision to the case as thus made on the second appeal. The only method for procuring a reconsideration of the decision on the first appeal is by rehearing: Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65-67.

975. Appeal not considered after dismissal for defects: Where an appeal is dismissed on the ground of defects in the record, it is incompetent for appellant, without obtaining a rehearing, to bring the case again before the court upon the same appeal on a corrected record: Green v. Ronen, 62-89.

976. Where an appeal is dismissed for the reason that appellant has not moved in the lower court to have the error complained of corrected, before appealing, a dismissal of the appeal and affirmance of the judgment will not prevent him, if not too late, from making the motion in the court below and again appealing from the refusal of the court to sustain it: Berryhill v. Jacobs, 20-246.

977. Where a judgment procured by appellee for failure of appellant to file a transcript was set aside on the ground that appellant had previously dismissed the appeal, held, that appellant could not afterwards prosecute his appeal, the formal setting aside of the judgment being a determination that the court had no longer any jurisdiction of the case: Dewey v. Pierce, 69-81.

978. To what court remanded; change of venue: Where a change of venue is improperly granted and the judgment of the court to which the change is taken is reversed for that error, the cause should be remanded to that court from which the change of venue was taken: Ferguson v. Davis County, 51-220; Bennett v. Carey, 57-221; Gilman v. Donovan, 59-76; Cerro Gordo County v. Wright County, 59-485.

979. Such an order was made without discussion in McCracken v. Webb, 36-551.

980. A procedendo is not necessary to authorize the court below to redocket and proceed with the case in a proper manner. That may be done on proper notice to the adverse party, at any time after the time for rehearing has expired: State v. Knouse, 33-365; Becker v. Becker, 50-139.

981. Notice of further proceedings in lower court: The opposite party is entitled to some notice that the case is again upon the docket before judgment can be rendered, upon the case being remanded: Messenger v. Marsh, 6-491.

982. Proceedings in lower court after reversal and remand: After a cause is remanded with direction that a certain judgment be entered, no fact existing prior to the first hearing in the lower court can be interposed as a reason against the entry of such judgment: Lord v. Ellis, 11-170.

As to whether amended or additional pleadings may be filed in the court below after a cause is reversed and remanded, see PLEADINGS, §§ 323-329.

983. Where a decree was reversed on the ground that the court below had erred in overruling a motion to strike certain depositions from the files, for the reason that they had been taken without authority, and the cause remanded, held, that the court below could not be required to dismiss the cause or enter decree for the opposite party, but must proceed to try the case anew: Kershman v. Suehla, 62-654.

984. Where a cause was reversed on one point and sent back for a new trial and further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion in the supreme court, held, that plaintiff (appellee on the appeal) was not required to introduce evidence on an issue determined in his favor on the former trial and which was regarded as settled in his favor on the appeal, and as to which no inquiry was authorized by the opinion; and this even though defendant, in an amended answer after the cause was remanded, had denied the fact involved therein: Croup v. Morton, 53-599.

985. Where a motion for a new trial is overruled in the court below and that action of the court is reversed on appeal, nothing remains to the court below but to proceed with a new trial. It cannot receive other affidavits and pass again upon the motion for a new trial: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 10-154.

986. If judgment is reversed for error of law in entering judgment on a finding of facts and the case remanded for a proper judgment upon such finding, judgment should be entered without a retrial: Roberts v. Corbin, 28-355; Drefahl v. Tuttle, 42-177.

987. But this rule is not applicable where a motion for a verdict upon the evidence is overruled in the lower court, and on appeal it is held that such motion should have been sustained. The lower court might have, even after sustaining the motion, allowed the introduction of other evidence omitted by mistake or inadvertence, and the supreme court will not, by rendering final judgment upon the motion for verdict upon the evidence, cut off the opportunity which would have existed in the lower court to introduce such additional evidence: Meadows v. Hawk-eye Ins. Co., 87-57.

988. Where it was held on appeal that a new trial had been improperly granted on account of insufficient evidence, and the cause was remanded, held, that defendant was not entitled to judgment in the court below, but that it was the duty of that court to proceed and determine the issues joined in the petition for new trial as if no appeal had been taken: Dryden v. Wyllis, 53-390.

989. Where plaintiff in an action on a tax title set up generally the payment of taxes without specifying times or amounts, and the title was held invalid and the cause remanded for determination of amount plaintiff was entitled to recover for taxes paid and judgment therefor, held, that defendant might appear in the lower court and contest plaintiff's claim for taxes paid: Miller v. Corbin, 48-525.

990. If, from the judgment of the supreme court, it appears that the cause of action no longer exists, or, in other words, there is nothing left upon which the court below can act, the case upon being remanded to the lower court should be dismissed, and refusal of the lower court to do so may be corrected by certiorari: Edgar v. Greer, 14-211.

991. The court below should, upon the filing of a procedendo directing it to enter judgment in accordance with the opinion of the supreme court, proceed to enter such judgment irrespective of any notice by the adverse party of his intention to file a petition for a rehearing: Fenton v. Way, 44-438.

992. Where an answer containing three distinct defenses was demurred to, the demurrer sustained, and upon appeal the action of the court reversed as to the first cause, the other two not being passed upon, held, that defendant had no standing in the court below except on the first cause, but on a subsequent appeal the defendant had the right to have the sufficiency of the other defenses passed upon: Bates v. Kemp, 13-223.

d. Trial of equity cases de novo.

Special proceedings are not triable de novo: See supra, VII, b.

993. Cases tried as equitable: Where a proceeding has been treated without objection in the lower court as equitable, it is to be so treated in the supreme court: Hintrager v. Sumbargo, 54-604; Balch v. Ashton, 54-123; Manchester v. Hoag, 66-649; Fritzier v. Robinson, 70—.

994. Where an equitable action and a counter-claim therein were both tried in the court below as in equity, held, that on appeal all the issues would be triable de novo, although the counter-claim was legal in its nature: Taylor v. Kier, 54-645.

995. Where the issues are equitable, it will be presumed that the case was tried as an equitable action, unless the record shows the contrary: Baldwin v. Davis, 63-231.

996. Trial de novo is the proper method in equity: Equity cases tried by the method provided by statute must on appeal be heard de novo. The appellant cannot have the case tried in any other manner. It is the mode of trial and not the character of the case and the relief sought which determine the method of trial on appeal: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

997. The only mode contemplated by the constitution for removing chancery cases to the supreme court is by appeal, and although no objection has been made to the hearing of such cases upon writ of error, the court does not obtain jurisdiction by such method, and may dismiss the case: McPoland v. Fitzpatrick, 1 G. Gr., 543.

But see, as to review of errors duly preserved and assigned, infra, §§ 1008-1012.

998. Where a case was on appeal properly triable de novo, held, that the court would not refuse to try it in that manner because the attorney, by reason of a mistaken belief as to the proper method of trial in such an appeal, had not embodied all the evidence in the abstract, or introduced evidence in the court below which he wished to have considered on such appeal: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

999. An equity case will be tried de novo on appeal, notwithstanding the special finding of the jury on the trial below: Chambers v. Ingham, 25-222.

1000. Where an equitable action is triable de novo on appeal, the fact that the referee reports the facts and conclusions of law separately will not give to his findings the effect of a special verdict, and the supreme court may still try the case upon the facts: Cooper v. Skeel, 14-578.

1001. The constitution guaranties the right of trial de novo on appeal in an equitable action, and a former statutory provision for a review of divorce and foreclosure cases only upon errors assigned was held unconstitutional: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192; Howe Machine Co. v. Woolly, 50-549.

1002. Where appellant insists upon a trial de novo, and appellee objects, there can be no ground of complaint of either party where the court tries the cause anew and affirms the judgment: McClain v. McClain, 57-167.

1003. Regulations as to method: Although the legislature cannot take away the right of trial de novo on appeal in equity cases, yet the manner of its exercise may be regulated: Richards v. Hintrager, 45-253.

1004. The right to a trial de novo in equity cases on appeal is granted by the constitution only where the mode and manner prescribed by statute have been followed in the court below and the necessary steps taken to obtain such a form of trial on appeal: Sisters of Visitation v. Glass, 45-154.

1005. Where a divorce case was not tried in open court, as required by statute, but was sent to a referee who reported the evidence, with his findings, to the court, and all the evidence was taken to the supreme court on appeal, held, that as the trial in the court below was not in the manner prescribed by law, the supreme court could not try the case de novo: Hobart v. Hobart, 45-501.

1007. The rule is to try all cases on oral evidence in the lower court, and in the supreme court on exceptions and errors duly assigned, and if trial de novo on appeal is desired, the proper steps to secure it must be taken: Finch v. Hollinger, 47-173.

1008. Trial of equity case on errors assigned: Where it did not appear that the steps required by statute, in order to obtain a trial de novo on appeal, had been taken, held, that the case could not be tried in that manner, but only as a law action upon errors assigned: Lynch v. Lynch, 28-326; Mallory v. Luscombe, 31-269; Twogood v. Reily, 48-546; Howe Machine Co. v. Woolly, 50-549.

1009. Where the necessary steps to secure a trial de novo have not been taken, errors of law properly assigned may be considered: Jordan v. Wimer, 45-65; Lutz v. Kelley, 47-307; Kershman v. Swehla, 62-654; supra, § 817.

1010. In such a case, it will be necessary that the same steps shall have been taken to preserve and present the errors relied upon as must be taken in an action at law to secure a hearing upon the errors: Buckwalter v. Craig, 24-215; Krapfel v. Piffner, 24-176; Schmeltz v. Schmeltz, 52-512.

1011. Parties have the right to prepare and have an equity case tried on appeal upon errors assigned, and may stipulate or agree upon evidence introduced and considered in the court below for that purpose: Hutchinson v. Wells, 67-430.

1012. On appeal in an equitable case, from a ruling upon a motion or demurrer, exceptions must be taken and errors assigned as in an action by ordinary proceedings, and the hearing will be only upon errors: Powers v. O'Brien County, 54-501; Patterson v. Jack, 59-632.

1013. Law case not triable de novo: Even though an action by ordinary proceedings is tried on written evidence, and on appeal to the supreme court all the evidence is taken up, the case will not be tried de novo but only upon errors: Dove v. Independent School Dist., 41-689.

1014. Steps necessary to secure trial de novo; motion and order: Under statutory provisions not now in force (Code, § 2742 before its amendment), it was required that a motion and order be made in the lower court at the appearance term for trial upon written evidence in order to secure a trial de novo on appeal, and it was held that if such motion and order were not made, a trial de novo could not be had: Moses v. Continental Ins. Co., 40-440; Altman v. Farrington, 45-620; Woodbury County v. Lambert, 51-698.

1015. It was also held that the motion should be in writing and filed, and that a nunc pro tunc order at a subsequent term would not make good the want of such motion: Trescott v. Barnes, 46-644.

1016. So it was held that an order at the appearance term for trial upon written evidence was necessary: Walker v. Beaver, 50-504.

Equity cases de novo.

1017. It was also required that the order must be in writing and made before the trial: Berryhill v. Smith, 51-127.

1018. Where the certificate of the judge recited that the case was tried upon oral testimony taken down in writing on the trial, as by order of the court, held, that it did not sufficiently appear that there was an order for trial upon written evidence, or that there was such trial: McShane v. McShane, 49-210.

1019. An order that the evidence should be taken down in writing, made at the time the case was called for trial, instead of at the appearance term, was held not sufficient: Clark v. Reynolds, 46-674.

1020. And that such order must be in writing and made before the trial: Berryhill v. Smith, 51-127.

1021. And that where there was neither motion nor order, there could be no trial de novo: Ibid.; Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44-229; Howe Machine Co. v. Woolly, 50-549.

1022. The appearance term in this connection was held to be that term at which it should be first ascertained that an issue of fact was to be tried: Vinsant v. Vinsant, 47-594; Woodbury County v. Lambert, 51-698.

1023. Motion or order of record: Under these provisions it was held that the motion or order for trial on written evidence should appear of record, and that the certificate of the judge that there was such motion or order would not be sufficient: Endersby v. Endersby, 49-694.

1024. Also held, that the fact that the record showed all the evidence to be before the supreme court was not sufficient to warrant the presumption that the proper motion and order were made at the proper time: Hunt v. Downs, 50-696.

1025. Agreement of parties: It was held, however, that the motion itself was not essential, and that a proper order made by the court, by consent of parties, would be sufficient: Robinson v. First Nat. Bank, 48-354.

1026. Also, that an agreement of the parties at the appearance term, for trial upon written evidence, would supersede the necessity of a motion and order: Van Bogart v. Van Bogart, 46-359.

1027. But it was held that such agreement must be an express agreement, and that the parties were entitled to know, at the appearance term, whether the case was to be tried de novo or not: Saunders v. Halliday, 48-81.

1028. In a particular case, held, that the party was estopped by an agreement as to the method of trial in the lower court from objecting to trial de novo on appeal: Ingle v. Culbertson, 48-265.

1029. Consent of parties that an order be made for trial upon written evidence, held not to amount to a consent to trial de novo in the supreme court: Woodbury County v. Lambert, 51-698.

1030. Where the motion of a party in the court below, for trial upon written evidence, was granted against the objection of the opposite party, held, that the party obtaining the order could not, on appeal, object to trial de novo: Fortney v. Jacoby, 51-95.

1031. Generally, as to steps necessary to be taken to secure a trial de novo under such previous statutory provisions, see, in addition to above cases, Hammersham v. Fairall, 44-462; Altman v. Farrington, 45-620; Clark v. Reynolds, 46-674.

1032. Substitute for foregoing statute not applicable to cases pending: The substitute provided by 17 G. A., chap. 145 (for § 2742 of the Code), which made all issues of fact in equitable actions triable either on written evidence or evidence taken down in writing, and rendered a motion or order at the appearance term to secure such a trial unnecessary, was held not applicable to proceedings on appeal from a judgment rendered before the act took effect, although the appeal was not taken until after that time: Simondson v. Simondson, 50-110; Trebon v. Zuraff, 50-180; Joliet Iron, etc., Co. v. Chicago, C. & W. R. Co., 50-455.

1033. Also held, that as the substitute relates to the form of trial in equity cases, it would not apply in actions already commenced before its enactment, even though not yet tried: Schmeltz v. Schmeltz, 52-512.

1034. But held, that as to the certificate of the judge required to show that the evidence was all reduced to writing, the provisions were applicable to actions already commenced but not tried: Cornell v. Cornell, 54-366.

1035. What must appear of record to warrant trial de novo: An equity cause cannot be tried de novo in the supreme court unless the testimony is all embodied in the record: Krapfel v. Pfiffner, 24-176; Maxwell v. Lundy, 19-576.

1036. Where it does not appear from recitals in the decree or from a certificate of the judge or clerk that the evidence is all before the supreme court, the case will not be tried de novo: Van Orman v. Spafford, 16-186; Anderson v. Easton, 16-56; Kellogg v. Kelsey, 16-388; Winslow v. Turner, 20-294; Pickett v. Hawes, 20-335; Wetherell v. Goodrich, 22-583.

1037. If the evidence is not all in the record, the same presumption obtains as to the correctness of the judgment of the court below as in an ordinary action: State v. Orwig, 27-528; Garner v. Pomroy, 11-149.

1038. Where the record did not show the evidence upon which findings of fact by a referee were based, held, that the supreme court could not try the case de novo: Lillie v. Skinner, 48-329.

1039. The testimony and not simply the facts found by the court should be set out in the record: Robb v. Dougherty, 14-379.

1040. Where the record contained a stipulation as to certain facts, but no statement that the cause was tried upon such stipulation, held, that the cause could not be tried de novo: Davenport v. Ellis, 22-296.

1041. Where the bill of exceptions referred to exhibits which did not appear of record, so that it was apparent that the evidence was not all before the court, on appeal, held, that the decree below would not be disturbed: Cook v. Woodbury County, 13-21.

1042. The court cannot try a case de novo where it has before it the oral evidence taken down in writing, but not the documentary evidence: Howe v. Jones, 66-156.

1043. Where the record showed that certain facts were proved without setting forth the evidence by which such proof was made, held, that the supreme court would not refuse to try the case de novo because of the omission of such evidence when no objection appeared to have been made to its sufficiency at the trial, but that if it affirmatively appeared that the record did not contain all the facts proved or all the evidence submitted to the lower court, its action would not be reviewed: Pickett v. Hawes, 20-335.

1044. If it should appear from an inspection of the record that some item of the evidence irrelevant to some issue in the case, or entirely immaterial, was omitted from it, the court would not on account of such omission refuse to try the case anew. But to warrant the court, however, in so trying the cause, the irrelevancy or immateriality of the omitted testimony must be clearly made to appear from the evidence: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

1045. Appellee cannot object to a trial de novo on the ground that the record does not contain evidence admitted against his objection but not contained in the abstract; it must be presumed that as to him the admission would strengthen rather than weaken appellant's cause: Clinton Lumber Co. v. Mitchell, 61-182.

1046. What the abstract must show: To entitle the party appealing to a trial de novo in an equitable action, it should appear from the statements of his abstract, which will be deemed true if not controverted, that the evidence is all before the court: Britton v. Central R. Co., 39-390.

1047. The court cannot consider a case triable de novo where the abstract does not purport to contain all the evidence: Britt v. Case, 58-757.

1048. It must appear from the abstract not only that all the evidence was made of record on the trial below, but that all the evidence is substantially embodied in the abstract: Greer v. Dickey, 53-755.

1049. The abstract must purport to contain all the evidence: Goodykoonts v. Ringland, 52-732.

1050. If the action is triable on appeal de novo, and the abstract does not purport to be an abstract of all the evidence, the court will not try the case, but will simply affirm the decree: Overholt v. Esmay, 54-748; Wilson v. Blair, 55-745.

1051. Or the appeal may in such case be dismissed on motion: Green v. Ronen, 59-88.

1052. Where the case was equitable in nature, and the abstract purported to contain all the evidence, and recited that such evidence was by order of the court taken down in writing and filed with the clerk, and made part of the record, held, that there appeared a sufficient compliance with statute to entitle appellant to trial de novo on appeal: Stoddard v. Hardwick, 46-160.

1053. Method of making evidence appear of record: There are but three modes by which the supreme court can know that all the evidence introduced below is in the record: 1st. By bill of exceptions stating that fact. 2d. By certificate of the judge as contemplated in Code, § 2742; and, 3d, by certificate of the judge, agreement of parties, or certificate of the clerk, as provided in § 3170: Flesher v. Groves, 48-700.

1054. Judge's certificate; when to be given: Under the provisions of 17 G. A., ch. 145, that the evidence taken down in writing on the trial of equitable actions should be certified by the judge in term or vacation, held, that a certificate made at the second term after the trial term by the successor of the judge who tried the case was not sufficient: Cornell v. Cornell, 54-366.

1056. Where it does not appear at what time the certificate of the evidence is made by the judge the cause cannot be heard de novo. It should be made to appear affirmatively that the certificate was signed within the time fixed by statute and it cannot be presumed that it was so signed: Russell v. Johnston, 67-279; Mitchell v. Laub, 59-36.

1057. Objection to the giving of a certificate after the time for appeal has expired is not waived by a stipulation entered into by the parties before the expiration of the time for perfecting appeal, that the case shall be heard at a particular term of the supreme court: Hartnett v. Sioux City, 66-253.

1058. Evidence certified at such time as is provided for under 19 G. A., ch. 35, although before the passage of this act, may be considered in an appeal submitted after the taking effect of the act: Starr v. Case, 59-491.

1059. The judge may certify to the record within the proper time, even though it be after the appeal is taken: Goff v. Hawkeye Pump, etc., Co., 62-691.

1060. Where the certificate of the clerk as to the evidence is sufficient to enable the court to try the case de novo (see infra, §§ 1079-1081), the provisions as to the time the judge's certificate shall be made are not applicable: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62.

1062. But under present statutory provisions (substitute for Code, § 2742, 19 G. A., ch. 35), if the court orders the evidence taken down in shorthand, and the evidence is so taken and properly certified at the time, and it is afterwards transcribed, this is a sufficient taking down in writing. It is not necessary that the translation or transcript be made at the time of the trial: Ross v. Loomis, 64-432; Howe v. Jones, 66-156.

1064. But if the evidence is taken down in shorthand by order of the court, and the notes are afterwards transcribed by the reporter and certified by him and filed, such transcript will be deemed written evidence; but this transcript must be filed within the six months allowed for making the judge's certificate. If the judge's certificate has been made in proper form in connection with the original notes as filed, it may be regarded as so connected with the transcript when made as to constitute, with the reporter's certificate, a sufficient certificate of the evidence; but the certificate is not to be deemed complete until the transcript is made and certified by the reporter. This rule would, perhaps, have no application in a case tried by ordinary proceedings: Merrill v. Boue, 69-653.

1065. It is no objection to the trial of a case de novo that the evidence was not taken down and certified by the official reporter where it is tried upon written evidence: Gately v. Kniss, 64-537.

1066. Sufficiency of judge's certificate: A certificate not attached to any evidence, but merely showing the names of the witnesses, and the side upon which they were introduced, respectively, without referring to any testimony as taken in writing, held, insufficient: Alexander v. McGrew, 57-287.

1067. In a particular case, held, that the certificate, although not attached to the evidence, identified the different instruments of evidence with as much certainty as was possible under the circumstances, and was sufficient in that respect: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

1068. Where, upon a trial of an issue as to one defendant, he introduced the same evidence that was introduced on the hearing of the case as to another defendant, held, that it was sufficient that the certificate of the judge appeared as to the evidence introduced on the first issue, and it need not be certified again as evidence introduced on the second trial: Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Bishop, 69-645.

1069. Certificate by the judge trying the case: Where the trial is had before the judge of another district or circuit holding court by exchange, the judge trying the case can give the certificate within the time provided by statute, although he has left the district or circuit where the trial was held: Howe v. Jones, 66-156.

1070. What certificate must show: To secure a trial de novo in the supreme court in an equitable action, it is necessary that the certificate of the judge show that all the evidence offered upon the trial is before the court. The certificate that the evidence preserved is all the evidence which was introduced is not sufficient: Taylor v. Kier, 54-645; Groneweg v. Barnum, 70—.

1071. So held as to a certificate showing that the record contained all the evidence used on the trial: Hart v. Jackson, 57-75.

1072. So held, also, as to a certificate that the record contained all the evidence “adduced,” it further appearing from the record itself that in several instances evidence was offered and excluded which was not made part of the record: Tuttle v. Story County, 56-316.

1073. A certificate that the evidence certified was all that was “offered, adduced and introduced,” held sufficient: Marshalltown v. Forney, 61-578.

1074. So held, also, as to a certificate that the evidence certified “is all the evidence offered in said trial, as well as the evidence introduced and admitted and used in the trial:” Wood v. Wood, 61-256.

1075. A certificate that the evidence certified was “all the evidence submitted in said cause,” held sufficient: Miller v. Wolf, 63-233.

1076. Certificate of referee: Where a judgment is rendered upon a referee's report it is not sufficient that the evidence is certified by the referee, but it must be certified by the judge: Porter v. Everett, 66-278.

1077. Agreement of the parties as to what the evidence was on the trial in the court below, was, under Code, § 2742, before amendment, the only thing which could render unnecessary the certificate of the trial judge that the record contains all the evidence: Vinsant v. Vinsant, 47-594.

1078. Under the present substitute for that section, if by the agreement of the parties the facts are reduced to a statement in writing, such statement takes the place of depositions or of oral testimony reduced to writing and becomes the evidence in the case, and upon such evidence the case may be tried de novo on appeal: Williams v. Wells, 62-740.

1079. The certificate of the clerk that the transcript contains all the evidence on file does not sufficiently show that the evidence thus certified was all that was used in the court below: Grant v. Grant, 46-478; Davenport v. Ells, 22-296.

1080. It appearing that in an equitable action a trial by written evidence was ordered by the court at the proper time (under the statute then in force requiring such order), held, that it would be presumed that the trial was in that manner, and a certificate of the clerk that all the evidence was before the supreme court would be sufficient, although he should certify that the case was tried upon depositions, record evidence and oral evidence, the certificate as to the manner in which the cause was tried being without authority: Ryan v. Mullinix, 45-631.

1081. Where it appears that the evidence on the trial of an equitable action consists wholly of depositions and papers on file, the certificate of the clerk to such evidence is sufficient to authorize the supreme court to entertain the appeal. The rule requiring the certificate of the judge to be made during the term has no application to such certificate of the clerk: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 58-62.

1082. Opening and closing argument: In a trial de novo in the supreme court, the party having the burden of proof in the case is entitled to the opening and closing of the argument: Steel v. Fife, 48-99; Alexander v. McGraw, 57-287; Devore v. Adams, 68-885.

1083. And where the burden of proof was upon appellee, held, that a reply filed by appellant to appellee's closing argument might be stricken out on motion: Steel v. Fife, 48-99.

1084. The hearing and determination: On an appeal in an equitable action the court will examine into the merits of the case for the purpose of administering justice, guided only by the universal principles of equity jurisprudence, not being confined to errors apparent on the record: Austin v. Carpenter, 2 G. Gr., 131.

1085. On such an appeal the facts, as well as the law of the case, are again reviewed and adjudicated: Pierce v. Wilson, 2-20.

1086. The court, however, can only act upon the testimony upon which the decree below was rendered: Walker v. Ayres, 1-449.

1087. It cannot, although the case be triable de novo, consider testimony not presented and considered by the court below: McGregor v. Gardner, 16-538.

1088. Upon trial de novo the court cannot determine a question as to which no issue is raised on the trial below: Wheeler & Wilson Mfg Co. v. Hasbrouck, 68-554.

1089. The difference between a court having appellate jurisdiction proper and a court for the correction of errors at law is, substantially, that the former tries cases de novo and renders such judgment as should be rendered upon the facts and the law, while the latter simply inquires into alleged errors of law committed by the lower court. Under our constitution the supreme court has jurisdiction to try de novo on appeal only chancery cases: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

1090. If a case is tried as an equitable one in the court below, and the proper steps are taken to secure a trial de novo on appeal, the case must be so tried, and not upon assignment of errors. The method of trial in the supreme court is dependent upon the manner in which the case was tried below, and not upon the nature of the case: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

And see supra, §§ 996-1002.

1091. Questions as to admissibility of evidence: On the trial of an equitable action de novo on appeal, questions as to competency of testimony, admissibility of depositions, etc., come up as original questions upon the objections made in the court below, and upon their decision the testimony is considered or rejected, as the case may be. If found competent and admissible the testimony is considered, although it was excluded in the court below, but the decision is not thereby reversed, unless the consideration of such testimony makes a different conclusion necessary: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

1092. Error in the admission of evidence in an equity case triable de novo on appeal does not constitute a ground of reversal: Hasner v. Patterson, 70—.

1093. Immaterial evidence will be disregarded, whether objected to on the trial below or not: Cook v. Smith, 50-700.

1094. Upon trial of an equitable action de novo, the supreme court passes upon the sufficiency of the evidence properly admitted, and need not consider the objections to the admissibility of evidence made in the court below: Hanks v. Van Garder, 59-179.

1095. The fact that evidence has been erroneously admitted in the lower court in such a case will not render a reversal necessary, but such evidence will be disregarded, and the final determination of the case will be made upon evidence properly received: Van Bogart v. Van Bogart, 46-359; Putney v. O'Brien, 53-117.

1096. If, however, testimony which is properly admissible, but is rejected by the lower court, is not a part of the record, the determination that there was error in the action of the lower court in excluding it would render it necessary to reverse the judgment and remand the cause. The proper practice in such cases is to permit all testimony to which objections are sustained to be made part of the record, so that if held admissible by the supreme court it may be considered upon the trial in that court: Blough v. Van Hoorebeke, 48-40.

1097. As the provisions of Code, § 2742, as amended, can be complied with and the full benefit of a trial de novo be secured only by causing all the evidence offered to be written down, if questions asked are not permitted to be answered, and thus made part of the record, the defeated party must be allowed to have a review of such questions upon error. Otherwise he would be denied the benefit of an appeal: Clinton Lumber Co. v. Mitchell, 61-132.

1098. Where in the trial of an equitable action a deposition was erroneously stricken from the files, held, that the supreme court would not try the case de novo, considering such deposition, but would remand the case for a new trial, in order that the opposing party might have an opportunity to introduce further evidence on his part: Sweet v. Brown, 61-669.

1099. The supreme court will reverse a decree of the lower court where it is apparent upon the record that there is not sufficient evidence to sustain it; but if the record entry recites that there was other evidence, which would be sufficient, and which may have been lost, the case will be remanded for a retrial: Webster County v. Taylor, 19-117.

1100. It being the practice in the trial of equity cases in the trial courts to admit evidence offered, without ruling as to its admissibility, a party who, by cross-examining a witness, calls out the same evidence which he has objected to in chief, will not be deemed to have waived his objection: Donnel v. Braden, 70—.

1101. What questions considered: Where a case is tried de novo, all questions may be presented in the supreme court which legitimately arise on the record, whether they were urged or relied on in argument in the lower court or not: Seymour v. Shea, 62-708.

1102. Alleged errors in interlocutory proceedings will not be considered, but the supreme court will try the case on its merits: Hackworth v. Zollars, 30-433; State v. Orwig, 27-528.

1103. Case not to be remanded: It is not the duty of the court in a trial de novo, when it appears that the evidence is not sufficient to support the judgment in the court below, to remand the case for a new trial in order that the party who is unsuccessful on the appeal may have the opportunity of introducing additional evidence: Wickersham v. Reeves, 1-413.

1104. Affirmance; former adjudication: A judgment in an equity case which is affirmed on appeal to the supreme court, for the reason that proper steps were not taken to secure a hearing on the merits, is conclusive as a former adjudication, and may be pleaded as such when the same question arises in another action, although the decision of the supreme court, if the case could have been heard on the merits, would have been different: Trescott v. Barnes, 51-409.

1105. When case will be remanded: Where the supreme court holds that an equitable action is not triable de novo on appeal for want of the proper steps having been taken, but reverses the judgment on errors assigned, it cannot enter a final decree but must send the case back for further proceedings: Jordan v. Winser, 48-180; Kershman v. Swehla, 62-654.

1106. Where objection to non-joinder of necessary parties defendant is made for the first time on the hearing of a case triable de novo in the supreme court, such want of proper parties will not cause the bill to be dismissed, but the action will be remanded with leave to have the necessary parties brought in: Postlewait v. Howes, 8-365.

1107. Where the trial court had struck a deposition of a party from the files because not taken within the time required by order of the court, held, on appeal, that although such action of the court was erroneous, the supreme court would not proceed to try the case anew on the evidence submitted below and the deposition thus stricken from the files, but would remand it for the purpose of allowing the opposite party to present additional evidence, so that the party whose deposition was thus stricken out would not be able to take advantage of the error of the court below in refusing to consider his deposition: Sweet v. Brown, 61-669.

1108. When an equity cause is, upon appeal, not tried de novo, but is reversed on errors assigned, and remanded, it stands for trial anew as a law action: Jordan v. Winser, 48-180.

1109. Modification of decree: The supreme court will not, on appeal, make a modification of a decree so as to render it more favorable to the party who does not appeal, even though it may seem from the record that such change would be proper if there had been an appeal by such party: Smith v. Wolf, 55-555.

1110. Where there was nothing in the record indicating that an appeal was taken for delay, and the judgment of the lower court was affirmed after the expiration of the time fixed therein for performance by the unsuccessful party, held, that the time for performance should be extended so as to allow an opportunity to such party to perform the decree as affirmed: Daniels v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co., 56-192.

1111. Final decree: Where an equity case is appealed and tried anew, and the action of the court below is determined to have been erroneous, the successful party is entitled to have such decree as is proper on the record as made in the court below, entered up in the supreme court: First Nat. Bank v. Baker, 60-132.

1112. While the successful party is ordinarily entitled to a decree in the supreme court, and the cause cannot be remanded, yet there are exceptions to such rule. Where it appeared that by mistake the allegations of the petition were erroneous in the description of a highway with reference to which relief was asked, held, that the case might be remanded for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to amend his petition so as to secure such relief, it not appearing that plaintiff or his attorney were chargeable with negligence in connection with such mistake: White v. Farlie, 67-628.

1113. In lower court: While either of the parties is entitled, upon a trial de novo, to have a final decree entered in the supreme court, yet if the judgment is such as to affect the title to real estate, it should properly be entered in the court where the case was tried: Hait v. Ensign, 61-724.

1114. Proceedings in lower court after remand: After an equitable action has been tried de novo in the supreme court and remanded to the lower court for decree, in accordance with the decision of the supreme court, the party cannot amend his pleadings and present a defense that existed when the issues were first tried in the court below: Sexton v. Henderson, 47-131.

1115. After reversal in a suit in equity, which is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion, it stands precisely as any suit in equity stands between the submission and the entry of the decree, the court being fully advised in the premises and the decision announced as to what decree should be entered upon the pleadings and evidence as they stand. The introduction of new evidence, omitted by inadvertence, or the filing of additional or amended pleadings, might be allowed in the discretion of the court, in view of the circumstances and in furtherance of substantial justice; but could not be claimed as a right: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44-335.

1116. The allowance of an amendment and tendering a new issue after trial de novo in supreme court, and remanding of cause for judgment in court below and procedendo filed, should be made only on the strongest showing of accident or mistake, or for matters arising subsequent to the decree or the like. A party cannot be allowed to try his cause by piecemeal. But where a showing of diligence is made by affidavits, sufficient to entitle a party to show mistake and introduce a new issue, the question of diligence in discovery of the mistake is not further in issue, and neither that issue nor any of the former issues in the case, but only the new issue, is to be tried: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 55-94.

1117. When an equity case is remanded for judgment in the lower court, the parties may introduce material evidence which has been discovered since the original trial, and may set up matters materially affecting the merits of the case which have occurred since the former trial, and the amendment to the pleadings necessary to such purpose may be made; but a party cannot set up by way of amendment matter existing at the time of the former trial, and which he omitted to set up at that time: Sanzey v. Iowa City Glass Co., 68-542.

1118. A grant of leave, in a decree entered under procedendo from the supreme court, to one defendant to withdraw her answer, held, not to have the effect of continuing or dismissing the case as to such defendant, especially when the decree was immediately afterwards set aside, and a new decree entered without such leave: McGregor v. McGregor, 21-441.

1119. Where a cause is remanded to the lower court after trial de novo, merely for judgment, without further directions, judgment must be rendered as a matter of course, and upon motion, unless the unsuccessful party shall bring himself within some recognized rule which would entitle him to a new trial: Austin v. Wilson, 57-586.

1120. Where, in an equity case, there cannot be a trial de novo because of error in excluding evidence in the lower court which does not appear of record, the supreme court cannot render a final judgment, but will remand the cause. In such a case the court below cannot render a final decree, but must permit a new trial: Kershman v. Swehla, 62-654.

1121. Erroneous action of the lower court in allowing a party to introduce additional evidence after an equitable cause has been remanded to the court below for a decree in conformity with the opinion of the court, is not an order so materially affecting the final decision that an appeal can be taken therefrom before the rendition of final judgment: Garmoe v. Sturgeon, 67-700.

e. Rehearing.

1122. Provisions applicable in criminal cases: The provisions as to rehearing found in the code of civil procedure are applicable in criminal cases as well as in civil, and in favor of the state as well as the defendant: State v. Jones, 64-349.

1123. At what time: In the absence of any statute upon the subject or rule of court (see now, Rule 87), held, that a rehearing would not be granted at a term subsequent to that at which the decision was rendered: Emerson v. Tomlinson, 4 G. Gr., 398.

1124. Upon the same case and record: A new case cannot be made on a petition for rehearing, nor matters insisted upon which were not presented in the original case:

Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600, 604; Mann v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 46-637, 643.

1125. So the court cannot, upon rehearing, consider an additional abstract or amended record not before them at the first hearing: Cramer v. Burlington, 45-627; Nixon v. Downey, 49-166; Parsons v. Parsons, 66-754.

1126. An additional abstract filed by appellee upon rehearing cannot be considered: Simplot v. Dubuque, 49-630.

1127. The fact of an appeal having been taken not being shown by the abstract, held, that such fact could not be shown on a petition for rehearing: Hintrager v. Hennessy, 46-600.

1128. The fact that additional evidence has been discovered since the trial of the case in the court below is no ground for rehearing: Zuver v. Lyons, 40-510.

1129. Certificate of appeal to U. S. supreme court: The certificate that the validity of a statute was drawn in question in the case on the ground that it was in conflict with the constitution of the United States will not be given where the question of such conflict was first raised in the petition for rehearing in the supreme court. The fact which is essential to give the supreme court of the United States jurisdiction on appeal from the state supreme court must appear on the face of the record. It is not sufficient that it be made in the argument of counsel: Martin v. Cole, 38-141.

1130. Copy of opinion: Before the modification of Rule 90 of the supreme court, held, that the requirement that a copy of the petition for rehearing should be delivered to the attorney of the adverse party must be observed: Austin v. Wilson, 52-731.

1131. A petition for rehearing which does not contain the original opinion printed in full, or a reference to the number and page of the Northwestern Reporter in which the opinion is printed, will be stricken from the files: Kervick v. Mitchell, 63-273.

1132. Remitting excess on rehearing: Where a cause was reversed on appeal because the judgment for plaintiff included an item erroneously allowed, held, that appellee might, on rehearing, offer to remit the excess over the amount of the proper judgment, and judgment for the balance would be entered in the supreme court: Hyde v. Minneapolis Lumber Co., 53-243.

1133. Not granted to party who has not argued; may be granted on court's own motion: The supreme court will not grant a rehearing upon the application of a party who failed to file or make an argument when the cause was submitted. But if it is satisfied that error has been committed, it will, on its own motion, order a rehearing for the purpose of correcting the error: Wachendorf v. Lancaster, 61-509.

1134. Argument on rehearing: After the opposite party has filed a reply to the petition for rehearing, neither party has the right to file any other argument: Webster County v. Hutchinson, 60-721.

1135. Bill of review: The statute having provided for a petition for rehearing and not for a bill of review, an implication arises against the right to file a bill of that kind: McGregor v. Gardner, 16-538.

1136. Effect of curative act: Where a curative act is passed while a case in which the defect sought to be cured is raised is pending in the supreme court on rehearing, the case will be regarded precisely as if no opinion had been previously filed, and the defect will be deemed cured: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Sac County, 39-124, 151.

1137. In case of division: Where the judgment on appeal stands affirmed by reason of a division in the supreme court, such affirmance is subject to reconsideration on rehearing as any other judgment: Zeigler v. Vance, 3-528.

1138. If, on rehearing, the court is equally divided as to whether the former opinion should be adhered to, the case will stand as if the court had been equally divided on the first hearing, and the judgment will be affirmed: Richards v. Burden, 59-723, 754.

1139. Effect of rehearing after procedendo: After the decision of a cause by the supreme court, a procedendo was filed in the court below, whereupon the proper steps were taken to remove the cause to the federal court. Subsequently, and within the proper time, a petition for rehearing was filed in the supreme court and allowed; held, on a motion to dismiss in the supreme court, that the cause was still pending there, and had not been removed to the federal court by proceedings in the court below: McKinley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44-314; Railroad Co. v. McKinley, 99 U. S., 147.

f. Effect of appeal upon proceedings below.

In attachment proceedings: As to the effect of appeal on a judgment in an attachment proceeding, see ATTACHMENT, VIII, f.

Supersedeas bond: As to liability of the sureties upon the supersedeas bond, see supra. §§ 641-646.

1140. Restoration of property taken under the judgment appealed from cannot, in case of reversal, be given as a summary remedy where such property has, by voluntary sale or by seizure and sale, passed to an innocent purchaser, or has in the bona fide discharge of a trust, pursuant to an order of court, been turned over to another: Hanschchild v. Stafford, 27-301.

1141. Where, upon appeal, it was decided that a writ of possession had been irregularly issued by the court below, held, that such fact did not, of itself, entitle the appellant to a restoration of the possession taken from him by such writ: Lombard v. Atwater, 46-501.

1142. Where, at the time of sale under a judgment, an appeal therefrom was pending, upon the subsequent determination of which the judgment was reduced to an amount less than that for which the plaintiff bought in the property at the sale, held, that defendant was not entitled to an order upon plaintiff to repay the excess, but that the property should be restored to defendant: Munson v. Plummer, 58-736.

1143. Where the judgment under which the successful party has acted is reversed, it becomes his legal duty to restore to the other party all the property or its value taken under the judgment, and, upon failure to do so, action may be brought against him without previous demand: Zimmerman v. National Bank, 56-133.

1144. Purchaser with notice: Purchase at sheriff's sale by the plaintiff in execution, or his attorney, with actual knowledge of a pending appeal, is at the peril of the purchaser, and such person is not protected as a bona fide purchaser: Twogood v. Franklin, 27-239.

Rules, etc.—What sufficient to constitute.

1145. In case of a purchase by a judgment creditor before notice of appeal, if he again recovers on another trial, his title is not affected: Frazier v. Crafts, 40-110.

1146. Where the purchaser at a judicial sale, and the grantee holding under him, paid only the costs and not the whole amount bid, held, that not having paid value they could not be regarded as good faith purchasers; and held, further, that the attorney for the plaintiff in the lower court and on appeal could not, upon purchase of the property, become entitled to protection as a good faith purchaser: O'Brien v. Harrison, 59-086.

1147. The provisions for the protection of a purchaser at judicial sale as against a subsequent reversal are not designed for the benefit of parties claiming under a distinct title: Wood v. Young, 38-102.

1148. Additional recovery on appeal; foreclosure of mortgage: Where the mortgagee in an action to foreclose a mortgage accepted and receipted the record for the amount found due thereon, and thereafter the mortgagor conveyed the property to a third person, and afterward the mortgagee, within due time, prosecuted his appeal and obtained a decree for an additional amount, held, that the additional decree thus secured was not a lien as against the purchaser who took without notice of any intention on the part of the mortgagee to prosecute such appeal: Davis v. Bonar, 15-171.

1149. Money paid over in pursuance of judgment: Where plaintiff, in an action to ascertain which of two persons was entitled to certain money due on real property purchased by him, paid the money into court, and it was adjudged to belong to one of the parties defendant, and was paid over to him, and thereafter the other defendant appealed, held, that upon reversal of the judgment the appellant was not entitled to a recovery against the plaintiff for the money thus brought into court and already paid over to the other defendant: White v. Butt, 32-335.

g. Rules, and exercise of powers.

1150. The rules of practice in courts of last resort ought to be framed and interpreted rather with a view to the submission of causes upon their merit, than to their disposition merely upon technical grounds: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

1151. The rules of the supreme court as to the practice therein have the force and effect of laws duly enacted. They cannot be regarded as matter of mere form, and until abrogated must be substantially, at least, obeyed in the preparation of abstracts: State ex rel. v. O'Day, 68-213.

1152. The constitution gives the supreme court jurisdiction and power to "exercise a supervisory control over all inferior judicial tribunals throughout the state," and while ordinarily such control must be exercised in strict accordance with the rules of procedure which obtain in actions at law or in equity, yet in anomalous and exceptional cases the court is not bound hand and foot and rendered powerless to redress palpable injustice caused by the erroneous action of a lower court: Poole v. Seney, 70—.

APPEARANCE.

As to JURISDICTION conferred by, see that title.

1. What sufficient to constitute: Under a statutory provision (Code, § 2626), the memorandum in writing of appearance need not in terms state that the defendant appears. If he files a pleading in the action it will be sufficient. Such an appearance will be an appearance in court although the court be not in session: Conklin v. Johnson, 34-266.

2. The written memorandum of appearance in a particular case, held sufficient: Shaw v. National State Bank, 49-179.

3. Time to plead: It is not error to enter up a judgment by default on the day of the filing of such appearance without giving time to plead when no time is asked: Ibid.

4. Defendant is not entitled to a continuance except for cause upon appearing to a defective notice: Des Moines Branch, etc., Bank v. Van, 12-523.

5. Where by statute defendant was given in equity a longer time in which to answer than that allowed in law cases, held, that he would nevertheless be in default in failing to enter an appearance on the return day, although not required to answer on that day: McKinley v. Betshtel, 12-561.

By attorney without authority.

6. By attorney without authority: Where it is shown that appearance by attorney is made without authority, the case stands as if there had been no appearance, and if default has been entered it is the same as a default without service: Rice v. Griffith, 9-539; Macomber v. Peck, 39-351.

7. Such a judgment is a nullity, and not merely voidable, and even though the record recites that jurisdiction has been acquired, a sale thereunder will pass no title to an innocent purchaser: Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

8. The defendant in an action upon a foreign judgment may deny the authority of the attorney who appeared for him in the action: Baltzell v. Nosler, 1-588.

9. In an action to set aside a judgment defendant may show that an agent or attorney who entered appearance for him, or accepted service, had no authority to do so, for the purpose of showing that the judgment was without jurisdiction: Newcomb v. Dewey, 27-381.

10. The presumption is that an attorney who appears for a party is authorized to do so: Potter v. Parsons, 14-286; Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

11. But if the attorney is in fact not authorized, the party may be relieved against the judgment by direct action in equity to set it aside: Bryant v. Williams, 21-329.

12. The fact of an appearance by attorney being established, it is for the party insisting that the appearance was unauthorized and the judgment void, to show that fact: Bond v. Epley, 48-600.

13. Where a foreign judgment is resisted on the ground that the court rendering it had no authority, the fact that the attorneys who appeared for defendant were not authorized to do so is immaterial, if it is shown that defendant was duly served with notice, and would have been precluded without an appearance: Woodward v. Willard, 33-542.

14. A party who adopts the acts of an attorney appearing for him, although such appearance is without authority, by paying him for such services, thereby ratifies his acts and is bound by the judgment rendered: Ryan v. Doyle, 31-53.

15. Where an appearance by attorney is authorized, the court acquires jurisdiction of defendant by reason of such appearance, and any irregularity in the original notice, or want of authority in the attorney to accept service of such notice, is immaterial: Fanning v. Minnesota R. Co., 37-379.

16. Evidence in a particular case of the authority of an attorney to appear for a party, held, sufficient to overcome the denial of such authority on the part of the party: Ellis v. White, 61-644.

Further as to appearance by attorney, see ATTORNEYS, §§ 24-29, 39-50.

17. What sufficient appearance: Appearance to object to the service of notice is a general appearance to the action: McFarland v. Lowry, 40-467.

18. An appearance to object to the original notice because not properly stamped, and to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, is an appearance to the action: Wilsey v. Maynard, 21-107.

19. Appearance to object to the sufficiency of service upon a director of a corporation defendant is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction: Robertson v. Eldora R., etc., Co., 27-245.

20. The rule that a special appearance to object to the notice confers jurisdiction is applicable in proceedings before a justice: Church v. Crossman, 49-444.

21. If defendant makes appearance for any purpose the notice has then served its purpose and a second one will not be required. Being in court with timely notice, he is held to answer unless he can show that by reason of defect in the notice, such as failure to specify the term at which he is required to appear, he has not been able to prepare his defense: Des Moines Branch, etc., Bank v. Van, 12-523.

22. Prior to the provisions of Code, § 2626, that a special appearance to object to the service of notice should constitute an appearance, held, that a special appearance to object to defect in the notice would not confer jurisdiction: Hodges v. Brett, 4 G. Gr., 345; Milbourn v. Fouts, 4 G. Gr., 346; Weil v. Lowenthal, 10-575; Converse v. Warren, 4-158.

23. Under such statute, held, also, that defendant might appear so far as to object to the jurisdiction of the court over the person or subject-matter, but if he appeared by motion or otherwise, seeking to call into action any power of the court except such as pertains to its jurisdiction, it was an appearance: Ulmer v. Hiatt, 4 G. Gr., 439; Stockdale v. Buckingham, 11-45.

24. Therefore, held, that an application for a continuance amounted to an appearance: Ibid.; Converse v. Warren, 4-158.

25. Held, also, that an appearance by motion to suppress a deposition or quash an attachment constituted such appearance as to give the court jurisdiction: Clark v. Blackwell, 4 G. Gr., 441.

26. An appearance by motion to change the venue confers jurisdiction: Post v. Brounell, 36-497.

27. So held, also, as to a motion to dissolve an attachment: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417; Wood v. Young, 88-102.

28. An appearance to a writ of attachment constitutes a general appearance in the action: Winchester v. Cox, 3 G. Gr., 575.

29. Appearance to set aside the sale of attached property does not constitute an appearance to the action: Osborn v. Cloud, 21-238.

30. The filing of a demurrer by a non-resident defendant constitutes general appearance, giving the court jurisdiction: Johnson v. Tostevin, 60-46.

31. Appearance to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses, even though a general appearance is disclaimed, is sufficient to give jurisdiction: Rahn v. Greer, 37-627.

32. Where intervenors, residents of another county, voluntarily appeared in an action and filed their petition and an amended petition, held, that they were estopped from saying that the court did not have jurisdiction, and that they had no cause of action which by proper amendment could be joined with the pending action: Jack v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 49-627.

33. Appearance does not confer jurisdiction: A want of notice is not waived by appearance where notice is jurisdictional, except where a subsequent notice would have the effect to give jurisdiction: Spurrier v. Wirtner, 48-486.

34. An appearance does not waive the right to have an action discontinued if the petition is not filed by the time fixed in the notice as provided in Code, § 2600: Cibula v. Pitt's Sons' Mfg Co., 48-528.

35. An appearance after default, to have the default set aside as being rendered on insufficient notice, is not such an appearance as will cure the defect in entering default without proper notice, such a case being different from an appearance before the default to object to the insufficiency of the notice: Boals v. Shules, 29-507.

36. An appearance by motion to set aside a sheriff's sale is not an appearance to the original action: Osborn v. Cloud, 21-238.

37. An appearance of a party to testify as a witness is not an appearance to the action: Nixon v. Downey, 42-78.

38. Where an action is by statute required to be brought within a specified time, the appearance by defendant to such action brought after the time specified, and the filing of pleading by him setting out such facts, will not constitute a waiver of the objection: Jones, etc., Lumber Co. v. Boggs, 63-589.

39. The filing of a pleading to the jurisdiction of the court by defendant will not confer jurisdiction upon the court: Elgin Canning Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 24 Fed. Rep., 866.

40. Where a motion is made to set aside a sheriff's sale in a court other than that in which the action is pending, the act of defendant in appearing and moving to strike the motion from the files will not confer jurisdiction upon the court: White v. Hampton, 14-66.

41. Where a judgment was rendered upon service by publication, and subsequently defendant therein filed a petition to set it aside, and afterwards filed a motion in that case for change of venue, held, that this did not make the judgment effective as a judgment in personam: Mayfield v. Bennett, 48-194.

Further as to the effect of appearance in waiving defects in notice and irregularities in the proceedings, see JURISDICTION, §§ 16-19.

Submission without action.

ARBITRATION.

1. Submission without action: Under statute any "civil action" may be submitted to arbitration, and in this term is included everything except those cases which come under the criminal jurisdiction of the court. Therefore an equitable cause of action is subject to submission: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8-40.

2. The question whether or not an alleged nuisance should be abated may be submitted to arbitration without the submission of any claim for damages: Richards v. Holt, 61-529.

3. Method of submission: The subject-matter of the award must be definitely specified: Woodward v. Atwater, 8-61.

4. Under the statutory provision as to submission, the arbitrators must be named in the agreement in order that the parties may have a judgment on the award: McKnight v. McCullough, 21-111.

5. If the submission is not acknowledged as required by statute, the award cannot be received as made under a statutory submission, although it may be good at common law, and an action maintained thereon: Fink v. Fink, 8-313.

6. If submission is by order of court, an acknowledgment is not necessary: Ibid.

7. The same degree of particularity is not required in the acknowledgment of an agreement of submission as is required in case of an instrument conveying real property: McKnight v. McCullough, 21-111.

8. An agreement for submission must contain a provision for judgment by some court upon the award. Without this, it will not be such a submission as contemplated by statute, though it may be binding at common law as a settlement; but, in such cases, the result cannot be treated as an award under the statute: Love v. Burns, 85-150.

9. Where submission of arbitration between a school district and its treasurer covered "the money alleged to be due and owing" by the treasurer of the district, held, that such submission properly covered money due for several years, including some for which there ought to have been previous settlement: District T'p v. Rankin, 70—.

10. The submission to arbitration in a particular case, held, to be sufficiently certain: Donican v. Mulry, 69-583.

11. A party in interest cannot be bound by an agreement to arbitrate made by other parties in interest without his authority: Sweeney v. Davidson, 68-886.

12. A corporation may submit controversies to arbitration although no such express power is conferred by its charter. Courts are disposed to encourage settlement by arbitration: District T'p v. Rankin, 70—.

13. Common law submission: The statutory provisions as to the method of submission, etc., must be followed, if the parties desire judgment upon the award; but a submission and award may be good as at common law between the parties, although these provisions are not observed, as, for instance, where the submission is in parol. An award so made may be enforced by action thereon, and may be set up as a defense to an action brought for the subject-matter therein settled: Conger v. Dean, 3-468; Foust v. Hastings, 66-522.

14. Parties may bind themselves by an agreement to submit a controversy to arbitration in a manner different from that required by statute, and if the submission and award are sufficiently certain to constitute a bar to a subsequent action for the same matter, the award will be upheld: Zook v. Spray, 38-273.

15. A common law submission to arbitration is always construed most liberally and with a view of effecting the purpose of the parties to it, even though it does not comply with the statutory requirements: McKinnis v. Freeman, 38-364.

16. To defeat a recovery on an award under a common law submission, it is necessary for defendant to impeach the award in some proper manner: Foust v. Hastings, 66-522.

17. Submission of pending suit: In case of submission by order of court, upon agreement of parties, the pleadings constitute the submission, and an agreement that judgment may be rendered on the award is not necessary. The court does not lose its control of the matter, and may render judgment upon the award, or may set it aside, in whole or in part: Schohmer v. Lynch, 11-461.

18. A submission of matters involved in a pending suit may be made by agreement of parties without an order of court: Higgins v. Kinneady, 20-474.

19. The term "suit," used in the statutory provision as to submitting pending proceedings, is broader than the term "action," and a special proceeding may, by order of court, be submitted to arbitrators by agreement of parties: Marion v. Ganby, 68-142.

20. Submission of a pending suit may be made without any instrument in writing. The statutory provision requiring a written agreement, signed and acknowledged, is applicable to controversies in which no action has been commenced: Ibid.

21. Action of arbitrators: Unless the submission provides otherwise, or a consent to a majority award is in a proper manner shown, all the arbitrators must concur in the award: Richards v. Holt, 61-529.

22. Where an agreement for submission provided that the award might be made by the arbitrators or any two of them, and after the award had been made and set aside, a re-submission was ordered by the court, held, that if, before such re-submission, one of the arbitrators resigned, a submission for a finding by the two remaining arbitrators would not be valid, and that the agreement must be construed as contemplating a submission to three arbitrators: Cary v. Bailey, 55-60.

23. The finding of arbitrators upon a hearing of which one party had no notice and at which he was not present nor represented will not be binding upon him, though the instrument under which the arbitration is had does not expressly provide that the parties are to have notice or be heard: Dormoy v. Knower, 55-722.

24. The parties may, by agreement, determine the rules that shall govern the arbitrators, as that the award of the majority shall be binding: Thompson v. Blanchard, 2-44.

25. It need not appear affirmatively from the return that the witnesses were examined under oath, nor, it seems, that the arbitrators were sworn: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8-40.

26. The arbitrators are not required, like referees, to make separate return of facts found and conclusions of law thereon: McKnight v. McCullough, 21-111.

27. Although the award is not transmitted to the court in the method required by statute, yet it will be sufficient if it is delivered by one of the arbitrators to the clerk, and all chance for prejudice from the irregularity is expressly rebutted: Higgins v. Kinneady, 20-474.

28. A delivery of the award to the clerk in person in vacation held sufficient: McKnight v. McCullough, 21-111.

29. Where the affidavit of one of the arbitrators filed as required by statute did not give the names of the parties to the controversy, but by mistake gave the names of the other arbitrators as the persons by whom he had been appointed, etc., held, that the notary taking such affidavit might be allowed to testify that it was properly sworn to, and that the names of the arbitrators had been inserted by mistake in place of the names of the parties: Higgins v. Kinneady, 20-474.

30. Clerical defects working no prejudice should not invalidate the proceedings: Ibid.

31. An affidavit of arbitration made and filed after the making of the award, and in pursuance of agreement between the parties that it might be so done, held sufficient: Ogden v. Forney, 38-205.

32. The award; sufficiency: Where the award, under the submission of a controversy as to the amount due to a municipal corporation from its treasurer, stated the amount of his deficiency, held, that while it might have made a more detailed statement of the account, the finding would not be open to objection on the ground of uncertainty: District T'p v. Rankin, 70—.

33. Validity; presumptions: Every presumption is in favor of the correctness of the determination of the arbitrators: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8-40.

34. Where no mistake or injustice in the award is shown, it will be upheld: Struthers v. Clark, 40-508.

35. Impeachment: The award may be impeached by proof that matters were considered by the arbitrators which were not submitted, or that they have committed material errors or mistakes to the prejudice of either party, or have omitted to consider matters submitted, or on account of fraud: Thompson v. Blanchard, 2-44.

36. Proof is admissible to show that no evidence was given to the arbitrators upon a particular subject, the burden being upon the party seeking to impeach the arbitration to satisfy the jury of any mistake of the arbitrators, and also that he was prejudiced thereby: Ibid.

37. The award may be impeached by showing that the arbitrators did not pass upon questions embraced in the submission and essential to determine the rights of the parties: Sharp v. Woodbury, 18-195; Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 49-604.

38. In an action upon an award good at common law, but not made under a statutory submission, the fact that the arbitrators have considered matters not submitted, or have committed such mistakes as prejudice either party, or have omitted to consider matters which were submitted, may be shown for the purpose of impeaching the award: Love v. Burns, 35-150.

39. It is competent to introduce evidence to show that one of the arbitrators intrusted with the award for delivery to the court discovered a mistake in it before delivery and thereupon refused to deliver it: Shulte v. Hennessy, 40-352.

40. Power of court over: As to the power of a court over an award, there is a material difference between the cases where the reference is under a statute provision or is made by a rule of court, and those where it is solely by an agreement of the parties, as at common law. In the latter case the arbitrators constitute a tribunal created by the parties themselves, and the courts have but little authority over them. Nearly all the authority which does exist in regard to them is in courts of equity: Burroughs v. David, 7-154.

41. Therefore, held, that allegations of fraud of the opposite party in not making a full and true exhibit of the matters relating to the arbitration on the hearing before the arbitrators could not be considered in an action on the arbitration bond: Ibid.

42. Setting aside: To entitle a party to have an award set aside on the ground of mistake, he must not only clearly show a mistake, and that he was prejudiced thereby, but also that if it had not occurred the award would have been different: Tomlinson v. Tomlinson, 3-575; Gorham v. Millard, 50-554.

43. Although an award can only be set aside for mistake, partiality, or fraud in the arbitration, yet, to constitute such conduct, evil intention is not a necessary ingredient: and where one of the parties was informed by one of the arbitrators that no testimony upon a certain question would be received, and afterwards such testimony was received on the other side, held, that the award should be set aside: Sullivan v. Frink, 8-66.

44. An award should not be set aside for newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative: McDaniels v. Van Fosen, 11-195.

45. The action of arbitrators in awarding costs to the successful party should not be interfered with unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown: Ratliff v. Mann, 5-423.

46. The court cannot change the award as to the taxation of costs. Its only authority is to recommit if improper: Landreth v. Bass, 12-606.

47. Resubmission: Under statutory provision, held that the award should only be rejected for want of jurisdiction in the arbitrators, but that it should be recommitted for any reason which would justify the granting of a new trial after verdict: Depeu v. Davis, 2 G. Gr., 260.

48. Upon recommitment the arbitrators need not be again sworn, nor need the award upon such recommitment show that they were sworn in the first instance: Tomlinson v. Hammond, 8-40.

49. Disqualification or misconduct of arbitrators: Where a contract of lease provided that the rents should be determined by an appraisal of the property by three persons, of whom each should appoint one, and the two thus chosen should select the third, held, that such contract implied that the persons to be selected should be indifferent between the parties, and that it appearing that the appraiser appointed by one of the parties was a brother and confidential agent of such party, which fact was unknown to the other, the appraisal was void: Pool v. Hennessy, 39-192.

50. Where it appeared that one of the arbitrators procured the signature of another by representing that the other would sign it, which was not done, and such arbitrator was persistent in signing the award, although counsel had not been heard in argument and before the case was finally submitted, and when it appeared that plaintiff desired to introduce further evidence, and that such arbitrator was on unfriendly terms with plaintiff, held, that such arbitrator was not a proper person to act, and that a resubmission of the matter to the same arbitrators was error. In such case the award should have been rejected and the parties left to their ordinary remedies: Brown v. Harper, 54-546.

51. Setting aside in equity: Where a new school district had been organized from a part of the territory of an old one, and the two boards, upon failure to agree to the division of assets and liabilities, had appointed arbitrators as required by statute in such case (Code, § 1715), held, that a court of equity might entertain jurisdiction to set aside an award of such arbitrators for gross errors in computation: District T'p v. District T'p, 54-286.

52. Judgment: The court has no authority to change the award by adding interest thereto. It should enter judgment on the award according to its terms, unless it appears that the award is inequitable, or that the arbitrators abused their discretion in apportioning the costs: District T'p v. Independent Dist., 60-141.

53. Where the agreement of submission specifies the court wherein the award is to be filed, this sufficiently indicates the court wherein judgment is to be rendered: Ibid.

54. The parties may agree that judgment on the award shall be rendered by a justice of the peace, and, if so, he will have jurisdiction, provided the amount is such as to bring the case within his cognizance: Van Horn v. Bellar, 20-255; King v. Hampton, 4 G. Gr., 401; Whitis v. Culver, 25-30.

55. Where it was provided in the agreement that judgment should be rendered "by any court having jurisdiction," and judgment was rendered by the district court of the county where both parties resided, held, that as such court was the only one which (at that time) had jurisdiction, the agreement was sufficient to warrant such judgment: McKnight v. McCullough, 21-111.

56. Appeal: An appeal will not lie from the judgment of a justice of the peace on an award. Any error committed by him in rejecting or recommitting an award, or failure to do so, may be reviewed on writ of error: Whitis v. Culver, 25-30.

57. As the justice has no authority to try the case upon its merits, but only to render judgment on the award, or reject it and recommit it for a new hearing, no trial upon the merits can be had on an appeal from the action of the justice: Ibid.

58. An appeal will lie from an order resubmitting a cause to arbitrators: Brown v. Harper, 54-546.

59. The acts of the court, in sustaining a motion to set aside the award, cannot be reviewed where the record does not show upon what facts the court acted: Hamble v. Owen, 20-70.

60. Effect: Where an agreement for submission to arbitration provided that the award should be made within thirty days, and it was afterwards made and set aside by mutual consent, and an action at law was commenced after the expiration of the thirty days, no further steps having been taken under the submission by either party, held, that the submission would not bar the action, and it was not incumbent upon the party bringing the action to first apply to have the arbitrators act, or others appointed, and a new award made: Simplot v. Simplot, 14-449.

61. An award cannot be relied upon, unless pleaded: Dougherty v. Stewart, 48-648.

62. Civil liability of arbitrators: Arbitrators act in a judicial capacity, and cannot be held liable for damages for an award alleged to have been made fraudulently and corruptly, if within their jurisdiction: Jones v. Brown, 54-74.

63. Where an award was filed in defiance of an injunction, held, that it must be presumed that it was disregarded and worked no prejudice, and that an action for damages against the arbitrators would not lie: Ibid.

64. The fact that the award is valueless by reason of wilful misconduct of the arbitrators, may be shown for the purpose of defeating their claim for compensation for services: Bever v. Brown, 56-565.

Malice.—In general; what assignable.

ASSAULT.

As to the crime of Assault, or Assault and Battery, or Assault with intent to commit other offenses, see CRIMINAL LAW.

1. Malice: The averment that defendant wilfully, wickedly and violently assaulted plaintiff is sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover for malicious assault without express allegations of malice: Mallett v. Beale, 66-70.

2. Aggravation: The fact that an assault and battery was committed in the hall of the court-house near the court room, and under such circumstances that the officers of the court and the people in the room would soon hear of the transaction, held, to be an aggravation of the offense: Root v. Sturdivant, 70—.

3. Evidence: In a civil action for assault and battery, where only compensatory damages are claimed, the record of a criminal prosecution for the offense is not admissible in evidence: Lucas v. Flinn, 35-9.

4. Provocation: Although provoking and insulting language do not constitute a defense in a civil action for assault and battery, yet such provocation may be shown as a palliation for the acts and results of anger, that is, in mitigation of damages, but not as a justification and defense. But a provocation must be so recent and immediate as to induce the presumption that the violence was committed under the immediate influence of passion thus excited. If the assault was committed after time for reflection and coolness, and under circumstances leading to the presumption that it was in revenge, then the party stands in the situation of an original trespasser, and the words applied to him will not amount even to an extenuation: Ireland v. Elliott, 5-478.

5. In a civil action for assault and battery, evidence of immediate provocation, such as happened at such time as to induce the presumption that the violence occurred under the immediate and continuing influence of the passion excited, is admissible to mitigate the damages, but not to defeat the right of recovery. The test is, whether the blood has had time to cool. Evidence is not admissible to establish the truth or falsity of the provo-catory language or that plaintiff knew his statements to be false: Thrall v. Knapp, 17-468.

6. Provocation given at the time of the assault, or within a prior time so recent as to justify the presumption that the offense was committed under the influence of the passion excited thereby, may be shown in mitigation of damages, but if time for reflection intervened after the provocation, it will not extenuate the violence: Gronan v. Kukukuck, 59-18.

7. A provocation arising on a day prior to the assault cannot be shown in mitigation, for the law presumes sufficient time to have intervened before the assault to allow the passion to subside and reason to gain control of the mind: Ibid.

8. The fact that a person, upon being charged by another with making false statements concerning him, denies the making of such statements, will not be matter in mitigation of an assault thereupon committed by the latter upon the former: Ibid.

9. Aiding and abetting: An instruction that if the assault in question was made by one of the defendants in pursuance of a previous intention, known to the other without any objection on the part of the latter, and the latter aided or abetted or encouraged the other, then the one aiding and abetting was liable for the assault, held correct: Ibid.

10. Military order: While a military order may not excuse a wrongful act, it may nevertheless be proper to be shown in evidence as palliating such act, or to mitigate damages: Carpenter v. Parker, 23-450.

ASSIGNMENT.

I. IN GENERAL; WHAT ASSIGNABLE.

II. METHOD OF ASSIGNMENT.

III. EFFECT OF ASSIGNMENT.

IV. EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENTS.

V. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

I. IN GENERAL; WHAT ASSIGNABLE.

1. Statutory provisions:¹ An instrument of guaranty is assignable: First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 41-518, 521.

¹ Code, § 2084. Bonds, due-bills, and all instruments in writing, by which the maker promises to pay to another, without words of negotiability, a sum of money, or by which he promises to pay a sum of money in property or labor, or to pay or deliver any property or labor, or acknowledges any money or labor or property

In general.—Method.

2. So is an attachment bond: Moorman v. Collier, 32-133.

3. So is a judgment: Burtis v. Cook, 16-104; Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16-491.

4. A policy of insurance, the assignment of which is expressly prohibited, is assignable after loss, the same as any other debt: Walters v. Washington Ins. Co., 1-404; Mershon v. National Ins. Co., 84-87.

5. Although a mining lease makes no provision for assignment, it is nevertheless assignable: Steele v. Mills, 68-406.

6. An assignment of a lease carries with it all the rights of the grantee, as well where the words "or assigns" are omitted after the grantee's name as where they are inserted: Frederick v. Callahan, 40-311.

7. A claim for personal tort may be assigned: Weire v. Davenport, 11-49; Gray v. McCallister, 50-497; Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64-513.

8. It seems to have been otherwise held before the passage of statutory provisions relating to survival of actions: Taylor v. Galland, 3 G. Gr., 17.

9. Rights vested ad rem and in re, possibilities coupled with an interest, and claims growing out of and adhering to property, may pass by assignment: Ibid.

10. The statutory provisions do not limit the assignability of claims to those specifically mentioned: Weire v. Davenport, 11-49.

11. Action upon a right of action arising from personal injury may be brought by the assignee thereof in a state where the assignment of such a cause of action is permitted by statute, although the assignment is made in a state where the common-law rule prohibiting such assignment is still in force: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-296.

12. The statutory provisions as to assignment do not render assignable a railway ticket issued to a particular person by name and expressly made non-transferable, and another person attempting to ride upon such ticket would be guilty of fraud: Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64-48.

13. In a particular case, held, that a certain contract did not import or contain a promise on the part of one of the makers to pay to the other any money or property, and was therefore not assignable under the provisions of Code, § 2084: Sales v. Kier, 50-699.

14. A time-check, drawn in the form of an account against a railroad company in favor of a contractor, signed by a subcontractor, and indorsed, does not transfer to the indorsee any claim against the contractor: Nash v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 62-49.

15. A license to keep a grocery store under statute requiring such licenses, and providing that it should be issued only upon giving bond, etc., held not assignable: Lewis v. United States, Mor., 199.

As to assignment of causes of action and survival thereof, see ACTIONS, IV.

As to assignment of JUDGMENTS, see that title, III.

II. METHOD OF ASSIGNMENT.

16. No particular form is necessary to constitute an assignment of a debt. It need not be in writing. If the intention be clearly established, it is sufficient: Moore v. Lowrey, 25-336; McWilliams v. Webb, 32-577.

17. The assignment of a debt may be verbal or in writing, and if in writing, and the intent and contract of the parties is not fully expressed therein, such intent may be shown by parol evidence: Foster v. Trenary, 65-620.

18. The assignment of a contract or other chose in action may be made in parol: Switzer v. Smith, 35-269; Howe v. Jones, 57-130.

to be due, are assignable by indorsement thereon or by other writing, and the assignee shall have a right of action in his own name, subject to any defense or counter-claim which the maker or debtor had against any assignor thereof before notice of his assignment.

§ 2086. When by the terms of an instrument its assignment is prohibited, an assignment of it shall nevertheless be valid, but the maker may avail himself of any defense or counter-claim against the assignees, which he may have against any assignor thereof before notice of the assignment thereof is given in writing to the maker of such instrument. [As amended by 20 G. A., ch. 183, § 1.]

§ 2037. An open account of sums of money due on contract may be assigned, and the assignee will have the right of action in his own name, but subject to the same defenses and counter-claims as the instruments mentioned in the preceding section, before notice of such assignment is given in writing by the assignee to the debtor. [As amended by 20 G. A., ch. 183, § 2.]

Method.—Effect.

19. Where a party to a contract enters into a partnership with others for the purpose of performing the stipulations of the contract, such transaction amounts to a parol assignment of the contract to the firm: Switzer v. Smith, 35-269.

20. Assent presumed: The weight of authority is that the assent of an absent person to a special assignment to him will be presumed unless dissent be expressed, provided the assignment is for a valuable consideration and beneficial purpose: Randolph Bank v. Armstrong, 11-515.

21. The delivery of an instrument constituting an assignment is essential to give it validity and effect. Therefore, where an instrument assigning books of account was executed for the benefit of a particular creditor without his knowledge or request, at the suggestion of a friend, and a general assignment was made, held, that the general assignment destroyed the effect of the partial assignment: Gage v. Parry, 69-605.

22. Acceptance: An assignment of an interest in the amount due for a loss under an insurance policy is not valid unless accepted by assignee: Lamb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 70—.

23. Indemnity of creditor; assignment by mail: If assignment be made by letter to an absent creditor for the indemnity of himself, or himself and others, and sent to him by mail, it takes effect from its date: Ibid.

24. The assignment of an open account under the statutory provision must be in writing. An assignment by delivery or in parol will not be sufficient: Andrews v. Brown, 1-154; Williams v. Soutter, 7-435, 448.

25. What sufficient: A certain writing held insufficient to constitute an assignment of balance of purchase money on real property: Granfield v. Rowlings, 53-654.

26. The description of a claim in an assignment thereof held sufficiently specific in a particular case: Weire v. Davenport, 11-49.

27. An indorsement of a note without recourse does not operate as an assignment of the indorser's right of action against a prior indorser for fraud practiced in the transfer to him: Watson v. Chesire, 18-202.

III. EFFECT OF ASSIGNMENT.

28. Passes legal title: The assignment of a personal tort vests the legal title in the assignee: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64-513.

29. Under the statute, the assignment of an open account for money due on contract passes to the assignee the legal title to the account assigned: Knadler v. Sharp, 36-232.

30. The assignor of an account loses all legal interest therein: Platt v. Hedge, 8-392.

31. While a person for whose benefit an assignment is made may bring action to enforce payment thereunder, yet in a particular case, held, that the assignment 'was not shown to have been made for the benefit of the person attempting to enforce the same: McHose v. Dutton, 55-728.

32. Champerty: The fact that the assignee as a consideration for the assignment enters into an agreement to repay to the assignor the sum recovered in an action on the claim assigned or a portion of such recovery, will not be a defense to the action by the assignee on such claim: Knadler v. Sharp, 36-232; Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64-513.

Further as to champerty, see CONTRACTS, §§ 324-331; ATTORNEYS, §§ 94-102.

33. Assignor not relieved from liability under contract: The assignment of a contract by one party thereto will not relieve that party from his liability on such contract in the absence of an agreement by the other party to accept the assignee as debtor and release the assignor: Martin v. Orndorff, 22-504.

34. Assignment as security: Where an assignment absolute in form is shown to have been intended only as security, it may also be shown that it was intended as security for costs and expenses of making collection, as well as for the indebtedness: Grow v. Crittenden, 66-277.

35. Privity: An assignor is not privy to an adjudication binding upon his assignee to which he is not made a party: McDonald v. Gregory, 41-513.

36. Evidence: Where one party to a contract assents to an assignment thereof by the other party, he will be precluded from afterwards denying the assignee's rights therein when the contract is attempted to be enforced. Therefore, evidence of acts tending to show his knowledge and assent is admissible in proof of assignment: Crawford v. Wolf, 29-587.

37. Stipulation against assignment: A stipulation in an agreement to convey, that no assignment of the premises by the vendor should be valid unless indorsed on the agreement and countersigned by the vendee or his assignees, held, to be for the benefit of the vendee and not enforceable by his assignees: Wilson v. Reuter, 29-176.

38. How far assignee subject to counter-claims or defenses: Where parties on the one part in a contract, without notice of any assignment, make an agreement with the original parties on the other part for the alteration of the terms of such contract, such agreement will be binding upon the assignees of the latter parties. The want of such notice is a matter to be shown by the parties claiming to have been relieved from liability by the new contract, to be shown as a matter of defense when their liability, under the terms of the old contract, is sought to be established by such assignees: Steele v. Mills, 68-406.

39. The assignee of a judgment takes subject to equities against his assignor: Burtis v. Cook, 16-194; Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16-491.

40. The assignee of a non-negotiable note is subject to any defense or counter-claim which the maker had against the assignor before notice of the assignment: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112.

41. The assignee of negotiable paper stands in the same position as the assignee of a non-negotiable instrument and is subject to the same defenses: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

42. And therefore such assignee is subject to any defense or set-off existing in favor of the maker against the assignor at the time of notice of assignment: Younker v. Martin, 18-148.

Further as to rights of assignee of negotiable paper, see BILLS AND NOTES, VII.

The bona fide assignee of a note and mortgage without notice of infirmities is not affected by such infirmities, but holds the mortgage as he does the note, free therefrom: See MORTGAGES, §§ 230-234.

An assignee of a mortgage which his assignor holds with notice of a prior unrecorded mortgage is not protected against such prior mortgage, if the assignment is made after the prior mortgage is recorded: See RECORDING ACTS, § 115.

43. Defense to counter-claim: Where an assignee sues upon a chose in action, and a counter-claim is interposed thereto which exists as against the assignor, the assignee may introduce any defense to such counter-claim which could have been set up by the assignor himself: Miller v. Centerville, 57-640.

44. Defense or counter-claim against assignee of open account: Save for the statute (Code, § 2087), an open account is not assignable, and it was therefore wholly immaterial under the statute, as it stood prior to the amendment (20 G. A., ch. 188, § 2), whether a debtor had a defense against an assignor, when he received notice of the assignment, or whether such defense arose afterwards, for the reason that the statute created no right, by reason of notice. The point of time fixed by the statute was the commencement of suit. If at that time the debtor had a defense against the assignor, he might interpose it against the assignee: Wing v. Page, 62-87; Zugg v. Turner, 8-223; Reynolds v. Martin, 51-324.

45. While the debtor under such statute might voluntarily pay the assignor at any time before action brought, and thus avoid liability to the assignee, he was not under obligation to do so, and the assignor could not enforce such payment: Bailey v. Union Pacific R. Co., 62-354.

46. The rights of parties under a mining lease, providing for monthly payments of royalty, do not constitute an open account under the statutory provisions referring to the assignment of such account: Steele v. Mills, 68-406.

47. Priority between assignments: If, after an assignment of which the debtor has no notice, another person obtains a second assignment, and first gives notice of his right, he will be preferred to the first assignee: Merchants', etc., Bank v. Hewitt, 8-98.

48. Liability of assignor to assignee: The statutory provision (Code, § 2088) does not limit the action of an assignee, on an instrument not negotiable, to his immediate assignor: Huse v. Hamblin, 29-501.

49. Assignment of judgment without recourse: Where the owner of a judgment transferred all his right, title and interest therein "without recourse," held, that he did not thereby warrant the validity of the judgment, and that he could not be held liable where it was shown that a portion of the judgment appearing by the record to be due had been paid to a former holder of such judgment: Scofield v. Moore, 81-241.

50. Where two parties being sureties for another, and bound by a judgment against them, received from him certain notes and securities to be by them converted into money and applied on the judgment, which transfer included a note described in their receipt as being lost or mislaid, and one of the sureties subsequently, by indorsement on said receipt, transferred all his interest therein to the other surety "without recourse," under an agreement by which the latter undertook to pay the judgment, it appearing that the note described as being lost or mislaid was never in fact delivered by the principal under his assignment, but had been transferred by him prior thereto to a bona fide purchaser, held, in an action by the latter surety, after payment of the judgment, to recover from the former surety on his assignment, that the liability of the assignor was that of a vendor rather than that of an indorser, and his assignment without recourse relieved him from liability by reason of the failure of the title to the note: Wolcott v. Timberman, 28-454.

Further as to liability of assignors of notes without indorsement, see BILLS AND NOTES, VI, c.

IV. EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENTS.

51. No particular form of words is required to create an equitable assignment of a fund. Anything which evinces an intent to do so is sufficient: Des Moines County v. Hinkley, 62-637.

52. An order for the whole of a fund operates as an equitable assignment of the fund, after notice to the drawee, although not accepted. It becomes his duty in such case to accept, and the order binds the fund in his hands: McWilliams v. Webb, 32-577; First Nat. Bank v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co., 52-378.

53. A check drawn and accepted, payable out of a particular fund, is an equitable assignment of such portion of the fund: Des Moines County v. Hinkley, 62-637.

54. While it may be that the custodian of the fund may not be bound to accept the order drawn on him for a part thereof, yet such an assignment should be upheld in equity: Ibid.

55. The drawing of checks upon funds in the hands of drawee amounts to an equitable assignment, valid against the claims of a subsequent assignee for the benefit of creditors: Roberts v. Corbin, 26-815.

56. A bill of exchange drawn on a general or particular fund operates as an assignment to the payee of the debt due from the drawee to the drawer, when the bill has been accepted by the drawee: First Nat. Bank v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co., 52-378.

57. A bill of exchange drawn upon a general fund, but not accepted by the drawee, does not operate as an assignment of the fund, but is mere evidence of an assignment, and, with other circumstances showing that such was the intention, will vest in the holder an exclusive claim to the fund, and bind it in the hands of the drawee after notice: Ibid.

58. An order amounts to an equitable assignment of the sums named therein, and when notified thereof the drawee becomes equitably bound to pay such sums when they become due to the assignee. This will be true without acceptance, and an acceptance upon conditions, already existing between drawer and drawee, will not alter the liability: Cutler v. McCormick, 48-406.

59. Notice of an unaccepted order is sufficient to bind the fund and constitute an equitable assignment thereon: Manning v. Mathews, 70—.

60. Where a bank held an order from a contractor for the entire balance to be due him on the completion of a contract for the erection of a county building, and the contractor gave to persons who had furnished material for such building, checks for the amounts due them, across the face of which were written the words "to be paid as soon as we settle with the county," and these checks were marked by the bank "accepted, payable whenever we have funds properly applicable to this check, but subject to all prior acceptances," held, that the transaction constituted an equitable assignment by the contractor to the creditor which would take priority over a subsequent attachment and garnishment: Des Moines County v. Hinkley, 62-637.

61. Under the facts of a particular case, held, that an order given by the contractor upon a sum of money agreed by him to be paid to a third person, was intended to be paid out of the profits of the contract, and would not take priority over the claims of persons who had furnished material for the work: Ibid.

62. Portion of promissory note: An agreement to pay a certain portion of a promissory note when collected amounts to an equitable assignment of such portion: Gallinger v. Pomeroy, 3 G. Gr., 178.

V. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

63. Preferences: Under the common law, in both England and America, a debtor in failing circumstances might dispose of his property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, and by such conveyance or otherwise give preference in payment to one creditor before another: Lampson v. Arnold, 19-479; Cowles v. Ricketts, 1-582.

64. Statutory provision:¹ The language of the statute clearly implies a trust and contemplates the intervention of a trustee, and the transfer of property by the debtor to the creditor in payment of indebtedness is not an assignment within the terms of such statute, and is not thereby rendered invalid, although it is not for the benefit of all the creditors: Cowles v. Ricketts, 1-582.

65. The statute does not make general transfers of a debtor's property invalid, but relates only to general assignments, and uses the latter word in its technical sense: Lampson v. Arnold, 19-479.

66. The debtor may, if he acts without fraud, transfer property in payment of debts to certain creditors, before making a general assignment, and such transfer will be valid even though made in contemplation of insolvency: Ibid.; Van Patten v. Burr, 52-518.

67. A sale of property to a creditor in payment of his debt is valid, although other creditors remain unpaid: Hutchinson v. Watkins, 17-475.

68. The statutory provision has no application where a debtor, without fraud, sells property to a creditor absolutely for a fixed consideration, a portion of which is the discharge of a debt due such creditor, and the balance is money paid to the debtor and to other creditors in discharge of debts due them: Johnson v. McGraw, 11-151.

69. An absolute sale in good faith for a valuable consideration of the entire property of an insolvent corporation will not be held to be void as a general assignment: Buell v. Buckingham, 16-284.

70. A debtor may in good faith secure the claims of a creditor at any time without reference to the claims of other creditors, and for that purpose may give a chattel mortgage: Fromme v. Jones, 13-474.

71. A trust deed not purporting to be a general assignment, made to secure a present loan of money, held not void: Whittaker v. Lindley, 14-598.

72. The execution of a mortgage to one or more creditors is not made void by the fact that the mortgage is executed in contemplation of insolvency and that the mortgagor immediately afterwards executes a general assignment: Lyon v. McIlvane, 24-9.

73. Therefore, held, that a mortgage of property in this state was not rendered invalid by the fact that a general assignment of all the debtor's property was on the same day executed in another state: Ibid.

74. A debtor may give all his property in payment or security to one of his creditors without violating the statutory provision, provided the transaction is free from fraud: Davis v. Gibbon, 24-257; Farwell v. Howard, 26-381.

75. Knowledge by the creditor who is preferred that other creditors are left unprovided for will not render the transaction void: Cowles v. Ricketts, 1-582.

76. A partial assignment in good faith, preferring certain creditors, is not void: Gray v. McCallister, 50-497; Cole v. Dealham, 13-551.

¹ Code, § 2115. No general assignment of property by an insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, for the benefit of creditors shall be valid, unless it be made for the benefit of all his creditors in proportion to the amount of their respective claims.

For benefit of creditors.

77. If the assignment does not cover all the insolvent's property it will not be a general assignment, even though it purports to be general: Meeker v. Sanders, 6-61.

78. Where several instruments are executed consecutively, each one subject to those preceding, and together constituting a disposition of all the debtor's property for the benefit of his creditors, but not in proportion to the amount of their claims, the various instruments will be considered as constituting one transaction and as therefore void under the statute: Burrows v. Lehn-dorff, 8-86.

79. So held, also, as to mortgages and a general assignment executed at the same time: Cole v. Dealham, 13-551; Van Patten v. Burr, 52-518.

80. So held, also, as to an assignment and a deed in fee executed on the same day: Moore v. Church, 70—.

81. To justify the court in finding that a mortgage may be taken in connection with some other instrument as constituting an assignment, it should appear that the mortgagor, at the time he made the mortgage, had the intention to make an assignment: Perry v. Vezina, 63-25.

82. The fact that mortgages and an instrument purporting to be a general assignment were all made on the same day, acknowledged before the same officer, and delivered to the recorder by the same person, held, not sufficient to show that the mortgages were a part of the assignment, it being proved by positive evidence that the mortgages were executed in the forenoon, when the party did not contemplate making the assignment, and that the purpose to do so was conceived after noon, when the parties to whom the mortgages were given had separated. To render the instruments in such cases void as constituting a general assignment not for the equal benefit of all creditors, it must appear that they were all parts of the same transaction: Farwell v. Jones, 63-816.

83. Where chattel mortgages and assignments to secure particular creditors are followed by a general assignment, and it appears that the instruments were executed with the bona fide intention of securing such creditors, the law will not give to such acts a different character from that intended: Gage v. Parry, 69-605.

84. Therefore, where chattel mortgages and the assignment of books of account were executed to different creditors, and within an hour after their execution a general assignment was made, and it was shown that the general assignment was not contemplated at the time of the execution of the other instruments, but that such general assignment was executed when the debtor was advised that the recording of the prior instruments would probably cause a levying of attachment, held, that the various instruments should be deemed valid: Ibid.

85. Where a debtor conveyed a stock of merchandise to his wife, who thereupon, and in consideration thereof, executed a chattel mortgage upon the same to secure the payment of her husband's indebtedness, in which mortgage certain creditors were preferred to others, held, that the transaction was in the nature of a general assignment and therefore void: Van Horn v. Smith, 59-142.

86. Intention governs: The question whether a conveyance by a debtor of all his property for the benefit of a portion of his creditors shall be regarded as an assignment for the benefit of creditors or a mortgage for the security of particular debts, is to be determined by the intention as it may be ascertained from the circumstances of the transaction. If the conveyance is to a trustee, and the debtor intends to divest himself not only of the title of the property, but of all control over it, for the purpose of securing the distribution of all his property among his creditors or a portion of them, it is an assignment for the benefit of creditors, no matter what name the parties may have given it. On the other hand, if the intention of the debtor is merely to secure his debt to one or more of his creditors, and the conveyance is not intended as an absolute disposition of his property, but he reserves to himself a right therein, the conveyance will be treated as void, even though the debtor is insolvent at the time and it covers all his property, and but a portion of his debts are secured by it: Cadwell's Bank v. Crittenden, 66-237.

87. A chattel mortgage, though executed by an insolvent person and covering all his property, is not necessarily an assignment.

For benefit of creditors.

Whether it is to be construed as such or not depends upon the intent with which it is made. It is not to be considered an assignment where there is nothing to indicate that the mortgagor intended anything but the giving of security: Kohn v. Clement, 58-589.

88. A chattel mortgage given to one creditor to secure his claim will not operate as a general assignment, it appearing that none of the parties intended at the time that it should have such an operation, and that it does not include all of the property of the debtor: Carson v. Byers, 87-606.

89. The execution of a mortgage by the directors of a corporation to secure its indebtedness, although at a time when the corporation had become insolvent, held, not to constitute a general assignment for the benefit of creditors so as to be void because not for the benefit of all: Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co., 70—.

90. The fact that in an instrument or instruments making general disposition of all the debtor's property for the benefit of his creditors, no trustee is appointed, will not prevent its being an assignment and therefore void as such, if not made for their benefit proportionally: Burrows v. Lehdorff, 8-96.

91. Under the facts in a particular case, held, that mortgages to creditors were not shown to be intended as a full disposition of the debtor's property and therefore were not to be treated as an assignment: Jaffray v. Greenbaum, 64-492.

92. That a conveyance of real estate to one creditor in payment or security of his debt was executed by the debtor at the same time he executed a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors does not make the two conveyances parts of one transaction: Lampson v. Arnold, 19-479.

93. The fraudulent intent of the assignor in a general assignment for the benefit of creditors will render the assignment invalid, notwithstanding the assignee was not a party to such intent: Ibid.

94. In order to render void an instrument of general assignment on the ground that it was made to defraud creditors, it is not necessary to show knowledge of the fraud on the part of the assignee: Ruble v. McDonald, 18-493.

95. To render a sale to a creditor invalid, as constituting a preference, it must appear not only that the debtor was insolvent, but also that the sale was with intent to give such preference: Graves v. Alden, 13-573.

96. Effect of reservation: If it appears that the debtor has kept back a portion of his property not exempt from execution, the assignment will be treated as void although sufficient in form: Moss v. Humphrey, 4 G. Gr., 443.

97. No assignment is valid which contains a reservation or condition for the benefit of the assignor, such as requiring an absolute discharge upon part payment or partial distribution: Williams v. Gartrell, 4 G. Gr., 287.

98. An assignment is not rendered invalid by the fact that a reservation is therein made as to property exempt from execution: Perry v. Vezina, 63-25.

99. What sufficient in form: Where the intention of the grantor can be ascertained with reasonable certainty, the want of minute accuracy of language and the disregard of the usual forms will not render the instrument void: Meeker v. Sanders, 6-61.

100. The fact that the deed contains no schedule of the debts intended to be secured, that no inventory is given of the property intended to be conveyed, that the rights of the creditors are not distinctly defined, and that no specific directions are given to the trustee as to the time within which the property is to be converted into money, will not be sufficient to render the deed void: Ibid.

101. What constitutes insolvency: The fact that a party is unable to pay his debts according to the usage of trade, or proceed in business without general arrangement with his creditors or indulgence by way of extension of time of payment, is sufficient to constitute an insolvency, so that he may rightfully make an assignment for the benefit of creditors: Savery v. Spaulding, 8-239.

102. An assignment may be void as made in contemplation of insolvency if it is not for the benefit of all the creditors proportionally, although the assignor was not at the time actually insolvent: Loving v. Pairo, 10-282.

103. Law of the place: The validity of assignments, so far as they affect real property, must be judged by the law of the place where the property is situated: Ibid; Moore v. Church, 70—.

For benefit of creditors.

104. An assignment by one partner without the consent of his copartner, who might be consulted and is capable of giving assent or dissent, is void and does not prevent attachment by a creditor, although no proceedings are taken by the partner not consenting to set the assignment aside: Loeb v. Pierpoint, 58-469.

105. But if both partners have agreed to an assignment, it will be valid though signed by but one: Osborne v. Barge, 29 Fed. Rep., 725.

106. When void: A direction to the assignee to sell the property when convenient and as soon as it can be done without material sacrifice will not constitute conclusive badge of fraud: Wooster v. Stanfield, 11-128.

107. An assignment executed for the payment of debts "as fast as they become due," held not to necessarily imply a payment otherwise than pro rata and therefore not void: Meeker v. Sanders, 6-61.

108. It seems that a provision in the assignment authorizing the assignee to sell for credit will render it void, but authority to dispose of property upon such terms as in his judgment seem best will not have that effect: Ibid.; Berry v. Hayden, 7-469.

109. Nor will a provision authorizing the assignee to compound with debtors render the assignment void: Ibid.

110. Misconduct of assignee: The fact that the assignee is offering to sell the goods on credit or to exchange them will not render the conveyance void. No neglect of duty by the assignee, and no misapplication of the trust fund by him, can have that effect. The remedy for such negligence or misfeasance is by application to the court: Meeker v. Sanders, 6-61.

111. Failure of the assignee to report the amount and condition of the assets will not affect the validity of the assignment: Savery v. Spaulding, 8-239.

112. The fact that the grantor in a deed of assignment is employed in the business by the assignee in the capacity of clerk will not in itself be evidence of fraud in making the assignment: Ibid.

113. Delivery of the assignment to the attorney of the assignor with direction to file it for record is, in effect, delivery to the assignee: American v. Frank, 62-202.

114. The assent of the creditors to a general assignment for their benefit will be presumed: Price v. Parker, 11-144.

115. The assent of creditors will not be presumed to a conditional assignment: Williams v. Gartrell, 4 G. Gr., 287.

116. Where a debtor transferred a note to a creditor with the understanding that he should collect it and apply so much of the proceeds as should be necessary for the satisfaction of his own claim, and pay the balance upon another claim, held, that the provision in favor of the second creditor as to the balance did not constitute an assignment to him, he not being a party to the agreement, and therefore the excess remained in the hands of the first assignee liable to garnishment by other creditors: Witter v. Little, 66-431.

117. Where certain accounts were by the debtor assigned to a trustee to be collected and applied pro rata to the payment of debts due certain creditors, held, that the trustee in such assignment was not subject to garnishment at the suit of other creditors, and that assent of the creditors of the assignor would be presumed, they having been notified of the arrangement and having made no objection thereto: Van Winkle v. Iowa Iron, etc., Fence Co., 56-245.

118. Who may be assignee: A creditor or a co-debtor may be made assignee: Wooster v. Stanfield, 11-128.

119. Acceptance by assignee: If an assignee take possession of property, it is evidence of an acceptance, and he may bring action in relation to such property even before filing an inventory and bond: Price v. Parker, 11-144.

120. Inventory: Where the assignee filed a valuation signed and sworn to by other disinterested persons, instead of by himself as required by statute, held, that such inventory should not be treated as a nullity nor as authorizing the court to appoint another assignee. It may do so, only where the assignee refuses to accept: Drain v. Mickel, 8-438.

121. The assignment is not void for want of inventory: Wooster v. Stanfield, 11-128; Price v. Parker, 11-144.

122. Recording: The provision as to recording the assignment is intended for the protection of subsequent purchasers. Where the assignment was duly executed and acknowledged, and the assignee consented to accept the trust before the levy of an attachment, the failure to record it until thirty seconds after the writ of attachment came into the sheriff's hands, held not to render it invalid: American v. Frank, 62-202.

For benefit of creditors.

123. What passes by assignment: The right of action for damages for the wrongful suing out of an attachment upon property subsequent to a general assignment thereof is in the assignee, and not in the person making the assignment: Rumsey v. Robinson, 58-225.

124. The equity of redemption of a mortgagor of personal property passes by an assignment: Gimble v. Ferguson, 58-414.

125. The assignee may, therefore, maintain an action for possession of personal property of the assignor as against third parties, although it is covered by a chattel mortgage conferring upon the mortgagee the right of possession: Goldsmith v. Willson, 67-662.

126. By a general assignment, the property of which the assignor is at the time possessed is passed to the assignee for the benefit of creditors; therefore held, that such general assignment would destroy a partial assignment by an instrument intended to secure a creditor and made prior to the execution of the general assignment, but not delivered until after general assignment: Gage v. Parry, 69-605.

127. A deed of assignment headed "General Assignment," and deeding "all the lands and all the personal property of every name and nature whatsoever of the said party of the first part, more particularly enumerated and described in the schedule hereto annexed and marked Schedule A," etc., is an assignment of the property mentioned in the schedule, merely, and does not include property not mentioned therein. Hence, if any property of the assignor is omitted from the schedule, the assignment is not a general but a special one: Bock v. Perkins, 28 Fed. Rep., 128.

128. Rights of assignee: The assignee and the creditors have no higher rights under the assignment than the assignor had. The assignee cannot question a prior chattel mortgage on the ground that it was given to secure an antecedent indebtedness: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

129. The assignee may maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by his assignor and subject the property thus conveyed to the payment of the creditors' claims. The debtor who has made a fraudulent conveyance must be deemed, as to the creditors, to have an interest in the property which passes to the assignee: Schaller v. Wright, 70—.

130. While an assignee cannot, either at the common law or under the statute, set aside a conveyance made by his debtor on the ground of fraud, he may defeat the enforcement of a mortgage against the realty of the assignor, the title of which is in the assignee, by showing that the mortgage is a mere sham, given without consideration and in fraud of creditors: Sandwich Mfg Co. v. Wright, 22 Fed. Rep., 631; Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 558.

131. Under the Code a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors does not confer upon the assignee the right to enforce special equities on behalf of one or more creditors, so as to deprive a creditor of his right to assert, in his own name and right, such equity against a third party: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 558.

132. But where the case does not involve the simple question of the right of the assignee to recover property fraudulently conveyed away by his assignor, the assignee may defeat the enforcement of a mortgage against the realty the title to which is in the assignee, by showing that the mortgage is a mere sham given without consideration and in fraud of creditors: Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 22 Fed. Rep., 631.

133. An assignee holding under a deed of assignment cannot deny and defend against the validity of chattel mortgages, which though not recorded yet represent a valid subsisting indebtedness, in the interest of general creditors. Such right is confined to creditors having a lien upon the property, or having a judgment at law with a right to perfect their lien upon property they may discover: Simon v. Openheimer, 20 Fed. Rep., 553.

134. Power to borrow money: If the assignee procures money for the purpose of paying creditors by a pledge or mortgage of the property assigned, the assignor has no right to complain, provided, as between him and the assignee, such a power under the assignment existed and the proceeds thereof have been properly applied, and it was for the interest of the assignor that the money should be so procured instead of by a sale of the property: Waterman v. Baldwin, 68-255.

135. Invalid mortgage foreclosure: Where defendants had foreclosed a chattel mortgage, invalid as to the general creditors of the mortgagor, who had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, held, that a decree in equity would be rendered declaring the mortgage void and estopping the defendants from any prior right to the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property at the suit of a creditor, who, without delay, after the assignment, procured judgment at law against the mortgagor, and brought his action in equity against the mortgagees, although the mortgagees would thereby be deprived of all security for their debt: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 558.

136. Special security: A creditor under a general assignment, who has a special security, may be required by the other creditors to resort to this, and can only claim a dividend upon the amount remaining unpaid after exhausting the property upon which he has such special lien: Wurtz v. Hart, 15-515.

137. Security for costs: The provisions as to requiring security for costs from a non-resident plaintiff are not applicable in proceedings under an assignment for the benefit of creditors: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

138. Filing of claims: Claims entitled to share in the first dividends are only those filed within three months from the first publication of notice: In re Assignment of Holt, 45-301.

139. Where the claim is not filed within the requisite time after the publication of notice and after the report of the assignee, the creditor cannot participate in the benefits of the assignment, and there is no provision by which such a creditor can have equitable relief from the bar thus created: McKindley v. Nourse, 67-118.

140. So held where the creditor, not presenting nor seeking to obtain payment of his claim through the assignee, sought to recover against the assignee property sold by him to the assignor before the assignment: Ibid.

141. Contesting claims: There being no provision for pleadings in contesting claims, further than exceptions by creditors objecting to claims of other creditors, it is quite probable that no further pleadings are required by the statute: In re Assignment of Guyer, 69-585.

142. Jurisdiction: The court having jurisdiction of proceedings in an assignment for the benefit of creditors has authority to determine priority among creditors, and a party objecting to the right of the creditor should make such objection in that proceeding. An order of the court as to the jurisdiction of the property will be an adjudication, binding in a collateral proceeding although erroneous: Perry v. Murray, 55-416.

143. An original and independent action in equity may be brought in the same or another court for the purpose of determining equities and priorities of the creditors to the fund in court under the assignment. Therefore, held, that where the validity of a chattel mortgage was involved in determining the rights of creditors, an independent action with reference thereto might be brought in another court and transferred to a federal court, and that the adjudication of the federal court on such question, of which it had jurisdiction, would be final: Knoxville Nat. Bank v. Hanirick, 67-583.

144. The fact that a deed of assignment has been executed and that the assignee gives bond and files the proper schedules and inventory in the state court, does not ipso facto confer upon that court the exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions existing between the creditors of the assignor: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 558.

145. Any one whose legal rights are affected thereby may contest the validity of an assignment, and to that end invoke the aid of the state courts; and if he is a citizen of another state, and the amount exceeds five hundred dollars, he may invoke the aid of the United States circuit court: Fleisher v. Greenwald, 20 Fed. Rep., 547.

146. An order made by a state court in an action of replevin, wherein it was found that several mortgages were valid liens upon the property, paramount to the assignment, and entitled to be first paid out of the proceeds realized from a stock of goods, held not an adjudication binding on the complainants in the federal court who were not parties to the proceedings in the state court, whose right to contest the validity of the mortgages was not derived from the deed of assignment, and was not represented by the assignee: Ibid.; Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 565.

147. An order made by a court having control of assignment proceedings, approving payment of a mortgage debt by the assignee, is not an adjudication of the validity of the mortgage as against creditors not appearing in the assignment proceedings, and whose rights, as against the mortgage, are not conferred by the deed of assignment: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 558.

148. Sale; dower: The sale of real property by an assignee is a judicial sale, and cuts off contingent right of dower in the property: Stidger v. Evans, 64-91.

149. Preferences of taxes: A tax levied upon personal property, at least if subsequent to the assignment, should be paid by the assignee, rather than allowed to become a lien upon real property as against a mortgagee: Brooks v. Eighmey, 53-276.

150. It is the duty of the assignee, to the extent of the property which comes into his hands, to devote the same to the payment of taxes, subject possibly to the payment of expenses of executing the trust. No claim for taxes is required to be filed, nor need any demand be made. The assignee must, at his peril, inquire whether the property or fund in his hands is liable for assessments or levies of taxes: Huiscamp v. Albert, 60-421.

151. Discharge not valid as to foreign creditors: A discharge under a state insolvent law will not discharge a debt due to a citizen of another state, no matter where the debt originated or was made payable, unless the creditor appears and voluntarily submits to the jurisdiction of the court by becoming a party or claiming a dividend thereunder: Hawley v. Hunt, 27-303.

152. Insolvent laws not superseded by bankrupt law: It has been held by our supreme court as sound in principle, and in the absence of an authoritative adjudication by the United States supreme court, in accordance with the weight of authority, that the enactment of the federal bankrupt law did not operate to nullify, supersede or suspend the insolvent laws of the states: Reed v. Taylor, 32-209.

ASSOCIATIONS.

1. Power of majority: Where property is held by voluntary associations or corporations absolutely and without any limitation, a majority may manage it as they please, admitting the minority to the same benefits as themselves. But if there is any limitation, express or implied, the rights of the minority are protected by it, and they cannot be divested of the right to have the property appropriated to the trust under which it was held: First Const. Presb. Church v. Congregational Society, 23-567.

2. A majority of an unincorporated society may direct and control the disposition of its property upon due notice of the meeting at which such disposition is made: Hubbard v. German Catholic Congregation, 34-31.

3. In a particular case, held, that the announcement to the children at the Sunday school and the ringing of a bell in the evening was a sufficient notice of such meeting of a church society: Ibid.

4. Power of trustees: Where the trustees of a religious society were duly authorized to execute a mortgage, but such mortgage was not executed by all of the trustees, held, that although it might not be valid in law, it would be carried out in a court of equity for the purpose of preserving the rights of the parties: Ibid.

5. Liability of members: Persons becoming parties to an unincorporated organization are liable for the debts they contract, and all are included in such liability who consent to the undertaking or subsequently ratify it: Lewis v. Tilton, 64-220.

6. Persons who enter into a contract on behalf of such an alleged principal render themselves personally liable: Ibid.

7. Action by: As a general rule the members of a voluntary association should be joined in a petition in an action in its behalf, unless so numerous as to cause inconvenience. Therefore, held, that the action in his own name by a person subscribing himself as elder of a church, in relation to property of the church, was not properly brought: McConnell v. Gardner, Mor., 272.

8. An unincorporated association for pecuniary profit cannot maintain suit in its own name, nor can its members maintain such suit in behalf of themselves and their fellow members: Pipe v. Bateman, 1-360.

9. Ecclesiastical associations; judicial control: The civil courts will not revise decisions of churches or religious associations upon ecclesiastical matters, but they will interfere with such associations when rights of property or civil rights are involved: Bird v. St. Mark's Church, 62-567.

10. Where the canons of a church provided that a rector canonically elected and in charge could not be removed by the parish against his will, and it appeared that the pastor had been properly elected by the parish with a contract for salary at a certain rate, held, that the parish could not, without consent of the pastor, decrease the compensation, and that the pastor might recover judgment against the parish for salary at the contract price: Ibid.

11. The courts will not interfere with the action of a church in expelling a member for alleged offenses against it, when no property rights are involved: Sale v. First Regular Baptist Church, 62-26.

12. Although the expulsion of a member from a mutual benefit association might not deprive him of the right to recover relief to which he had become entitled before such expulsion, yet where the expulsion was for fraud in connection with the attempt to secure such relief, held, that he was thereby deprived of any benefit which he might otherwise have claimed: Woolsey v. Independent Order O. F. Lodge, 61-492.

I. WHEN ALLOWABLE.

1. In equitable actions: An attachment may issue in an equitable proceeding as well as in an action at law: Baldwin v. Buchanan, 10-277; Crouch v. Crouch, 9-269.

2. In an equitable action by one partner against another to recover the amount due on partnership account, plaintiff may have an attachment, if there are proper grounds, although he may also be entitled to a receiver: Curry v. Allen, 55-318.

3. Against one of several defendants: In an action against several defendants, the plaintiff may have an attachment against any as to whom there are proper grounds therefor, without regard to whether there are any grounds as to the others or not (overruling Courrier v. Cleghorn, 3 G. Gr., 528; Ogilvie v. Washburn, 4 G. Gr., 548): Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417; Austin v. Burgett, 10-302.

When allowable.—The petition.

4. Where there are several defendants, the property of a non-resident defendant may be attached, it being shown that the resident defendants are insolvent: Smith v. Coopers, 9-878.

By landlord against property of tenant to enforce landlord's lien for rent, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, §§ 125-132.

5. When action deemed commenced: Under the statute allowing an attachment "at the commencement or during the progress of the proceeding," the action may be regarded as commenced as soon as the petition is filed, and before notice is placed in the hands of the sheriff, or served: Hagan v. Burch, 8-309.

6. Where it appears that the original notice and attachment were issued at the same time, it will be considered that the suit was commenced before the issuance of the attachment: Nuckols v. Mitchell, 4 G. Gr., 432.

7. So, where the filing of petition and issuance of writ bear the same date, it will be presumed that the writ was issued after the filing of the petition: Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255.

As to what deemed commencement of action in general, see ACTIONS, III.

8. Return of "not found" unnecessary: In case of attachment against a non-resident it is not necessary that the return of "not found" be made before issuance of attachment: Elliott v. Stevens, 10-418.

9. Where brought: Proceedings by attachment against a resident are, by Code, § 2580, required to be brought in the county of the defendant's residence or the county in which the contract is to be performed, and if they are brought in another county the attachment will be invalid and should be dismissed, even if the case is, upon application of defendant, transferred to the county of his residence: Wasson v. Mellsap, 70—.

As to service by publication, in proceedings against non-residents, see ORIGINAL NOTICE.

II. THE PETITION.

a. Form; amendment.

10. Separate petition: Even when the attachment is asked at the beginning of the action it is not improper to file a separate petition setting forth the grounds of the attachment: Shapleigh v. Roop, 6-524; but it is not necessary: Van Winkle v. Stevens, 9-264; Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579.

11. The attachment and the suit are distinct, and any irregularity in the former will not affect the latter: Elliott v. Mitchell, 3 G. Gr., 287.

12. Amount due: If the amount due is stated in the body of the petition asking judgment, it need not be repeated in that part asking the writ. It is not essential that the portion of the petition asking an attachment be separate and distinct from that in the main cause and contain all the essential averments: Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579.

13. Verification by affidavit: Under the statutory provision that "the petition which asks an attachment must in all cases be sworn to" (Code, § 2951), the verification of the petition may be by a person other than the plaintiff without any peculiar means of knowledge as to the facts being shown: Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255.

14. But it is desirable that the means of knowledge of such party be shown: Bates v. Robinson, 8-318.

15. Affidavit by plaintiff's attorney, stating a knowledge on his part of the facts, held sufficient: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417.

16. If the petition is actually sworn to, the fact that the jurat is not signed by the officer administering the oath will not invalidate subsequent proceedings: Cook v. Jenkins, 30-452.

17. Attachment must be asked for in the petition: Dawson v. Jewett, 4 G. Gr., 157; Queen v. Griffith, 4 G. Gr., 113.

18. Amendments to petition are allowable which do not interpose any new cause of action and will not affect the attachment: McCarn v. Rivers, 7-404.

19. But that an amended petition shall support an attachment already issued, the petition as amended must state the cause to have existed at the date of the attachment: Wadsworth v. Cheeny, 10-257; Crouch v. Crouch, 9-269; Bundy v. McKee, 29-253.

20. If the amendment changes the cause of action, and under the petition as amended no cause of attachment appears to have existed at the time of the issuance of the attachment, it will be deemed to have been wrongfully sued out: Young v. Broadbent, 23-539.

21. Amendments to the petition setting up no new ground of attachment, but merely making the original more specific, and to the bond as to the amount of the penalty, should be allowed: Gourley v. Carmody, 23-212.

22. Verification of amendment: Where the amendment does not change the ground of the attachment nor introduce a new cause of action, nor claim a greater amount, but is merely a new statement of the same cause, it need not be verified: Hamill v. Phenicie, 9-525.

23. Defective affidavit of verification to the petition may be cured by amendment: Bunn v. Pritchard, 6-56; Langworthy v. Waters, 11-432; Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579; Lowenstein v. Monroe, 52-231. And see Code, § 248.

24. Effect of amendment: A party is not to be prejudiced by any defects which are corrected by amendment: Wadsworth v. Cheeney, 13-576.

25. And the attachment should not be dissolved for such a defect after its correction: Gourley v. Carmody, 23-212.

26. Where, after the filing of a motion to quash for a defect in the affidavit, such defect is cured by amendment, the motion should not be sustained: Stout v. Folger, 34-71.

27. So, where the action of the lower court in overruling a motion to quash the attachment for a defect in the affidavit was reversed on appeal and the cause remanded, and thereupon the defect was cured by amendment, held, that the proceedings under the attachment were thereby rendered valid: Stadler v. Parmlee, 14-175.

28. Leave to amend: Where it does not appear that plaintiff asked for leave to amend, to cure a defect raised by motion to dissolve the attachment, it is not necessary that it appear from the record that leave to amend was given: Pittman v. Searcey, 8-352.

b. Statement of grounds.

29. Following statute: In alleging the cause of attachment the petition need not follow the exact language of the statute. It is sufficient if there is a substantial compliance with its provisions, the requisite facts being clearly stated: Drake v. Hager, 10-556; Crew v. McClung, 4 G. Gr., 153.

30. Alternative: Two or more causes for attachment may be stated, but they cannot be stated in the alternative: Stacy v. Stich-ton, 9-399. And see Code, § 3021.

31. Non-residence: The allegation that defendant is "not now an inhabitant of this state" is equivalent to saying that he is a "non-resident of the state:" Wiltse v. Stearns, 13-282.

32. Removing property out of state: To justify an attachment on the ground that defendant is about to remove his property out of the state, etc., the contemplated removal must be of a permanent character, and not merely temporary. Where defendant's property was a team which he contemplated taking out of the state for a journey of four or five months with intention of returning, held, that there was no ground for an attachment: Warder v. Thrilkeld, 52-134.

33. Where attachment is asked on that ground, an intention to defraud creditors need not be averred: Branch of State Bank v. White, 12-141; Sherrill v. Fay, 14-292.

34. Actual fraud need not exist in such cases. (Overruling Lockard v. Eaton, 3 G. Gr., 548; Bowen v. Gilkison, 7-503; Pittman v. Searcey, 8-352, all decided under the Code of 1851): Mingus v. McLeod, 25-452.

35. Disposal of property with intent to defraud creditors is not shown by allegation of disposal "with intent to delay and hinder creditors and prevent and defeat them from the collection of their claims." An intention to defraud must be alleged to bring the case within that ground: Torbert v. Tracy, 12-20.

36. Evidence of intent to defraud: Where the ground is that defendant is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, the allegation should be predicated upon some indication by word or act warranting a reasonable belief that defendant is about to defraud his creditors. Evidence that ten years previously he put his property out of his hands to defraud creditors would not be relevant on the issue as to the existence of such intent. (Decided under a former statute allowing the truth of the averment of the ground of the attachment to be put in issue by plea): Lewis v. Kennedy, 3 G. Gr., 57.

37. Contemplated removal of property from state is not ground for attachment unless it also appears that sufficient is not left to pay debts: State v. Morris, 50-208.

38. Absconding: That defendant is absconding himself from the state does not alone constitute an absconding: Ibid.

39. The fact that defendant appears to the action does not disprove the allegation that he has absconded: Phillips v. Orr, 11-288.

40. Contemplated removal of person: To make a contemplated removal and refusal to pay or secure the debt a ground for attachment, it must appear that defendant was not willing either to pay or secure: Drummond v. Stewart, 8-841.

41. Inconsistent grounds: The allegation, in stating one ground, that defendant has property not exempt from execution and refuses to pay or secure, and in stating another, that he has disposed of all his property with intent to defraud creditors, are not necessarily inconsistent and contradictory: Holloway v. Herryford, 9-853.

42. For unmatured indebtedness: A surety upon indebtedness not yet due, and which he has not paid, cannot have an attachment against the principal, under the provisions for attachment in case of unmatured indebtedness (Code, § 2956): Dennison v. Soper, 83-188.

43. To bring a case within these provisions, a disposition or removal of the property must be with intent to defraud: Pride v. Wormwood, 27-257.

44. That defendant is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors will bring a case within these provisions, without alleging a refusal to make any arrangements for securing the indebtedness: Danforth v. Carter, 1-546.

45. In an action under these provisions in regard to unmatured indebtedness, the defense that the debt is not due cannot be set up: Churchill v. Fulliam, 8-45.

46. Where suit was brought for a debt as due, and attachment procured, and defendant denied the indebtedness on the ground that it was not mature, and asked damages for wrongful suing out of the attachment, held, that it was proper to give him judgment for such damages, without giving plaintiff judgment for the amount of the claim: Wetherell v. Sprigley, 43-41.

47. For indebtedness due the state: It is evidently contemplated that an attachment shall issue for indebtedness due the state from a debtor who has refused to pay or secure the same, only when demand has been made upon the debtor for payment or security and is refused; and that defendant is absent from the state, so that demand cannot be made upon him, does not change the rule: State v. Morris, 50-208.

48. "Property" need not be defined: Under a statutory provision authorizing an attachment where defendant had "property, goods or money," etc., which he refused to give in payment or security of the debt, held, that an allegation that he had "property" was sufficiently specific: Bates v. Robinson, 8-818.

49. Specific attachment: Under particular facts, held, that no ground appeared for a specific attachment as provided for by statute: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56-709.

50. Sufficiency of grounds not raised by demurrer: The averments of the grounds of attachment are not a part of the petition in the sense that they can be demurred to. If they are insufficient, a motion to dissolve the attachment is the proper remedy; if inconsistent grounds are alleged, the plaintiff may, on motion, be required to elect between them: Holloway v. Herryford, 9-353; Hunt v. Collins, 4-56.

51. Truth of grounds of attachment not in issue: No issue can be joined in the principal suit on the averment of facts constituting the ground for the attachment. The party injured by the wrongful suing out of the writ has no other remedy than by an action on the bond, unless in cases where an action of trespass would lie: Veiths v. Hagge, 8-163, 192; Churchill v. Fulliam, 8-45; Sackett v. Partridge, 4-416; Sample v. Griffith, 5-376; Berry v. Gravel, 11-135; McLaren v. Hall, 26-297.

52. Therefore an answer raising such an issue may be stricken from the files on motion: Burrows v. Lehdorff, 8-96.

53. Much less can such an issue be made by an entire stranger to the suit: Whipple v. Cass, 8-126.

Amount due.—Property to be attached.

54. Truth of grounds cannot be raised by motion to dissolve: A motion to dissolve the attachment, based upon affidavits that the cause for attachment, as stated in the petition, is not true, cannot be sustained. No issue can be joined as to the facts stated as cause for the attachment. The only remedy is on the bond: Sturman v. Stone, 31-115.

c. Statement of amount due.

55. In action on contract: A writ of attachment should be quashed when the petition therefor founded on contract does not state that something is due, and as nearly as practicable the amount due: Blakley v. Bird, 12-601; Kelley v. Donnelly, 29-70.

56. It is the petition, and not the affidavit attached to it, which is to state the amount claimed to be due: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417.

57. It is not necessary that the portion of the petition asking the attachment state the amount due when that amount is stated in the portion of the petition asking judgment: Shaffer v. Sundwall, 33-579.

58. But where the petition stating the cause of action on contract is not under oath, the sworn petition asking an attachment must state the amount due: Blakley v. Bird, 12-601.

59. False statement as to amount due: That the amount sworn to as due is unconscionable and unreasonable is no ground for dissolving an attachment, although it may render plaintiff liable on his attachment bond: Lord v. Gaddis, 6-57.

60. In actions for tort: When the plaintiff's claim is not founded on contract, he is not required to state in his petition the amount due: Sherrill v. Fay, 14-292.

61. Nor is it required in such actions, as it is in actions on contract, that the amount sued for must exceed five dollars to authorize an attachment: Weller v. Hawes, 49-45.

d. Allowance of amount of property to be attached.

62. Not necessary in actions on contract: Where plaintiff's right of action arises out of contract, no allowance of the amount for which attachment may issue is necessary, although the case is one in which, under the common law rules of pleading, an action in tort might have been brought: McGinn v. Butler, 31-160.

63. Unliquidated damages; penal bond: If the action is on contract and not in tort, no allowance is necessary even though the damages are unliquidated. The distinction intended by the statute is that between actions arising ex contractu and those arising ex delicto. Therefore, no allowance is necessary in an action on a penal bond: Lord v. Gaddis, 6-57.

64. Action on judgment: Where a judgment has been recovered for a tort, the cause of action on such judgment is no longer ex delicto but is ex contractu, and the amount due being properly stated, no allowance is required: Johnson v. Butler, 2-535.

65. Action to recover penalty: No allowance is required in an action to recover a liquidated sum as a forfeiture provided by a penal statute or ordinance, the remedy being by action of debt: Decorah v. Dunston, 34-360.

66. Action for false representations: An action for damages for false representations as to the soundness of sheep sold, held, to be an action founded on contract, so that no allowance was required: Swan v. Smith, 26-87.

67. In actions for tort: An attachment under any circumstances in actions for tort is not allowed in many of the states; and never, unless under some restrictions other than those provided in actions on contract; and hence, under our Code, an allowance is required of the amount of property to be attached which is not required in actions on contract: Raver v. Webster, 3-502.

68. Conversion: Action for tortious conversion of property still in possession of defendant cannot be considered as on contract, and an allowance is necessary: Moses v. Arnold, 43-187.

69. Misrepresentation in sale of land: In an action for damages sustained by reason of misrepresentations as to the quality of land sold, not being founded upon a written contract, and the damages being unliquidated, there must be an allowance: Gates v. Reynolds, 13-1. (This case is not consistent with the later one of Swan v. Smith, 26-87; supra, § 66. The statute does not, and did not when the above case was decided, require the action to be on written contract to render an allowance unnecessary.)

70. Allowance relating back; amendment: Where a writ of attachment, in an action not founded on contract, issues and is levied, without an allowance being made as required by statute, and a motion is made to quash the writ on that ground, the court may then make an allowance, to relate back, as between the parties, to the issuance of the writ, and fix the additional amount of property which may be levied on: Magoon v. Gillett, 54-54.

71. Allowance to be by judge: The allowance is to be made by a judge acting in his individual capacity and need not be attested by the seal of his court: Sherrill v. Fay, 14-292.

72. But it would seem that an allowance by the judge of the court in which the action is pending, while sitting as the court and not as a judge individually, would be sufficient: Magoon v. Gillett, 54-54.

73. Subsequent allowance: Upon a motion to discharge attached property on the ground that there has been no allowance when required, the court may make an order as to how much property shall be held: Ibid.

III. THE BOND.

74. The amount of the bond is to be double the value of the property which the sheriff may attach, or three times the amount sworn to by plaintiff. It is not sufficient that it be double the amount sworn to, or double the value of the property which is actually attached: Churchill v. Fulliam, 8-45; Hamill v. Phenicie, 9-525; Van Winkle v. Stevens, 9-264; Hamble v. Owen, 20-70.

75. Surety: One surety is sufficient if his pecuniary responsibility satisfies the requirements of the law: Elliott v. Stevens, 10-418.

76. Signature of plaintiff is not essential: Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255.

77. Partnership name: A bond signed by both principal and sureties in their partnership name is not prima facie insufficient: Danforth v. Carter, 1-546; Churchill v. Fulliam, 9-45.

78. Where an attachment was sued out against a member of a firm for a partnership indebtedness, held, that a bond executed to the firm was not sufficient: Courrier v. Cleg-horn, 3 G. Gr., 523.

79. Where the bond runs to a firm and the writ issues against firm property, it will not cover damages for wrongful attachment of the individual property of a member of the firm, although such partner is joined as defendant in the action: Mason v. Rice, 66-174.

80. Giving an appeal bond does not release from liability on the attachment bond: McCall v. Bradley, 3 G. Gr., 200.

81. Motion to dissolve the attachment for insufficiency of the bond may be made where the amount is not as large as required by statute: Hamble v. Owen, 20-70.

82. And this remedy, and not demurrer, is available for failure to give bond: Brace v. Grady, 36-352.

83. Amendment of the bond: The objection that the bond is not sufficient in amount may be avoided by substitution of a sufficient bond: Van Winkle v. Stevens, 9-264.

84. A mistake in the recital of the bond as to the county in which the proceeding is pending is a defect which may be cured: Holmes v. Budd, 11-186.

85. A defect in the bond may be cured by amendment, and it is therefore error to discharge the attachment for such defect when the party offers to substitute a proper bond: Cheever v. Lane, 9-193.

86. A substituted bond is to be treated in all respects as if filed at the beginning of the action: Branch of State Bank v. Morris, 13-186.

As to amending bonds in general, see BONDS.

Remedy on the bond: See infra, IX, d.

IV. THE WRIT.

87. Proceedings under, are independent of main action: The object of the writ is to seize and hold the property of the defendant, or its equivalent, to await the event of the suit. If plaintiff recovers, the property is considered as having been levied on under execution, and defects in the writ or the proceedings thereunder cannot vitiate the proceedings in the suit in which the attachment is secured, the proceedings by attachment being merely auxiliary: Carothers v. Click, Mor., 54.

The writ. — The levy and return.

88. The cause of action or its nature need not be stated in the writ: Wadsworth v. Cheney, 13-576; Pitkins v. Boyd, 4 G. Gr., 255; Westphal v. Sherwood, 69-364.

89. The fact of bond being given need not necessarily be recited in the writ: Hays v. Gorby, 3-203 (commenting upon Barber v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 352); Ellsworth v. Moore, 5-486; Westphal v. Sherwood, 69-364.

90. The duties of the officer as to manner of making levy, return, etc., need not be stated in the writ: Westphal v. Sherwood, 69-364.

91. Against one of several defendants: It is not necessarily a ground for quashing the writ, that it is against only one of several defendants in the action, or that the bond is to the one against whom the writ issues and not to all: Patterson v. Stiles, 6-54.

92. Successive writs may issue in the same county until the proper amount of property is attached: Hamill v. Phenicie, 9-525.

93. Or to different counties without the filing of a new affidavit or bond: Elliott v. Stevens, 10-418.

94. Defects in affidavit: The writ is not void in the hands of the officer for defects in the affidavit which might be cured if objected to: State v. Foster, 10-435.

95. Amendment; absence of seal: Under the provisions of Code, § 3021, it is held that the absence of the seal of the court, or the affixing of the seal of the wrong court, is a defect which may be cured by amendment: Murdough v. McPherrin, 49-479.

96. But prior to the change made by the enactment of the section last referred to, it was held that the seal was essential, and its absence, or the affixing of the seal of the wrong court, was a fatal defect which could not be remedied by amendment: Foss v. Isett, 4 G. Gr., 76; Shaffer v. Sundwall, 39-579.

97. Also held, that a failure of the writ to recite that previous steps necessary to authorize its issuance had been taken, could not be cured by amendment: Barber v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 352.

98. Amendment as to amount claimed: Where the writ is defective in not stating the sum claimed in the action, it may be amended in this respect after levy: Atkins v. Womeldorf, 53-150.

99. Lost writ; evidence; presumptions: Where the writ under which a levy has been made is lost, but the date and title of the cause and amount of property authorized to be attached are established, there will be a prima facie presumption that the writ was issued by the proper officer, in due form, and under seal: French v. Reel, 61-143; McNorton v. Akers, 24-369.

V. THE LEVY AND RETURN.

100. Beyond jurisdiction: An attachment levy made by a sheriff outside of his county, or secured by fraud or violence, is void, and may be dissolved by motion: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9-140.

101. What acts constitute: To constitute a valid levy, even between the parties, the officer should do that which would amount to a change of possession, or something equivalent to a claim of dominion coupled with the power to exercise it: Crawford v. Newell, 23-153.

102. Therefore, held, that the act of the sheriff in barricading the front door of the building in which a stock of goods was situated, without entering and taking possession of the goods, the owner of the stock having a key to the back door, by which he might have access thereto, such door not being barricaded or guarded, was not sufficient to constitute a levy: Bickler v. Kendall, 66-708.

103. The officer must do such acts as that, but for the protection of the writ, he would be liable in trespass therefor: Allen v. McCalla, 25-464.

104. Therefore, held, that a levy upon certain patterns, which remained locked up in a building, the key of which was in the possession of the owner, was not sufficient: Rix v. Silkknitter, 57-262.

105. The mere intention to levy, where no levy is actually made, will not create a lien as against a subsequent mortgagee: Collier v. French, 64-577.

106. Abandonment of levy: Where the officer, after levying his attachment, put the property in the possession of a workman on the premises, taking his receipt for it, and did not afterwards, either himself or through his agent, assert any possession over or control of the property, and permitted an assignee to take possession of such property and apply it to the payment of the debts of the owner, and gave him no notice of the fact of levy, and made no claim upon him for the property until more than two years after the levy, held, that the lien of the attachment was lost and the levy would be regarded as having been abandoned: Littleton v. Wyman, 69-248.

The levy and return.

107. An attachment lien upon personal property is lost by surrender of possession: Ibid.

108. Possession must be taken: It seems that a levy upon property not capable of manual delivery may be valid as between the parties, although the same is left in possession of the attachment defendant; but where property capable of possession, such as beer in tubs and vats, was left in defendant's possession, with authority to use as he wished by sale or otherwise, provided he should keep the quantity good, held, that the levy was not sufficient and was invalid, even as between the parties: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 47-400.

109. The thing against which the proceeding is directed must be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by virtue of a seizure, the evidence of which is the service of the writ and the return: McDonald v. Moore, 65-171.

110. Following property: Under the statutory provision (Code, § 2966), authorizing the sheriff to pursue and attach in an adjoining county property removed from the county after the writ is placed in his hands has no application to the case of the removal of the debtor: Budd v. Durall, 86-815.

111. Time of levy: Levy of the attachment may be made at any time before judgment and before the return: Westphal v. Sherwood, 69-364.

112. Notice of the levy, as required by Code, § 2967, in case of attachment of property in possession of defendant or a third person, is not necessary in case of garnishment: Phillips v. Germon, 43-101.

113. Corporate stock: At common law, shares of stock in an incorporated company could not be levied on. The only method, at present, of effecting levy under attachment is to follow the method pointed out by statute (Code, § 2967, ¶ 3), by giving to the president or other officer or agent of the company, as there specified, notice of the attachment: Moor v. Walker, 46-164.

114. Debts due defendant are levied on by garnishment, which is a mode of attachment: Woodward v. Adams, 9-474.

And see GARNISHMENT.

115. Judgments owned by defendant are only to be reached as other debts due him, by garnishment, there being no statutory provision, as there is in case of execution (Code, § 3046), for levy of the writ thereon: Ochiltree v. Missouri, I. & N. R. Co., 49-150. And see Osborn v. Cloud, 21-238.

116. Interest of mortgagee: The lien of a mortgagee upon land cannot be levied on by attaching the land. Garnishment is the method of reaching such interest: Courtney v. Carr, 6-238.

117. The interest of mortgagor in chattels covered by a chattel mortgage cannot be attached. Code, § 2964, directing the officer to give property in which defendant has a legal and unquestionable title preference over that in which his title is doubtful or only equitable, relates to the duty of the officer as to the order in which property shall be seized, but does not establish a rule as to what interests may be levied upon: Wells v. Sabelowitz, 68-238.

118. Unassigned dower right of a widow in lands of her deceased husband was not at common law subject to attachment, nor did the act of 1882 (9 G. A., ch. 151, § 1), which enlarged the dower to a fee-simple interest, change the rule. Whether the provisions of Code of 1878 (§ 2440) have changed it, quære: Rausch v. Moore, 48-611.

119. Landlord's share of crops: The right of a landlord to receive as rent a share of the crops grown upon the premises does not give him such interest in the crops, before his share is set off to him, that such share can be levied on under attachment. The landlord's interest can be reached only by garnishment of the tenant: Howard County v. Kyte, 69-307.

120. A mere license or privilege to erect buildings upon real property and use the same for a particular purpose, which may be surrendered at any time, does not constitute an interest in real estate, but is personal property, which can be levied upon only as other personal property: Melhop v. Meinhardt, 70—.

121. Equitable interests in real property, the legal title to which is in third persons, are not to be reached by garnishment: Seymour v. Kramer, 5-285.

122. The statement in the incumbrance book of an attachment of an equitable interest in land, not appearing of record, does not constitute notice to a purchaser or mortgagee of the person holding the legal title: Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Fletcher, 44-252.

123. Entry in incumbrance book: The mere entry in the incumbrance book of a statement of the fact of levy (as required by statute), coupled with the intention to make a levy, will not constitute a levy. The purpose of the entry is not as a part of the levy, but as constructive notice thereof: Collier v. French, 64-577.

124. An entry of the fact of levy on lands under an attachment against the husband constitutes no notice to a purchaser from the wife holding the legal title: Bailey v. McGregor, 46-667.

125. Indexing incumbrance book: Failure to enter the levy in the index of liens will not defeat the effect of the entry of the proper statement in the incumbrance book. The entry in the incumbrance book constitutes notice and affects the lien; the indexing, while directed to be made, is not made essential to the validity of the entry in the incumbrance book: Blodgett v. Huiscamp, 64-548.

126. Summary proceedings against defendant: To warrant a proceeding as provided by statute (Code, § 2908) against a defendant whose property cannot be found, to compel its disclosure, it is not necessary to show, outside the affidavit on which the summary proceeding is commenced, that a suit is pending in which attachment has been issued: Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66-629.

127. Wrongful levy; trespass of officer: Where the writ is substantially defective, it will constitute no defense in an action against the officer for trespass in acting under it: Deforest v. Swan, 4 G. Gr., 357.

128. A United States marshal seizing property under attachment issued from a federal court can be sued personally by the owner of property seized by him which is not subject to the writ: Sperry v. Ethridge, 70—.

129. A bond to indemnify the officer for not levying, in accordance with his legal duty, is void both as to the officer and the party injured: Cole v. Parker, 7-167.

130. Trespass in plaintiff: The possession of an officer who has taken property under an attachment is the possession of plaintiff in the attachment proceeding, and the latter will be held liable for a wrongful levy to the same extent as the former, whether he has actual knowledge of the seizure or not: Robinson v. Keith, 25-321.

131. Where chattel property in the possession of the mortgagor under a valid mortgage is levied upon in an attachment proceeding, and sold by order of the court procured by the attachment plaintiff, such plaintiff becomes liable to the mortgagee in an action of trespass: Meyer v. Gage, 65-606.

132. Conversion; liability of plaintiff: Where the seizure under the writ is not shown to be wrongful, the attachment plaintiff cannot be held liable for conversion without an allegation and proof that he did, or authorized the officer to do, some unlawful act with reference to the property: Burt v. Decker, 64-106.

133. Liability of attorney: An attorney is not liable for causing property to be seized under attachment, if he acts in obedience to the instructions of his client: Dawson v. Buford, 70—.

134. Appraisalment of the property levied on is not necessary to make the levy good; it is only required where a delivery bond is given: Smith v. Coopers, 9-376; Woodward v. Adams, 9-474.

135. Return: The officer may justify under a writ under which a levy has been made, although the writ has not yet been returned: Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11-387.

136. It is the levy of the attachment, and not the sheriff's return on the writ, that gives the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and a defect in the return will not render the proceedings void, nor subject to collateral attack; but they will be voidable only, and subject to correction in a direct proceeding: Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

137. The fact that the return does not state the property levied on to be that of defendant will not render subsequent proceedings under such levy void. (Overruling Tiffany v. Glover, 8 G. Gr., 387): Rowan v. Lamb, 4 G. Gr., 468.

138. Irregularities or defects in the return of an officer to the attachment are waived by acquiescence in the levy and consenting to the property being put into the possession of the officer. Such consent is shown by executing a delivery bond for the release of the property as authorized by law: Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Merrill, 68-540.

139. When to be made: Code, § 3010, requires that return be made immediately after the attachment of property, and at least not later than the first day of court succeeding such levy, but it is not required that the writ be returned the first day of the first term succeeding its issuance. The levy of the writ may be made at any time before judgment or before its return: Westphal v. Sherwood, 69-364.

140. The return as evidence; parol to vary: The return of the writ, being the act of a sworn officer, is prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated. Whether it can be contradicted by parol testimony, quære: Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11-387.

141. The return is the statutory evidence of what it purports to show. It constitutes, with the writ, one record. Without a return the court has no proper evidence before it on which to base any proceedings against specific property levied upon, or credits garnished: Rock v. Singmaster, 62-511.

142. The service and return of the writ are the evidence of the levy: McDonald v. Moore, 65-171.

143. Levy after return of the writ and after default upon service by publication will not confer jurisdiction over the property, and a sale thereunder will be a nullity: Osborn v. Cloud, 23-104.

VI. RIGHTS ACQUIRED BY LEVY; LIEN.

144. Inconsistent rights: An attaching plaintiff who has seized property as that of defendant cannot afterward assert a prior right in himself thereto, as under a pledge or sale: Citizens' Bank v. Dows, 68-460; Crawford v. Nolan, 70—.

145. Rights not greater than those of defendant: An attaching creditor acquires no greater right in the property attached than was held by the defendant at time of attachment: Manny v. Adams, 32-165; Harshberger v. Harshberger, 26-503; Bacon v. Thompson, 60-284; Rogers v. Highland, 69-504.

146. Prior unrecorded conveyance: The lien of an attachment does not, under our registry laws, take priority over an unrecorded conveyance, even though the attaching creditor had no notice of such conveyance: First Nat. Bank v. Hayslett, 40-659; Savery v. Browning, 18-246; Norton v. Williams, 9-528.

147. Notice to the officer before receiving the writ of attachment under which the levy is made of prior claims on the property must be deemed notice to the attaching plaintiff: Lyons v. Hamilton, 69-47.

And further, see NOTICE, I, b.

148. Assignment: If the property has been assigned prior to the levy and the assignee is diligent in asserting his rights, he will be entitled to a release of the levy: Stephenson v. Walden, 24-84.

149. Evidence of transfer; bill of sale: But evidence of a bill of sale, not accompanied by evidence of change of possession, cannot be received to defeat a levy of attachment on the property as that of the grantor: Bevan v. Hayden, 13-122.

150. Judgment; res inter alios acta: Where an intervenor sought to defeat an attachment lien, under claim that he was the owner of the property attached, held, that a decree in an action between him and attachment defendant, to which attaching plaintiff was not a party, was not admissible: McBride v. Harn, 48-151.

151. The burden of proof is upon an attachment creditor claiming priority over an attachment which is first in point of time: Allen v. Loring, 37-595.

152. Actual levy necessary: The mere intention to levy, where no levy is actually made, will not give the attaching creditor any priority over a mortgage of the property subsequently executed: Collier v. French, 64-577.

153. No lien in garnishment: In case of attachment a lien is acquired against the property, but no personal claim against a third party; while in garnishment there is no lien upon the property, but a personal claim is acquired against garnishee: Moore v. Walker, 46-164.

Custody of property.—Release or discharge.

154. Lien on corporate stock: A levy on shares of stock by notice to the officers of the corporation, as provided by statute, gives rise to a lien. The proceeding is not in the nature of a garnishment: Ibid.

155. The lien is a vested right which nothing subsequent can destroy, except the dissolution of the attachment. The legislature may suspend the enforcement of such liens, but cannot destroy them: Hannahs v. Felt, 15-141.

156. Therefore held, that a statute providing that levies already made upon property of volunteers in the United States army should be discharged was unconstitutional: Ibid.

157. The death of defendant will not destroy a lien already acquired: Lord v. Allen, 34-231.

VII. CUSTODY OF THE PROPERTY.

158. In custody of the law: Where property was held by the sheriff under attachment in an action for breach of warranty in the sale thereof, held, that being thus in the custody of the law, defendant was not entitled, on application to the court, to an order allowing him temporary possession thereof, for the purpose of trying whether it would conform to the terms of the warranty: Rogers v. Hanson, 35-233.

159. Appointment of receiver of mortgaged property: To justify the appointment of a receiver of attached property under the statute (Code, § 2970), some facts must be shown rendering the exercise of the power proper; and held, that there was no ground for such appointment, where the attachment was by garnishment of the mortgagee in possession of mortgaged property, selling in usual course of trade, and not shown to be an improper person: Silverman v. Kuhn, 53-436.

160. Care required of officer: The officer holding property under writ of attachment is only held to the exercise of ordinary care in the preservation of the property in his hands: Cresswell v. Burt, 61-590.

161. Compensation for keeping: While the sheriff is entitled to be allowed his necessary expenses for keeping the attached property, he is not to have any compensation for personal services in addition to his statutory fees and salary: King v. Shepherd, 63-215.

162. The sheriff is liable to a person employed by him to take care of attached property, and this claim for necessary expenses of keeping such property is to be presented by the sheriff, and not by the person employed by him for that purpose: Rowley v. Painter, 69-432.

VIII. RELEASE OR DISCHARGE; JUDGMENT; APPEAL.

a. Release from the levy.

163. Exempt property: Where property which is exempt from execution is seized under attachment, defendant may have it released by motion or by proceedings in replevin: Wilson v. Stripe, 4 G. Gr., 551.

164. Property of third person discharged: The officer may, at the peril of showing the real ownership of the property, discharge it on the ground that it is not the property of defendant in attachment, the burden of proof being on him to show that fact. Therefore, in an action against the officer for damages for wrongfully discharging attached property, evidence of ownership of the property by another person than the defendant in attachment should be admitted: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395; S. C., 51-605.

165. Doubtful title; release: An officer who has levied upon property, the title of which is in doubt, will render himself liable on his official bond by releasing such property if it is found that it was in fact subject to the attachment: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 51-605.

166. Discharge of excessive levy: If the officer levies upon goods exceeding in value the amount authorized, he may discharge the excess, but he should not release the entire levy: Ibid.

167. Indemnity bond; notice of claim: The provisions of statute (Code, §§ 8055-8060) authorizing the sheriff, on levying an execution, to require from the plaintiff in execution an indemnity bond in case notice is served upon him of a claim to the property on the part of a third person, and to release the property in case such bond is not given, were not originally applicable to levies under attachment; but held, that in case the property was afterwards held under an execution subsequently issuing in the same case, such provisions would apply: Allen v. Wheeler, 54-628; Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395.

Bond to discharge the attachment.— Delivery bond.

168. And held, that even if such bond should be given in an attachment case, it would only have the effect of a common law bond, and would not render the officer liable absolutely for releasing property from the levy: Wadsworth v. Walliker, 45-395.

169. A bond to indemnify the officer for not levying under the writ, in accordance with his official duty, is void, both as to the officer and the party injured: Cole v. Parker, 7-167.

170. But by 20 G. A., ch. 45, provisions similar to those above referred to in case of executions are made in case of attachments, and such statute is not unconstitutional: Cheadle v. Guittar, 68-680.

171. The notice to the officer by a third person, claiming the property, stating the nature and extent of his interest therein, and under what right he claims, is sufficient. Where such claim is based upon a mortgage securing notes, the consideration for the notes and mortgage need not be stated: Crawford v. Nolan, 70—.

b. Bond to discharge the attachment.

172. Terminates the lien: Where the statutory bond (provided for in Code, § 2994) discharging the attachment is executed, the property seized may be levied on under other attachments. The lien of the attachment is discharged by giving the bond: Jones v. Peasley, 3 G. Gr., 52.

173. The bond here contemplated must be for the performance of the judgment. A bond for the return of the property on demand does not release it from the lien of the attachment and terminate the detention for which the defendant may claim damages on the attachment bond, in case the attachment is wrongful: Selz v. Belden, 48-451.

174. This bond is a new security taking the place of the attachment lien, and a motion to dissolve the attachment cannot properly be made after such bond is given: Austin v. Burgett, 10-302.

175. Charges for keeping; costs: When such bond is given it is erroneous to require defendant to pay the charges accrued for keeping the attached property before releasing it to him. Such charges go with the costs in the case: Milburn v. Marlow, 4 G. Gr., 17.

176. Formalities of the bond: The plaintiff may sue on the bond, although not executed to him but to the sheriff: Moorman v. Collier, 32-188.

177. It is not essential that it be signed by defendant: Selz v. Belden, 48-451.

178. A bond, irregular in form, held sufficient: Sheppard v. Collins, 12-570.

179. Presumption of regularity: It will be presumed, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that a bond taken and approved by the clerk was taken under such circumstances as to render his action proper: Budd v. Durall, 36-315.

180. Not released by appeal bond: The giving of a supersedeas bond on appeal does not affect a bond previously given to discharge the attachment. The plaintiff may recover to the full amount of the discharge bond if necessary to satisfy his judgment, and if there is any part of the judgment unsatisfied, may also recover upon the supersedeas bond to that extent: State v. McGlothlin, 61-312.

181. Remedy on the bond: The statutory provision for the entry of judgment on the bond is merely additional to the remedy by action at common law: Ibid.

182. Discharge of sureties: Where the sureties on such bond have been discharged upon judgment against plaintiff without exception to the order of discharge, but on reversal, upon appeal, there is a new trial and plaintiff recovers, he cannot have judgment against the sureties if, after the order of discharge, they have surrendered indemnity previously held: Barton v. Thompson, 66-526.

c. Delivery bond.

183. Does not discharge attachment: A bond given as provided by statute (Code, § 2996) to secure the release of certain property, conditioned that it be returned to satisfy any judgment rendered against defendant, does not terminate the attachment, nor prevent defendant from moving for its discharge: Allerton v. Eldridge, 56-709.

184. Nor does it prevent a third party claiming title to the property from disputing the validity of the attachment by summary proceedings (under Code, § 3116): Tuttle v. Wheaton, 57-304.

185. The execution of a delivery bond for the release of the property constitutes a waiver of any objection to irregularities or defects in the return of the attachment: Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Merrill, 68-540.

186. Being for benefit of plaintiff, the bond is not limited to the officer serving the process, but delivery must be made, if delivery becomes necessary, to the officer who has the final process: Ramsey v. Coolbaugh, 13-164.

187. Defects in form: A mistake in the bond as to the court in which the attachment issued will not render the bond invalid as to the sureties: Ripley v. Gear, 58-460.

188. A delivery bond, though so defective as not to be sufficient under the statute, may still be enforced as a common law bond, and the attachment defendant will be liable thereon if judgment goes against him in the proceedings in which the attachment was issued: Garretson v. Reeder, 28-21.

189. Order for sale of the property, upon the rendering of judgment against defendant, is not necessary in order to fix liability on a delivery bond on which the property has been released: Ibid.; Waynant v. Dodson, 12-22.

190. Applicable in garnishment: Under Code of '51, § 1876, held, that debts or property attached by garnishment might be released in the same way as property actually seized, and that the provisions as to appraisement were applicable to such cases: Woodward v. Adams, 9-474.

191. Action on the bond may be brought by the assignee of the attachment plaintiff: Bowley v. Jewett, 56-492.

192. An alteration made in the bond at the time of delivery to the officer, for the purpose of more fully describing the property, held not to release the sureties, although made without their knowledge, for the reason that the bond would have been sufficient without the alteration, which was therefore immaterial: Ibid.

193. The validity of the levy, not being questioned on the trial of an action on the delivery bond, cannot be first objected to on appeal in the supreme court: American Ex. Co. v. Smith, 57-242.

194. The execution of an appeal bond, on appeal to the supreme court from a judgment rendered in an attachment proceeding, does not operate to discharge the delivery bond. The plaintiff may avail himself of either or both such securities: Williams v. Robison, 21-498.

195. An appeal bond does not take the place of the delivery bond: Jennings v. Warnock, 87-278.

196. The appraisement provided for by statute to determine the amount of the bond to be given is not prima facie, at least, essential to the validity of the bond, and need not be shown in the first instance in an action thereon: Woodward v. Adams, 9-474.

197. Defense; another's property: A defendant in an action on a bond, who seeks to take advantage of the fact that the property did not belong to him, must state in his answer to whom it did belong: Blatchley v. Adair, 5-545.

d. Dissolution of attachment or release of property on motion.

198. For a defect apparent on the record: Attached property will be discharged on motion only where it is apparent of record that it should not have been levied on; a third party claiming the property should proceed in accordance with the provisions of Code, § 8016: Tidrick v. Sulgrove, 38-339; Williams v. Walker, 11-77.

199. That the petition for attachment does not state sufficient ground therefor, cannot be raised by demurrer, but must be reached by motion as here provided: Hunt v. Collins, 4-56.

200. Discharge not defeated by ground of attachment subsequently accrued: Where it appears that, at the time the writ issued, plaintiff had no cause of action, the property should be discharged, although a cause of action, as made out in an amended petition, has accrued subsequently to the writ: Cramer v. White, 29-336.

201. For defects in petition: In a particular case, held, that an attachment should have been quashed for defects in the affidavit to the petition: Stadler v. Parmlee, 10-23.

202. Insufficiency of amount of bond may be a proper ground for motion to dissolve: Hamble v. Owen, 20-70.

Dissolution.—Release upon motion of third party.

203. Defect in writ or want of bond is to be raised in this manner, and not by demurrer: Brace v. Grady, 36-352.

204. Failure of plaintiff to recover on the whole of the claim sued on is not ground for quashing the attachment, pro tanto, after judgment: Sackett v. Partridge, 4-416.

205. The truth of the facts alleged as ground of attachment cannot be questioned on motion to dissolve. The remedy is by suit on the attachment bond: Sturman v. Stone, 81-115.

206. Exemption: That property levied on is exempt from execution may be set up as a ground for its release: Wilson v. Stripe, 4 G. Gr., 551.

207. Where it was shown that the property attached was exempt, held, that it should have been discharged upon motion, and that such showing was not inconsistent with the allegations in the petition for attachment, that plaintiff was about to remove his property from the state: Hastings v. Phoenix, 59-394.

208. If the party fails to take advantage of his exemption by motion to have the property released, he may still do so by replevin: Wilson v. Stripe, 4 G. Gr., 551.

209. Where attached property was released on motion as exempt, held, that upon seizure of the same property upon execution in the same action defendant might recover it by replevin, although a writ of error had been taken from the decision on the motion, no supersedeas bond being filed: Pellersells v. Allen, 56-717.

210. Exemption must be clearly shown: To justify the discharge of property on motion on the ground of exemption, the case should be made clear and entirely satisfactory. Otherwise the party should be left to other and ordinary means for testing the liability of the property to seizure under the writ: McLaren v. Hall, 26-297.

211. Wrongful levy: The fact that the property was attached by the sheriff outside of his county, or that the levy was secured by fraud or violence, is a ground for discharge of the property on motion: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9-140.

212. Title to real property: The question whether certain real estate is subject to attachment may properly be determined on motion, but if the title to such property be a matter of dispute between the parties, upon the facts, it cannot properly be determined in this manner: Rausch v. Moore, 48-611.

213. Want of an allowance of the amount of property to be attached, as required in actions on tort, will not be ground to discharge the entire attachment where the action is both on contract and tort; but if more property is seized than can be held under attachment on the portion of the action founded on contract, the excess may be released: Moses v. Arnold, 48-187.

214. Where there is an absence of such allowance in an action on tort, and motion is made to discharge the attachment on that ground, the court may then make an allowance to relate back, as between the parties, to the issuance of the writ, and refuse to discharge the attachment: Magoon v. Gillett, 54-54.

215. Pleading; evidence; estoppel: No pleading controverting the motion is required or allowed. Evidence of any facts controverting the ground for release set up in the motion may be introduced without pleading them, even though they establish an estoppel: Joyce v. Miller, 59-761.

216. Dissolution after discharge by bond: Dissolution of the attachment should not be ordered after the attachment has been discharged by bond: Austin v. Burgett, 10-302.

217. Appearance by motion to release attached property is a general appearance to the action: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417.

e. Release upon motion of third party.

218. A third party claiming the property may avail himself of the summary proceedings provided by statute (Code, § 3016) to have his right to the property determined, although he has already secured possession of the property by a delivery bond: Tuttle v. Wheaton, 57-304.

219. This section simply provides an additional remedy to the third person whose property is wrongfully seized. He is not bound to follow it: Sperry v. Ethridge, 70—.

220. Damages for the use or loss of service of the property cannot be recovered in such proceeding. Such relief can be had only in an independent action: Jennings v. Hoppe, 44-205.

221. Any claim, lien, interest or title to or in the property attached may be set up at any time before the proceeds are paid to the plaintiff in attachment: Howe v. Jones, 57-130.

222. Applicable in general as well as specific attachments: These provisions are not limited to cases of specific attachment: Jennings v. Hoppe, 44-205.

223. Upon appeal from judgment of a justice against a garnishee, taken by the defendant in the action, a third person may intervene and assert his claim to the debt under these provisions although the garnishee does not appeal: Daniels v. Clark, 38-556.

f. Dissolution upon judgment; appeal.

224. Judgment against plaintiff upon demurrer or nonsuit discharges the attachment: Harrow v. Lyon, 3 G. Gr., 157; Brown v. Harris, 2 G. Gr., 505.

225. Not revived by reversal: Where attachment has been dissolved by judgment against plaintiff, it is not revived by reversal of the judgment on appeal: Harrow v. Lyon, 3 G. Gr., 157.

226. Nor by setting aside nonsuit: Where the attachment is released by judgment of nonsuit, it is not revived by an order setting aside the nonsuit upon motion: Brown v. Harris, 2 G. Gr., 505.

227. Judgment dissolving the attachment on motion is suspended by appeal, if the appeal is taken within a reasonable time, and if the judgment is reversed the attachment remains: Danforth v. Carter, 4-230.

228. Such a judgment is a final adjudication upon all questions involved therein, unless appealed from in proper time. To continue the lien as to third persons, the appeal must be taken forthwith [but see now, statutory provision referred to below], but as between the parties four days is a reasonable time. In the absence of notice that the plaintiff purposes appealing from the judgment dissolving the attachment on motion, the officer holding money which is the proceeds of the attached property may at once pay it over to the party thus appearing to be entitled thereto: Danforth v. Rupert, 11-547.

229. Where the special verdict of the jury showed that at the time the attachment issued plaintiff had no cause of action, held, that the attached property was discharged, although there was a verdict for plaintiff on an amended petition subsequently filed: Cramer v. White, 29-336.

230. Judgment against plaintiff discharges the attachment without any order of court, and an appeal, taken after the two days from the rendition of such judgment, allowed by Code, § 3019, within which to appeal, will not revive the attachment: Harger v. Spofford, 44-369.

231. The fact that defendant afterward formally moves for a dissolution will not enable plaintiff, by appealing within two days from such order, to keep the attachment in force: Ibid.

232. Sureties discharged: Where no exception was taken to an order discharging sureties on a discharge bond upon a judgment being entered against plaintiff, held, that a subsequent reversal would not entitle plaintiff to judgment against the sureties, it appearing that after the order discharging them they had released indemnity which they held: Barton v. Thompson, 66-526.

233. The invalidity of judgment for plaintiff, for whatever cause, does not defeat the attachment lien, but the case stands as if no judgment had been rendered, all rights depending upon the preceding steps being unimpaired: Hodson v. Tibbetts, 16-97.

234. Special execution: The lien of the attachment is not lost by reason of an omission to order a special execution: Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11-387.

235. Where attached property is sold under execution, it will be presumed that it is sold under special execution: Peterson v. Foli, 67-402.

236. Notice by publication; jurisdiction: In an attachment suit commenced by publication of notice, in which the court does not acquire jurisdiction over the person of defendant by personal service or appearance, the plaintiff cannot have judgment for a general execution for any residue of the debt left unsatisfied after exhausting the attached property: Johnson v. Dodge, 19-106.

 Remedy for wrongfully suing out the attachment.

IX. REMEDY FOR WRONGFULLY SUING OUT THE ATTACHMENT.
a. Form of action.

237. Independently of statute: An action might be maintained independently of the statute against a party who, maliciously and without probable cause, should sue out a writ of attachment; but in the absence of proof of malice and want of probable cause, the only remedy is on the bond: Tallant v. Burlington Gas Light Co., 36-262.

238. Where a writ of attachment is sued out maliciously and without probable cause, and damage ensues, the defendant has a remedy on common law principles, aside from the remedy on the attachment bond: Preston v. Cooper, 1 Dillon, 589.

239. The only remedy of the attachment defendant, it seems, is upon the bond, or by an action for malicious attachment, in which latter case it is not sufficient to allege that the writ was wrongfully procured, but there must be allegations of malice and want of probable cause: Ibid.

240. Where by statute no bond in attachment is required and none given, the defendant, in the absence of legislation giving the right, cannot maintain an action against the plaintiff in attachment, by showing merely that the writ was wrongfully sued out, because there was no debt due from him, but he must show malice, want of probable cause, and damage, as required by the principles of the common law in actions for malicious prosecution: Ibid.

241. Action should be on bond: An action for wrongfully suing out an attachment should be brought on the bond: Abbott v. Whipple, 4 G. Gr., 320.

The only method of questioning the truth of the grounds alleged for the issuance of the attachment is by action on the bond: See cases supra, §§ 51-54.

b. What constitutes wrongful suing out.

242. Want of actual ground or reasonable belief: The question in an action on the bond, for improperly suing out the writ, is not alone whether the facts alleged as grounds for attachment were actually true, but whether plaintiff, exercising that degree of caution that a reasonably prudent man should have exercised, had good cause to believe that they were true: Winchester v. Cox, 4 G. Gr., 121; Mahnke v. Damon, 3-107; Burton v. Knapp, 14-196; Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54-68.

243. Defendant may show as a defense, either that he had good cause to believe the ground stated to be true, or that it was true in fact, irrespective of his grounds of belief: Vorse v. Phillips, 37-428.

244. To constitute reasonable ground of belief that the facts alleged for securing an attachment are true, it is not necessary that the facts be such as to lead a reasonably prudent man to act in matters of the highest moment to himself. Reasonable grounds of belief of their truth is sufficient: Carey v. Gunnison, 51-203.

245. A verdict allowing a recovery on the bond necessarily implies a finding that the plaintiff in attachment had not reasonable grounds to believe his allegations true, as well as that they were not true: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 58-730.

c. Pleading conditions and breach of bond.

246. Breach must be alleged: In an action on the bond, the conditions of such bond must be set out, and facts alleged constituting their breach: Ryder v. Thomas, 32-56.

247. As, for instance, the non-payment of damages which the party injured claims to have suffered: Horner v. Harrison, 37-378.

248. A failure to make such averment may be raised for the first time on motion in arrest of judgment, at least where no evidence of damage is offered: Hencke v. Johnson, 62-555.

And see, in general, PLEADINGS, §§ 90-97.

249. "Wilful wrongfulness:" An allegation that "the attachment was wrongfully sued out with wilful wrongfulness," held, a sufficient allegation of want of reasonable belief of the truth of the grounds set out on the part of the plaintiff in the attachment: Abbott v. Whipple, 4 G. Gr., 320.

d. Action on bond.

250. Accrues when: The breach of the bond consists in the wrongful suing out of the writ, and whatever damages have resulted to defendant are to be deemed a claim held by him at the commencement of the suit and filing of the bond, when they are concurrent acts; but otherwise, if the attachment is sued out subsequently to the commencement of the action: Reed v. Chubb, 9-178.

Action on bond.—Evidence of wrongful suing out.

251. The right of action on the bond accrues as soon as the defendant in the attachment is disturbed in the possession of the property levied on by virtue of the writ, if it is wrongfully issued, and he need not wait until the termination of the principal suit to sue on the bond: Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10-337.

252. By way of counter-claim: Therefore (without the statutory provision to that effect now found in Code, § 3017), held, that where the attachment was sued out at the commencement of the action, a claim on the bond for damages for the wrongful suing out of the attachment might be interposed as a set-off or counter-claim: Reed v. Chubb, 9-178; Stadler v. Parmlee, 10-23.

253. The decision of the court on this point in the foregoing cases would be subject to very grave doubts did not the statute now expressly authorize suit on the bond by way of counter-claim: Branch of State Bank v. Morris, 13-136.

254. Such a counter-claim is an answer in the action sufficient to prevent default against defendant: Town v. Bringolf, 47-133.

255. Assignment of claim on bond: Where the debtor, after the suing out of the attachment, makes a general assignment, the assignee may intervene in the attachment proceeding in which the debtor has set up the claim for damages on the bond as a counter-claim: Dunham v. Greenbaum, 56-303.

256. Where defendant had previous to the attachment made an assignment of his property, held, that the right of action on the attachment bond inured to the assignee, and that a subsequent assignment thereof by the latter to the defendant would not enable defendant to set it up as a counter-claim in the action against him: Rumsey v. Robinson, 58-225.

e. Evidence of wrongful suing out.

257. No indebtedness: If there was no indebtedness from defendant to plaintiff in the attachment suit, that fact alone would probably be conclusive evidence that the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54-68.

258. The plaintiff's belief in such case with reference to the truthfulness of the grounds of attachment would not prevent such liability: Porter v. Wilson, 4 G. Gr., 314.

259. Dismissal of attachment suit by plaintiff therein and release of attached property does not, of itself, show that the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Nockles v. Eggspieler, 47-400.

260. Amendment: Where the petition stating the indebtedness in an attachment suit was amended after the suit was brought, so as to set up another cause of action, held that, as the second cause of action, as stated, arose after the bringing of suit, and was also inconsistent with the first, the filing of the amendment must be deemed an abandonment of the first cause of action and an admission that it did not exist when the attachment was sued out: Young v. Broadbent, 23-539.

261. Recovery of less than five dollars does not, in actions of tort, show that the attachment was wrongfully sued out. (See Code, § 2953; distinguishing Gaddis v. Lord, 10-141): Weller v. Hawes, 49-45.

262. The judgment in the attachment suit may be introduced in evidence in an action on the bond, and is conclusive as to the indebtedness between the parties, but not as to the plaintiff's belief in regard to the truth of the matters stated in his petition: Gaddis v. Lord, 10-141; Raver v. Webster, 3-502.

263. Proof of cause of action not conclusive: The attachment may be wrongful, or even wilfully wrongful, although the cause of action is a just one: Drummond v. Stewart, 8-341.

264. The burden of proof is upon the party claiming that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, to establish that fact: Burrows v. Lehdorff, 8-96; Veiths v. Hagge, 8-163, 191.

265. The party seeking to recover for the wrongful suing out of the writ has the burden of showing, not only that the grounds stated therefor were not true, but also that the party suing out the writ did not have reasonable ground to believe that they were true: Dent v. Smith, 53-262.

266. Intent of debtor: Where the ground alleged for an attachment was that defendant was about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, held, that on the trial of a counter-claim for damages for the wrongful suing out of such attachment, defendant could not testify what his intention in disposing of his property really was, the true question being whether plaintiff had reasonable cause to believe that defendant's intention was fraudulent: Selz v. Belden, 48-451.

267. The opinion of a witness as to the debtor's intention in disposing of property is not admissible: Carey v. Gunnison, 51-202.

268. Refusal to secure or pay, while no ground for suing out an attachment, is admissible in evidence on the question whether the attachment was wrongfully sued out: Myers v. Wright, 44-38.

269. So, also, refusal of defendant to secure or pay indebtedness to others, such fact being known to plaintiff before suing out the attachment, may be shown: Dent v. Smith, 53-262.

270. Defendant's indebtedness at the time of attachment may be material as bearing on the question whether plaintiff was actuated by malice in suing out the attachment: Mitchell v. Harcourt, 62-349.

271. Deeds of conveyance by defendant of his property, made subsequent to the issuance of the attachment, are not admissible on the question as to whether he was about to dispose of his property at the time of attachment with intent to defraud his creditors: Dynes v. Robinson, 11-187.

272. The writ and return thereon are admissible as evidence in an action on the bond: Drummond v. Stewart, 8-341.

273. Statements of attaching plaintiff at the time of suing out the attachment are not admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing want of malice: Shuck v. Vanderventer, 4 G. Gr., 264.

274. Such statements made after the commencement of suit, and not connected with its commencement, are not receivable to show malice: Burton v. Knapp, 14-196.

275. Evidence that plaintiff, on the day on which attachment was levied, said, concerning the levy, that defendant therein "had had his time, and now he [plaintiff] would have his," held admissible to show the wrongful suing out: White v. Beck, 64-122.

276. Advice of counsel will go to rebut the idea of malice, but it must be proved that the party submitted his cause to the attorney, and was by him advised that he had a right to sue out an attachment. Proof of such advice may defeat the recovery of exemplary, but not of actual, damages: Raver v. Webster, 8-502.

277. It must appear that a full and fair statement of the facts was made to the attorney: Porter v. Knight, 63-365.

f. Measure of damages; attorney fees; exemplary damages.

278. Expenses of defending: In an action on the bond, either original or by way of counter-claim, the party, if entitled to recover at all, may recover all expenses incurred in making defense to the attachment proceeding: Vorse v. Phillips, 37-428.

279. Attorneys' fees: In the absence of any express statutory provision, the party suing on an attachment bond cannot recover as a part of the costs or expenses covered by the bond, the fees of his attorney in prosecuting such suit: Ibid.

280. Nor even his attorneys' fees on defending against the principal suit: Plumb v. Woodmansee, 84-116.

281. Attorneys' fees, how assessed: Under the present statutory provision (Code, § 2961) authorizing the recovery by a party suing on an attachment bond of reasonable attorneys' fees to be fixed by the court, the jury have nothing to do with fixing the amount of such fee. The better practice would be not to introduce any evidence as to the fee during the trial, but if, in answer to a special interrogatory, the jury find that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, then evidence as to the amount of the fee should be introduced to the court and a finding made, and the amount so fixed should then be added to or deducted from the amount found by the jury, as the case may require: Selz v. Belden, 48-451.

282. Attorneys' fees constitute a part of the costs, and the legislature may authorize the court to fix the amount, without submitting the question to a jury: Weller v. Hawes, 49-45.

283. A verdict for actual damages, in an action on the bond, and a special finding that the attachment was wrongfully sued out, are sufficient to warrant the allowance of an attorney's fee. That there was no reasonable cause to believe the ground upon which the attachment was issued to be true, is implied in such verdict and special finding: Nockles v. Eggspeler, 59-780.

284. In fixing the attorney's fee the court is not to take into account the trial of the principal case, but only the fee for prosecuting, by original action or counter-claim, the cause of action on the bond, on account of the wrongful suing out of the attachment: Porter v. Knight, 63-365.

285. Actual and not remote damages: Where the suing out of an attachment was not wilful and malicious, the damages recoverable are confined to actual compensation for damages immediately consequent upon the wrongful act: Plumb v. Woodmansee, 84-116.

286. Use: While the party against whom the attachment issues is entitled to compensation for the loss sustained by reason of being deprived of the use of property levied on, the value of this use must be predicated upon the condition of the property when it was attached and not upon what its condition was before, or what it was intended to be in the future: Ibid.

287. Value of goods: In an action on the bond the true measure of the value of the goods attached is the cost of replacing them at the place where levied upon: Selz v. Belden, 48-451.

288. The measure of damage is the fair cash value of the property at the time when it was wrongfully taken and interest thereon: Porter v. Knight, 63-365.

289. The elements of damage to be considered include diminution in value of stock by reason of the levy and the closing up or stopping the business; also rent of store during the time the business is stopped; also loss of employment during the interruption in business if the debtor had been giving his personal labor and attention to the business and has been unable to obtain other employment: Lowenstein v. Monroe, 55-82.

290. The defendant in the attachment is to recover such losses as he may have sustained by reason of being deprived of the use of the property levied on, and any injury thereto by its loss or depreciation in value: Ibid.; Campbell v. Chamberlain, 10-337.

291. Injuries to character, or credit, or business are too remote and speculative to be considered: Ibid.

292. Loss of profits in the retail of the goods is to be disregarded: Lowenstein v. Monroe, 55-82.

293. Injuries to credit cannot be shown as an element of damage: Mitchell v. Harcourt, 63-349.

294. Chattel mortgage: Where property levied on in attachment was taken from the officer under a prior chattel mortgage and sold, the balance only in excess of the mortgage being turned over to the officer by virtue of his levy, the damage for the wrongful act in suing out the writ will be limited to the balance paid the officer after the satisfaction of the mortgage, and interest, and the damages sustained by being deprived of the property during its detention under the attachment: Porter v. Knight, 63-365.

295. Rents: Where the rent of a mill was included in the claim for damages on the bond given in an attachment sued out by the landlord against the tenant on an independent indebtedness, held, that the tenant was thereby barred from afterward setting up the interruption of his possession as a defense in an action for the rent, although the claim on the bond had been interposed before the entire damage had accrued and the whole amount thereof was not then recoverable: Davis v. Milburn, 4-246.

296. Attachment of property of wrong party; trespass: Where the proceeding was commenced against a firm and its members, but the bond was to the firm only and the writ was directed against firm property only, held, that although the attachment was wrongfully sued out, yet there could not be a recovery on the bond by a member of the firm for damages caused to him by the levy of the attachment on his property, for the reason that the levy was not authorized under the writ and was a trespass by the officer for which the plaintiff in attachment was not liable on the bond: Mason v. Rice, 66-174.

The attorney who acts in procuring an attachment is not liable for damages: See ATTORNEYS, § 82.

297. Exemplary damages: To entitle a party to exemplary damages, it must appear that the attaching plaintiff procured the attachment without reasonable grounds to believe the truth of the matter stated in his application, and with the intention, design or set purpose of injuring the defendant therein: Gaddis v. Lord, 10-141; Raver v. Webster, 3-502.

298. Something more must be made to appear than that the ground alleged for the attachment did not exist, and that attaching plaintiff had no ground to believe it did. These facts must be proven to establish the right to recover actual damages. To recover exemplary damages it must be shown that plaintiff acted with the intention, design or set purpose of injuring him: Nordhaus v. Peterson, 54-68.

299. There cannot be a recovery of exemplary damages where actual damages are not recoverable: Myers v. Wright, 44-88

g. Judgment on bond.

300. Not binding on sureties: A judgment on the bond, in an action to which the sureties are not parties, is not binding upon them: Bunt v. Rheum, 52-619.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

1. Control of cases on appeal: When a criminal case is appealed to the supreme court, the attorney-general obtains control of it, but any agreements made by the district attorney while the case is in the lower court, are binding as against the attorney-general (Code, §§ 150, 205): State v. Fleming, 13-443.

I. AUTHORITY; HOW FAR CLIENT BOUND BY ACTS.

1. Before bringing suit: An attorney may be employed in contemplation of a suit to be brought, and his client will be bound by his stipulations with reference thereto, to the same extent as if such stipulations had been made after the bringing of suit: Hefferman v. Burt, 7-320.

2. Granting extension: Where the attorney was directed to "secure or collect" the claim, he'd, that he had authority to extend the time of payment on receiving additional security: Crauford v. Nolan, 70—.

3. To carry on suit; presumption: A regular attorney has authority to bring a suit and continue it to its final determination. He cannot be called upon to prove his authority, but the want of it must be shown by the objecting party: State v. Carothers, 1 G. Gr., 464.

4. Agreement for judgment and stay: An attorney appearing for a party may make an agreement in writing for judgment and an extension of time of payment: Potter v. Parsons, 14-236.

5. Collection of judgment; satisfaction: The authority of an attorney with respect to a claim does not terminate with the rendition of judgment, but he may control the judgment until its collection: Death v. Bank of Pittsburg, 1-382; and he has authority to receive payment and enter satisfaction of the judgment: McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Gr., 360.

 Authority of.

6. On appeal: An attorney retained to attend to a suit in a particular court is not thereby authorized without further authority to appeal the case, and cannot recover, under such circumstances, for services rendered in the appellate court: Hopkins v. Mallard, 1 G. Gr., 117.

7. Employment of another attorney: An attorney intrusted with the business of his principal has no authority to employ another attorney to represent his principal, and the latter will not be liable for costs incurred by the attorney thus employed: Antrobus v. Sherman, 65-230.

8. Although one attorney may not have authority to turn over a case to another, yet where by reason of reliance on an agreement with such second attorney the adverse attorney was not present when the case was called and a judgment was recovered by default, held, there was sufficient surprise to warrant a new trial: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Gillett, 88-434.

9. Contract to turn over business: An attorney to whom notes have been intrusted for collection has no authority to turn them over to another for that purpose, and a contract to do so is illegal, so that damages cannot be recovered for its breach: Smalley v. Greene, 52-241.

10. Compromise: An attorney cannot, without express authority, make a compromise which will operate injuriously upon his client: De Louis v. Meek, 2 G. Gr., 55; Pocell v. Spaulding, 3 G. Gr., 448.

11. Where an attorney, retained in an action to recover possession of real property, entered into a contract that his client should pay defendant a specified sum, whereupon defendant should surrender possession, held, that such agreement was not binding upon the client and that he could recover without payment of the sum stipulated: Stuck v. Reese, 15-122.

12. Agreement of client not to compromise: A construction of a contract between an attorney and client which would prevent settlement of the suit by the client will not be favored by the courts: Ellwood v. Wilson, 21-523.

13. Agreement to convey land: An agreement by attorney for plaintiff in an action of right, for conveyance of a portion of the premises, held, not binding on the client: Rayburn v. Kuhl, 10-92.

14. Compromise; judgment by consent: Where an attorney has, in good faith, compromised the suit and consents to judgment against his client, the latter cannot, afterward, in an action in another state on such judgment, defend on the ground of want of authority in the attorney to make the compromise: Crawford v. White, 17-560.

15. May receive money only in payment: An attorney has no authority to receive anything but money in payment of a claim left with him for collection, unless specially so authorized: Drain v. Doggett, 41-683; McCarver v. Nealey, 1 G. Gr., 360.

16. An attorney who has a claim for collection has no power, in the absence of special authority, to receive anything but money in payment of the claim, nor has he the power to accept as payment a less amount of money than the whole sum due. If it is sought to prove that an attorney has been given special power not embraced in his employment, it must be established in the same way that the authority of other agents must be shown, but cannot be shown by his declarations: Bigler v. Toy, 68-687.

17. Affidavits, verification of pleadings, etc.: An attorney may make affidavit on an application of his client for change of venue: State v. Mooney, 10-506; or for continuance: Widner v. Hunt, 4-855.

18. The attorney may verify a petition where he shows a knowledge of the facts: Chittenden v. Hobbs, 9-417; Bates v. Robinson, 8-318.

19. But if the knowledge of the attorney is not shown, the verification is insufficient: Clute v. Hazleton, 51-855.

See, generally, PLEADINGS, II.

20. Authority to sign bond: Where the lower court upheld an attachment bond signed by the attorney for his client, held, that on appeal it would be presumed that it appeared to the lower court that the attorney had such authority, in the absence of any showing to the contrary: Goddard v. Cunningham, 6-400.

 Authority of.

21. Action by attorney in his own name: It seems that it is not unusual nor improper for an attorney to whom a claim has been sent for collection, to bring action thereon in his own name: Seevers v. Hamilton, 6-199.

22. Recovery back of money paid over: In such a case, the money collected on the judgment thus recovered having been paid to the client, held, that the attorney could not recover back from the client the amount thus paid over, upon being compelled to refund the sum collected on account of irregularities in the proceeding in which the judgment was recovered, unless he could put the client in statu quo as to the original claim: Ibid.

Appearance by attorney, see APPEARANCE, §§ 6-16.

23. Want of authority; how raised: Absence of authority on the part of plaintiff's attorney to bring a suit may be a ground for dismissing it, or, if the attorney wants time in order to make a showing of authority, for continuance, but it cannot be taken advantage of as a ground to defeat recovery: Savary v. Savary, 3-271.

24. The showing to require an attorney to prove his authority, held insufficient in a particular case: Savary v. Savary, 8-217.

25. A judgment by default entered against a defendant upon an appearance for him by attorney, which is made without authority and by mistake, should be set aside: Rice v. Griffith, 9-539.

26. Where a demurrer is filed without authority and a valid appearance is afterward made, a new demurrer may be filed: Winterstien v. Walker, 10-198.

27. Ratification by claiming benefit of plea: A party claiming the benefit of a plea put in by an attorney cannot deny the authority of such attorney to act in the case: Ottroge v. Schutte, 51-279.

28. Ratification inferred from long silence: Where an attorney accepted part payment in full satisfaction of a judgment procured for his client, and no further steps were taken for the enforcement of said judgment for eleven years, held, that it would be inferred that the attorney had authority to make such settlement or that the client was informed of his action, if without authority, and had by long silence ratified it: Reid v. Dickinson, 87-56.

29. Ratification by paying attorney: The client, having ratified the act of the attorney appearing for him by paying him for his services, is bound by the judgment: Ryan v. Doyle, 81-53.

30. Client chargeable with fraud of attorney: An attorney, when acting in court procedure for his client, acts in his stead, and a judgment recovered may be set aside for fraudulent representations made by the attorney in procuring it, when such representations would have been a ground for setting it aside if made by the party himself: De Louis v. Meek, 2 G. Gr., 55.

31. Client chargeable with negligence of attorney: The law regards the negligence of an attorney as the client's own neglect, and will give no relief from the consequences thereof: Jones v. Leech, 46-186.

32. Negligence of attorney's clerk: Negligence of the clerk of the attorney, in filing pleadings, must be imputed to the client himself: Hayward v. Goldsberry, 63-436.

33. Negligence in failing to prosecute action; default: The negligence of the attorney is imputed to the client, when it is sought to set aside default where verdicts or judgments binding upon the parties have been entered, but not where the action has merely been dismissed for want of prosecution: Byington v. Quincy, 61-480.

34. Setting aside judgment for mistake of attorney: While the law exacts of attorneys diligence in their business, and will not relieve against their negligence, yet relief may be granted where mistake has occurred without fault. Attorneys are not required to be diligent and careful beyond the capacities of human nature: Buena Vista County v. Iowa Falls & S. C. R. Co., 49-657.

35. Notice to attorney: Knowledge of the attorney is, in general, considered notice to the client: De Louis v. Meek, 2 G. Gr., 55. And see AGENCY, III, d.

36. Service upon attorney: In ordinary actions service upon an attorney is not sufficient to give a court jurisdiction: Death v. Bank of Pittsburg, 1-382.

37. In actions to enjoin judgment; chancery rule: Under the English chancery practice, where the judgment plaintiff was a non-resident, service in an action in equity to enjoin the collection of the judgment might be made upon a resident attorney having charge of such collection; but under our procedure such an action might be brought to enjoin the sheriff from levying execution under the judgment: Ibid.

38. Acceptance of service; presumption: Where the record recites an acceptance of service by attorney, it will be presumed, in favor of the judgment, that authority to accept service existed, or that some other form of service was shown: Prince v. Griffin, 16-552.

39. Appearance of authorized attorney cures any defect by reason of want of authority in such attorney to accept service of the notice: Fanning v. Minnesota R. Co., 87-879.

40. Appearance; presumption: Although the attorney cannot, without special authority, admit service of jurisdictional process upon his client, yet it will be presumed, in all collateral attacks and perhaps on appeal or writ of error, that a regular attorney who appeared for a defendant, though not served, had authority to do so: Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

41. In action on foreign judgment: But in an action upon a foreign judgment the defendant in the judgment may successfully contest it by showing that the attorney entering an appearance for him, without service having been made, did so without authority: Ibid.

42. In action on domestic judgments; laches: In case of a domestic judgment rendered upon such unauthorized appearance and without service, the party against whom the judgment is thus improperly rendered is entitled to relief if the judgment is unjust and relief is sought by bill or motion without laches; but the party must promptly disavow the action of the attorney upon receiving knowledge thereof: Ibid.

43. Attacking foreclosure; redemption: A junior lien holder may, for the purpose of establishing his right to redeem from the foreclosure under a senior mortgage to which it was sought to make him a party, show that although the decree recites service upon him, it was actually rendered upon acceptance of service and appearance by an attorney without authority, and this may be shown as against third persons purchasing at the sale: Newcomb v. Dewey, 27-381.

44. Judgment on unauthorized appearance void: A judgment rendered without service of notice and upon appearance by attorney without authority is void: Macomber v. Peck, 39-351.

45. Attorney exceeding authority: The right to contest a judgment, on account of want of authority of the attorney appearing for a defendant not served, exists only when the want of authority is total, and not where an attorney, regularly employed, has merely exceeded his authority: Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

46. Foreign judgment; equitable defense: When want of authority of attorney to enter appearance is made the ground of an equitable defense in an action on a foreign judgment, it should be alleged also that defendant is not indebted to plaintiff on the claim on which the judgment was based: Crawford v. White, 17-560.

47. Appearance; presumption; injury: The appearance of an attorney for a party is prima facie evidence of authority, and before his act can be avoided, injury resulting from the unauthorized appearance must be shown: Piggott v. Addicks, 8 G. Gr., 427.

48. Defense should be shown: A party, seeking to have a judgment set aside on the ground that it was rendered on appearance by an attorney without authority, should allege and show a defense to the claim: Russell v. Pottawattamie County, 29-256.

49. Presumption; burden of proof; amount of evidence: Where the record shows appearance by attorney, a party attacking the judgment, on the ground of want of authority of the attorney to appear, must overcome such presumption: Potter v. Parsons, 14-286; and must do so by clear and satisfactory evidence: Wheeler v. Cox, 56-36; Russell v. Pottawattamie County, 29-256.

50. Authority, evidence of: Authority to appear, held sufficiently established by the attorney's own testimony and a written receipt signed by the party for whom appearance was made, acknowledging receipt of money collected by the litigation, although the party himself testified that no such authority was given: Ellis v. White, 61-644.

51. Where the statement of the attorney in showing his authority discloses the fact that he is acting on written authority, he may properly be required to produce it: State ex rel. v. Tilghman, 6-496.

52. An affidavit of an attorney, that he appeared in the lower court for defendant, cannot be received on appeal to show that the lower court had jurisdiction: Stout v. Fortner, 7-183.

53. Authority not questioned on appeal: Where the record, without setting out the evidence, shows that the lower court was satisfied by affidavit of the authority of the attorney to appear, the ruling will not be disturbed on appeal: Huston v. Stringham, 21-36.

54. The authority of the attorney cannot be first questioned by his client on appeal, when he has acquiesced in his action in the court below: Hefferman v. Burt, 7-320.

55. Fraud of attorney in accepting retainer: The malfeasance of an attorney in accepting a retainer for one party, after having previously been employed by the other, the fact being known to the first client from the time of the wrongful act, will not constitute fraud, vitiating the judgment recovered for the second client against the first: Humphrey v. Darlington, 15-207.

56. Stipulations of attorney: Stipulations made in open court by an attorney of record in the case, and while the case is pending, if free from fraud and mistake and clearly established, will be enforced by the court: Lockwood v. Black Hawk County, 34-235.

57. Agreement of record; statute: Under a statute (Code, § 213) requiring evidence of an agreement by an attorney, binding his client, to be in writing, signed and filed with the clerk, or by an entry of record, held, that a nunc pro tunc record of such agreement, made a year after the agreement was entered into, and upon affidavits, after a dispute had arisen with reference to the agreement, was not sufficient: Hiller v. Landis, 44-223.

58. Where a new trial was asked on the ground of an agreement of the opposite attorney that the cause should not be tried that week, held, that as the agreement was denied by the attorney and did not appear to have been made of record and signed by the attorney, or made in open court and entered of record, the motion could not be granted: Barnes v. Ennenga, 53-497.

59. Under the same statutory provision, held, that an agreement of the attorney that a case should be presented to the supreme court upon an abstract, waiving a transcript of the evidence, could not be enforced, if denied, unless in writing or of record: Preston v. Hale, 65-409.

60. The facts appearing from an affidavit of the attorney of a party, held sufficient to establish implied consent to the determination of a cause in vacation: Myers v. Funk, 51-92.

61. While the client might bind himself by a stipulation in the case, his affidavit is not receivable as evidence of an agreement by his attorney binding him: Sapp v. Aiken, 68-699.

Authority of district attorney: See DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

II. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.

62. Contract for contingent fee: If the attorney visits the client for the purpose of entering into a contract of employment, it is his duty, before making the contract, to distinctly and clearly advise the client as to all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge relating to the case. So held in regard to a contract for a share of the amount to be recovered as a contingent fee: Ryan v. Ashton, 42-365.

63. Purchase of client's property: While the relation exists, an attorney is not permitted to take advantage of the client's affairs, against his interest, to make money. This rule forbids the attorney to purchase, against the interest of his client, property sold in the course of litigation in which he is retained, and such a sale will be held void, or the attorney will be held as the trustee of his client and be required to account as such: Harper v. Perry, 28-57.

64. An attorney who procures in himself legal title to property of which his client is owner, holds the property in trust for his client: Byington v. Moore, 62-470.

65. Conveyance to attorney: A conveyance from client to attorney will be set aside whenever advantage has been taken of the client through the influence or knowledge of the attorney possessed by reason of their peculiar relations: Polson v. Young, 37-196.

66. Purchase of property under execution; trustee: An attorney buying in property at a sale, under a judgment secured by him, will be presumed to do so for the benefit of his client, and to hold only as trustee: Reichhoff v. Brecht, 51-633.

67. Tax title on client's property; trustee: An attorney who is acting as agent of the owner with respect to property, and has money in his hands derived from the property, buying in the property at tax sale, will be held to have acquired the same in trust for such owner, and cannot take and hold, as against his principal, a tax deed, although the principal is negligent in reimbursing him for his expenses in acquiring such title, unless he has first made a full and fair statement to his principal of the account between them, and of the amount necessary to reimburse him: Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Perry, 65-709.

68. Attorney not held as trustee; bad faith of client: Good faith and fairness is also required of the client in his relations with the attorney, and an attempt of the former to defraud the latter will authorize the latter to sever the relation and act for the protection of his own interests: Eckrote v. Myers, 41-324.

69. Where the attorney, having procured a decree of foreclosure for his client, and demanded the payment of his fees and advances without avail, bought in at tax sale the property covered by the decree and notified his client of that fact, still urging payment, which was not made, held, that a tax deed, subsequently taken by him in pursuance of the sale, could not be set aside seven years afterward at the suit of the client: Ibid.

70. Where the attorney, after in vain requesting payment of his fees by his client, by consent of the client caused property to be sold under his client's judgment, and bought the same at the sale, he'd, that such purchase was not fraudulent: Page v. Stubbs, 30-537.

71. The fact that an attorney retains in his possession papers relating to a transaction affecting land, under a claim of a lien on such papers for services, does not continue his relation as attorney of the owner in such sense as to defeat a tax title acquired thereon by him after the performance of his duties with reference to the matter is entirely completed: Baker v. Davis, 85-184.

72. Liability for interest and rents; demand: An attorney is not ordinarily liable for interest on money collected by him until demand therefor is made; nor is he liable for rent of property bought in by him in his own name at execution sale under a judgment in behalf of his client, where such purchase is not in fraud of his client's rights: Johnson v. Semple, 31-49.

73. But the commencement of suit to recover money in the attorney's hands constitutes sufficient demand to authorize the allowance of interest from that time: Hollenbeck v. Stanberry, 38-325.

74. The attorney is not liable for interest on money if kept on hand for his client or deposited in bank to the client's credit, but if used by the attorney he is liable for interest: Manafeld v. Wilkerson, 26-482.

75. Estopped by fraud or negligence: An attorney who obtains a judgment for his client which is void for want of service of notice, due to his own culpable negligence or fraudulent intention, and allows the client, in ignorance of the defect, to purchase property at execution sale under such judgment, is estopped as against the client from asserting title to the same property acquired from the execution defendant, even after the relation of attorney and client has ceased. In such case whatever title is acquired by the attorney inures to the benefit of his former client: Phillips v. Blair, 38-649.

76. Retainer against opinion: While an attorney ought not to accept a retainer in a case where he feels that the law is against his client, yet the fact that he has, under a prior retainer, advocated views of the law and facts different from those upon which his client rests his cause, or has officially, as a judge or officer of the government, held a different view of the rights of the parties, will not, of itself, disqualify him to accept a retainer; and it will not constitute fraud on his part not to reveal to his client the fact of such prior opinion: Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 60-515.

77. Not liable for exercise of discretion: Where an attorney was employed with the understanding that he was to use his best judgment as to the steps necessary to be taken in the case, held, that he was not liable in an action for damages, in view of the care taken in the particular case: Bennett v. Phillips, 57-174.

78. Liability for officers' fees; evidence; custom: An attorney is not liable to a sheriff for fees for services performed for the client at the request of the attorney, and held, in such case, that evidence was not admissible to prove a custom among attorneys to become responsible in such cases: Doughty v. Paige, 48-483.

79. Liability on bond for costs, etc.: Under a statute (Code, § 2931) providing that no attorney shall be received as security in any proceeding in court, held, that although an officer might refuse to accept an attorney as security, yet if he tenders himself and is accepted, he cannot escape liability on the ground of being an attorney: Wright v. Schmidt, 47-233.

80. This provision, though found among the sections of the Code relating to security for costs, relates not only to bonds for costs, but to injunction, attachment and other bonds: Massie v. Mann, 17-131.

81. Liability for trespass: An attorney cannot be held liable for the wrongful seizure of property in the suit in which he acts, unless his acts or directions are shown to have in some way caused the seizure: Rice v. Melendy, 41-395.

82. An attorney who simply obeys the instructions of his client in directing the seizure of property under attachment is not liable therefor. It is immaterial that he has neither belief nor suspicion as to the ownership of the property and seeks no information with respect thereto: Dawson v. Buford, 70—.

83. Not jointly liable with client: An attorney who has acted as a mere agent for his client should not be made a party to a suit against his client in regard to acts so done, unless he is charged with fraud: Lyon v. Tevis, 8-79.

84. If the attorney is thus improperly made a party defendant, he is entitled to be dismissed with costs: Paton v. Lancaster, 38-494.

III. COMPENSATION.

a. Contract for; who liable for.

85. Surety not liable for, to principal's attorney: One who is a party to an action and interested in the result, as a surety in an action to which his principal is party, will not, for that reason alone, be liable for the compensation of an attorney rendering services for the principal, but his liability must be proven by evidence of retainer or recognition as attorney of the party sought to be charged: Turner v. Myers, 23-391.

86. Evidence as to value of services: In an action to recover the value of professional services, evidence as to the success attending the rendition of such services is admissible: Berry v. Davis, 84-594.

87. Under the general custom of the profession, the values in controversy control charges for services. Therefore, in an action by an attorney to recover for services rendered, held error to instruct the jury that the magnitude of the controversy and the great value of the property involved should not be considered in determining the amount of recovery: Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 60-515.

88. Contract for services in another state: Where an attorney is employed in this state to render services in another state, the rate of compensation is to be determined according to the value of the services at the place where the contract is made: Stanberry v. Dickerson, 35-493.

89. Liability of husband for fee of wife's attorney in divorce suit; necessities: The husband is liable for services rendered by attorney for the wife for establishing the innocence of the latter on a charge of adultery made by the husband in an action for divorce. Such services are deemed necessities: Porter v. Briggs, 38-166.

90. But the husband is not liable for wife's attorneys' fees in a suit brought by the wife for divorce where it is not shown that such services come within the scope of necessities: Johnson v. Williams, 3 G. Gr., 97.

91. Contract for excessive fees: Nothing but the best of reasons will justify an attorney in exacting from his client, after the work is partially completed, an agreement to pay more than an ordinary fee under a threat of withdrawing from the case if such agreement is not made: Bolton v. Daily, 43-348.

92. Implied contract: Where an attorney was employed by one of several defendants, and rendered services in the case for all, with the knowledge and implied consent of the others, held, that a recovery for services rendered might be had by such attorney as against all the defendants, although by contract between them, not known to the attorney, the one employing him was to bear the entire expense of attorney fees: McCrary v. Ruddick, 33-521.

93. Additional attorney; bound by contract: Where an attorney contracted to prosecute the case for a given sum, and afterward turned the case over to another attorney, stating to the client that he had taken the second attorney into the case with him, held, that in the absence of any other knowledge on the part of the client as to the relation of the second attorney to the case, the latter could not recover more than the contract price: Ennis v. Hultz, 46-76.

b. Champerty; contingent fee.

94. Expense; share of recovery: The mere agreement for a contingent fee is not champertous. To constitute champerty the agreement on the part of the champertor must be to carry on the suit at his own expense, as well as for a share of the recovery: Jewel v. Neidy, 61-299.

95. Neither is it champertous for a person who is a party in interest, and not an officious promoter of another's strife, to agree to bear the expenses of litigation; and an attorney agreeing to carry on the litigation for a proportion of the recovery, knowing that the costs are thus to be paid by a party in interest, is not guilty of champerty: Ibid.

96. Champerty and maintenance: There being no statute in this state against champerty or maintenance, and there being no necessity for enforcing the English doctrine on the subject, that doctrine is not deemed in force here: Wright v. Meek, 3 G. Gr., 472.

97. But this last case is seriously questioned in Boardman v. Thompson, 25-487.

98. Contingent fee; against public policy: A contract by which the attorney was to receive a per cent. of the amount recovered by the client in the suit or on settlement, the attorney to advance costs and expenses to be paid out of the recovery, and the client agreeing not to settle without the attorney's consent, held void as against public policy: Ibid.

99. But a mere contract for a contingent fee, without stipulation against settlement by client or for advancement of costs by attorney, is valid: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 29-170.

100. Agreement not to compromise: An agreement between attorney and client, by which the latter binds himself not to compromise or settle the claim without the attorney's consent, is not favored: Ellwood v. Wilson, 21-523; Boardman v. Thompson, 25-487.

101. Contract of attorney to hold client harmless: A contract between attorney and client, that the former will hold the latter harmless from any judgment to be recovered against him provided he will appeal the case, is against public policy and void: Adye v. Hanna, 47-264.

102. Champerty not a defense: The fact that an action is being prosecuted under a champertous contract cannot be set up as a defense therein: Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42-274; Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-582.

Further as to champerty and maintenance, see CONTRACTS, §§ 824-831.

c. Liability of county for services in prosecuting and defending.

103. Defense of criminal: An attorney appointed by the court to defend a pauper prisoner may maintain action against the county for compensation for such services although under the statute no provision for such compensation is made (overruling Whicher v. Cedar County, 1 G. Gr., 217; Hall v. Washington County, 2 G. Gr., 478).

104. The provisions of the statute (Code, § 3829) limiting the amount which an attorney shall receive in such cases are not unconstitutional: Samuels v. Dubuque County, 13-536.

105. No duty is hereby imposed by statute upon an attorney appointed to defend a criminal, to present the case to the supreme court, but if, in the exercise of his discretion, he does appear there, the statute provides a compensation shall be paid him by the county. The amount of such compensation is not to be what his services would have been reasonably worth in case he had been employed by the county, but an enlarged compensation, graded on a scale corresponding to the prices fixed for a trial in the district court. Therefore, held, that an allowance of $25 for arguing the case in the supreme court was proper: Baylies v. Polk County, 58-357.

106. Assisting in prosecution: The district attorney cannot render the county liable for services of an additional attorney employed by him to aid in criminal prosecutions: Tatlock v. Louisa County, 46-138; Foster v. Clinton County, 51-541.

107. The board of supervisors may employ counsel, in addition to the district attorney, to prosecute criminal cases: Hopkins v. Clayton County, 82-15.

108. A county can be made liable to pay for additional counsel, only as the board of supervisors has determined such counsel to be necessary. The court cannot, at the request of the district attorney, appoint assistant counsel and thereby bind the county to pay therefor, at least unless on account of the absence of the district attorney, and in order to prevent the failure of justice: Seaton v. Polk County, 59-626.

109. In the absence of the district attorney the county may appoint a special prosecutor, but as to whether in such case the county is rendered liable for his compensation the court were equally divided: White v. Polk County, 17-413.

110. Recovery against county for services rendered on appointment of court to assist in the prosecution in a particular case, held proper: Curtis v. Cass County, 49-421.

111. It may be that in proper cases the court may appoint and require a member of the bar to appear and represent the state in a habeas corpus proceeding, although no compensation therefor is provided: Miller v. Buena Vista County, 68-711.

112. The district attorney being the representative of the state in habeas corpus cases, the judge or court has no authority in such cases to appoint an attorney to represent the state and thereby render the county liable for his services, where the notice required by law of the bringing of the habeas corpus proceeding has not been served upon the district attorney. Whether, when the district attorney has been duly notified and has failed to appear, the judge may appoint an attorney to represent the state and thereby render the county liable for his services, quere: Ibid.

113. A justice of the peace has no power to appoint an attorney to prosecute a criminal action in behalf of the state, and no compensation can be recovered by reason of such an appointment: Davis v. Linn County, 24-508.

114. Employment by county: A county has undoubted authority, through its board of supervisors, to employ counsel, and will be bound by a contract made for that purpose, even though it be not entered on the records of the board. Such contract may be proved by parol: Jordan v. Osceola County, 59-388.

115. The county judge, when that office existed, had the power, and it was his duty, to employ the services of an attorney whenever he thought such services were needed, and he might pay a reasonable compensation therefor out of the county treasury: Chickasaw County v. Bailey, 13-435.

116. Services in liquor prosecutions: Under the provisions of Code, § 8829, the county is not liable for fees of attorney appearing before a justice of the peace in a prosecution for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, unless he was selected for that duty by the peace officer filing the information (under Code, § 1551): Blair v. Dubuque County, 27-181; Foster v. Clinton County, 51-541.

117. The peace officers contemplated in that section do not include a special constable, appointed under the provisions of Code, § 8630: Foster v. Clinton County, 51-541.

d. Lien.¹

118. Notice: An attorney's lien does not attach upon money due his client in the hands of the adverse party, until notice is

¹ Code, § 215. An attorney has a lien for a general balance of compensation upon:

1. Any papers belonging to his client, which have come into his hands in the course of his professional employment.

2. Money in his hands belonging to his client.

3. Money due his client in the hands of the adverse party, or attorney of such party, in an action or proceeding in which the attorney claiming the lien was employed, from the time of giving notice in writing to such

given to such party: Hurst v. Sheets, 21-501. [Decided under the Revision, which did not contain a provision similar to ¶ 4 of Code, § 215, authorizing the giving of such notice by entry thereof in the judgment docket.]

119. Set-off: Therefore, held, that where a judgment was rendered by A. against B., on the same day as, but prior to, a judgment by B. against A., upon the latter of which B.'s attorney filed his lien, A.'s right to set off his judgment against B.'s was complete before the attorney's lien attached, and was, therefore, superior to such lien: Ibid.

120. Whether such right of set-off would have priority if it did not arise until after notice of lien, quære: Ibid.

121. The lien of an attorney is upon the interest of his client in the judgment, and it is subject to an existing right of set-off in the other party: National Bank v. Eyre, 3 McCrary, 175.

122. Lien prior to garnishment: The lien of an attorney upon money due his client, in the hands of the adverse party, attaches from the time of giving notice to such party, and his lien will not be postponed to a subsequent garnishment: Myers v. McHugh, 16-335.

123. Settlement: The parties may settle without the consent of the attorneys, and without first paying their fees, unless notice of an attorney's lien has been given: Casar v. Sargeant, 7-317.

124. But if notice is given, the lien will not be defeated by the fact that the case is settled without judgment having been rendered: Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 56-720.

125. Payment of money to clerk: A party cannot avoid the lien by unconditionally paying the money to the clerk; but he may pay it to the clerk to be held by him subject to such lien: Fisher v. Oskaloosa, 23-331.

126. Satisfaction of judgment; discharge of lien: After the entry of the notice in the judgment docket, the attorney acquires an interest in the judgment, and may, by proper proceedings, have the same enforced to the extent of such interest. His interest cannot be divested by a discharge of the judgment by the parties, or by their consenting that it be set aside: Brainard v. Ekwood, 53-30.

127. Where the attorney perfected the title of his client in real property attached in the action, and thereby satisfied the judgment as against the adverse party, held, that the entry of his lien in the judgment docket did not preserve it upon such property in the hands of a purchaser from his client: Cowen v. Boone, 48-350.

128. Where the attorney, by authority of his client, releases of record the lien of the judgment in behalf of the client, the attorney cannot afterwards assert, as against a subsequent purchaser, any lien or interest in himself under such judgment: Wishard v. Biddle, 64-526.

129. Notice in writing: The notice of the lien, to bind the adverse party, must be in writing: Phillips v. Germon, 43-101.

130. Notice at commencement of suit: A notice of a claim for a lien is sufficient if inserted in the original notice of the action (at least if signed by the attorney in his individual capacity as well as in his capacity as attorney for his client): Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 56-720.

131. Service of notice upon agent of corporation: While service of notice of attorney's lien, in an action against a corporation, might not be sufficient if made upon one of the class of agents upon whom service of original notice is authorized, yet if such service of notice of lien is upon one of such agents in connection with the service of the original notice, such service of notice of lien is sufficient, the service of the original notice being sufficient to charge such agent with a duty in relation to the matter: Ibid.

132. In action on tort: An attorney's lien may properly be claimed, not only in all actions on contract, but also in actions for damages arising from tort: Ibid.

133. For future services: The lien attaches, after proper notice, not only for services then rendered, but for those thereafter rendered: Ibid.

adverse party, or attorney of such party, if the money is in the possession or under the control of such attorney, which notice shall state the amount claimed, and, in general terms, for what services.

4. After judgment in any court of record, such notice may be given and the lien made effective against the judgment debtor, by entering the same in the judgment docket opposite the entry of the judgment.

Lien.—Taxation of attorneys' fees as costs.

134. Subject to costs: An attorney cannot have a lien upon any greater amount than shall actually be found to be owing by the opposite party to his client. And where an attorney took an assignment of a judgment to secure his fees, held, that he stood in the shoes of his client, and must take the judgment with all the burdens, such as costs, taxed in favor of the opposite party, etc., attaching by the course of the litigation: Tiffany v. Stewart, 60-207; Watson v. Smith, 63-228.

135. Burden of proof: Where money collected by an attorney was retained by him under the claim of a lien, held, that it was for him to aver and prove the services and their value: Stanton v. Clinton, 52-109.

136. Subject to rights under trust deed: Where a suit was commenced to subject the property and income of a corporation to the payment of bonds secured by deed of trust, and a receiver was appointed, held, that the attorney of the corporation had no lien on its funds for services rendered after commencement of suit which would have priority over the claims of the bondholders: Des Moines Gas Co. v. West, 50-16.

137. Release of lien by bond: Under the provisions of Code, § 216, authorizing the release of the lien upon the giving of bond, with security, for the payment of any amount found due the attorney, held, that the filing of the bond released any lien which the attorney might have by statute: Cross v. Ackley, 40-493.

138. In an action by the client against the attorney to recover moneys collected by the attorney, the fact that the attorney is entitled to a portion of the money collected in payment for services will not render the proceeding one to discharge an attorney's lien in such sense as to make it necessary to tender a bond in order to obtain a release of the property: Armitage v. Sullivan, 69-426.

139. Assignment of lien: Where an attorney transfers to another securities on which he claims a lien, his assignee can only hold them for the reasonable value of the services rendered: Collins v. Jennings, 42-447.

140. The supreme court cannot grant an attorney's lien on a judgment when such lien is not secured in the proceedings in the court below, as such relief would be the exercise of original jurisdiction: Preston v. Daniels, 2 G. Gr., 536.

IV. TAXATION OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AS COSTS, OR RECOVERY AS DAMAGES.

141. Contract for, valid: A stipulation in a contract or note for the payment of an attorney's fee in case action shall be brought thereon is valid: Kuhn v. Myers, 37-351; Shugart v. Pattee, 37-422. So in case of mortgage: Williams v. Meeker, 29-292.

142. Does not affect negotiability: Such a provision in a note does not destroy its negotiability: Sperry v. Horr, 32-184.

143. If the note is usurious an attorney's fee provided for therein cannot be recovered: Miller v. Gardner, 49-234.

144. Surety liable for: A surety on a note providing for attorneys' fees is liable therefor: First Nat. Bank v. Breese, 39-640.

145. What is bringing of action: Where a note provided for taxation of reasonable attorneys' fees for collection if an action should be brought thereon, held, that a resort to legal proceedings was contemplated as the occasion for taxing such fee, and that filing the note as a claim against the estate of the maker, and proving it as such claim, was sufficient to warrant the allowance of the fee: Davidson v. Vorse, 52-384.

146. Liquidated damages: Where the contract or note specifies the amount to be taxed as attorneys' fees, the amount thus specified is not in the nature of a penalty but is liquidated damages, for which recovery may be had without proof of the reasonable value of the services: McIntire v. Cagley, 37-676.

147. Evidence of value: Upon default in an action upon a note providing for the allowance of reasonable attorneys' fees, it is error to allow an amount for such fees without evidence as to their value: First Nat. Bank v. Krance, 50-235.

148. Attorney's testimony: The testimony of plaintiff's attorney as to the value of his services in an action on a contract providing for the allowance of attorneys' fees, will, in the absence of other evidence, be taken as establishing such value; and the court will not, for itself, judge of the value of such services: Schlicht v. Stivers, 61-746.

Taxation of attorneys' fees as costs.

149. Pleading: Where the claim for attorneys' fees is in a separate count of the answer, an answer to that count will not be regarded as putting in issue the averments of the other counts: Musser v. Crum, 48-52.

150. Where the provision is for the allowance of a reasonable amount as attorney fees, it is not necessary in the petition to aver what is a reasonable amount: Nelson v. Everett, 29-184.

151. Actual fee alone taxed: Whether the note provides for a fixed sum or a reasonable fee, no more can be taxed than the actual fee. It is not by such agreement intended that the party shall, in any event, have any part of the fee taxed: White v. Lucas, 46-319.

152. Taxed as costs; not assessed by jury: Attorneys' fees provided for in a contract are to be treated as costs in the action and not as a part of the amount in controversy: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59-606.

153. The defendant is not entitled to have the amount thereof assessed by jury: Musser v. Crum, 48-52.

154. But where the parties consent, or fail to object, to a submission of the matter to the jury, they cannot be heard afterward to say that the trial was not in the proper tribunal: Dent v. Smith, 53-262.

155. The taxation of the fee is an independent matter and may be made after the services in the case are concluded. Therefore, where a motion to tax attorney's fee was not made until after taking appeal, held, that such taxation was improper at that time, and should be postponed until the termination of the appeal: Mason v. Searles, 56-532.

156. The amount of attorneys' fees to be taxed may be determined after the trial and decision of the case, and where it appears that they have been thus taxed, it will be presumed on appeal, in the absence of any showing on the subject, that there was evidence to support such taxation, and that the judgment was in accordance therewith: Kelso v. Fitzgerald, 67-266.

157. The attorney's affidavit required by statute, that there is no agreement to divide the fee, is not evidence to be introduced by the plaintiff; it is rather a condition precedent to be performed by the attorney before the attorney's fee can be allowed in his favor: Spiesberger v. Thomas, 59-606.

158. Such affidavit should be filed with the original petition prior to the return day; that is, the first day of the next term: Wilkins v. Troutner, 66-557.

159. The attorney's fee must be disallowed where the affidavit is not filed: Sweeney v. Davidson, 68-386.

160. A requirement that an attorney shall file an affidavit that he has not directly or indirectly received any compensation for his services from any source must be complied with; it is not sufficient that his affidavit states that the claim is just and true: Ryce v. Mitchell County, 65-447.

161. Collusive taxation of excessive fee: Where, apparently to reduce the balance which would remain after satisfaction of the mortgage, and be subject to a judgment lien, it was agreed between defendant and plaintiff's attorney in a foreclosure suit that a larger amount than the attorney claimed should be taxed as attorney's fee, and the excess returned to defendant, held, that action by defendant to recover such excess from the mortgagee purchasing under the foreclosure could not be maintained: Remley v. Johnson County Savings Bank, 52-575.

162. Provision in mortgage: Where the provision authorizing the taxation of attorneys' fees is in the mortgage and not in the note secured, judgment for the fee should be against the mortgagor alone and not against parties who are liable on the note but are not parties to the mortgage: Floyd County v. Morrison, 40-188.

163. Not usurious: A stipulation for attorneys' fee does not render a contract usurious: Nelson v. Everett, 29-184.

164. Attorneys' fees in former suit: In the absence of malice or want of probable cause, attorneys' fees for defending in a former suit cannot be allowed in an ordinary action on contract: Newell v. Sanford, 19-463.

165. Trustee allowed for: Where a trustee chargeable with collection of certain claims, with the right to deduct expenses of collection from the proceeds, placed them in the hands of an attorney, held, that attorneys' fees were properly allowed on all the claims although suit was in fact brought on but one: Abbott v. Downer, 54-687.

As to fees in actions on attachment and injunction bonds, see ATTACHMENT, §§ 279-284, and INJUNCTION, §§ 157-164.

V. MISCONDUCT; SUSPENSION; DISBARMENT; CONTEMPT.

166. Improper conduct: A court should never hesitate to stop counsel in attempts to drag improper matters before a jury, and should visit merited punishment when such unprofessional conduct is indulged in. But it does not follow that in such cases a verdict will not stand. To require setting aside of the verdict prejudice must be shown: Hammond v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 49-450.

167. Where an attorney, in an excited manner, directly contradicted the statements of the court in ruling upon an objection to evidence, alleging that the facts upon which such ruling was based, as stated by the court, were not true, held, that he was guilty of contempt: Russell v. French, 87-102.

168. Suspension: Charges in a particular case against an attorney for making false representations to clients for the purpose of retaining money collected and defrauding them; also for collecting and refusing to pay over money, to which the attorney pleaded guilty, held sufficient to justify an order suspending the attorney and providing in a certain contingency for his final disbarment: Slemmer v. Wright, 54-164.

169. Proceedings to disbar: Proceedings under statutory provisions to disbar an attorney are special proceedings in which the provisions for change of venue in civil actions are applicable: State v. Clarke, 46-155.

170. The license of an attorney to practice can be revoked or suspended only as the result of proceedings instituted for that purpose and after he has had his day in court. It cannot be done summarily as a punishment for contempt: State v. Start, 7-499.

171. It is probable that the court could, in the exercise of its inherent authority, require a member of the bar to discharge the duty of conducting the prosecution of a proceeding for disbarment. But the exercise of such authority rests in the sound discretion of the judge, and the persons commencing the disbarment proceeding could not object to the action of the court in refusing to make such appointment: Byington v. Moore, 70—.

172. Disobedience of order of court: Wilful disobedience of order of court to pay over money due the client may be ground for suspending or revoking license: Cross v. Ackley, 40-498.

173. Proceedings for contempt: In proceeding against an attorney for contempt, the accusation should specify the manner in which the contempt was committed; if by words, the words used should be set out; if by acts, they should be described: Perry v. State, 3 G. Gr., 550.

Further as to CONTEMPT, see that title.

VI. ATTORNEY AS WITNESS.

174. Professional statement: Where the professional statement of an attorney is received it is to be regarded as an affidavit: Rice v. Griffith, 9-539.

175. Witness for his client: An attorney is a competent witness for his client: Walsh v. Murphy, 2 G. Gr., 227.

176. But no attorney having a just conception of his true and proper position will willingly unite the character of counsel and witness in the same case: Alger v. Merritt, 16-121.

Affidavits, etc.: That an attorney is competent to verify pleadings, make affidavits, etc., for his client in proper cases, see §§ 17-20, supra.

As to testimony of attorney relative to the value of his own services to be taxed as attorney's fee, see supra, § 148.

Privileged communications to attorney: See EVIDENCE, §§ 1108-1115.

AUCTIONS.

1. Terms of sale: The owner of property offered for sale at auction has the right to prescribe the manner, conditions and terms of sale, and where these are reasonable and known to the buyer they are binding upon him, and he cannot acquire a title in opposition to them, and against the consent of the owner: Farr v. John, 28-286.

2. Where it was publicly announced in the hearing of defendant that no bid less than five cents in addition to any former bid would be received, and an article was offered accompanied by the statement that an absentee had left a bid of two dollars on it, and any one who would bid more could have it, held, that a bid of one cent more, which was disregarded, did not entitle the last bidder to the article: Ibid.

3. Warranty: Statements made by an auctioneer that certain sheep sold were young and sound, held not to be a warranty, although made by authority of the seller: McGrew v. Forsythe, 31-179.

4. A written memorandum of a sale, made by an auctioneer, is a sufficient written contract to bind both parties: Wingate v. Herschauer, 42-506.

5. Auctioneers: A municipal corporation may be given authority to regulate and license sales by auctioneers, and may, under such authority, impose a license tax: Deorah v. Dunstan, 88-96.

6. A resident merchant, employing an auctioneer to sell part of his goods, is not himself subject to payment of a license tax as auctioneer: Oskaloosa v. Tullis, 25-440.

BAIL.

See CRIMINAL LAW, III, 12.

BAILMENT.

I. WHEN ARISES; KINDS OF.

II. RIGHTS OF BAILEE.

III. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

IV. LIABILITY OF BAILEE FOR NEGLIGENCE OR CONVERSION.

I. WHEN ARISES; KINDS OF.

1. Deposit; parol evidence: A receipt for money "on deposit" does not show whether it is received on special or general deposit, and that fact may be shown by parol evidence: Keen v. Beckman, 66-672.

2. Deposit payable in kind; custom: Where wheat is delivered at a mill under a custom known to the party delivering that it is to be thrown into a general bin and a receipt given entitling him to flour, bran, or wheat again, as he shall call for it, the title vests in the mill owner: Wilson v. Cooper, 10-565.

3. Grain in warehouse: Where grain was stored with a warehouseman with the understanding that when the depositor got ready to sell it the warehouseman would give the highest price, or would return the same quantity of like grain, the original grain to be shipped and sold by the warehouseman, held, that the transaction was a sale and not a bailment: Johnston v. Browne, 87-200.

4. Where the owner of grain deposited it in an elevator under a contract by which the warehouseman might mingle it in a common mass with other grain, and return grain of the same quality but not the identical grain, held, that the transaction was a bailment and not a sale, and that the warehouseman was not liable for its value if destroyed without fault or negligence on his part: Nelson v. Brown, 44-455.

5. So where grain was deposited with a warehouseman under a known usage and custom of trade by which it was to be mixed with other grain in store, and the proper number of bushels in the warehouse were to be regarded as the property of the depositor, held, that the transaction constituted a bailment: Hughes v. Stanley, 45-622.

6. Where the owner of grain deposits it with a warehouseman, consenting that it shall be mixed with other grain of like quality, belonging in part to the other depositors and in part to the warehouseman, he becomes with the other depositors and the warehouseman an owner in common of the grain in the warehouse, and the title to the grain deposited does not pass to the warehouseman: Sexton v. Graham, 53-181; Nelson v. Brown, 53-555.

7. In such a case the fact that the warehouseman has the right to, and does, withdraw his proportionate share, does not affect the ownership of the depositors, nor will subsequent additions or subtractions to and from the common mass affect the interest of the depositors, even though an entire change is effected in the identity of the mass stored. The receipt-holder remains at all times a tenant in common of the grain in store: Ibid.

8. All the grain in the elevator of the kind and grade of that deposited, and with which the grain deposited may be properly mixed, is to be treated as a common mass, although contained in separate compartments or bins: Sexton v. Graham, 53-181.

9. Although the warehouseman wrongfully abstracts and sells more than the proportion belonging to him, the balance is to be considered the property of the depositors in common: Ibid.

10. Where the person in charge of the warehouse delivered all the remaining grain to the holder of a portion of the outstanding receipts on demand thereunder, held, that this was not a new transaction, but was in pursuance of the existing claim, and all receipt-holders had a right to share in the property so delivered: Ibid.

11. Where wheat was received under an agreement that it was to be at owner's risk as to fire, and was kept in a separate bin and burned with the elevator, held, that the transaction was a bailment and defendant was not liable for the loss: Irons v. Kentner, 51-88.

12. Railroad as warehouseman: The liability of a railroad is only that of warehouseman after delivery of goods at its depot, at the end of the transportation: Francis v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 25-60; Mohr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 40-579.

13. Warehouse receipt; parol evidence; usage or custom: A warehouse receipt which expresses a contract of bailment cannot be varied by parol evidence of a custom or usage or understanding for the purpose of showing that the intention of the parties was that the transaction should be regarded as a sale: Marks v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 43-146; Sexton v. Graham, 53-181.

14. Collateral security: Under the statutory provisions (Code, §§ 2171 and 2172) that no warehouseman shall issue any receipt for any personal property to any person unless such property is in store, and that all warehouse receipts or other evidences of the deposit of property shall be, in the hands of the holder thereof, presumptive evidence of title to said property, held, that a warehouse receipt for grain issued merely as collateral security for a loan of money was in contravention of the statute and invalid: Sexton v. Graham, 53-181.

15. Whether a warehouse receipt will be valid if the intention in executing it is to create a mere lien, quære: Lowe v. Young, 59-364.

16. Transfer: Where a depositor received only scale tickets, showing the amount of grain weighed, but did not receive any warehouse receipt, and the warehouseman shipped away the grain deposited until there was no grain remaining to answer for the claim of the depositor, held, that such scale tickets were not warehouse receipts, and that a person taking an assignment of the depositor's claim would be subject to the warehouseman's right to set off against the depositor's claim an indebtedness due from such depositor, which he could not have done under Code, §§ 2171-2176, if receipts had been issued and transferred: Cathcart v. Snow, 64-584.

17. Authority to sell: The fact that bailee is authorized to sell the property and make a disposition of the proceeds does not render the transaction other than a bailment until the sale is made: Goodenow v. Snyder, 8 G. Gr., 599.

18. Possession after disaffirmance of sale: Where possession of property is acquired under a conditional sale, the vendee, upon disaffirming the sale, holds the property as bailee and is liable for any loss resulting from gross negligence: Neally v. Wilhelm, 4 G. Gr., 240.

19. Use of horse: Where the owner of a horse, for the purpose of avoiding the expense of keeping it during the winter, lends it to another under the agreement that the latter shall take care of it in consideration of the expense of keeping, the transaction is a bailment for mutual benefit, and the bailee is only required to use ordinary care: Chamberlin v. Cobb, 32-161.

II. RIGHTS OF BAILEE.

20. Special property: The bailee has a special property in the thing which is the subject of the bailment: Bruley v. Rose, 57-651.

21. Cannot convey title; innocent purchaser: A bailee cannot convey a title which will prevail against the rightful owner. The mere fact that the owner has left the property in the possession of the bailee will not constitute such fraud as to defeat such owner's right as against an innocent purchaser from such bailee: Robinson v. Chapline, 9-91.

Compensation and lien.—Liability of bailee.

22. Thus where a principal places in the hands of his agent property for sale without transferring the title to such agent, a purchaser from the latter without knowledge of the agency is not protected: Conable v. Lynch, 45-84.

III. COMPENSATION AND LIEN.

23. Compensation presumed: In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the law implies a contract to pay the reasonable value of the use of the thing loaned: Cullen v. Lord, 39-302.

24. Gratuitous; burden of proof: The law does not presume without proof that a bailment is gratuitous, and if any exemption from liability is claimed from that fact, the burden of establishing such fact is upon the person claiming the exemption: Winne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 31-583.

25. Lien; exempt property: A bailee's lien attaches to property which is exempt as well as to that not exempt: Munson v. Porter, 63-453.

26. Use of bailed property: A bailee may always use the thing bailed so far as is necessary for its preservation, and the fact that bailee uses a horse held by him under a lien will not amount to a conversion, defeating his right to his lien: Ibid.

27. Lien specific: A bailee in possession under a lien for services performed cannot detain the property for the payment of other debts without a specific agreement to that effect: Nevan v. Roup, 8-207.

28. Possession necessary: The bailee's lien for services does not arise unless the article has been delivered into his possession for the purpose of having services performed thereon; and if he parts with possession before receiving compensation, his lien is lost and is not reinstated by his coming into possession of the property without the consent of the owner: Ibid.

29. An agister of cattle may have a lien thereon under special contract for his charges, and held that under a contract in which the charges for the keeping of cattle were to be paid before moving the cattle, the agister had the right of possession until payment was made: McCoy v. Hock, 37-436.

30. Livery-stable keeper: At common law a livery-stable keeper has no lien for the care and feeding of horses left with him, and no such lien is given by Code, § 2177, which confers a lien upon personal property left with a depositary for the just and lawful charges thereon. (Such a lien is now, however, given by express statute. See 18 G. A., ch. 25): McDonald v. Bennett, 45-456.

31. Where services in keeping a horse at a livery-stable commenced before the enactment of the statute just referred to, and continued afterward, held, that there being no express contract, the livery-stable keeper might assert his lien for charges after the statute took effect, but not for charges previously incurred: Munson v. Porter, 63-453.

32. Forfeiture of lien: If under any circumstances the lien should be deemed forfeited by the assertion of a claim for a lien for too large an amount, the assertion should be clear and distinct, and operate to interfere in the present with a claimed right on the part of the owner: Ibid.

IV. LIABILITY OF BAILEE FOR NEGLIGENCE OR CONVERSION.

33. For wrongful acts of others: In an action for damages resulting from neglect and ill-treatment of animals by a bailee thereof, under a contract requiring him to keep them in the best possible manner, held, that it was error to instruct the jury that bailee would only be liable for neglect or ill-treatment of which he himself was guilty, or which was known to and tolerated by him: Rohrabacher v. Ware, 37-85.

34. Contributory negligence; burden of proof: In an action against a livery-stable keeper for the loss of a horse caused by his negligence, it is not incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that he was not himself guilty of any neglect contributing to the injury: McPherrin v. Jennings, 66-622.

35. Gratuitous bailment: In case of gratuitous bailment for the bailor's sole benefit, the bailee is only liable for gross negligence or breach of good faith: Jourdan v. Reed, 1-135.

36. Lost money: Only slight diligence is required of the finder of lost money in taking care thereof, and he will only be answerable for gross negligence: Dougherty v. Posegate, 3-88.

37. Conversion; approximate injury: In the case of hiring for use, the mere fact that instructions as to the use of the thing loaned given by the bailor to the bailee are not followed, will not render the bailee liable for any loss which accrues, without regard to whether the injury results from failure to obey instructions or from some other cause: Cullen v. Lord, 39-302.

38. Conversion; implied contract: Where property has been converted by a bailee, the owner may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit on the implied contract: Goodenow v. Snyder, 3 G. Gr., 599.

39. Wrongful sale by commission merchant; damages: In an action against a commission merchant for selling for a less amount than authorized by the consignor, the damages recoverable are not to be limited to the market value of the goods sold at the time of such unauthorized sale: Hallowell v. Fawcett, 30-491.

40. If the consignee has made advances, fair dealing requires that he shall give the consignor reasonable notice and opportunity to pay such advances, before a sale of the consigned property contrary to instructions will be warranted in order to secure reimbursement: Ibid.

41. Conversion; liability for: If a warehouseman who has received grain under special contract to be delivered to the depositor upon demand, sells it, and fails to deliver according to the contract, and the warehouse is afterward burned, the warehouseman having been guilty of conversion is liable for the value of the property: McGinn v. Butler, 31-160.

42. Warehouseman; confusion of goods: Where grain is deposited in an elevator, and other grain of the same grade and quality is mingled therewith, the ownership of the depositor is not divested, even though no notice of a custom to mingle such property by the warehouseman is shown. Such facts simply constitute a confusion of goods honestly made, under such circumstances that the depositor should recover the same amount of grain of the same grade and quality as that deposited. In such a case there is no conversion, and the warehouseman is not liable for the value of the grain, if destroyed without his negligence: Arthur v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-668.

43. The mere fact that grain is shipped from a common mass until the identical kernels are gone, enough being left, however, in the common mass to satisfy the claims of depositors, will not constitute a conversion: Cathcart v. Snow, 64-584.

44. Where property which is bailed by weight is mingled by the bailee with other property of the same character, such act does not terminate the bailment: Goodenow v. Snyder, 3 G. Gr., 599.

45. Where grain was delivered to a warehouseman for storage and mingled with the common mass and shipped away for sale, other grain being retained in store sufficient in amount to cover the receipts issued, and the warehouse and grain were thereupon destroyed by fire, held, that whether the transaction was a sale or a bailment, the warehouseman was liable for the value to the owner of the grain, in the one case for its purchase price, and the other for conversion: Dierksen v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 42-88. (But contra, see later cases, supra, §§ 3-15.)

BANKRUPTCY.

I. JURISDICTION.

II. SUITS BY OR AGAINST ASSIGNEE.

III. EFFECT ON EXISTING LIENS, PRIOR CONVEYANCES, ETC.

IV. DISCHARGE.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. Service upon a partner in a proceeding in bankruptcy by the other partners may be made outside of the district upon the person of such partner, and may also be made by a party to the proceeding: Stuart v. Hines, 33-60.

2. Lien: After the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, no valid lien upon the property at that time owned by the bankrupt can be acquired in a state court: Ibid.

Suits by or against assignee.—Effect on existing liens, etc.

3. State courts have no jurisdiction to inquire into the existence of fraudulent preferences under the bankrupt law: Putnam v. Swinney, 63-383.

4. A state court has no jurisdiction to set aside for fraud a sale made by the assignee in a bankruptcy proceeding, even after final disposition of such proceedings, and the discharge of the assignee: Akins v. Stradley, 51-414.

5. Where action was brought in a state court in which the validity of title to land acquired by a purchaser from an assignee in bankruptcy was brought in question, held, that the validity of such title should have been determined in the court in bankruptcy and that the state court had no jurisdiction to pass upon it: Smith v. Price, 60-89.

6. A state court has not jurisdiction to declare a conveyance void because in violation of the provisions of the United States bankrupt law: Brewster v. Dryden, 53-657.

7. Nor to declare a judgment void as in contravention of such bankrupt law, when it is valid under state laws: Hecht v. Springfield, 51-502.

II. SUITS BY OR AGAINST ASSIGNEE.

8. Suit in state court: An assignee in bankruptcy may maintain an action in a state court to recover the assets of a bankrupt, or to set aside a conveyance of the property of the bankrupt made in bar of the rights of creditors. The exercise of original jurisdiction by the state court in such case is in no proper case an exercise of jurisdiction in bankruptcy, such as, by the bankrupt law, is exclusively vested in the federal courts: Wetmore v. McMillan, 57-344.

9. An assignee in bankruptcy is not required to go into court to defend an action commenced against the bankrupt prior to the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy: Stuart v. Hines, 33-60.

10. Limitation of action: The section of the bankrupt law (R. S., § 5067) providing that any one claiming an adverse interest, attaching any property or rights of property vested in the assignee in bankruptcy, must prosecute his action within two years, is applicable to a person seeking to enforce against such assignee a lien held by him upon the property of the bankrupt prior to the assignment: Goodnow v. Oakley, 66-658.

11. In this respect a grantee of the assignee stands in his shoes and is entitled to the protection of the statute: Ibid.

12. The federal statute limiting the time within which action may be brought by the assignee does not apply to an action by the bankrupt to enforce a claim covered by the assignment after the assignee has abandoned it by failing to bring action until his right to do so is barred: Coleman v. Riggs, 61-548.

13. In such a case, the right of action on such claim becomes revested in the bankrupt after the settlement of the estate and his discharge, although the assignee has not been formally discharged: Ibid.

III. EFFECT ON EXISTING LIENS, PRIOR CONVEYANCES, ETC.

14. Fraudulent conveyance: Under the provisions of the bankrupt law making conveyances and transfers of property by the insolvent within a specified time before bankruptcy void, it is necessary, in order to defeat a sale, not only to show that the seller was insolvent or contemplated insolvency, but also that the purchaser had cause to know such fact, and that the sale was for the purpose of preferring him as a creditor and defeating the provisions of the law. The rights of such a purchaser cannot be defeated on account of fraudulent representations of the bankrupt when the purchaser had no reason to suspect a fraudulent intention: Rice v. Melendy, 41-395.

15. Attachment lien: A bankruptcy proceeding, commenced within four months after the levy of an attachment, extinguishes the debt and dissolves the attachment, although in the proceeding there is a composition by the creditors, and therefore no assignee is appointed to represent the debtor in the attachment proceeding and claim the property: Smith v. Engle, 44-265.

16. An attachment made more than four months preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings is not dissolved thereby, and the lien of such attachment may be enforced, although a judgment in personam cannot be recovered against the bankrupt after his discharge: Hatch v. Seeley, 37-493.

Effect on existing liens, etc.— Discharge.

17. Assignments: Although assignments made within four months prior to the bankruptcy are declared void, yet an assignment made merely to carry out an implied obligation previously existing will not be affected by the bankruptcy: First Nat. Bank v. Haire, 36-443.

18. Lien; preferred creditor: While a preferred creditor is deemed to waive his lien if he files and proves up his claim as a general creditor without disclosing the fact of such lien, yet if it does not appear that in doing so he failed to disclose his lien or released it to the assignee, it will not be presumed that he was guilty of fraud so as to extinguish his lien, or that he made such release: Hatch v. Seeley, 37-493.

19. Mortgage: If the creditor holding a mortgage as security for his debt does not become party to the proceedings by filing his claim, he must confine himself to the security which he holds, and if he does so, his rights are not affected nor can the lien be taken away, and the bankrupt court can acquire no jurisdiction over the mortgaged property with reference to such lien. In such case, the right to foreclose such lien can properly be prosecuted in a state court: McKay v. Funk, 37-661.

20. But in such action a personal judgment cannot be rendered against the bankrupt; and when the defendant moves to stay proceedings for such personal judgment on account of pendency of the proceedings in bankruptcy, the court should do nothing further as to that matter until the final determination of the question of the bankrupt's discharge. A rendition of a personal judgment, with an order staying execution until the final termination of the bankruptcy proceedings, is erroneous: Ibid.

21. Setting aside payment: Where a payment is set aside as having been made in fraud of other creditors, the creditor to whom the payment was made may recover the amount which he is compelled to refund from sureties on the indebtedness, although such sureties have, prior to the setting aside of the payment, paid the balance of the indebtedness and taken up the evidence of such indebtedness: Watson v. Poague, 42-532.

22. An indorsement of a promissory note before maturity by a payee against whom bankruptcy proceedings have been commenced will not pass title. The indorsee will not be regarded as an innocent purchaser, and the note will pass to the assignee in bankruptcy, when appointed: Seaton v. Hinneman, 50-395.

IV. DISCHARGE.

23. Not collaterally attacked: A decree in bankruptcy is conclusive of the discharge except in cases of fraud or concealment, and the omission of the bankrupt to state the name of a creditor or the fact of a debt due, or a failure on his part to notify a creditor of his application for a discharge, will not avoid the effect of the discharge. When jurisdiction of the court to award a discharge is shown, the regularity of the proceedings cannot be collaterally assailed: Magoon v. Warfield, 3 G. Gr., 293.

24. Certificate as evidence: Although the certificate of discharge is evidence thereof, the same fact may also be proven by the decree awarding the discharge: Ibid.

25. Decree conclusive: A decree of discharge is sufficient evidence of the fact of discharge without the presentation of the certificate: Viele v. Blanchard, 4 G. Gr., 299.

26. Where the proceedings show that the bankrupt court had jurisdiction, the decree is conclusive of the discharge: Ibid.

27. The record of proceedings in bankruptcy held sufficient in a particular case to show that the court had jurisdiction to enter a discharge which would be a binding adjudication until reversed on appeal, even though erroneous: Smith v. Engle, 44-265.

28. Also, held, that the signatures of the bankrupts and certain of their creditors to a paper referring to a resolution accepting composition of debts was as binding as though signed to the resolution itself, and that as to whether the requisite creditors in number and value signed such paper, and as to whether the offer of composition was sufficient to support necessary proceedings thereon, was within the jurisdiction of the court in bankruptcy to decide: Ibid.

29. Effect of discharge: A discharge in bankruptcy duly and properly attested will be presumed to operate as a discharge from all debts, at least in the absence of proof that the creditor had no notice of the bankruptcy proceedings: Thornburgh v. Madren, 33-380.

30. A discharge under state insolvent laws does not discharge a debt due to a citizen of another state, no matter where the debt was contracted or made payable, unless the creditor has appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court by becoming a party or claiming a dividend: Hawley v. Hunt, 27-303.

31. Contingent debt: A contingent right to contribution between joint debtors is a claim provable under the bankrupt act, and in an action for such contribution, a discharge in bankruptcy, while the contract is in existence, may be shown in bar: Frentress v. Markle, 2 G. Gr., 553.

32. Liability on warranty: Where the bankrupt had, before bankruptcy, conveyed by general warranty deed premises covered by a mortgage, without excepting such mortgage from the covenants of the deed against incumbrances, held, that the claim of the grantee against the grantor for breach of such covenants was so far a contingent liability that it might have been proved up in the bankruptcy proceeding, but, not having been so proved, the discharge in bankruptcy relieved the bankrupt from any further liability thereon: Parker v. Bradford, 45-311.

33. Debts in fiduciary capacity: A debt incurred while acting in a fiduciary capacity is not discharged by a discharge in bankruptcy, even though it had been reduced to judgment before the bankruptcy proceedings: Wade v. Clark, 52-158.

34. It seems that a claim for wrongful conversion by a bailee of bailed property is barred by a discharge, and is not a debt owing in a fiduciary capacity so as to be excepted from such discharge: Sumner v. Richie, 54-554.

35. Subsequent promise: A promise by a bankrupt, made after the adjudication, but before he has obtained his certificate of discharge by which he agrees to pay the debt, is binding upon him: Kuapp v. Hoyt, 57-591.

36. Where the bankrupt said to his creditor that if he got his discharge "he would be in shape to pay and was going to pay," held, that this was sufficient to constitute an express promise: Ibid.

37. In such cases, if the debt is already in judgment, the creditor is entitled to equitable relief removing the apparent discharge from such judgment arising from the bankruptcy proceeding: Ibid.

38. Under the provision of the bankrupt law, that any contract by a bankrupt with a creditor for securing the payment of any money as consideration for forbearance to oppose discharge shall be void, and that the creditor may apply within two years to have the discharge set aside for fraud, etc., held, that a promissory note given for a debt existing prior to the adjudication, to a creditor, upon the condition that such creditor should dismiss a proceeding to set aside the discharge, was void: Fell v. Cook, 44-485.

BANKS.

1. Creation of: The constitutional restrictions upon the legislative authority to pass or amend acts authorizing or creating corporations or associations with banking powers (Const., art. 8, § 9) is not intended to forbid the repeal by the legislature of acts organizing banks, it being required, however, by § 8 of the same article, that such repeal be by a two-thirds vote: Morseman v. Yountkin, 27-350.

2. Liability of stockholders: The provision of the same article of the constitution rendering stockholders in a banking corporation or institution individually liable to an amount equal to their respective shares, applies only to banks of issue and not to banks merely of discount and deposit: Allen v. Clayton, 63-11.

As to taxation of stock, capital and deposits of banks, see TAXATION, §§ 146-157.

3. Deposits; bailment: Where United States bonds were deposited with a bank for the purpose of having them converted into similar bonds of another denomination, held, that the transaction was not to be deemed a gratuitous one, but for a compensation, and that the bank was liable as a bailee for hire: Leach v. Hale, 31-69.

4. A special deposit is one where the depositor is to receive back the identical thing deposited. In such case the right of property remains in the depositor: Lowry v. Polk County, 51-50.

Protest; negligence.

5. A receipt by a bank for money received "on deposit" does not show whether such deposit is special or general, and the bank may introduce parol evidence to show that the transaction was in fact a special deposit: Keen v. Beckman, 66-672.

6. Indorsement of a check by payee is not necessary, when payment is made to him: Huber v. Bossart, 70—.

7. Protest; negligence: It is the duty of a bank with which a note is left for protest to exercise ordinary and reasonable diligence in giving notice. Where a note was left with a bank for protest without direction as to where notice to the indorser should be sent, and it was sent by mistake to a person of the same name as that of the indorser, and living in the neighborhood, held, that the bank was not liable for negligence: Mount v. First Nat. Bank, 37-457.

Collecting agent: Liability of bank as, see AGENCY, § 48.

8. Payment to: While an agent having a money demand for collection cannot discharge the obligation by receiving anything but money unless specially authorized so to do, yet where a bank received a note for collection with direction that it should receive payment thereof in New York exchange, it being a bank of exchange as well as of deposit, held, that the acceptance in payment by the bank of its own certificate of deposit payable on demand was a discharge of the indebtedness, although it failed to remit the amount to the creditor, and afterward became insolvent, it appearing that on the day payment was thus made, it was paying its obligations and had money on hand with which the certificate could have been paid in cash if demanded, although it was actually insolvent, that fact not being known to the holder of the certificate: British & Am. M'ge Co. v. Tibballs, 63-468.

And see BILLS AND NOTES, § 433.

9. Liability for bills issued; partnership: Where a bank of issue was established by different banking firms, the notes thus issued being put into circulation by the different firms with an announcement that each was individually responsible for the bills issued, and that such bills would be redeemed in coin at the bank of issue, and at the places of business of the several partnership banks, held, that while the several banking houses might have been separate institutions in some operations, yet each became a member of the new firm to carry on the bank of issue, and the bills issued might be presented for payment to either of such banking houses, or, in the case of their suspension, to individual members thereof: Taylor v. Cook, 14-501.

10. A stockholder of a bank which is illegally organized, and has issued, given currency to, and received value for, bills, is personally bound to redeem them, and may make a valid contract with another to redeem them for him: Allen v. Pegram, 16-163.

11. Sale of stock: Bank stock is personal property, and when sold, if there is nothing in the contract or circumstances to repel the presumption, the vendor will be considered as warranting the title, and that the stock is legally what it purports to be in fact; but not its quality or value: Ibid.

12. Where a note was made to a bank payable in its stock, held, that if the president, with whom the contract was made, afterward received the stock, he would hold it for the bank and as its property: Markley v. Rhodes, 59-57.

13. National banks; powers: The act of a national bank receiving United States bonds of one denomination from its own customers to be converted into bonds of similar denominations is within the powers conferred upon such banks by act of congress: Leach v. Hale, 31-69.

14. Although the national banking act prohibits the taking of real property security for loans, yet where security is given to one who becomes personally liable upon such loan, the bank may avail itself of such security: First Nat. Bank v. Haire, 36-443.

15. A national bank may take, hold and enforce a chattel mortgage for a previously contracted debt: Spafford v. First Nat. Bank, 37-181.

16. Under the act of congress, power is expressly given to national banks to discount and negotiate promissory notes: Merchants', etc., Bank v. Moninger, 49-249.

17. A mortgage upon real property, taken by a national bank as security, will not be void. The punishment for such act, if any, is a judgment of ouster, and dissolution in a proper proceeding. A private person cannot usurp this function of government and question the validity of the act: First Nat. Bank v. Elmore, 52-541; Streeter v. First Nat. Bank, 33-177.

 Lists of stockholders.— Nature of proceeding; costs.

18. Lists of stockholders: Failure on the part of an officer of a national bank to comply with the provisions of the national banking act requiring a list of the stockholders to be kept, accessible to all, will not relieve from liability the person who is not thus shown to be a shareholder, but who is chargeable as such: Hale v. Walker, 31-344.

19. Jurisdiction in actions against; change of venue: The provision of the national banking act, giving jurisdiction in actions against such banks to state courts "in the county or city in which said association is located," does not limit jurisdiction absolutely to the state courts of that county; but the action being properly there brought, a change of venue may be had to the court of another county as in other cases: Kinser v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 58-728.

20. Receiver; payment of claims: Under a provision of the national banking act, the assets of the association in the receiver's hands, or when reduced to money and placed subject to the order of the comptroller, are to be ratably divided, and appropriated to the payment of the legal liabilities of the association, whether they be technically so called, or result from fraud, or the nonfeasance or malfeasance of the association in respect to its legal obligations: Turner v. First Nat. Bank, 26-562.

BASTARDY.

1. Nature of proceeding; costs: An action under the bastardy act is a civil and not a criminal action, and the county is not liable for costs in case the judgment is in favor of defendant: McAndrew v. Madison County, 67-54.

2. Dismissal: And held, that the mother might dismiss the prosecution and release defendant, if she chose, or receipt in full for the judgment: Holmes v. State, 2 G. Gr., 501.

3. Whether she might settle and receipt in full, so as to preclude the county from the right to resort to this proceeding to com- pel the putative father to execute a bond, with surety, to indemnify the county, quære; but she may thus preclude herself and the county from the right to maintain the proceeding to secure to her the maintenance of the child: Black Hawk County v. Cotter, 32-125; State v. Noble, 70—.

4. Object of the proceeding: The proceeding is a civil action of a summary nature, intended to secure the maintenance of the bastard, to the end that in no event shall the public become chargeable therewith. Therefore, where another person was chargeable for the maintenance of the bastard, by virtue of having married the mother while enciente, knowing the fact, and therefore standing to the child in loco parentis, held, that the proceeding could not be maintained: State v. Shoemaker, 62-343.

5. If the child is not born alive, an action, if already commenced, abates, and no judgment can be rendered for maintenance, nor for costs. In no event can the defendant be liable for lying-in expenses and medical attendance upon the mother: State v. Beatty, 61-307.

6. It is not improper, in a bastardy proceeding, to inform the jury that the object of the proceeding is to protect the county from the expense of keeping an illegitimate child: State v. Pratt, 40-631.

7. Jurisdiction: The action cannot be maintained outside of the jurisdiction within which it arose, but a judgment therein is entitled to full faith and credit in any other state. (So held, in relation to such proceeding, under the statutes of Indiana): State of Indiana v. Helmer, 21-370.

8. Under prior statutes it was held that the jurisdiction of such cases was in the circuit court instead of the district court, as at present: State v. Cook, 31-519; Montgomery County v. Gorman, 34-442.

9. Procedure under prior statutes discussed: Mills County v. Hamaker, 11-206.

10. Evidence: The statutory provisions requiring corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice, or of that of the prosecutrix in case of rape, seduction, etc., to warrant a conviction in a criminal prosecution, are not applicable in this proceeding. Neither need the case against defendant be made out beyond a reasonable doubt; a preponderance of evidence is sufficient: State v. McGlothlen, 56-544.

11. But this rule applies to the question of guilt or innocence upon the whole case and does not dispense with the force and effect to be given to presumptions arising from facts disclosed in evidence; and where it appeared that the child was born three months after the marriage of prosecutrix, held, that the presumption would arise that the child was begotten by the person to whom prosecutrix was married, and that unless this presumption was rebutted by clear, satisfactory and conclusive evidence, there would not be a preponderance of evidence such as to warrant conviction of defendant: State v. Romaine, 58-46.

12. Where the prosecutrix, after cohabiting with defendant, returned to his house, held, that proof that defendant had knowledge of declarations by her that she did so for the purpose of becoming the mother of a child and holding him for its support was not pertinent in his behalf: State v. Pratt, 40-631.

13. The fact that the jury find that prosecutrix had connection with other men will not preclude them from finding defendant to be the father of the child: Ibid.

14. In such a proceeding it is always allowable to show unchaste conduct with a man other than the defendant, and especially if the circumstances are such as not to preclude the possibility that the other was the father of the child: State v. Karver, 65-58.

15. Where the complainant has been guilty of illicit intercourse with a man other than the defendant, it is competent to show such fact as a circumstance to be used in corroboration of the defendant in denying the paternity of the child; and this circumstance may become very important if it is shown who the other man was, and that his intimacies and opportunities continued until after the child in question was begotten: State v. Woodworth, 85-141.

16. Evidence of the fact that complainant was accustomed, before and after the time the child was conceived, to occupy the same bed with a person who might have been the father of the child is admissible as tending to affect the credibility of her testimony charging defendant with the child's paternity: State v. Read, 45-469.

17. Evidence that prosecutrix was pregnant at the time of the alleged intercourse not only tends to corroborate defendant in testifying that he did not have connection with prosecutrix, but shows that he was not the father of the child, even if he did have connection with prosecutrix as alleged: State v. Smith, 61-538.

18. Also held, that evidence that the child was prematurely born did not corroborate the testimony of prosecutrix that defendant had connection with her at a time which was too near the birth of the child to allow full period of gestation: Ibid.

19. Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to support a verdict against the defendant: State v. Quinton, 59-362.

20. In a particular case, held, that under the evidence the instructions were not as favorable to the defendant as they should have been: State v. Smith, 61-538.

As to the resemblance of child to defendant, see EVIDENCE, §§ 818-815.

I. FORM; REQUISITES; CONSTRUCTION; NEGOTIABILITY.

a. Negotiability of different classes of instruments.

1. Foreign bill of exchange: A bill drawn in one state upon a person residing in another is a foreign bill of exchange: Bernard v. Barry, 1 G. Gr., 388.

2. Draft: It appears that a draft, drawn by a banker in favor of a third party as payee, against funds on deposit with a banker in another state, is not a foreign bill of exchange, but a banker's check: Roberts v. Corbin, 26-315.

3. A draft drawn by one banker upon another and purporting to be drawn upon funds deposited, and payable upon demand, is a banker's check: Northwestern Coal Co. v. Bourman, 69-150.

4. A certificate of deposit payable at a certain date to the order of the payee is a negotiable instrument: Bean v. Briggs, 1-488.

5. But such a certificate of deposit is not an equivalent of money; so held under a statute providing that, in making redemption from execution, the amount required might be paid in money or its equivalent: Dougherty v. Hughes, 3 G. Gr., 92.

6. Municipal bonds: Bonds of a municipal corporation, made in form and method of issue negotiable by delivery, to be bought and sold in the money and stock markets, are a class of negotiable sureties: Callanan v. Brown, 31-333.

7. The holder of such bonds for value before maturity takes free from any defense not affecting the authority of the municipality to issue them, and is not required to go behind the records to determine whether authority to issue them existed: Clapp v. Cedar County, 5-15.

8. If the power to issue bonds never existed, no subsequent transfer thereof can give them the effect of legal liabilities in the hands of any one. But if the power has been delegated, as, for instance, by a vote, authorizing a loan, then any irregularity in conducting the vote, or other imperfection in the exercise of the power, will not vitiate them in the hands of a bona fide holder, either in a direct or collateral proceeding: Hull v. Marshall County, 12-142.

9. Municipal bonds are not only negotiable instruments, the holders of which are protected to the same extent as holders of negotiable paper, but they are, like bank bills and national currency, chattels, in so far as that character tends to relieve them from the incidents and burdens incident to choses in action and gives to them a merchantable and vendible quality. The right and title of the first purchaser from the corporation is as fully protected as are those of a subsequent purchaser: Griffith v. Burden, 35-138.

Further as to municipal bonds, warrants, etc., see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, I, d.

10. Warrants or orders of school districts, cities, etc.: An order upon the treasurer of a school district, although payable to bearer and negotiable in form, does not possess the characteristics of negotiable paper: National State Bank v. Independent Dist., 39-490.

11. The indorsee thereof, before maturity, for value, in good faith, does not take free from equities: Shepherd v. District T'p, 22-595.

12. The fact that such warrants are in excess of indebtedness to be paid can be urged against a bona fide holder: Eastman v. District T'p, 40-493.

13. Such orders are not bills of exchange, but the mere promissory notes of the municipal corporation, and although they may run to order or bearer, and suit thereon be brought by the holder in his own name, it does not follow that the paper is invested with all the qualities of negotiability: Clark v. Des Moines, 19-199.

14. Railroad bonds; issue: Bonds are said to be "issued" only after they have passed into the hands of purchasers: Dunham v. Isett, 15-284.

15. A land warrant is a mere chattel, not assignable by delivery, or blank indorsement: Fort v. Wilson, 8-153.

16. A note payable in property is not negotiable: McCartney v. Smalley's Adm'rs, 11-85.

17. Such an instrument becomes a cash note if the payor fails to make payment at the time and in the manner specified: Hall v. Hunter, 4 G. Gr., 539.

18. Under a statutory provision¹ that notes payable in property may be made negotiable, held, that the use of the words, "without defalcation," was sufficient to evidence that intent: Council Bluffs Iron Works v. Cuppey, 41-104.

19. But the use of the words "or bearer" held not sufficient to make such an instrument negotiable: Peddicord v. Whittam, 9-471.

20. And so held, also, in regard to the use of the words "or order" in a receipt for corn: Merchants', etc., Bank v. Hewitt, 3-93.

21. A note payable "in currency" or "in current funds" is not prima facie a negotiable instrument either by commercial law or under the statutory provision last above referred to, even though made payable at a banking house: Rindskoff v. Barrett, 11-172; Huse v. Hamblin, 29-501.

22. But evidence of the general and customary meaning of those expressions at the place where the instrument is payable is admissible to show what the parties meant by such words: Pilmer v. Branch of State Bank, 16-321.

23. And if it appears by parol evidence that by the use of such terms the parties meant and understood that the instrument was payable in money, the attributes of negotiability are thereby imparted to it:

¹ Code, § 2085. Instruments by which the maker promises to pay a sum of money in property or labor, or to pay or deliver property or labor, or acknowledges property or labor or money to be due to another, are negotiable instruments, with all the incidents of negotiability, whenever it is manifest from their terms that such was the intent of the maker; but the use of the technical words "order" or "bearer" alone will not manifest such intent.

Certainty.

Haddock v. Woods, 46-433. And see Haddock v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 53-542.

24. A note payable to bearer, naming him, is, in legal effect, payable to the person named therein, the same as if the word bearer were omitted, and is non-negotiable: Warren v. Scott, 32-22.

25. Negotiable and payable at particular place: The provision in a note, that it is negotiable and payable at a particular place, has no effect on its negotiability and does not restrain its being negotiated elsewhere: Schoharie County Nat. Bank v. Bevard, 51-257.

26. Coupled with chattel mortgage: Where an instrument contained all the elements of a negotiable note, but in connection therewith provisions giving the payee of the note security in the nature of a chattel mortgage, held, that the negotiability of the instrument was not thereby affected: Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67-572.

27. Notes under seal: Under a statute declaring that promissory notes, bonds, due bills, etc., should be assignable by indorsement in the same manner as inland bills of exchange, held, that the fact that a note of such description was under seal would not prevent the application of the statute to it: Temple v. Hays, Mor., 9.

b. Certainty.

28. Certainty as to amount: The figures in the margin of a note are no part of the instrument. They constitute a mere memorandum, and cannot supply the omission in the body of the instrument to state the amount, where the blank left for the insertion of the amount is not filled up: Hollen v. Davis, 59-444.

29. Where a note provided for the payment of a certain amount, with the further provision that the payee might at any time be deemed himself insecure, even before the maturity of the instrument, take possession of the property in consideration of which the note was executed, and sell it on notice, held, that such provision rendered uncertain the amount which was to become due at maturity, and, therefore, that the instrument was not negotiable: Smith v. Marland, 59-645.

30. A note containing the stipulation that the amount is subject to diminution or reduction by showing overcharges, is a promissory note, and the maker, being sued thereon, has the burden of showing the existence of overcharges, if any such are claimed: Green v. Austin, 7-521.

31. Attorneys' fees: A provision in a note for the allowance of collection and attorneys' fees, if not paid when due and suit is brought thereon, will not affect the negotiability of the note. Such provision relates rather to the remedy than to the sum which the maker is bound to pay: Sperry v. Horr, 32-184.

As to attorney's fee, in general, see ATTORNEYS, IV.

32. Certainty as to time of payment: An instrument, which by its terms is not to become due any time except at the option of the maker, is uncertain as to the time of payment and not a negotiable instrument: Woodbury v. Roberts, 59-848.

33. A note payable upon demand, held not rendered uncertain as to time of payment by the insertion of the provision, "payable at Cincinnati, when convenient," for the reason that such clause could not be construed as qualifying the other words of the instrument: Works v. Hershey, 85-340.

34. Payable out of particular fund: A note payable "twelve months after date or before, if made out of the sale of Drake's hayfork and hay-carrier," is sufficiently certain as to time of payment, to be negotiable: Charlton v. Reed, 61-166.

35. So, where an instrument, in addition to the ordinary terms of a note, contained certain provisions relating to the sale of collateral securities by the payee and the application of the proceeds on the note, held, that under the peculiar language of the provisions, there being nothing stipulated for by way of condition precedent to the action on the note, the instrument was not rendered non-negotiable: Knipper v. Chase, 7-145.

36. But where a note contained the following stipulation, "if this agent [the maker] does not sell enough in one year, one more is granted," held, that payment at the end of the year was provided for out of a particular fund, and as the note was therefore payable only on the happening of a condition, it was not sufficiently certain as to the time, to be negotiable during that period, and although it was payable absolutely at the expiration of two years, yet not having been negotiable from the first, it was not negotiable at all: Miller v. Poage, 56-96.

c. Execution and delivery.

37. Execution: The fact that a note is written on the back of a paper containing a written contract does not alter its character: Dunning v. Rumbaugh, 86-566.

38. Signature: Statements by one of the makers of a promissory note, made at the time of its delivery, as to the fact of signature by a co-maker, are not admissible as against the latter: Smith v. Wagaman, 58-11.

As to authority of agent to sign, see AGENCY, § 75.

39. Delivery is more than the mere manual act of passing over the instrument. It requires the assent of the mind as well: Marsh v. Griffin, 42-403.

40. Delivery without authority: Under particular facts, held, that delivery of a note in suit made by an agent of the maker was without authority, and that therefore the maker did not become liable: Ware v. Smith, 63-159.

41. Where one person delivers to another his negotiable promissory note under an agreement that it is not to be put in circulation until the happening of some event, or that in a certain contingency the note is not to be considered as delivered, and the person to whom it is delivered puts it in circulation, an innocent indorsee for value, before maturity, may maintain an action thereon, notwithstanding the violation of the agreement: Graff v. Logue, 61-704.

42. The principle that sureties who sign a negotiable instrument and leave it in the hands of the principal, who delivers it, cannot be heard to say that they signed it upon conditions which were not fulfilled, is not applicable to instruments not negotiable: Daniels v. Gower, 54-319.

43. Therefore, where the instrument was signed by sureties and left with a third person to be delivered when signed by an additional surety, and such person delivered it to the principal without the condition being performed, and the principal delivered it to the payee, held, that the sureties were not bound thereby: Ibid.

44. Delivery in blank: One who places his signature to a blank instrument and intrusts it to another for some purpose will be liable if such person fraudulently fills it up as a promissory note, and it is negotiated before maturity to an innocent purchaser for value: McDonald v. Muscatine Nat. Bank, 27-319.

45. Reissue: If a promissory note be paid by the maker and again put by him into circulation, he is liable thereon as maker to any indorsee into whose hands it may fall after its reissue: Wilkerson v. Daniels, 1 G. Gr., 179.

46. Accommodation paper: The fact that accommodation paper has been once discounted and afterward taken up by the party accommodated does not render it void in his hands, but he may again use it, and it will be good in the hands of one who takes it for a proper purpose with knowledge of these facts, but without knowledge of any agreement between the parties as to the purpose for which it was to be used: Washington Bank v. Krum, 15-58.

d. Construction.

47. Lex loci: The law of the place of delivery of a note, and not that of the place where dated, is the lex loci contractus: Hart v. Wills, 52-56.

48. The indorsement on a note constitutes a distinct contract and is governed by the law of the state where made: National Bank v. Green, 83-140; Huse v. Hamblin, 29-501; Chatham Bank v. Allison, 15-357.

49. The law of the place where a draft is made payable governs in respect to the allowance of days of grace: Thorp v. Craig, 10-461.

50. As to the extent and nature of the liability of the drawer of a draft, the lex loci contractus governs: Ibid.

51. Protest for the purpose of holding a drawer should be in accordance with the law of the place where the draft is drawn: Ibid.

52. But apparently contra, holding that protest and notice must be in accordance with the law of the place of payment, see Allen v. Harrah, 30-303.

Construction.—Illegality.

53. Place of payment: The fact that the note is dated at one place will not fix that as the place of payment, if it is, in fact, delivered elsewhere: Hart v. Wills, 52-56.

54. Payable at particular place: Where a note was made payable to "the Equitable Life Insurance Co. of Iowa, at its office," and upon the note, preceding the date, were the words "Office of the Equitable Life Insurance Co., Des Moines, Iowa," held, that it sufficiently appeared that the office of the company was at Des Moines, and that the court would take judicial notice as to what county Des Moines was situated in: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Gleason, 56-47.

55. Interest: The language, "with interest annually," means that interest is payable annually: Failing v. Clemmer, 49-104.

56. Where the note contained the provision, "with ten per cent. after due," the word interest not appearing, held, that the question of construction of the instrument was a matter of law for the court, and that it should be construed as providing for ten per cent. interest after due: Higley v. Newell, 29-516.

57. Where a note provided for interest at a certain rate, and a mortgage given to secure it provided for the payment of money with the same rate of interest, with the additional provision that it should be "payable annually according to the terms of" the note, held, that the two instruments were not inconsistent, but that the mortgage specifically provided for something as to which the note was silent, and was to be regarded as incorporating such provision into the note: Dobbins v. Parker, 46-357.

58. Where the provision of a note as to interest was, "if not paid when due to bear twenty-five per cent. interest," held, that upon failure to pay at maturity the maker became liable for interest from date: Horn v. Nash, 1-204.

59. A promissory note, with "interest from date," draws the same rate of interest after maturity as before: Lucas v. Pickel, 20-490.

c. Illegality.

60. Gambling contracts: The effect of a statute which makes an instrument based upon a gambling transaction void and of no effect is to render such instrument void in the hands of innocent holders: Traders' Bank v. Alsop, 64-97; Craig v. Andrews, 7-17.

61. Action cannot be maintained upon an instrument of that character: Sipe v. Finarty, 6-394.

62. Even if the note is given upon an apparent consideration, the agreement between the parties may be such as to make it void as a wagering contract: Craig v. Andrews, 7-17.

See, also, CONTRACTS, §§ 332-353.

63. Sunday contracts: A note executed upon Sunday is within the prohibition of the statute imposing a penalty upon any one engaged "in any labor" upon that day, and is void in the hands of the payee or his assignees: Sayre v. Wheeler, 81-112; S. C., 32-559.

64. A note signed on Sunday, but not in fact delivered until Monday, is not subject to the objection that it is a Sunday contract: Bell v. Mahin, 69-408.

65. Where it appears that a note was in fact executed on Sunday, but on its face it bears another date, and there is nothing to suggest its invalidity, it will be valid in the hands of an innocent purchaser, without notice, before maturity: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48-228.

66. One who takes such a note by transfer, even after maturity, without notice, may recover thereon. The defense is not an equity which may be set up against a purchaser after maturity: Leightman v. Kadetska, 58-676.

See, also, CONTRACTS, §§ 300-317.

67. Public policy: Notes to secure the location of a railway to a certain point, or to secure a change of location therein, are not in contravention of public policy and may be valid: First Nat. Bank v. Hendrie, 49-402.

68. Revenue stamp: The failure to affix a stamp will not invalidate the instrument unless its omission was with intent to defraud the government: Works v. Hershely, 35-340; Ricord v. Jones, 33-26.

69. If there is nothing on the face of the instrument to show that it was post-stamped, in violation of the provisions of the United States revenue laws, requiring the affixing of a stamp at the time of execution, it will be good in the hands of an indorsee or holder, for value, who receives it in ignorance of the fact that it was not stamped until after issue: Blackwell v. Denie, 28-63; Lake v. Streeter, 84-601.

70. Where the note is fraudulently left unstamped at the time of its execution, but afterwards and before maturity it gets into the hands of a bona fide purchaser properly stamped, the fact of fraud in stamping is no defense: Anderson v. Starkweather, 28-409.

71. Where the instrument bears the proper stamp at the time it is transferred to an innocent holder, for value, the presumption that the stamp was affixed at the proper time and by the proper party is conclusive in his favor: Robinson v. Lair, 31-9.

72. But an indorsee of a note improperly stamped, who takes it with knowledge of such defect, is in no better condition than the payee: First Nat. Bank v. Dougherty, 29-260.

73. The fact that a note is not properly stamped when intrusted to another person for negotiation will not affect the rights of a bona fide holder thereof: Gage v. Sharp, 24-15.

74. The mode of cancellation of the revenue stamp is not essential to the validity of the note: Robinson v. Lair, 31-9.

75. Where a note was stamped by the payee in pursuance of authority given by the maker at the time of execution, held, that it was not, on that account, void: Mitchell v. Smith, 82-484.

As to the effect of failure to stamp, see also, CONTRACTS, §§ 288-290.

II. CONSIDERATION.

76. Presumed: A promissory note imports that it was made upon sufficient consideration: First Nat. Bank v. Hurford, 29-579.

77. The presumption is that the consideration was sufficient, and it is for the maker relying upon want of consideration to rebut such presumption: Trustees of Iowa College v. Hill, 12-462.

78. The act of giving a note is prima facie evidence of consideration: Thompson v. Maugh, 3 G. Gr., 342.

79. Joint note: Where a note is executed by joint makers, one cannot avoid payment by showing that the other received the consideration. It is presumed that it was entered into on the credit of the names attached to the note: Myers v. Sunderland, 4 G. Gr., 567.

80. Parol evidence to vary: Where the maker of a note executes the same at the time of receiving the amount of money therein specified, the presumption is that the money received constitutes the consideration of the note, and this presumption cannot be rebutted by parol proof of a contemporaneous agreement, showing the transaction to have been altogether different, and transforming the note into a mere memorandum of an agreement which would show the note to be without consideration: Dickson v. Harris, 60-727.

81. Illegality: A particular form of illegality in the consideration declared by statute may be insufficient to constitute a defense to instruments already in existence: Hill v. Smith, Mor., 70.

82. Given for intoxicating liquors: Where the consideration is in part intoxicating liquors, it is by statute (Code, § 1550) made utterly null and void: Taylor v. Pickett, 52-467.

83. Where defendant, having purchased intoxicating liquors of one B., which were unlawfully sold, in payment therefor, assumed to pay an amount which B. owed plaintiff, plaintiff being a party to the novation, and accepting defendant as his debtor instead of B., held, that defendant could not defeat plaintiff's recovery on the ground that the contract for the purchase of liquors from B. was void by the statute: Bower v. Webber, 69-286.

84. To secure location of public buildings: Where a note was given to one of the trustees of the state reform school as a subscription for the purpose of procuring a site therefor and thus securing the location thereof at a certain place, held, that, the school being located at the place designated, the maker of the note was liable: Wisner v. McBride, 49-220.

85. Failure of consideration: Where a note was executed as a subscription to an endowment fund, and, as alleged, in consideration of an agreement by the payee that the principal of the fund should remain undiminished, held (by a divided court), that the diminution of the fund would not operate as a failure of consideration: Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50-293.

86. Partial failure: Where a note is given under an entire contract for the purchase of two pieces of real property, a failure of title to one will not defeat the note, but the title to the other tract will be a sufficient consideration: Wadsworth v. Nevin, 64-64.

87. Waiver; renewal note: A party executing a note as a renewal of a former note, cannot, as against the payee, set up partial failure of consideration, of which he had knowledge at the time of the renewal. The surrender of the original note will be deemed the consideration for the renewed one: Keyes v. Mann, 68-560.

88. Want of consideration may be shown as bearing upon an issue as to whether the instrument is a forgery: Donahue v. Wagner, 68-358.

89. Parol condition: While partial failure of consideration may be shown as between the parties, it is not competent to prove by parol testimony that, on certain contingencies, the note should be valid only for a portion of the amount stated on the face thereof: Ather-ton v. Dearmond, 33-353.

90. Rescission not necessary: Where the consideration of a note has failed, recovery thereon may be defeated although payee has not rescinded or offered to rescind the contract under which the note was given: Moore v. Moore, 39-461.

91. Patent-right: Where the consideration of a promissory note was the assignment of a patent-right, held, that the question was not whether the payee had intended or attempted to make such assignment, but whether the assignment vested the maker of the note with the right contracted for: Snyder v. Kurtz, 61-593.

92. Stock in railway company: Where a county voted to issue negotiable bonds in aid of a railway in exchange for stock, but the transaction was, after the sale of a part of the bonds, held illegal, and the balance not issued, the county being compelled to pay those bonds issued, because in the hands of innocent holders, held, that such bonds were not without consideration, although no stock was ever issued, the contract on the part of the county not being fully performed so as to entitle it to the stock agreed upon: Jefferson County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 66-385.

93. Support of child: Agreement of the natural parent of a child for his support by adopting parents with whom an agreement for retransfer of the child to the natural parent had been made, but not yet consummated, held, sufficient to support a note and mortgage: Clayton v. Whitaker, 68-412.

94. Compromise of claim; burden of proof: In an action on a note, the consideration for which was the settlement of a claim before suit, held, not necessary for the payee to show that he had a probable cause of action in the claim settled, but that the burden of proof was upon defendant to show the contrary, in order to impeach the consideration: Sullivan v. Collins, 18-228.

95. It is not necessary, in order to support a note given in settlement of a disputed claim, that the claim compromised be shown to be valid. If it was doubtful, it would be a sufficient consideration: Keefe v. Vogle, 36-87.

96. The compromise or settlement of a claim which is wholly illegal and unfounded, and upon which no suit has been brought, is not a sufficient consideration: Tucker v. Ronk, 43-80.

97. The compromise of a claim before suit brought will not be a sufficient consideration to support a note unless the claim be sustainable at law or in equity, or at least doubtful, either in its right or amount: Sullivan v. Collins, 18-228.

98. Extension of time upon new security: Giving a new note with security in part payment of an unsecured note is a sufficient consideration for the extension of time of payment: Gates v. Hamilton, 12-50.

99. Extension of a debt due from a third person is a good consideration for a note; and when a note is executed upon an agreement between the parties thereto, that time on the original debt shall be extended, the consideration is sufficient even though the note is executed at the request of the original debtor: Atherton v. Marcy, 59-650.

100. Extension of time or release of indorser is not sufficient consideration for a new indorsement by an accommodation indorser if the holder has not good reason to suppose that the new indorser understood that he was incurring a new liability thereby, and proof by the new indorser that he did not know of the release or extension might be sufficient to prove want of consideration: Larned v. Ogilby, 20-410.

Further as to consideration, see CONTRACTS, VIII.

III. NEGOTIATION AND TRANSFER; ACCEPTANCE.

a. Method of transfer.

101. By delivery: A promissory note made payable to bearer is negotiable and transferable by mere delivery, and needs no indorsement. Any person bearing or presenting the note is, in that case, the party to whom the maker of the note promises to pay it: Elliott v. Corbin, 4-564.

102. Such a transfer is a parol assignment: Creighton v. Gordon, Mor., 41.

103. A note not payable to bearer cannot be transferred by mere delivery: Dawson v. Jewett, 4 G. Gr., 157; Mainer v. Reynolds, 4 G. Gr., 187.

104. If a note payable to bearer is transferred by delivery, the holder may sue thereon in his own name: Shelton v. Sherfey, 8 G. Gr., 108.

105. Assignment without indorsement: A note payable to payee or order may be assigned without indorsement so that (under Code, §§ 2543, 2546) the assignee may sue in his own name, but subject to any defense or set-off existing in behalf of the maker against the assignor, before notice of assignment: Younker v. Martin, 18-148; Pearson v. Cummings, 28-344.

106. A transfer by a separate instrument is an assignment and not an indorsement: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

107. An assignment by the payee in writing on the note constitutes an indorsement: Sears v. Lantz, 47-658.

108. Indorsement to bearer: After an indorsement of a note to a certain person, or bearer, it becomes payable to any person, as indorsee, who may be in possession: Shelton v. Sherfey, 8 G. Gr., 108.

109. Indorsement in blank: The writing on the back of a note of the words "I hereby indorse within note," held to be a blank indorsement: Conger v. Babbet, 67-18.

110. The indorsement of a guaranty and waiver of demand and notice of non-payment is a sufficient indorsement to transfer title: Robinson v. Lair, 81-9.

The indorsement of a non-negotiable note is equivalent to the making of a new note by the indorser: See infra, § 274.

111. Indorsement and guaranty; validity; stamp: A writing on the back of a note by the payee in the form of an indorsement, but also containing words of guaranty, may be considered either as an indorsement or as a guaranty, and although, considered as a guaranty, it may be void because not stamped as formerly required by the United States revenue laws, it may still be recovered on as an indorsement: Muscatine Nat. Bank v. Smalley, 30-564.

112. Unauthorized indorsement: An indorsement of the name of the owner by a person having no authority to make such indorsement confers no title upon the indorsee: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51-676.

113. A power of attorney which gives authority "to sell, convey and dispose of any and all property, real and personal, give bill of sale of personal property, and do and perform every act and thing whatsoever required in the premises," etc., confers upon the agent power to transfer a promissory note of the principal by indorsement: Gould v. Bowen, 26-77.

114. An indorsee for collection cannot transfer the note to another who is aware of the facts: Clafin v. Wilson, 51-15.

115. Indorsement for collateral security: When the payee of a note indorses it and delivers it to the bank as collateral security, he thereby vests the bank with title thereto, and unless its rights with reference to the instrument are expressly limited, it has power to make such disposition of it as it may elect, being answerable for its value, and a transferee thereof acquires good title thereto: Rand v. Barrett, 66-731.

116. Where a note and mortgage are given to another for the purpose of enabling him to borrow money thereon, he has authority to pledge them as collateral security for his own note for money borrowed: Tomblin v. Callen, 69-229.

Method of transfer.

117. One partner without the consent of his copartner cannot indorse a partnership note in payment of an individual debt: Fletcher v. Anderson, 11-228.

118. But this rule does not apply after the note has ceased to belong to the firm and become property of the individual partner: Ibid.

119. Where, after the dissolution of the firm, a note payable to the firm is found in the possession of one of the members, regularly indorsed in the firm name, the law presumes that he came rightfully in possession of it, either in the regular course of business or at the dissolution of the firm, and will regard him as the lawful owner until circumstances of suspicion are shown: Ibid.

120. Indorsement of a note by a member of the firm not assuming to bind the firm will not constitute a warranty of the genuineness of the signature of the firm's name to the note binding upon the firm: Miller v. House, 67-737.

121. Assignment by foreign executor: The holder of a note acquiring it by assignment from an executor may maintain action thereon in the courts of a state other than that in which the executor was appointed: Campbell v. Brown, 64-425.

122. Conversion: One who purchases a note with notice of the right of another party thereto acquires no title, and is liable for conversion in taking possession of and collecting such note: Allison v. King, 25-56.

123. An agreement not to transfer, while it may be an independent covenant, upon breach of which the obligor may be liable, will not destroy the negotiability of the note. The fact of such agreement without more will not be sufficient to charge the holder with notice of defenses: Leland v. Parriott, 35-454.

124. Striking out subsequent indorsement: The payee in possession is presumed to have a beneficial interest in the note notwithstanding any indorsement thereon, and may bring an action in his own name: Gordon v. Pitt, 3-385.

125. In such case, an indorsement on the back which appears to be stricken off, will be presumed to have been erased on due authority: Goddard v. Cunningham, 6-400.

126. The real owner and holder has the right to erase a special indorsement on the note, and need not explain such erasure in offering the note in evidence: Jones v. Berryhill, 25-289.

127. So, in a suit upon a draft, payable to plaintiff, bearing several unerased indorsements, held, that testimony by the plaintiff that he had, on the draft being protested, taken it up and was now the owner thereof, was admissible, but superfluous, for being in possession he had prima facie the right to erase the prior indorsements and recover as payee: Pulmer v. Branch of State Bank, 19-112.

128. Where the payee, after indorsement by him, lifts the note by payment to the indorsee, he does not acquire title under a new contract, but the note becomes again fully and exclusively his property, and he is authorized to strike out his indorsement. The indorsee's interest, while it continues, is not of such exclusive character as to deprive the indorser of all interest and title in the note. He still has a conditional title, which becomes absolute upon payment by him after dishonor, and may then enforce a mechanic's or landlord's lien for the indebtedness for which the note was given, although, as to the indorsee, the transfer of the note extinguished such lien: Farwell v. Grier, 38-83; German Bank v. Schloth, 59-816.

129. Upon the note after indorsement coming again into the legal possession of the payee, he may erase all indorsements, and sue in the same manner as though he had never parted with possession: Sater v. Hendershott, Mor., 118.

130. Transfer of distinct shares: The owner may sell distinct shares of a note to different persons, who thus become co-owners, and one of such co-owners may protect his interest by an action and may maintain trover if a co-owner be guilty of conversion: Conover v. Earl, 26-167.

131. Indorsement may be made for a portion of the amount included in the note and the indorser will be liable to that extent, as though the indorsement had been to the entire amount of the instrument: Cochran v. Glover, Mor., 151.

132. If a party becomes entitled to a part interest, he may have a transfer of such part with the security. belonging thereto: Vogel v. Wadsworth, 48-28.

Time of transfer.—Pleading and evidence.

133. Transfer of a note carries with it security: The assignment of a note given for the purchase-price of real property carries with it a vendor's lien and any and all other equities and rights attaching to the debt: Bills v. Mason, 42-329.

134. So, if a note be secured by a mortgage, the indorsement of the note before maturity to a good faith holder transfers the mortgage free from equities between the original parties in the same manner as the note: Updegraff v. Edwards, 45-513.

135. Transfer in separate instrument: A transfer in a separate instrument, executed for an independent purpose to which the transfer is merely incident, is an assignment and not an indorsement, and the holder thereunder is subject to defenses: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

136. A land-warrant is a mere chattel not assignable by delivery or blank indorsement, and transfer of the same should be made by a full assignment: Fort v. Wilson, 8-153.

137. The verbal transfer of a note with notice thereof to the maker imposes upon him an equitable obligation to make payment to the assignee, and though not sufficient to support implied assumpsit, it is a good consideration for an express promise to pay to the assignee: Allison v. Barrett, 16-278.

138. Where a note was verbally assigned by the payee, who retained possession, and the maker promised to pay it to the assignee, and the note was subsequently sued upon by the creditors of the payee, while in his possession, and sold under such levy, held, that the levy only reached the interest of the payee, and the sale did not convey any rights to the purchaser, and that the payment of such purchaser by the maker would not release his obligation to pay to the assignee: Ibid.

b. Time of transfer.

139. Presumption: The assignment being without date, the presumption is that it was made on the day the instrument was executed: Hayward v. Munger, 14-516.

140. In an action by the indorser, it is presumed that the note was transferred to him for a valuable consideration before maturity: Rea v. Owen, 37-262.

141. Proof that the payee received payments after maturity, on a statement at the time to the maker that the note was in his trunk at another place, held, not sufficient to overcome such presumption: Ibid.

142. Indorsement being prima facie evidence of transfer before maturity, proof of payment to the payee is unavailing in an action by the indorser, unless the maker can show that the payment was made before the transfer, or that the indorsement was made after maturity: Wilkinson v. Sargent, 9-521.

143. The presumption as to the time of making the indorsement is that it was made at the date of the making of the note, or at least before its maturity: Fletcher v. Anderson, 11-228.

144. Relation back: An indorsement may, as between the parties, relate back to the time of the making of the agreement to indorse: Berryhill v. Jones, 35-335.

145. Transfer after maturity has the same force and effect as if made before the note fell due, except that the transfer is subject to the equities of the maker: Wyatt v. Bailey, Mor., 896.

As to what equities such transferee is subject to, see infra, VII.

c. Pleading and evidence.

146. Allegation of ownership: Where a note is payable to bearer, an averment in an action thereon that it is the property of and the amount claimed is due to the plaintiff, is equivalent to a direct allegation of title. The method in which it became the property of plaintiff need not be averred: Dabney v. Reed, 12-315.

147. Pleading title: Where an instrument is not made payable to bearer or transferable by delivery alone, the plaintiff suing thereon not being payee or indorsee does not, by merely averring ownership, without showing by what right he claims the same, present such facts as will enable him to maintain the action in his own name: Montague v. Reineger, 11-503.

148. Mere denial of plaintiff's property in the note sued on, if it be payable to bearer, is not sufficient to cast upon him the burden of proving his right: Breckbill v. Stutyman, 3 G. Gr., 572.

149. Presumption from possession: If a note is payable to bearer, the law presumes that the person in possession thereof is the owner: Allensworth v. Moore, 8 G. Gr., 273; Stoddard v. Burton, 41-582.

150. Possession of a note payable to bearer is prima facie evidence of ownership: Shelton v. Sherfey, 8 G. Gr., 108; Creighton v. Gordon, Mor., 41.

151. Possession of a note is such prima facie evidence of ownership as to entitle the person in possession to recover thereon, in the absence of evidence rebutting such presumption: Rubey v. Culbertson, 35-264.

152. And this is so, even though the note is payable to another person, or order, and no assignment is shown: King v. Gottschalk, 21-512.

153. But the presumption of ownership arising from possession may be overcome by direct and positive testimony that the person in possession has no interest in it or authority to collect it: Hesser v. Doran, 41-463.

154. While possession of a note is prima facie evidence of ownership as between the holder and the maker, yet, in a contest between the payee and a stranger, the presumption is that the payee is the owner as against the stranger having possession: Tuttle v. Becker, 47-486.

155. If a note is payable to payee or bearer, a subsequent indorsement by the payee, or by a holder not connected by indorsement with the payee, will not render proof of a transfer by indorsement necessary: Breckbill v. Stutyman, 3 G. Gr., 572.

156. The holder of a note payable to bearer may rely upon his possession acquired by delivery although the instrument is indorsed by the payee, and is not bound to rely upon having acquired title by or through the indorsement: Lane v. Krekle, 22-399.

157. The party claiming to be the owner of a note payable to bearer, seeking to recover its value from a third person having possession thereof, which is alleged to be wrongful, must prove his title. It is not necessary for defendant in possession to set up and prove title as against plaintiff: Gaskell v. Patton, 58-163.

158. Blank indorsement of a note by the payee and its possession by plaintiff are sufficient to create a legal presumption of plaintiff's right to recover thereon: Hickok v. Labussier, Mor., 115.

159. Possession of a note by the maker is at least some evidence that he has paid it, the possession being presumed lawful: Dougherty v. Deeney, 41-19.

Parol evidence: How far admissible to vary liability of blank indorser or drawer, see infra, §§ 281-286.

IV. MATURITY.

a. Days of grace.

160. Usage recognized: The law merchant having generally been recognized by courts of this country, will be considered as existing until it is shown not to prevail. The courts will take notice of the usage of allowing three days of grace, and in the absence of proof to the contrary will presume that such was the understanding of the parties: Hudson v. Matthews, Mor., 94.

161. Statutory provision: Where exemption from liability on a bill of exchange was asserted under a statute of another state which changed the rule of the law merchant as to days of grace, held, that defendants must show themselves within such statute to obtain its exemption: Mt. Pleasant Branch, etc., Bank v. McLeran, 26-306.

162. Where no time of payment is mentioned: Under a statute allowing days of grace (16 G. A., ch. 81) except in case of paper drawn payable on demand, held, that a draft or bill in which no time for payment is mentioned is payable on demand, and therefore not entitled to grace: First Nat. Bank v. Price, 52-570.

163. Non-negotiable instruments are not entitled to days of grace: Peddicord v. Whitlam, 9-471.

164. Notes payable in property are not entitled to days of grace, unless they are negotiable within the provisions of the statute (Code, § 2065) allowing such notes to be made negotiable in terms: McCartney v. Smalley's Adm'rs, 11-85.

165. Overdue: A note is not overdue until days of grace are passed. Therefore, held, that a transfer on the second day of grace was before maturity: Goodpaster v. Voris, 8-334.

166. A note payable in current funds is not prima facie negotiable; but evidence of custom or an understanding among the parties that by such term is meant money may be received to impart to it the attributes of negotiability. (See supra, §§ 21-23 of this article.) And thereby it will become subject to days of grace: Haddock v. Woods, 46-483.

b. When payable.

167. Where no time of payment is mentioned in a note it is in contemplation of law payable on demand: Green v. Drebbis, 1 G. Gr., 553.

168. So a draft in which no time of payment is mentioned is payable on demand and not at sight, notwithstanding it provides for interest "after maturity:" First Nat. Bank v. Price, 52-570.

169. Accommodation paper: The contract between the parties to an accommodation paper is that the one receiving the accommodation will negotiate the paper and will place the proceeds to his own use, and will either pay it at its maturity or reimburse the accommodation party in case he is compelled to pay it; and a cause of action on such a note in favor of the accommodation party accrues only on the failure of the other party to the contract to perform his undertaking: Jefferson County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 66-385.

170. Change of time of payment: The fact that one of the makers of a note, in the presence and with the consent of the other makers, indorsed thereon an agreement signed by himself, changing the time of payment to an earlier date, held not to bind such other makers to such agreement so as to cause the statute of limitations to run as to them from such earlier date: Mitchell v. McHenry, 62-352.

171. Part payment as evidence of maturity: While the payment of a part of a note may be competent evidence to be considered in determining the time of maturity, no presumption of law arises from the simple fact of payment that the note was then due: Hughes v. Monty, 24-499.

172. Extension of time; consideration: An extension of time given after maturity upon payment of interest due is without consideration: Van Dusen v. Parley, 40-70.

173. Renewal; release: Where an agreement as follows was indorsed on the note, "Renewed for an indefinite time at, ten dollars interest per month, and the whole amount then to pay when both parties may agree," held that it was a stipulation not to sue for a limited time, and not a release or covenant not to sue at all, and that therefore the note was due and payable at the date of such renewal, or at least within a reasonable time: Ramot v. Schotenfels, 15-457.

174. Indorsement on a note of permission to the maker to use the principal after due, by paying the interest annually, does not change the effect of the note so as to release the obligation to pay the principal. In such case, failure to pay interest annually as stipulated renders the principal due, and a subsequent acceptance of interest by the payee will not be a waiver of the breach of the condition, but simply an acceptance of part payment: Oskaloosa College v. Hickok, 46-287.

175. Interest after maturity: Provision in a note for interest at ten per cent. after due does not operate to extend the time of maturity: Watrous v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 85-582.

176. Demand; interest: Although interest on a demand note will commence to run from date of commencement of suit, and not from date of execution, if no demand is proven, yet where it was shown that, within a few days after execution and delivery, the maker paid a portion of the amount due, held, that such act constituted an acknowledgment that the note was due at the time and was equivalent to demand, so that interest would commence to run from that time: Baylis v. Pearson, 15-279.

177. Note payable in property; demand: Where the instrument provided for the payment of a certain sum in cabinet furniture at the maker's shop, no date for the payment being specified, held that, under Code, § 2097, action thereon could not be maintained without demand being shown: Frederick v. Remking, 4 G. Gr., 56.

178. If the time of payment of a note payable in property is fixed, no demand of the property is necessary to convert it into a money demand. The property¹ should, in such case, be tendered. (See Code, § 2098): Barker v. Brink, 4 G. Gr., 59.

Presentment; demand; notice; protest.

And see infra, §§ 183, 184.

179. Due before maturity; interest: Where a note drawn to include interest to the time of maturity becomes due prior to that time upon the happening of a contingency, the maker may defend against the note to the extent of the unearned interest included therein: Roberts v. Waters, 9-434.

180. Due for default in interest: Where the mortgage given to secure a note contained a stipulation that, if interest should remain unpaid for six months after due, the whole amount of the indebtedness should become due and payable, although the note contained no such stipulation, held, sufficient to authorize the bringing of an action upon the note before the date of maturity thereof, there being such failure to pay interest as was stipulated for in the mortgage: Clayton v. Whitaker, 68-412.

As to alteration with respect to date, see ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

V. PRESENTMENT FOR ACCEPTANCE OR PAYMENT; DEMAND; NOTICE OF NON-ACCEPTANCE OR NON-PAYMENT; PROTEST.

181. Presentment not necessary to charge maker: Even where the place of payment is agreed upon, failure of the holder to demand payment there will not stop the running of interest unless the maker had the money at the place of payment: Myers v. Byington, 34-205.

182. Demand of payment is not necessary in such cases in order to enable the holder to recover: Games v. Manning, 2 G. Gr., 251.

183. Notes payable in property: The same rule holds true as to notes payable in property: Ibid.

184. Even where no place is designated, if the note is payable in property at a particular time, no demand need be shown: Ibid.

And see supra, §§ 177, 178.

185. Presentment of order for property: There is no fixed rule as to the time of presentment of an order for property in which no date is fixed. It is sufficient if it be presented within a reasonable time, to be determined by the circumstances of each particular case. Presentment at any time before commencement of suit would be sufficient to enable the holder to recover against the drawer unless it should appear that the drawer had been injured by the delay: Tryon v. Oxley, 3 G. Gr., 289.

186. Necessary to charge indorsers: An indorser cannot be charged in the absence of evidence of presentation and demand of payment and of proof of the notice required by law: Bank of Red Oak v. Orvis, 40-383.

187. The holder of a check payable at a different place than that at which it is negotiated can recover against the indorser only upon using due diligence in forwarding such check for presentment. The general rule is that it must be deposited in the mail on the day on which it is received or on the next succeeding day: Northwestern Coal Co. v. Bowman, 69-150.

188. So held in case of a check or draft drawn by one banker upon another, purporting to be drawn upon funds deposited and payable on demand: Ibid.

189. While the rule as to time of presentment may be varied by particular circumstances of the case, the presentment must be made in every case with all the dispatch and diligence consistent with the transaction of other commercial concerns: Ibid.

190. Institution of suit against the maker will not render the indorser liable in the absence of notice to him: Keater v. Hock, 11-536.

191. The fact that at the time a note comes due action is pending thereon does not release the holder from the necessity of making proper presentment and demand to hold the indorser: Graul v. Strutzel, 58-712.

192. Notes transferred after maturity: A note transferred after maturity is, as respects the obligations of the parties, equivalent to a note payable on demand, and there is the same necessity for presentment and notice as in case of a demand note: Ibid.; Jones v. Middleton, 29-188; McKewer v. Kirtland, 33-348; Pryor v. Bowman, 38-92.

193. The time within which notice must be given in such cases is the same as in a case where a note is indorsed before maturity: McKewer v. Kirtland, 83-848; Pryor v. Bowman, 88-92.

194. Not necessary to hold indorser of non-negotiable note: The indorsement of a non-negotiable note is equivalent to the making of a new note and is a direct and positive undertaking on the part of the indorser to pay the note to the indorsee, and such indorser is liable without demand and notice: Wilson v. Ralph, 8-450; Long v. Smyser, 3-286; Hall v. Monohan, 6-216; Billingham v. Bryan, 10-317; Huse v. Hamblin, 29-501.

195. The holder of such an instrument indorsed in blank may fill up the indorsement with an absolute promise to pay, or a waiver of demand and notice: Long v. Smyser, 3-286.

196. Necessary to hold drawer: If the drawer has reason to expect the bill to be honored, he is entitled to a regular presentment and notice of a refusal to pay; but if, under the circumstances, he has no right to draw upon the payee and expect that his draft will be paid, he cannot complain either of delay or entire failure in presenting and giving notice of non-acceptance or non-payment: Kimball v. Bryan, 56-632.

197. County orders or warrants: Presentment of a county order or warrant drawn by the proper officers upon a county treasurer and notice of such presentment are not necessary in order to sustain an action against the county. The order is to be considered as in effect drawn by a party upon himself: Steel v. Davis County, 2 G. Gr., 469.

198. Not necessary to hold guarantor: A guarantor cannot escape liability on account of failure to give him notice unless notice has been so long delayed as to raise a presumption of payment or waiver, or unless he can show that by the delay he has lost opportunities for reimbursement or indemnity which the notice, or an earlier notice, would have secured him: Second Nat. Bank v. Gaylord, 34-246.

See, also, GUARANTY, II, b.

199. Liability of agent for negligence in making demand or giving notice: Failure of the broker, to whom a bill of exchange is sent for collection, to present the same for acceptance and payment at maturity at the place at which it is made payable, will render him liable for the amount thereof if it appears that the drawee had funds deposited for payment, though they were subsequently withdrawn and the drawee became insolvent. An allegation of insolvency of the drawee at the maturity of the bill would not in such case be necessary: Laughlin v. Greene, 14-92.

200. Where a note was left with a bank for protest, and notice was served upon a person of the same name as the indorser living in the vicinity, but the real indorser living in an adjoining county was not notified. held, that the bank was not liable for negligence, no directions as to the place to which notice should be sent having been given by the owner of the note: Mount v. First Nat. Bank, 87-457.

201. Evidence of a custom among bankers to make presentment on certificates of deposit on the day they fall due instead of on a day of grace may be received to rebut negligence in presenting on that day, although the indorser is thereby discharged: Haddock v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 53-542.

202. Where the act of an agent in improperly presenting for acceptance instead of for payment, whereby the indorser was released, was ratified by the holder by ordering a protest and paying the expenses thereof, held, that he could not recover from the agent for negligence in making presentment: First Nat. Bank v. Price, 52-570.

203. Protest; when necessary: Protest is not necessary on notes and inland bills of exchange in order to charge the indorser. It is sufficient that they should be presented for payment and notice of non-payment duly given: Smith v. Ralston, Mor., 87.

204. Certificate of protest as evidence: Protest of a promissory note is not necessary, even where the indorser resides in one state and the indorsee in another, and the certificate of protest is not in such cases of itself evidence of the fact of demand, as it would be in the case of a foreign bill of exchange: yet it may be admitted as part of the testimony of the officer making demand, and will be entitled to the same credit as any memorandum of a witness made on the occurrence of an event, and form a part of the res gestæ: Bernard v. Barry, 1 G. Gr., 388.

Presentment; demand; notice; protest.

205. Lex loci: The law of the place of contract must govern the liability of an indorser and notice of dishonor must be given accordingly: Huse v. Hamblin, 29-501; Thorp v. Craig, 10-461; Chatham Bank v. Allison, 15-357.

206. Protest and notice should be according to the law of the place of payment: Allen v. Harrah, 30-363.

Further as to lex loci, see supra, §§ 47-52.

207. Written notice to the maker will not take the place of a presentment for payment, nor hold the indorser: Graul v. Strutzel, 53-712; Hartford Bank v. Green, 11-476.

208. Place of presentment: There must be presentment to the maker personally at his place of residence or business: Graul v. Strutzel, 53-712.

209. Although the presumption is that the maker resides where the note is dated, and that he contemplated payment at that place, yet this is a presumption only, and if he resides elsewhere in the state when the note falls due, and that fact is known to the holder, demand must be made at the place of the maker's residence; and allegation of diligence in making presentment at the place where the instrument bears date is not sufficient to show due diligence: Hartford Bank v. Green, 11-476.

210. Demand made at the house of the maker who has no place of business is sufficient though he is not at home at the time: Bank of Red Oak v. Orvis, 42-691.

211. Where maker has removed from the state: The holder is not required to follow the maker who has removed from the state subsequent to the execution of the note, and make demand upon him in another state; nor will failure to make demand at the last place of residence or of business of such maker within the state release the indorser, if it appears that the maker left behind no one to represent or answer for him in any capacity: Whitely v. Allen, 56-224.

212. Payable at particular place: When a bill is made and accepted payable at a particular place, the officer making protest should go the place specified and present the bill for payment to the person having charge of the office at that place and demand payment of him. If the place of payment is shut up during the hours of business upon the day of maturity, the holder may treat the bill as dishonored by refusal of payment, but the fact that it is so closed must be stated in the protest: Gage v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 11-810.

213. Where the indorser of a note payable at a banking house, in writing waived notice of protest, and before the maturity of the note all the books and papers of the bank were removed to another banking house in the same city, of which fact the public and the maker had notice, and it did not appear that the banking house where the note was made payable was still open, or that said bankers continued their business unless at the place to which their books had been transferred, held, not error to find that the presentment at the place to which the books and papers were removed was sufficient: Gelpecke v. Lovell, 18-17.

214. It is not necessary that a certificate of protest of a note made payable at a particular place shall show that demand was made at that place. A general statement of demand made will be sufficient: Fuller v. Dingman, 41-506.

215. Demand on corporation: The note of a corporation may be presented for payment at its usual place of business although such place of business is not the place where by its charter it is required to keep its office: Merrick v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 11-74.

216. Presentment to joint makers: Presentment must be made to all the makers of the note: Graul v. Strutzel, 53-712.

217. Presentment to one of two joint makers will not be sufficient to hold the indorser, in the absence of a showing of some excuse for failure to make presentment to the other maker: Blake v. McMillen, 22-358; Bank of Red Oak v. Orvis, 40-832.

218. But this question was left an open one, after some consideration, in Allen v. Harrah, 80-863.

219. Where one of the joint makers dies before maturity, presentment must be made to his legal representatives if possible: Blake v. McMillen, 38-150.

220. Presentment of a partnership bill to one of the partners is sufficient: Mt. Pleasant Branch, etc., Bank v. McLeran, 26-806.

Presentment; demand; notice; protest.

221. At maturity: Demand and notice on the day after the last day of grace are not sufficient to hold the indorser: Barker v. Webster, 10-593.

222. If a note payable in current funds is shown to have been, by usage and understanding of the parties, payable in money and therefore negotiable, presentment on the last day without days of grace would not hold the indorser: Haddock v. Woods, 46-433.

223. But evidence is admissible to prove a custom among banks that certificates of deposit shall be presented on the day they fall due and not on a day of grace, for the purpose of showing that in making such presentment the bank acted with reasonable prudence, and is not liable to the holder for presenting on that day although the indorser was thereby discharged: Haddock v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 53-542.

224. Presentment for payment before the last day of grace is premature. Decided under provisions of Code of '51, differing from those of the present Code, § 2093: Edgar v. Greer, 8-394.

225. Parol authority will be sufficient to authorize an agent to make demand of payment for the holder. Such authority may be created by merely handing over the bill with instructions to demand payment: Mt. Pleasant Branch, etc., Bank v. McLeran, 26-306.

226. The drawee may act as agent in procuring presentment and protest in order to secure a holder's rights as against parties to the paper; and the fact that the certificate of protest shows that presentment was made at the request of the drawee does not preclude proof that in making such request the drawee acted merely as agent of the holder: Ibid.

227. It appearing that protest was made at the request of a bank, it will be presumed that the bank had the right to authorize protest in the absence of proof to the contrary: Bank of Red Oak v. Orvis, 42-691.

228. Assuming that a bank holding paper payable at its counter is bound to make presentment, a presentment by the cashier for the bank to the paying teller after business hours is sufficient: First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 23-185.

229. Verbal notice to the indorser of demand and non-payment is sufficient: Merritt v. Woodbury, 14-299; First Nat. Bank v. Ryerson, 23-508.

230. Notice by mail: Where notices of protest were sent by the notary public by mail to one indorser, who deposited them properly directed to other indorsers in the postoffice of the town where they resided, held, that this was sufficient: Van Brunt v. Vaughn, 47-145.

231. Transmission of notices of protest through a party who re-deposits them in the postoffices of the persons to whom they are addressed is not improper: Ibid.

232. Where notice of dishonor was sent to a postoffice which was once the address of the drawer, but had been discontinued, the mail for such office being sent to another office about as near the drawer, and which in the particular case was the drawer's proper postoffice, held, that the notice was sufficient: First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 23-185.

233. The notice to an indorser is as essential to his liability as are due presentment and demand of payment; and where it appeared that notice to an indorser was directed to him at a place other than his postoffice, held, that he was thereby discharged: Northwestern Coal Co. v. Bowman, 69-150.

234. Notice to parties in same town: If the parties live in the same town, notice should not be sent by mail but should be given either at the place of business or residence of the party to be notified; but if put into the postoffice and in fact received by the party to be notified on the day he is entitled to notice, such a notice will be sufficient: Grinman v. Walker, 9-426.

235. But an agreement between parties that notice through the mails should be deemed sufficient may be shown by proving usage to that effect known to the party to whom notice is to be given: Ibid.

236. There is now, however, a statutory provision (Code, § 2095) authorizing notice to the party to be charged, if in the same town or township, to be made by depositing the notice in the nearest postoffice to such party on the day of demand; but such provision does not essentially differ from the rule established under the law merchant on this subject except to add one other method of giving notice when the party to be affected resides in the same place where the note is payable and the demand is made, namely, that of leaving the notice in the post office nearest to such party: Fahnestock v. Smith, 14-561.

237. Where a notary, after making demand, instead of notifying an indorser residing in the same place, either personally or by notice deposited in the postoffice there, returned to a neighboring town and from there mailed a notice to the indorser, held, that the notice was not sufficient under this section: Ibid.

238. A certificate of protest stating that the notary notified the indorsers is sufficient although it does not show that the residences of the several parties are at the places to which the notices were addressed: Fuller v. Dingman, 41-506.

239. Under the statutory provision making the certificate evidence as to what it recites as to the dishonor and notice, the certificate of the officer that he notified a party in a particular manner raises the presumption that the mode adopted accomplished the result referred to; but if the certificate states only the steps taken and the mode adopted, and not the fact that notice was given, then unless it further appears that such method would effect notice, the certificate does not make out a prima facie case of notice: Wamsley v. Rivers, 34-463.

240. It is not necessary to annex to, or set out in, the notary's certificate, the notice referred to therein; nor need the certificate, in words, formally refer to the seal: Jones v. Berryhill, 25-289.

241. When in the same town: Where the parties reside in the same town, notice to the indorser must be given within a reasonable time, which means, at farthest, the next day after default: McKewer v. Kirtland, 33-348; Graul v. Strutzel, 53-712.

242. Successive indorsers: The holder of a note which has passed through the hands and received the indorsements of several parties may elect to hold either one or all of them. If he elects to hold all, he must give all notice; if to hold but one, notice to that one only is necessary. If an indorser thus notified desires to hold prior indorsers, he must give them notice; but where an indorser receives notice either from the holder or any other subsequent indorser, it inures to the benefit of all: Hamilton v. Veach, 19-419.

243. A judgment in favor of the last indorsee against the maker and indorsers of the note raises the presumption that all parties who are entitled to notice received the same; and in an action by an indorsee against his immediate indorser to recover money paid on such judgment, he need not allege the fact of notice: Ibid.

244. Waiver; absence of detriment immaterial: A party relying upon waiver of protest and notice need not aver that the defendant sustained no detriment by reason of such want of notice: Star Wagon Co. v. Swezy, 63-520.

245. Must be pleaded: Waiver of demand and notice must be pleaded as such, and cannot be proved under an allegation that demand was made and notice given: Lumbert v. Palmer, 29-104; Peck v. Schick, 50-281.

246. Waiver of notice does not waive demand: An agreement to waive notice will not extend beyond the plain import of the terms, and will not constitute an excuse for want of presentment for payment: Voorhies v. Ailee, 29-49; Whitely v. Allen, 56-224.

247. New promise: A promise to pay made by the indorser after knowledge of want of due demand and notice waives the want of such demand and notice, and renders the indorser liable: Allen v. Harrah, 30-363; Lomax v. Smyth, 50-223.

248. But it is necessary that such new promise be unqualified: Campbell v. Varney, 12-43.

249. To constitute a waiver the agreement after maturity to pay must be clearly established and deliberately made after a full knowledge of the facts, which knowledge will not be inferred, but must be alleged and proved: Freeman v. O'Brien, 38-406.

250. The burden of proof is upon the person seeking to show the indorser's liability notwithstanding want of notice, to show that he not only waived such notice and promised to pay, but also to show that such new promise was made with the full knowledge of the fact that he was released from his legal obligation to pay: Ballin v. Betcke, 11-204.

Presentment; demand; notice; protest.—Liability of the parties.

251. Ignorance of legal rights; consideration: Direct acknowledgment of liability by the indorser with promise to pay and an arrangement for delay of suit are sufficient to operate as a waiver of all advantages from the laches of the holder in making demand or giving notice, if made with a knowledge of such laches, although the indorser may have been ignorant of his legal rights and there was no consideration: Creshire v. Taylor, 29-492.

252. To establish such knowledge on the part of the indorser as to make a new promise to pay, after failure of demand and notice, binding upon him, it is not necessary to show that he knew, as a matter of law, that he was discharged, nor that he had a clear, distinct, and full knowledge of all that had been done or omitted with reference to such demand and notice. Knowledge may be inferred from a variety of circumstances without requiring clear and affirmative proof; and the inquiry is not whether the indorser knew that demand and notice were necessary in order to bind him, but whether he had knowledge of all the facts which in law operate to discharge him. He is presumed to know the law if he knows the facts: Hughes v. Bowen, 15-446.

253. New promise not a contract but waiver: The indorser in such a case is not held by his promise as a matter of contract but upon the ground that the promise amounts to a waiver of the objection that proper steps have not been taken to discharge him. The question of want of consideration for the promise does not therefore arise: Ibid.

254. Renewal as waiver: Where the indorser was verbally notified by the maker on the last day of grace that the note was not paid, and thereupon requested a renewal, which was consented to by the payee, held, that such request and acceptance operated as a waiver of notice, which could not be avoided by a subsequent refusal of the indorser to execute the renewal note: First Nat. Bank v. Ryerson, 23-508.

255. Waiver by reason of possession of indorser: Where the indorser has the note or bill in his possession at the time of maturity, he will be considered as waiving demand and notice: Lomax v. Smyth, 50-228.

256. A mere promise to pay the note at maturity will not of itself constitute a waiver by the indorser of demand and notice: Isham v. McClure, 58-515.

257. An agreement or assurance on the part of the indorser that he will stand good for the payment of the note if made prior to maturity is not to be deemed a waiver of demand and notice: Freeman v. O'Brien, 38-406.

258. Acts of the indorser prior to the final maturity of the note, by way of assisting the holder in obtaining payment from the maker, held not sufficient to constitute a waiver of demand and notice, for the reason that such acts might well have been done with a view of preventing contingent liability: Isham v. McClure, 58-515.

259. Request not to sue: Verbal request by the indorser that the holder will not sue the maker until requested will not constitute a waiver of demand and notice: Freeman v. O'Brien, 38-406.

260. Certain statements of the drawer of a draft, held not sufficient to show that demand and notice had been waived: First Nat. Bank v. Day, 52-680.

261. Evidence: An admission by an indorser of his liability, and a promise to pay, would be competent evidence to show either the fact of notice or a waiver; therefore, held, that a denial by a partner of liability of the firm was competent evidence: First Nat. Bank v. Carpenter, 34-433.

VI. LIABILITY OF THE PARTIES.

262. Accommodation paper; misappropriation: The holder of accommodation paper which is without restriction as to the mode of using it may transfer it either in payment or as collateral security for an antecedent debt, and the maker will have no defense: Washington Bank v. Krum, 15-53.

263. Where such paper is given for a particular purpose, and this is known to the indorsee, a misappropriation of the paper will release the party giving it from all responsibility; but if the indorsee does not know of the particular purpose for which the paper is given, he may recover thereon.

Liability.—Maker.—Indorser.

although it is used for an unauthorized purpose: Ibid.

264. The fact that such paper has been once discounted and afterwards taken up by the party accommodated does not render it void in his hands, but it may be again used and will be good in the hands of one who takes it for a proper purpose, with knowledge that it is accommodation paper and has been thus once used, but without knowledge of any agreement between the original parties as to the purpose for which it was to be used: Ibid.

265. Accommodation paper defined: An accommodation bill or note is one to which the accommodating party has put his name without consideration for the purpose of accommodating another party who is to use it and is expected to pay it: Jefferson County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 66-385.

266. Where, at a time when it was considered legal to do so, a county voted to issue bonds in aid of a railway for the purchase of stock, but after the issue of a portion thereof it was held that it had no such authority and the balance was not issued, nor any stock given to the county, but it was compelled to pay the bonds issued because in the hands of innocent holders, held, that such bonds were not accommodation paper, and that the county could not recover of the railway the amount paid by it: Ibid.

267. Joint and several obligation; satisfaction; judgment: Under a joint and several note both parties are separately liable, and an unsatisfied judgment against one will not bar an action against the other: Harlan v. Berry, 4 G. Gr., 212.

268. Signing after maturity: The fact that a party to a note signs it after maturity does not make his liability collateral, but he may be joined as defendant with the other maker: Jones v. Wilson, 11-160.

269. Joint principals: One who takes a note signed by several may hold them all as principals in the absence of any knowledge that some of them were sureties as between themselves: Murray v. Graham, 29-520.

270. Discharge of indorser does not affect maker's liability: Although the maker and indorser are jointly and severally bound, the release of the indorser does not operate to discharge the maker. Perhaps the release of the maker will discharge the indorser for the reason that it would be equivalent to payment: Foster v. Russ, 14-61.

271. Taking security from or giving time to the indorser does not discharge the maker: Whiting v. Western Stage Co., 20-554.

b. Indorser.

272. Guaranty of genuineness of the instrument: The indorser guaranties the genuineness of the instrument, although not negotiable: McCormack v. Reece, 3 G. Gr., 591.

273. Indorsement of note by member of firm individually will not bind the firm as a warranty of the genuineness of its signature to the note: Miller v. House, 67-737.

274. The indorsement of a non-negotiable note is equivalent to the making of a new note, and is a direct and positive undertaking on the part of the indorser to pay the note to the indorsee, and not a conditional one to pay, if the maker does not upon demand after due notice: Long v. Smyser, 8-266; Wilson v. Ralph, 3-450; Billingham v. Bryan, 10-317; Hall v. Monohan, 6-216; Huse v. Hamblin, 29-501.

275. A blank indorsement creates the same liability from the indorser to the indorsee as if it were full: Bean v. Briggs, 1-488.

276. But it does not make the indorser liable as guarantor: Twoood v. Coopers, 9-415.

277. Filling up blank indorsement: The holder of a note indorsed in blank may fill up the blank indorsement to himself and thus recover as indorsee thereunder: Leland v. Parriott, 35-454.

278. When the holder has thus filled up the blank indorsement, it becomes a contract duly signed by the indorser, upon which he is answerable to the holder: Bernard v. Barry, 1 G. Gr., 388.

279. The holder of a non-negotiable note indorsed in blank may fill up the indorsement with an absolute promise to pay the note to the indorsee, or a waiver of demand and notice: Long v. Smyser, 3-266.

280. The indorser of a note by blank indorsement cannot be bound by a contract of guaranty written over his indorsement: Belden v. Hann, 61-42.

Liability.—Indorser.

281. Parol evidence to vary indorser's liability: As between the parties parol evidence is receivable to show the agreement pursuant to which a blank indorsement was made, for the purpose of determining the extent of the indorser's liability thereunder: Harrison v. McKim, 18-485 James v. Smith, 30-55.

282. But as against a subsequent bona fide holder parol evidence is not admissible to show that the prior blank indorsement was made under an agreement by which the blank indorser was relieved from liability: Skinner v. Church, 36-91.

283. The fact that such holder declares upon the blank indorsement as made to himself will not estop him from denying notice of the agreement under which it was made and recovering as a holder by delivery: Ibid.

284. It is not permissible to show by such evidence that no contract of any description was entered into or intended by a blank indorsement. The indorsement being in writing clearly imports some kind of contract, and in the absence of any other showing it must be the contract conclusively implied by law, and oral evidence is not admissible to obliterate such contract: Geneser v. Wissner, 69-119.

285. Parol evidence is not admissible to show that an indorsement in full was made under an agreement that the indorser should not be liable: Sands v. Wood, 1-263; Sherman v. Elder, 12-433; Harrison v. McKim, 18-485.

286. Drawer: Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the liability of the drawer of a bill or check: American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 47-671.

287. By blank indorsement of a person not a party to the instrument as payee, indorsee or assignee, written on the back of a negotiable instrument, he is presumed to render himself liable as a commercial indorser. In case of a non-negotiable instrument such indorsement imports no liability whatever. In either case, however, such indorser is to be held only to such liability as is actually agreed upon, and the blank indorsement may be filled up accordingly: Fear v. Dunlap, 1 G. Gr., 381.

By statute (Code, § 2089) an indorsement in blank by a person not a party renders such indorser liable as guarantor: See GUARANTY, §§ 4-7.

What constitutes blank indorsement, see supra, § 109.

288. Successive blank indorsements may, by parol, be shown to have been made simultaneously for the accommodation of the maker so as to render such indorsers co-sureties, between whom the right of contribution may arise: Preston v. Gould, 64-44.

289. Terms of assignment of mortgage: The liability of an indorser cannot be varied by proof of the terms of the assignment of a mortgage given to secure the note: Bank of Red Oak v. Orvis, 42-691.

290. Without authority: Where a person without authority undertakes to transfer a note by indorsing it in the name of the owner, neither the one whose name is wrongfully used nor the person actually making the indorsement will become liable to the transferee upon the note: Thorpe v. Dickey, 51-676.

291. So if the note is transferable without indorsement, and an agent, authorized to make a transfer in that manner only, should indorse the name of his principal without authority, the principal would not be bound, and the agent would not be liable in an action upon the note, because the indorsement would not make him a party to it: Ibid.

And further as to unauthorized indorsements, see supra, § 112.

292. Without recourse: No privity exists between indorsees of a note, unless by the contract of indorsement, and an action ex contractu cannot be maintained upon an indorsement without recourse, for such indorsement on its face rebuts any personal liability on the part of the indorser: Watson v. Cheshire, 18-202.

293. One who transfers negotiable paper by indorsement without recourse ceases to be a party thereto, and his only liability is upon the facts of the transaction to be asserted in an action for the original consideration or its value or for fraud practiced. Unless otherwise agreed, he warrants that the paper is genuine, that the parties thereto are sui juris, and that the instrument has not been paid: Ibid.

294. The obligations of one who indorses without recourse are the same as those of one who transfers by delivery (see infra, §§ 301-308): Miller v. Dugan, 36-483; Dayton v. Tillotson, 39-404.

295. An assignment in writing on the note by the payee constitutes an indorsement and renders him liable as indorsee: Scars v. Lantz, 47-658.

296. The release of an indorser by extension of time to the maker on one note will not affect his liability on another note secured by the same mortgage: Hopkins v. Gray, 51-340.

297. Negligence in enforcing collection against maker: Under the provisions of R. S. (of 1843), ch. 106, § 2, by which the indorser of a note was liable only in case of failure of holder, after using due diligence, to collect from the maker, held, that a parol agreement between the holder and the indorser, by which the enforcement of the note against the maker was to be delayed after maturity, might be shown to excuse such delay: Friend v. Beebe, 3 G. Gr., 279.

298. The joining in a new note as joint maker with the maker and the indorsee of the original note will render the indorser liable on the new note as principal, while the indorsee of the old note joining in the new one will be liable only as surety; but any agreement between the parties as to their respective liabilities may be shown: White v. Van Horn, 19-189.

299. Accommodation indorsement: Where a note is executed payable to the order of the maker, and indorsed by the accommodation party at the time of execution, such indorsee becomes liable to any one obtaining the note in due course of trade, the consideration for the indorsement being implied by the writing, or arising from the consideration of the original debt, no new consideration being necessary: Brenner v. Gundershiemer, 14-82.

300. Consideration presumed: The indorsement imports a consideration in the absence of testimony showing a want thereof: Veach v. Thompson, 15-880.

c. One who transfers without indorsement.

301. Implied warranties: Upon the transfer of a negotiable note, there is an implied warranty on the part of the transferor, that the signature of the maker is genuine, and also that there is no defect in the instrument by reason of a material alteration: Snyder v. Reno, 38-329.

302. One who assigns or transfers an instrument without becoming liable thereon as indorser is still bound by an implied warranty that the paper transferred is genuine; that it is of the kind and description which it purports to be; that the assignor has done nothing and will do nothing to prevent the assignee from collecting the claim assigned, and that the parties to the instrument are sui juris and capable of contracting, and that it has not been paid: Miller v. Dugan, 36-433.

303. The obligations of a transferor of paper without recourse are substantially the same as those of a transferor of paper payable to bearer by delivery: Ibid.

304. Where an assignor by mere delivery or by indorsement without recourse of a negotiable note transfers it knowing it to be of no value, and the assignee receives it in good faith without knowledge of the fact, paying a valuable consideration for it, the assignee may recover from the assignor the consideration paid, or its value: Dayton v. Tillotson, 39-404.

305. Rescission of sale not necessary: Where negotiable notes are transferred and afterwards found to be forgeries, it is not necessary, in order to entitle the transferee to recover from the transferor on breach of implied warranty of genuineness, that the notes should have been returned to the transferor: Snyder v. Reno, 33-329.

306. Representations; discount: The fact that more than the ordinary discount is deducted, upon the transfer of negotiable paper, would tend to indicate that it was taken by the transferee at his own risk, and not on the faith of representations as to its character by the person transferring: Johnson v. Barney, 1-531.

307. Expense of litigation; burden of proof: To enable the transferee of a negotiable instrument to recover from the transferor costs of litigation, in which the former is defeated by reason of the instrument not being genuine, it must appear that such litigation was reasonably necessary and conducted in good faith. If notice of the litigation is given to the transferor, the burden of proof is upon him to show that the expense was needlessly incurred, but in the absence of such notice the transferee must prove the propriety of the litigation: Snyder v. Reno, 38-329.

308. The record in the suit by the transferee upon the instrument is admissible in evidence as a basis for the recovery of the costs incurred, but such record is not admissible against the transferor, to establish the fact of the defect in the instrument, if the transferor had no notice of the suit: Ibid.

d. Acceptor.

309. What constitutes acceptance: While the rule is that if a drawee does anything with or to the bill, or writes thereon anything which does not clearly negative his intention to accept, then he becomes chargeable as an acceptor, yet where the drawee wrote upon the bill, "Kiss my foot," and signed his name thereto, held, that such language clearly negated the intention to accept the bill and he did not become liable: Norton v. Knapp, 64-112.

310. Acceptance implied: An acceptance may be implied from the acts or the conduct of the drawee, although no express acceptance can be shown: Smith v. Clark, 12-32.

311. Verbal acceptance; statute of frauds: An acceptor by verbal acceptance does not become a party to the paper in such sense as he does by a written acceptance. If he has funds in his hands for the payment of the demand, or there are other circumstances such as will render the payment of the acceptance a payment of his own debt, he will be bound. Otherwise his verbal acceptance will be within the statute of frauds: Walton v. Mandeville, 56-597.

312. An acceptance payable in instalments, while it may have the effect of discharging the drawers and prior indorsers, will be binding as to the acceptor and subsequent indorsers: Bridge v. Livingston, 11-57.

313. Acceptance for larger amount than is due drawee from drawer: Where A. accepted B.'s draft in favor of C. for the purpose of securing C. in past and prospective indebtedness of B., agreeing that the amount of the draft should be deducted from money to become due B. under his contract with A., and B. absconded without performing the contract with A., held, that A. was liable to C. on his acceptance in the full amount thereof, although B.'s indebtedness to C. was for a less amount; the reason being that the excess of the draft over B.'s indebtedness to C. was a debt from C. to B., which might be enforced against C. by B. or his creditors: First Nat. Bank v. Snell, 32-167.

314. The identity of plaintiff and the drawee is for the jury, and a technical variance between the name of drawee and plaintiff will not defeat the acceptor's liability: Fletcher v. Conly, 2 G. Gr., 88.

315. Idem sonans: In such case, held, that the names "Conolly" and "Conly" were sufficiently similar to be within the principle of idem sonans: Ibid.

316. Identity of payee: By accepting the bill, when presented by a person claiming to be the payee, the acceptor recognizes him as payee and cannot afterwards object on the ground of variance between the name appearing on the note as that of payee, and that of the person in whose favor acceptance was made: Ibid.

e. Drawer.

317. Agreement not to sue, release: An agreement with the acceptor not to sue on the bill has the effect of releasing the drawer: First Nat. Bank v. Day, 64-118.

318. Failure of holder to enforce payment from acceptor: Where the holder of an accepted bill being a bank, had funds on which the acceptor had a check, and sought to have the acceptor consent to an application of such funds to the payment of the bill, which he refused to do, held, that it was not incumbent upon the holder to compel the application of such funds to the payment of the bill, and its failure to do so would not release the drawer: First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 23-185.

319. Parol evidence is not admissible to show an agreement between the drawer and payee of a check that the drawer was not to be held liable; nor to show that the check was given in exchange for property with such condition; nor can the knowledge of the parties of the suspension of the bank upon which the check was drawn, of the fact that the drawer had funds therein, etc., be shown to relieve the drawer from liability. Nor can fraud in refusing to enter into a written agreement that the payee should have no recourse against the drawer be set up for the purpose of enabling drawer to show by parol a change in the contract implied from the drawing of the check, although such fraud might be made a ground of defeating recovery by the drawee or one not a bona fide holder: American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 47-671.

VII. RIGHTS OF TRANSFEREE.

a. Under what circumstances protected against equities and defenses.

320. The payee of a note cannot be protected against equities as a bona fide holder; therefore, held, that where a member of a firm signed the firm name to a note as surety, the transaction not being connected with the business of the firm, the payee was affected with notice of the fact that the partner had not authority to thus bind the firm: Whitmore v. Adams, 17-567.

321. A party who holds a note for and in the right of the payee, and not as the real owner, is not to be protected as a bona fide holder: Merchants' Nat. Bank v. McNulty, 36-229.

322. An assignee in insolvency takes subject to all the equities in favor of third parties, and neither he nor the creditors whom he represents are purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice as against prior equitable liens; therefore, held, that the payees of checks drawn before the assignment for a consideration were entitled to recover from the drawee money in his hands for such payment as against the assignee in an assignment made after the drawing of the checks but before their payment: Roberts v. Corbin, 26-315.

323. The transferee without indorsement, although he may bring action in his own name, is subject to equities existing against his assignor: Yunker v. Martin, 18-143; Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

324. So, also, where he brings action in the name of the payee: Temple v. Hays, Mor., 6; Long v. Long, Mor., 43.

325. One who takes under a transfer in a separate instrument to which the transfer is only incidental takes by assignment and not as indorsee: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

326. Purchaser at judicial sale: Under a statutory provision (Code, § 3046) authorizing an officer to levy upon and sell under execution things in action, and giving the assignment thereof by the officer the same effect as if made by defendant, held, that a purchaser of a note thus levied on and sold, with the officer's indorsement, taking before maturity and without notice, was not subject to equities: Earhart v. Gant, 32-481.

327. Without reference to statutory provision, held, that a bona fide purchaser of a note levied on and sold under execution was protected against a prior purchaser of the note by verbal transfer from the judgment debtor, where the note was found in the hands of payee's agent, and without any marks of assignment to the purchaser: Allison v. King, 21-302.

328. A purchaser of a note at a sale under execution against one with whom it had been left after maturity for collection, and who had wrongfully converted it to his own use, acquires no title and cannot maintain action thereon: McCormick v. Williams, 54-50.

329. Non-negotiable instruments: The doctrine of innocent holder has no application except to holders of commercial paper. It does not extend to a mortgage, and the assignee thereof is not protected against defenses between the original parties: Tabor v. Foy, 56-539.

330. Presumption in favor of transferee; payment: The holder of a promissory note will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have obtained it in good faith, before maturity and for a valuable consideration, and proof of payment to the payee after maturity will constitute no defense: Lathrop v. Donaldson, 22-234.

331. For valuable consideration; collateral security: An indorsee to whom a note is transferred as collateral security for a pre-existing debt without any other consideration, the transfer being a mere voluntary act on the part of the debtor, and the note being received by the creditor without incurring any new responsibility, and without parting with anything, or subjecting himself to any loss or delay, the subsisting debt being left precisely in the same condition as it was before the transfer, is not entitled to be considered as having taken the note for value, nor in the usual course of business: Trustees of Iowa College v. Hill, 12-463; Ryan v. Chew, 13-589; Ruddick v. Lloyd, 15-441; Union Nat. Bank v. Barber, 56-559; Bone v. Tharp, 63-223.

332. The fact that the creditor had ground for attachment, and in fact refrained from proceeding by attachment on account of the transfer of the note to him as security, although not entering into any obligation not to proceed by attachment, will not constitute him a holder for value of the note so as to be relieved from equities: Bone v. Tharp, 63-223.

333. If the note is accepted in payment of a pre-existing indebtedness, the transferee has the same rights as if it had been transferred for an indebtedness then arising: Johnson v. Barney, 1-531.

334. An extension of time by the creditor is sufficient consideration for the transfer of the note to him as collateral security to constitute him a holder for value, although it does not appear that any loss resulted to him on account of such extension: Wormer v. Waterloo Ag'l Works, 50-262.

335. One who takes a note before maturity, without notice, as collateral security for his liability in becoming surety for the transferrer on a debt which he afterward pays, is a holder in good faith for valuable consideration in the ordinary course of business, and takes free from equities between antecedent parties: Stotts v. Byers, 17-303.

336. For collection: The indorsee, under an indorsement for collection merely, does not become a bona fide holder: Johnson v. Barney, 1-531.

337. For less than face value: The fact that a purchaser pays less than the apparent value of the instrument will not prevent his recovery as a purchaser for value: Sully v. Goldsmith, 32-397.

338. Recovery not limited to consideration paid: A bona fide holder for value is not limited in his recovery against the maker, upon proof of want of consideration, to the amount paid by him to his transferrer, but may recover the entire amount of the note: Lay v. Wisman, 86-305; National Bank v. Green, 33-140.

339. The payee having acquired the legal right to sue the maker, may dispose of the note at any rate of discount from its face which he sees fit, and the purchaser will have the right to enforce it against the maker for its face: Dickerman v. Day, 31-444.

340. In an action against a bank upon a bank bill issued by it, evidence tending to show that plaintiff purchased the bill at a discount is not admissible: Taylor v. Cook, 14-501.

341. Usual course of business: If a note is taken out of the usual course of business under circumstances calculated to impart notice of its infirmities, the holder receives it at his peril, although taken before due and without notice of fraud: Moore v. Moore, 39-461.

342. By due course of business is meant according to the customs and usages of commercial transactions: If the paper is purchased before maturity, it is such a transaction; if purchased after maturity, it is not in accordance with commercial transactions: Wood v. McKean, 64-16.

343. Before maturity: The holder of a note acquiring title, even for value, after due, is subject to all the equities which attach thereto between the antecedent or immediate parties: Barlow v. Scott's Adm'rs, 12-63.

344. Evidence as to the transfer of a note before maturity held sufficient in a particular case: Markley v. Hull, 51-109.

345. Check; diligence in presentment; payment: While a check is not technically due before presentment, yet a party may take it under such circumstances as to make it a stale demand on account of lack of diligence in presenting it for payment, and he will thereby acquire no higher title than that of a payee, and be subject to like equities. Under such circumstances evidence of payment to a prior party is admissible. What amounts to due diligence must be determined from the circumstances of each case: First Nat. Bank v. Needham, 29-249.

346. Fictitious payee: A bona fide holder for value and without notice of the fact that the note is made payable to a fictitious payee is not subject to defenses, and the maker is estopped, as against such holder, from setting up that fact. By his act in making it payable to such person, the maker affirms his existence, and in respect to such a holder is bound to know that the payee is a real person: Lane v. Krekle, 22-399.

347. Not negotiated to payee: The fact that a note payable to payee or bearer is negotiated to another person than the payee is not of itself sufficient to charge the taker thereof with notice and subject him to defenses: Gage v. Sharp, 24-15.

348. One who takes a note payable to another person or bearer knowing that it has not been delivered to the payee named, but that it is delivered to him to effect the same purpose as it was originally intended to effect, is not thereby subjected to equities of which he had no knowledge: Laub v. Rudd, 37-617.

349. Negotiation of accommodation paper by maker instead of indorser: The fact that a note bearing the blank indorsement of the payee is negotiated by the maker does not affect a bona fide holder for value with notice of defenses. Such negotiation is the usual course of business as to accommodation paper: Winters v. Home Ins. Co., 30-172.

350. Negotiation of bill before acceptance: The fact that a purchaser takes a bill before acceptance does not affect him with knowledge of a defense thereto on the part of the drawer: Adae v. Zangs, 41-596.

351. Transfer before maturity; delivery after: Where a note is deposited as collateral security, and while so held, and before maturity, is sold to a third person who does not get possession until after maturity, such third person is nevertheless protected as a bona fide holder: Grimm v. Warner, 45-106.

352. Special acceptance: An indorsee taking a bill before maturity under the terms of a special acceptance acquires the rights of a bona fide holder as to the acceptor, although the terms of the acceptance may be such as to discharge drawer and prior indorsers: Bridge v. Livingston, 11-57.

353. Acts of officers of corporation: Certain facts as to the negotiation of promissory notes by the treasurer of a corporation, held not sufficient to constitute notice to the holder as to infirmities therein: Pond v. Waterloo Ag'l Works, 50-596.

354. Where the note of a corporation indorsed in blank by the payee was negotiated by the secretary of the company as his own, held, that the purchaser took as a holder in good faith, although it appeared on the face of the note that the person from whom he acquired title was such secretary: Wormer v. Waterloo Ag'l Works, 50-262.

355. Want of consideration: The fact that a company selling machines has sold some which are defective does not show that a particular machine sold by it, for which a note was given in part payment, was defective, and knowledge of the former fact would not affect the purchaser of the note with notice of want of consideration therein: McDonald M'f'g Co. v. Thomas, 53-558.

356. Accommodation paper: The fact that a note is accommodation paper is no defense thereto by the accommodation maker as against the bona fide holder acquiring it in the usual course of business for value before maturity without notice of any fraud in obtaining the signature of such maker. Accommodation paper is an exception to the rule that one taking paper with knowledge that it is open to the defense of want of consideration against the original payee takes subject to such defense: Winters v. Home Ins. Co., 30-172.

357. Negligence of transferee; failure to make inquiry: The weight of authority seems to be that negligence of a purchaser to take notice of circumstances which would put a prudent man on inquiry, even where it amounts to gross negligence, will not necessarily subject him to equities or defenses. It will have that effect only where it evinces actual bad faith: Cook v. Weirman, 51-561; Pond v. Waterloo Ag'l Works, 50-596; Lake v. Reed, 29-258.

358. Mere want of diligence in ascertaining the facts will not subject the holder to the defense of fraud or want of consideration, even though he was in a situation where such facts might have been ascertained by inquiry: Kelly v. Ford, 4-140.

359. A purchaser will not be put upon inquiry and charged with notice or fraud merely by circumstances sufficient to arouse suspicion and put a reasonable man upon inquiry: Lane v. Evans, 49-156.

360. Facts constituting notice of infirmities: But if from the circumstances attending the transfer the purchaser must have known that the person offering the note had no right to transfer it, then he is bound to make inquiry, and if he does not he takes it at his peril: Trustees of Iowa College v. Hill, 12-462.

361. To affect a purchaser with notice of a defense to the note it is not essential that his knowledge be established by direct testimony; it may be shown by circumstances and inference therefrom. The fact that the purchaser was an employee of the payee of the note, and might have known that the maker had on several occasions purchased intoxicating liquors of the payee, with other facts, held, to have a tendency to show that the purchaser was not without notice: Hoffman v. Leibfarth, 51-711.

362. Knowledge of defenses: Where a holder of a draft, after it was due, and after the acceptor had notified the agent of such holder that it was a swindle and would not be paid, advanced money thereon, held, that as to such advances the holder was subject to any defenses the acceptor might have: Delaware County Bank v. Duncombe, 48-488.

363. Where the purchaser of a note before maturity had notice that it was given for the purchase price of land which the payee had agreed to convey, and in which conveyance the wife of the payee, who was still living, did not join, held, that such purchaser was subject to the defense which the maker of the note might interpose upon failure of his grantor to make a perfect title by reason of the failure of his wife to release dower: Zebley v. Sears, 38-507.

364. Transfer by purchaser without notice to purchaser with notice: If the transferrer of a note is a bona fide holder for value before maturity, his transferee, also for value and before maturity, will acquire title free from equities, although such transferee himself had notice of such equities. The transferee in such case acquires the same title possessed by the holder from whom he purchases: Mornyser v. Cooper, 35-257; Whitaker v. Johnson County, 10-161; Peabody v. Rees, 18-571; Simon v. Merritt, 38-537;

Brewer v. Holborn, 34-478; Denham v. Sankey, 38-269.

365. Purchaser without notice from holder with notice: A purchaser without notice for value, etc., from a holder who has taken the paper with knowledge that the transfer to him was fraudulent, is nevertheless protected: Stutzman v. Payne, 23-17.

366. Rights under a mortgage: The innocent purchaser before maturity, etc., of a note secured by mortgage, holds the mortgage as well as the note free from equities between the parties: Updegraff v. Edwards, 45-518.

And see MORTGAGES, §§ 230-234.

367. Burden of proof; presumptions: Proof of fraud or want of consideration between the original parties will not authorize the inference that the note was transferred after maturity or without consideration. If defendant claims there was fraud or want of consideration in the inception of the note, he must prove that the holder took with notice thereof: Kelly v. Ford, 4-140.

368. The law will presume, in the absence of rebutting proofs, that the holder acquiring the paper before maturity is a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration without notice. It is incumbent upon the defendant to overcome such prima facie title by satisfactory proof: Trustees of Iowa College v. Hill, 12-462.

369. The maker, relying upon fraud as a defense in an action by an indorsee taking before maturity, must prove that such purchaser took with notice of the fraud: Stein v. Keeler, 4 G. Gr., 86.

370. As against a subsequent holder, an allegation of fraud in the execution of the instrument is not enough to throw upon such holder the burden of proving himself to be an innocent holder, but defendant must also allege and prove that the holder took the paper after due, and that he had notice, and that he gave no value. The mere want or failure of consideration is not sufficient to overcome the presumption in favor of the holder and throw the burden of proof upon him: Clapp v. Cedar County, 5-15.

371. If the note has been obtained by fraud, the burden of proof is upon the holder suing thereon to show that he is the bona fide holder. This is the rule relating to the evidence but not to the pleadings where the action is by a person not the payee. In such case it is necessary to allege notice on the part of the holder of the facts pleaded in defense, and that the holder gave no value: Lane v. Krekle, 22-399.

372. An indorsee seeking to enforce payment of a note which is tainted with fraud in its inception has the burden of proof thrown on him to show that he is a bona fide holder: Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Mining, etc., Co., 65-692.

373. Where fraud or illegality in the inception of a note is pleaded as a defense in an action thereon and supported by evidence, the burden of proof is cast upon plaintiff to show that he gave full value, and that he is a bona fide purchaser before maturity: Woodward v. Rodgers, 31-342; Rock Island Nat. Bank v. Nelson, 41-563.

374. Where a partnership sought to recover on a promissory note fraudulently issued, claiming to be a bona fide purchaser thereof before maturity without notice, held, that it was not sufficient for plaintiff to show that the partner making the purchase for the firm had no notice of the defect in the note, but it must be made to appear that no member of the firm was affected with such notice: Frank v. Blake, 58-750.

375. In an action on a note against the maker who sets up fraud in the inception of the note as a defense, the burden of proof is upon him to establish such fraud, and evidence thereof is admissible, although plaintiff alleges that he is an innocent holder: Terry v. Taylor, 64-35.

376. While possession is prima facie evidence that the holder obtained the note for value, yet where it appears that the rightful owner never legally parted with the note, but it was wrongfully delivered to the holder by one without authority, the burden of proving the payment of value is upon the holder: Union Nat. Bank v. Barber, 56-559.

b. Against what equities and defenses protected.

aa. If innocent purchaser.

377. Protected against fraud: As against an innocent holder of a negotiable instrument, fraud in its inception cannot be set up: Temple v. Hays, Mor., 9.

378. Before fraud can be made available against the holder of a note it must be shown either that he took the same after maturity or that he took it with notice of the fraud: Loomis v. Metcalf, 30-382.

379. A sharp distinction is made between a case where a person supposes he is executing an instrument not a note, and by fraud is induced to execute a negotiable note, and a case where a person intends to execute a negotiable note. Whether in the latter case the maker is absolutely precluded from setting up fraud as a defense against the innocent indorsee for value before maturity, quære; but certainly he is precluded from doing so unless he can show himself free from negligence: Fayette County Savings Bank v. Steffes, 54-214.

380. A fraud perpetrated by the payee or his agent in procuring the note is not available as against a holder for value taking the note before maturity in the ordinary course of business, until it be shown that such holder had notice of the fraud: Lake v. Reed, 29-258.

381. Negligence of maker: The negligence of the maker in failing to read the note at the time of signing it, by reason of which he executes a different note from that intended, will preclude him from setting that fact up as a defense against a bona fide holder: Wright v. Flinn, 33-159.

382. Fraudulent representations: The maker of a promissory note in an action by the bona fide holder for value, taking before maturity, cannot set up the defense of fraudulent misrepresentations by the payee when such fraud does not amount to forgery: Douglass v. Matting, 29-498.

383. Failure to stamp: When there was nothing on the face of the instrument to show that the stamp required by the United States revenue laws was affixed after its delivery to the payee, held, that it would be good in the hands of an indorsee or holder for value who received it without notice of such fact: Blackwell v. Denie, 23-63.

As to the protection of a bona fide holder against the defense that the instrument was not stamped, see supra, §§ 69-73.

Protection against equities.—If innocent purchaser.

384. Defenses to insurance notes: To render a note given for insurance void in the hands of an innocent holder under the statutory provision (Code, § 1146) that notes taken for policies of insurance in any company doing business in the state shall show upon their face that they have been taken for insurance and not be collectible unless the company or its agents have fully complied with the laws of the state relative to insurance, it is necessary that the fact that the note was given for a policy of insurance be made to appear upon its face: Cook v. Weirman, 51-561.

385. Duress: A bona fide holder for value before maturity is protected against the defense of duress in obtaining the note. Such fact renders the note voidable but not void: Veach v. Thompson, 15-380.

386. Negotiated without authority: The fact that one who signs a promissory note intrusts it to another to be negotiated after the performance of certain conditions, or with blanks to be filled, and the note is negotiated contrary to such agreement and beyond the authority given, will not be a defense against a bona fide holder: Gage v. Sharp, 24-15.

387. One who indorses a note in blank for collection cannot recover in an action against one who bought the note from such indorsee in good faith for value, although there was fraud on the part of the indorsee in transferring the note to such purchaser. Protection would also be afforded a purchaser without notice from one who purchased from the indorsee with notice of the fraud: Stutzman v. Payne, 23-17.

388. Garnishment of maker: A good faith purchaser is not affected by a subsequent garnishment of the maker: Fowler v. Doyle, 16-534.

By statute the maker cannot be held liable as garnishee on a negotiable note unless the paper is delivered, or the garnishee exonerated or indemnified: See GARNISHMENT, §§ 64-71.

389. Payment of the note at maturity by depositing the money for its payment at the bank where it is in terms made payable, although the holder has not left it there for collection, is a defense against an indorsee, even though the bank afterward fails and the money is thus lost to the holder: Lazier v. Horan, 55-75.

Further as to payment as a defense, see infra, §§ 431-443.

390. Forgery: A purchaser before maturity does not thereby acquire any claim upon forged paper as against the apparent maker who is without fault as to the forgery and the transfer to the holder: Caulkins v. Whisler, 29-495.

391. Material alteration: If the note is materially altered it is not valid in the hands of the innocent purchaser for value before maturity, and if there is a memorandum or a contract written upon the same paper qualifying the terms of the note, and such memorandum or contract is severed, the note is thereby materially altered so as to be void even in the hands of such holder: Scofield v. Ford, 56-370.

392. Negligence of maker: If, however, the maker is guilty of gross carelessness in executing such an instrument, he may be precluded from setting up the invalidity of the note as against a bona fide holder for value: Ibid.

393. Burden of proof in such cases: Therefore in an action to enforce such a contract against a maker, it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show facts which would take the case out of the general rule, and without proof of carelessness on the part of the maker, the holder of what purports to be a promissory note, but which has been made such by cutting it out of a larger piece of paper containing language not importing an obligation to pay, cannot recover thereon, even though he be a bona fide holder: Ibid.

394. Negligence in leaving blank: Where a note was executed leaving a blank in which the payee without authority inserted a provision for interest, afterwards transferring the note to a bona fide holder for value, held, that the fact of alteration could not be set up to defeat the note in the hands of such purchaser: Rainbolt v. Eddy, 34-440.

395. Want of power to issue: Negotiation will not validate obligations which are not binding because of a want of power to issue them: Clark v. Des Moines, 19-199.

396. Municipal bonds; without authority: The purchaser of municipal bonds issued in excess of the constitutional limitation of indebtedness is bound to know such limitation, and the fact as to whether the indebtedness exceeds such limit or not: McPherson v. Foster, 43-48.

Protection against equities.—If not innocent purchaser.

397. Transfer after bankruptcy: Indorsement by the payee after the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings against him, although before the maturity of the note, will not pass the title nor render the indorsee an innocent purchaser. The title will pass to the assignee in bankruptcy when appointed: Seaton v. Hinneman, 50-395.

bb. If not innocent purchaser.

398. Equities arising after execution: It is not necessary that the equity to which the purchaser after maturity is subjected be one attaching to the note at the time of its execution: Bates v. Kemp, 12-99.

399. Release: Therefore, held, that the transferee after maturity was subject to a defense arising out of a release of the payee by the holder of the note after maturity but before the transfer: Ibid.

400. Payment: Where it appeared that plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser, held, that evidence of payment of the note to the payee before the transfer should have been admitted: Tuttle v. Bonar, 49-696.

401. Where payment was made to a person claiming to act as agent for the payee, and afterwards such agent claimed to acquire title to the note and transferred it to a third person, held, that the transferee, taking subject to equities existing against the agent, was affected with the payment, whether the agent had authority at the time of the receipt of the payment to accept it for the payee or not: Hayward v. Munger, 14-516.

Further as to payment as a defense, see infra, § 431-443.

402. Garnishment: Payment by the maker under process of garnishment in an action against the payee will defeat recovery by a holder who has obtained the note from the payee with intent to defraud payee's creditors: Gillam v. Huber, 4 G. Gr., 155.

403. Set-off: While the transferee after maturity takes subject to equities attaching to the instrument itself, and such as between the parties to it would control, qualify or extinguish any rights arising between them, he is not (in the absence of statutory provisions) subject to equities between the parties to the note arising from other and independent transactions between them, and is, therefore, not subject to a set-off arising out of an independent transaction, even though existing at the time of the transfer: Shipman v. Robbins, 10-203; Bates v. Kemp, 13-223; Ryan v. Chew, 13-589; Way v. Lamb, 15-79; Stannus v. Stannus, 30-448.

404. And this rule was held applicable, notwithstanding Rev., § 2760, which provided that an action by an assignee of a chose in action should be without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing before notice of the assignment; it being considered that the fact that the paper was transferred after maturity, if in the usual mode of transferring negotiable paper, would not render it a mere non-negotiable chose in action: Richards v. Daily, 34-427.

405. But under Code, § 2546,¹ very similar to the section of the Revision above referred to, it is held that the transferee after maturity of a negotiable note, takes subject to any counter-claim, though it be an independent cause of action, in favor of the maker and against the transferor, existing before notice of the transfer: Downing v. Gibson, 53-517.

406. And the same rule is applied to an indorsee of negotiable paper before maturity, if the indorsement is not in good faith and for a valuable consideration: Bone v. Tharp, 63-223.

407. Under the section of the Code just referred to, held, also, that the indorsee after maturity takes subject to the defense of payment made by maker to payee before notice of the transfer: Haywood v. Seeber, 61-574.

408. Equities or defenses arising after transfer: The bona fide holder for value after maturity is not subject to any equity or defense arising after the transfer: Campbell v. Rusch, 9-337; Bates v. Kemp, 13-223.

409. Therefore, held, that a defense or set-off in favor of the maker of a note given for the purchase price of real property growing out of the failure of consideration, by reason of the failure or inability of the seller to convey a good title at the time stipulated in the contract, could not be set up as against an indorsee of the note after maturity but before the defense had arisen: Bates v. Kemp, 13-223; Zebley v. Sears, 36-507.

¹ Code, § 2546. In case of the assignment of a thing in action, the action by the assignee shall be without prejudice to any counter-claim, defense, or cause of action, whether matured or not, if matured when plead, existing in favor of the defendant and against the assignor before notice of the assignment; but this section shall not apply to negotiable instruments transferred in good faith and upon valuable consideration before due.

Protection against equities.—Defenses.

410. An equity arising after the transfer of an overdue note cannot affect the holder. He takes with the transfer all the rights of the indorser. Where a corporation took defendant's note in payment for an instalment on his stock, and, after transferring the same after maturity to a purchaser for value, declared his stock forfeited for failure to pay subsequent instalments, held, that such action on the part of the corporation would not affect the rights of the holder of the note to recover against the maker: Whittaker v. Kuhn, 52-815.

411. Under invalid assignment: Although, where there is a valid and bona fide assignment, the defense by the maker is limited to such matters as existed at the time of notice to him of the assignment, yet if for any reason the assignment was invalid, the holder will be subject to any defense of the maker which he may have up to the trial: Pearson v. Cummings, 28-844.

412. Equities between assignor and person not a party: An assignee after maturity takes subject only to such equities as exist between the parties to the instrument, and not subject to equities between the assignor and one not a party, not affecting the validity of the note: Crosby v. Tanner, 40-136.

413. Therefore, held, that the assignee of a note secured by mortgage, taking it after maturity, was not bound by the agreement between the assignor and a third person to release the mortgage, of which agreement the assignee had no notice: Ibid.

414. So an assignee by delivery without indorsement of an instrument not payable to bearer, though he takes subject to all equities between the original parties in the nature of defenses to the enforcement of the note, is not subject to equities not affecting the validity of the note but which only exist against the maker in favor of a stranger involving the lien of a security therefor: Vandercook v. Baker, 48-199.

415. Accommodation paper: Where an accommodation note was indorsed by the payee after maturity and used as collateral security, and such indorsee sold it to plaintiff, held, that plaintiff could only recover thereon the amount of the unpaid debt which such note was given to secure: First Nat. Bank v. West, 52-684.

416. Transfer without authority: The true owner of negotiable paper transferred after maturity as collateral security and wrongfully sold by the holder, may assert his title against the last holder although he has acquired it without notice and for a valuable consideration: Wood v. McKean, 64-16.

417. False representations: Where a note was executed by defendant, who was not liable for the indebtedness for which it was given, and upon the representation of the payee that he would procure the note of the person liable and surrender the one given by defendant, held, that such facts constituted a defense which might be set up as against the purchaser after maturity: McNitt v. Helm, 33-342.

418. Payment after notice of transfer: Payment made to the payee of a note after notice of its transfer to a third person will not extinguish the note and cannot be set up although the suit is in the name of the payee for the use of the holder: Gregg v. McCulloch, 1 G. Gr., 274.

VIII. DEFENSES AS BETWEEN THE ORIGINAL PARTIES.

a. Forgery, fraud, illegality, etc.

419. Denial of signature; forgery: Where defendant denies the execution of the instrument and assumes the burden of proving that the signature is not his, it is sufficient if he proves his case by a preponderance of evidence. Denial of the execution does not impute a crime so as to render proof thereof beyond a reasonable doubt necessary: Ashworth v. Grubbs, 47-353.

420. Where the signature of a note was, in a particular case, denied under oath, held, that the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict against defendant, notwithstanding such denial: McDonald v. Noonan, 50-83.

421. Upon an issue as to forgery, want of consideration is material: Donahue v. Wagner, 68-358.

422. Fraud; want of consideration: As between the payee and the administrator of the maker, the same defense can be set up against a promissory note as against any contract, written or parol, on account of fraud or want of consideration: George v. Gillespie, 1 G. Gr., 421.

423. Failure of consideration: Defendant may, in support of the defense of failure of consideration, show that the note was given in consideration of an agreement on the part of payee which was not performed, and such evidence will not be excluded as varying the terms of a written contract by parol: Dicken v. Morgan, 54-684.

424. Waiver of defense by renewal: A party cannot, after giving a new note for an indebtedness on a former note, set up partial failure of consideration of which he had knowledge at the time of renewal: Keyes v. Mann, 68-560.

425. Fraud in reading to maker: Where the maker of a note signs it without reading it, and afterwards seeks relief therefrom on the ground of mistake or fraud, in that as read to him it did not correspond with the written words, and alleges matter of excuse for not reading it, the question of fact as to whether, under the circumstances, he was guilty of negligence, is for the jury: Hopkins v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 57-208.

And see CONTRACTS, §§ 115-117.

426. Fraud of payee: The omission of the payee of a note given in settlement of a claim to state all the facts in regard to the claim to the maker will not defeat the note if the facts were known to the maker from other sources of information: Sullivan v. Collins, 18-228.

427. False representations as to the use to be made of the proceeds of an endowment note, given to a college, made without authority by the agent through whom the note was procured, may be shown as a defense thereto: Bridges v. Yellow Springs College, 19-572.

428. Condition precedent; endowment note: It is competent for the parties to an endowment note to agree that it shall not be enforced unless a stipulated amount of endowment is raised: Ingham v. Dudley, 60-16.

429. Destruction of note: There can be no recovery on a destroyed note unless it is clearly established that the destruction was through ignorance or by mistake: McDonald v. Jackson, 56-648.

430. Omission of stamp: The omission of a stamp will defeat the note only where it is fraudulently omitted, and in that case alone constitutes a defense, which defense must be pleaded or sustained by evidence at the trial in order to benefit the party relying thereon. The burden rests upon such party to show that the stamp was omitted to defraud the government: Ricord v. Jones, 33-26.

See, also, supra, §§ 63-75.

b. Payment.

431. Readiness to pay; presentment for payment: In an action against a maker of a note it is not necessary to aver presentment for payment. The defense of readiness to pay should come from defendant: Tarbell v. Stevens, 7-168.

432. Presentment at particular place: Where a note is payable at a given place the maker can exonerate himself from the payment of interest after maturity only by showing that he had funds at the place specified for the discharge of the note: Robinson v. Lair, 31-9.

433. Deposit of money at bank where payable: Where a note is made payable at a bank and the maker deposits there the amount necessary to fully discharge it, and the bank afterwards fails, such deposit is a full defense to an action by the payee or indorsee against the maker. It is presumed when a note is made payable at a bank that the parties expect collection to be made through the bank, and although the bank holding the money deposited is technically an agent of the depositor, yet the money is deposited for the holder of the note, and it requires no act of the depositor to authorize the bank to pay it: Lazier v. Horan, 55-75.

And see BANKS, § 8.

434. Payment in property at particular place; tender: Where a note is payable in property at a particular place the debt is not discharged unless the maker has property at that place set apart and designated as the property of the payee ready for delivery: Games v. Manning, 2 G. Gr., 251.

 Payment.

435. To constitute payment in such case, it must appear that the maker either paid, tendered or designated, and set apart the property at the time and place stipulated in the note: Spafford v. Stutsman, 9-128.

436. Payment to the holder of a note payable to bearer will be considered as made in good faith, and as discharging the note, unless there are circumstances amounting to clear proof that he is a fraudulent holder. Mere suspicion that such holder is not the owner will not exonerate the maker from making payment: Stoddard v. Burton, 41-582.

437. Payment before maturity: While payment before due of a note that has been lost or stolen does not discharge the maker from liability to the real owner, because the payment is out of the ordinary course of business, yet where the note is, by its terms, payable at any time within a limited period at the option of the maker, payment made during that period cannot be deemed to be out of the ordinary course of business, and if such payment is made to the person appearing entitled thereto it will discharge the maker: Ibid.

438. Payment to payee will be no defense to a note as against a holder who has taken it before maturity as collateral security: City Bank v. Taylor, 60-66.

439. Payment of a negotiable note to the payee, by the maker, without notice of a transfer made after maturity, is a defense to an action by an indorsee who takes by such transfer after maturity: Haywood v. Seeber, 61-574.

440. Payment to trustee: The person making payment of a note executed to a trustee is not bound to see that the money paid is properly appropriated by the trustee: Thomassen v. Van Wyngaarden, 65-687.

441. Payment to agent: Where a party caused a note to be taken by his agent in his own name, inducing the maker to believe that the agent was the real party in interest, and allowed the agent to receive the interest from time to time, held, that he was bound by the payment made to such agent of the principal when the note became due, no notice to the maker that the payee was not authorized to receive payment being given: Sax v. Drake, 69-760.

442. Where a note was made payable at a particular place, and the maker, before the note became due, deposited at that place with another the amount necessary to pay the note, notifying the holder of that fact, and the holder residing at another place wrote to the person with whom the money was deposited to bring or send the money at the first opportunity, and before the money was thus sent, it was stolen from the person with whom it was deposited, held, that such deposit did not constitute a payment of the note, and that the person with whom the deposit was made had not been accepted as agent of the holder in such sense that the holder could not recover from the maker: First Nat. Bank v. Free, 67-11.

443. Payment must be in money: A promissory note in the hands of an agent for collection can only be paid in money or coin, and a payment in currency not legal tender is only a valid payment when the agent is specifically authorized to receive such currency: Graydon v. Patterson, 18-256.

444. Judgment on collateral security as a satisfaction: Where the maker of a note gave the note of a third person indorsed by himself as collateral security, and the holder recovered judgment on such collateral security against the maker thereof and indorser, held, that such judgment was no bar to a recovery on the principal note, though the satisfaction of such judgment would bar an action on the principal note to the extent of the amount thereof: Burnheimer v. Hart, 27-19.

445. Judgment against joint and several maker, remaining unsatisfied, will not discharge the note as to his co-maker: Harlan v. Berry, 4 G. Gr., 212.

446. Particular facts as showing payment: An instruction as to whether the facts in a particular case showed the payment of a note sued on, held proper: Dougherty v. Deeney, 45-443.

447. Held, that certain facts relied upon as showing payment, while not sufficient to raise a presumption to that effect, were proper to be taken into consideration in determining the question: Williams v. Barrett, 52-687.

448. Receipt; burden of proof: Where payment is pleaded as a defense, the production of a receipt is sufficient evidence of payment to throw upon plaintiff the burden of explaining or contradicting such receipt: Williamson v. Reddish, 45-550.

449. Indorsement of payment: It will be presumed that an indorsement of payment found on the back of the note was made with the knowledge and consent of the person in whose possession it was at the time such indorsement purports to have been made, even though it is not in the handwriting of such person: Thomassen v. Van Wyngaarden, 65-687.

450. Where a note for seventy-five dollars provided that it might be discharged by a payment of fifty dollars on or before a certain date, held, that an indorsement on the note of the payment of fifty dollars a few days after the date specified would not show payment: Holland v. Vanard, 8 G. Gr., 230.

451. Erased indorsement: Where a credit indorsed upon the back of a note appears to be erased, the presumption is in favor of the allowance of the erased credit, subject to be rebutted by testimony. The mere certificate of witnesses that such credit was made by mistake is not, per se, evidence of the fact: Carson v. Duncan, 1 G. Gr., 466.

452. Mistake in payment: Where the maker desiring to pay the note in full, by mistake in computation pays less than the full amount, such a payment is good only for the amount paid: Easton v. Strother, 57-56.

453. Burden of proving deduction: Where by contract appended to the note it was provided that if a certain tract of land for which the note was given in payment did not amount to a certain quantity, the amount due on the note was to be reduced proportionately, held, that the burden of proving that the land was not of the quantity specified rested upon the defendant: Jewett v. Lyon, 3 G. Gr., 577.

454. Parol evidence of payment: Under a plea of payment the maker may show that he sold land to the holder under a parol agreement in payment of the note and has performed his agreement with reference thereto, and this he may do notwithstanding the fact that the agreement was contemporaneous with the execution of the note: Branner v. Piper, 25-400.

455. Presumption of payment from lapse of time: The mere fact that a note is about five years overdue, without any other circumstance to justify the inference of payment or the non-existence of the note, will not give rise to a presumption of payment or that the note never had legal existence: Nash v. Gibson, 16-305.

456. Possession after payment: The maker has the right, after payment, to the possession of the note, and may maintain replevin to recover such possession: Savery v. Hays, 20-25.

457. Transfer to party bound to pay: Where a party under obligation to pay a note procures the transfer of the same to him by indorsement, such transfer operates, as between him and the person to whom he is obligated for such payment, as a discharge of the note and not as a purchase: Lawson v. McKenzie, 44-663.

IX. ACTION UPON.

458. By assignee: Under statutory provision, an assignee of a non-negotiable instrument may sue thereon in his own name, subject, however, to any defense or set-off which the maker had against the assignor before notice of the assignment (Code, § 2084): Merchants', etc., Bank v. Hewitt, 3-93.

459. By indorsee: An indorsee by special indorsement must sue in his own name and not in the name of payee for the holder's use: Hickok v. Labussier, Mor., 115.

460. By joint owners: Where a note is made payable to two or more persons jointly, the payees must join in an action thereon, unless one or more of them refuse to join, in which case those refusing may be made defendants. The fact that the note is payable to such payees or bearer, and is held by one of the payees, does not entitle him to sue thereon alone: McNamee v. Carpenter, 56-276.

461. Where payable in property; demand: Where a note is payable in property at a day certain and the property is not tendered, suit may be brought for the amount due in money, without making demand for the property: Wiley v. Shcemak, 2 G. Gr., 205.

462. Premature action: Judgment in an action upon a note commenced before its maturity, without any reason being averred for having commenced the action before maturity, is erroneous: Whitney v. Bird, 11-407.

463. Common counts: Recovery against the indorser may be had under the common counts: Knight v. Fox, Mor., 305.

464. A note payable in specific articles is admissible in evidence under the common or money counts: Payne v. Couch, 1 G. Gr., 64.

465. Money had and received: An action by the indorsee against the maker may be maintained for money had and received, the note being admissible in evidence in such action: King v. Wall, Mor., 187.

466. Joint action against the maker and guarantor may be maintained: Marvin v. Adamson, 11-371; Mix v. Fairchild, 12-351; Veach v. Thompson, 15-380.

467. Filing against estate entitles to attorney's fee: Where a note provided for attorney's fee for collection if action should be commenced thereon, held, that filing the note as a claim against the estate of the maker after his decease, the payment thereof being resisted by the administrator, was sufficient bringing of action to entitle plaintiff to the attorney's fee: Davidson v. Vorse, 52-384.

468. Destroyed note: A recovery may be had on a note that has been destroyed, only where it is clearly established that such destruction was through ignorance or by mistake. If a note is destroyed by the holder in pursuance of a fraudulent scheme, he cannot recover thereon: McDonald v. Jackson, 56-648.

469. Lost note: Equity cannot take cognizance of an action upon a note of which the defendant wrongfully and fraudulently procured and retains possession. Such a case does not fall within the reason of the rule allowing suit in equity upon a lost note: Searcy v. Miller, 57-613.

470. Lost note; indemnifying bond: Where a lost note was indorsed by special indorsement so that no one but the original owner could acquire any title thereto by transfer, the maker cannot demand indemnity as a condition of payment: Dudman v. Earl, 49-87.

471. Fraud in procuring; judgment on included indebtedness: Where a note was found void for fraud on account of having been, by means of intoxication, procured for too great an amount, held, that it was error to render judgment for a less amount due and entering into the fraudulent note. In such case plaintiff should be left to seek his proper relief in an appropriate action: Willcox v. Jackson, 51-208.

472. Damages for non-payment: The statutory provision as to rate of damages to be allowed and paid upon the non-acceptance or non-payment of bills of exchange drawn or indorsed in this state, when damage is recoverable, relates to foreign and not to inland bills (Code, § 2096): First Nat. Bank v. Owen, 23-185.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

1. Statute constitutional: The statute (18 G. A., ch. 151; McClain's Ann. Stat., 451) providing for a state board of health, so far as it authorizes such board to require a physician to report information as to births and deaths, is not unconstitutional. Its objects are within the authority of the state, and may be attained in the exercise of its police power: Robinson v. Hamilton, 60-134.

2. Expenses of care of infected persons: The board of health may, under § 21 of that act, erect a temporary building to which infected persons may be removed for isolation, and the county will be liable for the expenses thereof in case of the inability of the infected person or persons to pay such charge. Whether the infected person would be liable for such expenses in any event, doubted: Staples v. Plymouth County, 62-364.

3. The sick person is properly chargeable with all expenses which may be incurred, as including expenses of removal, if that plan is adopted, or isolation, if that is adopted; and in the latter case the expense of food furnished to the entire family during the period of isolation may be included; also, the supplying of clothing in place of clothing worn by the family, which is burned. For all such expenses which the sick person or those liable for his support are unable to pay, the county is ultimately liable: Clinton v. Clinton County, 61-205.

4. It is the imperative duty of the local board of health to provide for a sick person, regardless of his settlement—as where the person is a foreigner, not yet having acquired a settlement. The sick or afflicted person must in such case be deemed to belong to the county where the relief becomes necessary: Ibid.

5. The county is liable for the care of sick persons under said statute only in case they or the persons liable for their support are not able to make compensation therefor. The liability of the county can be established only by showing that the facts exist which are contemplated by the statute as rendering the county liable, and the burden of proving these facts is therefore upon the party seeking to establish such liability: Gill v. Appanoose County, 68-20.

6. The board will not be bound by the actions of individual members in authorizing a physician to render services. Such action must be by the board as a body: Young v. Blackhawk County, 66-460.

7. Regulations: Where the mayor and aldermen of a city constituting a board of health made a regulation that no hog-pen nor inclosure wherein swine are kept and fed otherwise than for purpose of commerce, should be allowed within the city limits, held, that such regulations might be enforced by the city: State v. Holcomb, 68-107.

8. Jurisdiction: Exclusive jurisdiction to determine what constitutes a nuisance and to abate nuisances is not conferred upon the local board of health. A private action for damages may be maintained against a person maintaining a nuisance by one specially injured thereby without regard to the action of the board: Baker v. Bohannon, 69-60.

BONDS.

Liability of principal and sureties upon bond of officer, see OFFICERS.

Liability of sureties in general, see SURETSHIP.

For conveyance of real property, see VENDORS.

Breach of, how pleaded, see PLEADINGS, §§ 60-97.

Who may sue upon, see PARTIES, §§ 79-92.

Measure of damages in action upon, see DAMAGES, §§ 126-128.

As to bonds in particular proceedings, see the respective titles.

1. Amendment of: Under statutory provision (Code, § 248), no defective bond or other security shall prejudice the party giving it, provided it be so rectified within a reasonable time after the defect is discovered as not to cause essential injury to the other party. So held in case of appeal bond in an appeal from the county court: Mitchell v. Goff, 18-424.

2. So held, also, as to bond on appeal from a justice of the peace: Brock v. Munatt, 1-128.

3. Substitution: Courts of general jurisdiction have complete power over delivery bonds, and the sureties therein may be changed and others substituted: Ramsey v. Coolbaugh, 18-164.

4. Irregularity: A bond for the release of attached property is not rendered invalid as to sureties by a mistake in its recitals as to the court in which the attachment issued: Ripley v. Gear, 58-460.

5. It does not follow that a bond taken by an officer is entirely invalid though not in the form authorized by statute. It may be good as a common-law bond if it does not contravene public policy nor violate a statute, and it will be binding on the parties to it: Sheppard v. Collins, 12-570.

6. A substantial departure from the requirements of the statute may render the bond void as taken for matters not authorized by statute; not so with a mere verbal departure, even when by statute bonds taken in any other manner than therein prescribed are declared void. This does not reach those which are valid at common law, but only those which are taken by color of office or under pretense of authority: Ibid.

7. Justifying by sureties: A justice of the peace has the right to require a surety on an appeal bond to justify: Lane v. Goldsmith, 23-240.

8. Approval: Where a party's name is signed as surety to a bond and the approval thereon is in due form, it will be conclusively presumed that such approval was with reference to such surety, even though the surety was such that he might have been refused by the officer: Wright v. Schmidt, 47-233.

9. Code, § 2931, providing that an attorney shall not be received as surety in any proceeding in court, while it would justify the officer in refusing to accept an attorney as surety, and would authorize the party for whose benefit the bond with an attorney as surety is given to move for additional security, does not relieve the attorney, who has without objection been received as surety, from liability on the bond: Ibid.

10. This statutory provision as to an attorney being surety applies not only to bonds for costs, under which heading it occurs, but to injunction, attachment, and other bonds: Massie v. Mann, 17-131.

As to liability of officer for approving insufficient bond, see OFFICERS, §§ 114-121.

11. Judgment against surety: In the absence of express statutory provision, judgment upon a bond against a surety thereon should not be summarily entered: Smith v. Bissell, 2 G. Gr., 379.

12. Where a statutory bond is given under which in a certain event judgment may be rendered against the principal and surety without a new action, the surety is so far a party to the proceeding that he may move for a correction of the judgment as against him, or may move for a new trial, or may apply for the correction of an error which affects him only, and does not affect the merits of the action: Freeman v. Hart, 61-525.

13. Insanity as a defense: Where suit is brought for the breach of a bond given in a proceeding for security to keep the peace, the fact of insanity at the time of committing the act constituting a breach of such bond is a defense in the same manner that it would be in a criminal prosecution for the same act: State v. Geddis, 42-264.

14. Conditions construed: Where one member of a partnership by agreement with his copartner was allowed to interpose a firm indebtedness as a counter-claim in an action against him individually, upon condition that he would account for the amount of such claim to the partnership, held, that he thereby bound himself and his surety to absolutely pay the amount of the claim, although it was not then subsisting, but had already been paid to him: Jones v. Fields, 57-317.

15. Where a bond provided for the delivery of a land warrant, held, that on breach of the condition by failure to deliver the warrant, the obligor became liable for damages, and could not, after such liability attached, defeat it by a tender or delivery of the land warrant into court: Bolster v. Post, 57-698.

16. Right of action upon; parties: Where a contractor filed a bond to secure to laborers the amount that might be due to them from such contractor in the performance of the work, held, that the assignee or laborers performing such service thereunder might sue the contractor under such bond: Wells v. Kavanagh, 70—.

17. Where a bond was given by a contractor to secure to the laborers the payment which was due them at the time for services rendered in the performance of work under contract, held, that orders given to workmen or credits entered in their favor by the contractor were not binding upon the sureties: Ibid.

And see PARTIES, §§ 79-92.

18. Indemnity; when right of action accrues: A right of action on a bond of indemnity conditioned to save the obligee harmless from any damages, arises only after the payment of the debt, but such payment may be by note, and the right of action will exist although the maker may be insolvent. If the condition be to save from liability, the right of action would accrue without payment: Wilson v. Smith, 23-252.

19. Where the surety on a bond for costs was taking steps for his discharge, and thereupon the principal executed to him an indemnifying bond, whereupon such steps were discontinued, held, that there was a sufficient consideration for the indemnity: Independent School Dist. v. McDonald, 39-564.

20. Where a bond is given to indemnify a person for any liability to which he might be subjected as surety on an official bond, such surety may recover thereon the amount of the judgment rendered against him on such bond and satisfied by him, although such judgment is rendered by default, it not appearing that he had any defense that would have been available, and the record also showing that the claim against him was established upon proof: Watson v. Van Meter, 43-76.

As to breach of contract of indemnity, see CONTRACTS, § 576.

21. Breach of bond: Where one gave bond for the return of fixtures placed in a mill, which thereby became subject to a mortgage and were sold under foreclosure thereof, held, that defendant was excused from returning the property although he had covenanted to do so, by reason of the fact that the right of plaintiffs to its return had, by virtue of legal proceedings against them, expired and ended: Daniels v. Bowe, 25-403.

22. Conditions: A bond will be good though it contain no recital of terms or conditions upon which the particular act therein covenanted to be done is to be performed: Huntington v. Fisher, 27-276.

BOUNDARIES.

See PUBLIC LANDS.

BOUNTY.

1. Where a board of supervisors offered a bounty on one day, and on the next passed another resolution appointing a committee to carry it into effect, and limiting the offer by certain restrictions, held, that the two resolutions should be taken together as forming one promise, and that a person who had subsequently enlisted was subject to the restrictions: Keough v. Scott County, 25-567.

2. In an action to recover a bounty offered for the enlistment of soldiers, it is immaterial whether the plaintiff had made up his mind to enlist before he heard of the bounty offered, or whether he would have enlisted if he had not heard of it: Keough v. Scott County, 28-337.

3. Where a county offered a bounty to volunteers to fill up its quota of a call for troops, and certain persons were named as a committee, who should manage the matter, and who were to pay nothing until the persons volunteering were accepted, or after the quota under the call should have been filled, held, that if the committee did act, and volunteers were offered and accepted under the call, the county would be liable, though it should afterwards appear there was no deficiency in the quota: Ibid.

4. Under a certain resolution of a board of supervisors in reference to enlistments, held, that the county would become liable to any volunteers who should enlist after such resolution was passed, whether under a call then made, or under subsequent calls: Sowers v. Page County, 32-530.

5. Held, also, that the county became liable to persons enlisting to the credit of a township in the county, although no definite quota was specifically assigned to the county as distinct from its townships: Ibid.

6. Where a person volunteered before the bounty which he sought to recover was offered, held, that he was not entitled thereto, although he supposed at the time of volunteering that the bounty had been offered: Wells v. Scott County, 36-141.

7. Where a person enlisted three days after the proclamation by the governor that the quota was full, held, that it was to be determined as a matter of fact whether such person had notice or knowledge of the proclamation at the time of enlisting, and that the fact of its having been published in a daily paper in the county would not necessarily affect him with such notice: Mayweather v. Scott County, 36-143.

BREACH OF PROMISE.

1. What constitutes a contract to marry: In an action for breach of promise, a reciprocal, mutual and obligatory contract must be shown, but an express promise is not necessary. The contract may be made out by proof of unequivocal conduct of the parties, and of a reciprocal understanding between them, their friends and relations, that a marriage was to take place: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155.

2. To warrant a recovery for breach of promise, it is not necessary that the plaintiff prove a separate and distinct promise to marry; but a promise may be inferred from the conduct of the parties, or their actions one toward the other: Royal v. Smith, 40-615.

3. Renunciation; when suit may be brought: If, before the time fixed for the marriage arrives, the one party renounces the contract, the other may treat this as a breach and sue at once: Holloway v. Griffith, 32-409.

4. A subsequent offer in such a case by defendant to execute the contract would not constitute a defense or mitigate the damages: Ibid.

5. Proof of change of feelings on the part of plaintiff after the breach is not admissible in defense or mitigation: Miller v. Hayes, 84-496.

6. Character of plaintiff: An instruction that immorality of plaintiff, not known to the defendant at the time of the promise of marriage, might be considered in mitigation of damages, held erroneous, as the fact, if true, constituted a complete defense: Guptill v. Verback, 58-98.

7. The fact that the plaintiff in an action for breach of promise had been the mother of an illegitimate child before the contract was made will not bar an action if defendant knew of such fact at the time of the contract, but the fact may be considered by the jury in estimating the damages: Denslow v. Van Horn, 16-476.

8. Damages: If defendant wantonly, and in bad faith, or for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff's character, and with no reasonable expectation that it can be established, sets up in his pleadings, as a defense, the bad character or unchastity of the plaintiff, and fails to prove it, such fact may be considered by the jury in aggravation of damages; but otherwise, if the defense is made in good faith, with probable cause, and a reasonable expectation that it can be established: Ibid.

9. In an action for breach of promise, it is not error to allow the jury to consider personal pain and mortification caused to plaintiff. There is no substantial distinction between such damages, and injury to the feelings and affections: Royal v. Smith, 40-615.

10. The jury may be allowed also to consider pecuniary advantages which the marriage would have secured to plaintiff: Ibid.

11. Evidence; subsequent character: Where the defendant does not seek to justify on the ground of subsequent improper conduct, evidence as to whether plaintiff subsequently kept company with men of improper character is not admissible: Ibid.

12. Declaration: Evidence of declarations of plaintiff made after the commencement of the suit that she would not marry defendant except for his property, held not admissible: Miller v. Hayes, 84-496.

I. CARRIERS OF GOODS.

- a. Contract; duty to receive and transport.

1. Contract; authority of agent: A station agent of a railroad company, having authority to contract for the transportation of property and to receive it for shipment, must be deemed to possess the authority to contract with reference to all the necessary and ordinary details of the business: Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-491.

2. Therefore held; that such agent had authority to bind the company to furnish cars on a specified day, and that it was not competent for the company to show that the agent in such contract violated instructions of which the other party had no knowledge (overruling Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 59-196): Ibid.

3. Acceptance: An undertaking by the carrier to transport the property may be implied from the circumstances under which it comes into its possession, although such obligation is not created by express agreement, and its liability will be the same in one case as it would have been in the other; and held, that the acts of the conductor of a freight train in receiving stock for transportation and the subsequent consent to such acts by the station agent of a railway company were sufficient to render the company liable as carriers for the stock received: Aiken v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 68-363.

4. Place of receiving: A railway may, as a common carrier, by contract or under a course or custom of business, be bound to receive or deliver goods at a place other than the terminus of its road: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

5. Tender for shipment: A tender of freight to a common carrier may be made to its officers or agents authorized to receive such freight for transportation at a point other than that at which the goods to be transported are actually situated, provided the goods offered for transportation are ready at a place where the carrier may receive them for that purpose: Ibid.

6. In an action against a common carrier for refusing to receive goods tendered, it is not necessary to show that the goods referred to were tendered in one lot. The fact that different persons acting for the plaintiff at different dates offered separate lots of grain to make up the quantity which the petition charged was refused, held, not to show more than one cause of action: Ibid.

7. Condition at time of acceptance by carrier; evidence; bill of lading: A bill of lading signed by the common carrier is not conclusive evidence that the goods were in good condition when received by such carrier: Carson v. Harris, 4 G. Gr., 516.

8. So held, where goods were received by one carrier from a preceding carrier: Ibid.

9. External appearance: The external appearance of the boxes in which the goods are packed is not conclusive as to their internal condition: Ibid.

10. The good order which the carrier admits by his bill of lading that the goods are in when received, refers only to the external condition and not to the state of the goods as contained in packages not suitable to be examined: West v. Steamboat Berlin, 3-332.

11. Burden of proof: The fact that goods are accepted by the common carrier as apparently in good condition, or even that the bill of lading recites that they are so received, is not conclusive evidence of such fact. The carrier may show that they were in improper condition for shipment, and the burden will then be upon the shipper to show that the damage might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable skill and attention on the part of the carrier: Mitchell v. United States Ex. Co., 46-214.

12. A public ferryman is liable in his capacity as a common carrier to an individual who suffers damage from a neglect of his duties, such as a failure to have his ferryboat in a proper condition to furnish transportation to those requiring it, without proper excuse, notwithstanding he may be also liable to a penalty under a city ordinance for such neglect: Slimmer v. Merry, 28-90.

13. Duties to the public: The business of a carrier is such that the general public has an interest therein which is properly the subject of regulation by law, and those engaged in such business are subject to restrictions and limitations which do not apply to persons engaged in other kinds of business: Bowlin v. Lyon, 67-536.

14. Refusal to receive: Refusal of a railway company to delay its train that stock might be loaded on cars of the company for shipment after the arrival of the train, held, no ground of action, it appearing that the stock might have been loaded before the train arrived, and that it had not been placed in the yards of the company or put under the control of the company's agent: Frazier v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 48-571.

15. Damages for refusal: Where grain purchased by a contractor for delivery under a contract at a different point was refused by the common carrier to which it was tendered for transportation, held, that the measure of damage for such refusal was the difference between the price which the contractor was to receive for the grain under his contract and the value at the place where it was offered for transportation, less the charges of transportation: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

16. Where a common carrier having made a contract to carry grain from C. B. to St. L. afterwards failed or refused to receive such grain for transportation, the market by the proposed route being the only one open to shippers at C. B., and it not appearing that the violation of the contract by the carrier was wilful, and that the grain would not have reached St. L. in safety if it had been accepted by the carrier, held, that the measure of damages was the difference in the price of the grain at C. B. and St. L. at the time it should have reached its destination, less the agreed price of carriage: Bridgman v. Steamboat Emily, 18-509.

17. But, held, that if it were shown that by the exercise of ordinary care the shipper could have obtained other conveyance, then the damage would be limited to the advance in the price of transportation unless other damage was shown: Ibid.

18. Insufficient facilities: It is error to instruct the jury that a common carrier may refuse goods for transportation if there is such an accumulation that ordinary facilities are not equal to its protection and disposition, and that a carrier is not bound to procure additional tracks, warehouses, etc., to accommodate the unforeseen contingency. What means and exertions are within reasonable requirements under the circumstances is a question for the jury: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

19. It is for a carrier to know whether he has competent means for transportation and has them competently equipped, and he cannot excuse himself from performance by showing that his means are inadequate, even though that fact is known to the shipper at the time of contract: West v. Steamboat Berlin, 8-532.

20. Diligence in transportation: The carrier is bound to transport the goods accepted within a reasonable time. In the absence of any agreement, what is a reasonable time is to be determined by circumstances and matters connected with the business. The time for final delivery will not be extended by reason of the fact that the shipper is not under obligation to deliver the goods shipped to the consignee until the expiration of a further time: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

21. Where property is delivered to the carrier under a contract for transportation, he is entitled to notice of any particular circumstances requiring expedition in transporting if special damages are to be recovered, but this rule has no application to the case of the refusal of the carrier to receive goods: Ibid.

22. In the absence of express undertaking by the carrier to transport property to its destination in a stated time, the law implies an undertaking by it to deliver it there within a reasonable time. But with reference to the time to be occupied in transporting the property, the carrier is not held to the extraordinary liability to which he is held for its safety while it is in his custody, and he may excuse delay in its delivery by proof of misfortune or accident, although not inevitable or produced by act of God: Kinnick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-665.

23. Perishable freight: It is error to charge the jury that a common carrier accepting perishable freight for transportation with a knowledge of the fact is bound to transport it on the day of its receipt, even though other freight, not of a perishable nature, should be thereby delayed. The knowledge of the perishable nature of the freight may impose an obligation for the exercise of care and diligence of a high order to expedite its transportation, but cannot render the carrier absolutely and unconditionally liable to move the freight forward on the day of receipt without regard to its other obligations: Dixon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64-581.

24. Damages from delay in transportation: One of the undertakings of a common carrier is that it will not expose the property intrusted to its care to any improper hazards or extraordinary perils, and if by its omission the property is exposed to perils which ordinary foresight could have provided against, the carrier is accountable for such injury as may be occasioned by such exposure: Hewett v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 68-611.

25. Where potatoes were shipped at a season of the year when severe weather was to be apprehended in the ordinary course of nature in such climate, held, that this fact imposed upon the carrier the duty of forwarding the property to the point of its destination with dispatch, and that if by negligence in failing thus to forward the property it was injured by freezing, which would not have occurred but for the delay in transportation, the carrier was liable: Ibid.

 Liability for loss or damage.

26. Where a bill of lading provided for delivery of goods "without delay," also that the carrier was "not accountable for freezing," and the goods were damaged by freezing, resulting from failure to use reasonable diligence in shipping, held, that the carrier was liable: Whicher v. Steamboat Ewing, 21-240.

b. Liability for loss or damage.

27. General rule: A common carrier is bound to deliver the goods according to its undertaking, subject only to contingencies arising from the act of God or public enemies: Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18-555.

28. The carrier is held to be an insurer of the safety of the property while he has it in possession as a carrier. His undertaking for care and safety of the property arises by implication of law, out of the contract of carriage. The rule which holds him to be an insurer of the property is founded upon considerations of public policy, in that inasmuch as the carrier ordinarily has the absolute possession and control of the property while it is in course of shipment, he has the most tempting opportunity for embezzlement or fraudulent collusion with others. If, therefore, it is lost or destroyed while in his custody, the policy of the law will impose the loss upon him: Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-485.

29. Where the property is delivered in a damaged condition, the burden is on the carrier to establish facts to relieve it from liability for such damage, and the carrier is not released from liability by reason of an accident causing delay, for though such accident might offer an excuse for the delay, the carrier would, notwithstanding, be bound to use the highest degree of care during the delay for the safety of the property: Kinnick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-665.

30. Therefore, held, that damages, to a carload of hogs, appearing to have been caused during a delay of the train, and which damage might have been obviated by proper care, rendered the carrier liable: Ibid.

31. Where plaintiff shipped a cow eight months with calf, and by reason of the negligence of the company an accident occurred, occasioning the loss of such calf, held, that failure of plaintiff to notify the company of the condition of the cow was no defense under the circumstances: McCune v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 52-600.

32. There is no consideration of policy which demands that the carrier be held to account to the owner for an injury occasioned by the owner's own act, and it is immaterial whether such act of the owner amounts to negligence or not: Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-485.

33. Therefore, held, that loss of the goods by fire ignited by a lantern in the hands of the owner's servant, taken by him into the car in the service of the owner, was not a loss for which the carrier was liable: Ibid.

34. The question whether, in shipping property liable to injury by freezing, at a time when danger from freezing is imminent, the shipper was guilty of negligence, and whether the precautions taken by him to protect the property from injury from such cause were sufficient, are questions of fact for the jury: Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 68-491.

35. Negligence of the shipper, in overloading cars of stock which are delivered to the carrier for transportation, will not relieve the carrier from liability: Kinnick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-665.

36. A ferryman is a common carrier as to goods received for transportation, even though the property is accompanied by its owner: Whitmore v. Bowman, 4 Gr. 148.

37. Live stock: The common law rule of liability of the common carrier is applicable to the transportation of stock so far as the damage for which compensation is sought is unconnected with the conduct, character or propensity of the animals undertaken to be carried: McCoy v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 44-424.

38. There are dangers incident to the transportation of stock which are created entirely by the disposition and propensities of the animals, and against which it is often impossible for the carrier to make adequate provision. But the rule as to the liability of the carrier is modified only as far as is rendered necessary by the character of the property, and when the injury results from the natural propensities of the animals, which might have been foreseen by defendant, the carrier is liable: Kinnick v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-665.

39. A railroad company, as a common carrier, is liable for injuries to stock in transit directly resulting from a defective car: McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 24-412.

40. The carrier would be liable for want of ordinary care in the transportation of such stock, even if the liability of common carrier did not attach with reference to such property: German v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 38-127.

41. Therefore, held, that a railway company was liable for damages occasioned by taking cars of stock before they were ready for shipment, and without any one being in charge thereof, notwithstanding a stipulation in the contract of shipment relieving them from liability: Ibid.

42. Military control: If a railroad holds itself out as a common carrier, the mere fact that it is under control of the military authorities in time of war does not exonerate it from transporting goods offered for transportation if it has permission from the military authorities to receive and transport such goods: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

43. Misdirection: A common carrier receiving goods known to be misdirected, and transporting them from the place where received, cannot claim to have acted merely as warehouseman, and will be liable as common carrier for their loss. The original negligence of consignor in the misdirection will not excuse subsequent negligence of the company: O'Rourke v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 44-526.

44. Violation of Sunday laws: The fact that a carrier had transported and unloaded its cars within the city of Chicago on Sunday in violation of the laws of the state of Illinois, held, not to be negligence rendering it liable for loss of goods by fire occurring after the unloading and storing of the goods: Wilde v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 47-272.

45. Bill of lading: The bill of lading possesses the dual character of a receipt evidencing the delivery of goods to the carrier's possession, and a contract containing the stipulations under which the transportation is to be undertaken: Mulligan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36-181.

46. The acceptance of the bill of lading without protest or objection on the part of the shipper gives rise to a conclusive presumption of assent to its terms, and if it does not appear that any fraud was practiced, or that any mistake intervened, he cannot be relieved from such contract by reason of the fact that he did not read the stipulations contained in the bill: Ibid.; Robinson v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 45-470.

47. A bill of lading is both a receipt and a contract, and in its character as a contract it is no more open to explanation or alteration by parol than other written contracts. The fact that the name of the consignee is left blank in the bill of lading will not authorize the introduction of parol evidence to show the agreement of the parties in that respect. Such bill of lading shows on its face that it is an obligation to convey the property to its destination and deliver it to the consignor or his assignee: Garden Grove Bank v. Hume-ston & S. R. Co., 67-526.

48. An assignment of a bill of lading operates as a transfer of the property therein described, and the carrier cannot, without requiring the return of the first bill, issue a second to another party, or deliver the property to any other person than the one named in the instrument. While the carrier may deliver the property without the surrender of the bill of lading, it does so at its peril: Ibid.

49. Although the bill of lading is not a negotiable instrument, it is assignable and represents the property, and it is not subject, in the hands of the assignee, to defenses or counter-claims which the maker had against the assignor before notice of the assignment: Ibid.

50. Where a bill of lading was, by the carrier, issued to the creditor of the person delivering the property for shipment, with the understanding, known to the agent of the carrier, that the bill of lading was to be used in raising money for the payment of the claim due such creditor, and the bill, accompanied with a draft, was negotiated to a bank, held, that the carrier was liable for delivering the property to another person than the holder of such bill of lading, although such delivery was made in accordance with the subsequent direction of the person delivering the property: Ibid.

Liability for loss or damage.

51. A bill of lading which constitutes simply a memorandum of directions made by the employees of a railway company cannot be considered as a contract binding upon the parties: State v. McEvoy, 60-63.

52. Consignee bound by: The terms of a bill of lading accepted by the consignor at the time of shipment will be binding upon the consignee, whether he was aware of its contents or not: Robinson v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 45-470.

53. Parol evidence to vary: A bill of lading embodies a contract between the parties, and is not to be varied by parol evidence as to its terms: Hewett v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 63-611.

54. Binding in another state: If the contract contained in the bill of lading limiting the carrier's liability is valid in the state where made, it will be binding upon the consignee in another state, even though in the latter such a contract is not valid: Robinson v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 45-470.

55. Shipping receipt; delivery of bill of lading after shipment: Where consignor delivered to the carrier certain goods, receiving a shipping receipt therefor, specifying that the goods were "to be forwarded subject to the conditions contained in the bill of lading of this company," and notifying consignor where the bill of lading might be obtained, and the bill of lading was issued to the consignor after the goods were forwarded, and contained an exemption of the carrier from liability for loss by fire, held, that the bill of lading being in the same form which the carrier had been for some time in the habit of employing, and there being no evidence of bad faith, consignor and consignee were bound by the terms thereof: Wilde v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 47-272.

56. But in such case, held, that if the property was destroyed by fire before the bill of lading was actually issued, and the carrier knew of that fact, which was not known to the shipper, the provisions in the bill of lading exempting the carrier from liability for destruction by fire would not be binding in the absence of any showing of uniform custom or usage known to and acquiesced in by both parties, by virtue of which the shipment was to be under such stipulations for exemption: Wilde v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 47-247.

57. Liability for negligence, notwithstanding the terms of bill of lading: The stipulation of a bill of lading cannot relieve the common carrier from loss where it occurs through failure to perform the very conditions and stipulations of the contract, unless it is shown by the carrier that even if such stipulations had been performed the loss must nevertheless have certainly occurred from the same cause: Robinson v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 45-470.

58. Therefore, held, that a bill of lading by a fast freight line containing in its heading the words "through without transfer in cars owned and controlled by the company," amounted to a contract that the goods should be transported in that manner, and the fact that at an intermediate point they were taken from the cars, stored in a warehouse to be reloaded, and were there burned, would defeat the exemption of loss by fire contained in the bill of lading: Ibid.

59. So held, also, where under similar circumstances goods being transported under such a contract were burned during an unauthorized transfer to other cars: Stewart v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 47-229.

60. Connecting line: Where a carrier receives goods for transportation under a contract limiting its liability to the extent of its own line only, and exempting it from liability for loss by fire, and the connecting carrier accepts the goods from such first carrier, the connecting carrier takes subject to the common law liability and not under the contract of the first carrier stipulating for exemption: Bancroft v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 47-262.

61. In the absence of any arrangement between connecting carriers the latter is not liable for any damage the goods may have sustained before coming into his charge: Carson v. Harris, 4 G. Gr., 516.

62. Presumption as to through transportation: When goods are delivered to a carrier marked to a particular place beyond the end of his route, but without any particular directions as to transportation and delivery except as may be inferred from the marks themselves, the transaction constitutes an agreement to deliver at the place designated, but parol evidence is admissible to show the facts concerning the route and the usage of the business, and knowledge of the consignor thereof, for the purpose of showing that the contract was to carry to the end of the line only: Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 9-487; Mulligan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36-181.

63. But by contract or stipulation in the bill of lading the carrier may limit its liability for transportation to the terminus of its own line: Mulligan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36-181.

64. Delivery to connecting carrier: Where property is delivered to a common carrier consigned to a point beyond the terminus of its line, he is bound to deliver it at that point within a reasonable time, or to some other carrier to be forwarded to its destination; and this duty to deliver to the connecting carrier can be performed only by placing the property in the possession or under the control of the other carrier, so that the latter will thereby be rendered responsible for its care and obliged to forward it to its destination: Hewett v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 63-611.

65. Where a car containing goods consigned to a point on the line of a connecting railroad was placed in the yard from which cars were usually taken by such connecting road, but the connecting road refused to receive the car on the ground that it was out of repair, and the first carrier thereupon repaired the car and afterwards delivered it to the connecting road, held, that the delivery by the first carrier did not take place so as to release it from liability until the repairs were made: Ibid.

66. Storage: A common carrier receiving goods from a connecting road for transportation, to be delivered to another connecting carrier, is not relieved of responsibility by storing the property, and while holding the goods in warehouse its liability as carrier continues: Bancroft v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 47-262.

67. Not joint contractors: Where one common carrier furnished, upon request of a preceding connecting carrier, its freight charges for a particular shipment from the beginning of its line to the termination of the transportation beyond its line, and the shipment was accordingly made, held, that it did not become the initial carrier between the commencement of its line and the end of the transportation, nor a joint contractor, nor a partner with the carriers between the terminus of its road and the end of the transportation, and that an agreement between such carrier and the succeeding carrier as to rate of freight for the entire transportation was not sufficient to make the two joint contractors: Hill v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 60-196.

68. Burden of proof as to excuse: Having received goods and undertaken their transportation, if a loss occurs the burden is on the common carrier to show circumstances that excuse it from liability. There is a distinction in this respect between common carriers and other bailees: Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18-555; McCoy v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 44-424.

69. In an action against a common carrier for injury to goods, the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case by showing that he delivered them to the carrier in good order, and when the carrier delivered them to the consignee they were in a damaged condition. The carrier may then show that the injury to the goods was caused by the act of God or the public enemy, and the burden of proof is upon him to show that fact: Winne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 31-588.

70. Damages: Interest on the value of goods lost or not delivered is a proper element of damage: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 38-601.

71. Interest upon the damage recovered should be computed from the time the goods should have been delivered at their destination: Robinson v. Merchants' Despatch, etc., Co., 45-470.

72. Statutory regulation as to contracts:¹ Under provision set out in the foot-note, a contract such as is therein prohibited is void, whether it is with or without consideration: Brush v. Sabula, A. & D. R. Co., 43-554.

¹ Code, § 1838. No contract, receipt, rule, or regulation, shall exempt any corporation engaged in transporting persons or property by railway from liability of a common carrier, or carrier of passengers, which would exist had no contract, receipt, rule, or regulation, been made or entered into.

Delivery.

73. Whether this section would be applicable to a contract made in Iowa but to be wholly performed in another state, quære; but it was held applicable to a contract to transport cattle from Clinton, Iowa, to Chicago, on the ground that it was to be partly performed in Iowa: McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 24-412.

74. A company is not prohibited from providing by contract that it shall not be liable beyond the terminus of its road: Mulligan v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 36-181, 187.

75. The common law liability of a common carrier attaches to a carrier of live stock, so far as the rule is not inapplicable by reason of the peculiar character of the property. Responsibility for the carriage of stock cannot, therefore, be restricted by contract: McCoy v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 44-424.

76. A rule or custom limiting liability for injury to all stock, including such as is of especial value as being blooded, to the value of common stock, is void: McCune v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 52-600.

77. This section does not render the carrier liable for loss occurring by the act of the owner: Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-485.

78. Whether a carrier, in the absence of any statute restricting his powers, can, by rule, regulation or contract, limit the amount for which he will be liable in case of loss of the property, quære. But the statutory provision prohibits the making of such contract: Ibid.

79. This statutory provision is applicable to contracts for transportation from a point within to a point without the state, and is not unconstitutional in that respect: Ibid.

c. Delivery.

80. To the real owner: A common carrier may excuse a non-delivery, pursuant to the bill of lading, by delivering the goods upon demand to the real owner: Brunswick v. United States Ex. Co., 46-677.

81. But where goods are shipped to a consignee, and delivered by the carrier to one who demands them under the claim that they should have been shipped to him, such demand not being in accordance with the facts, the carrier will be liable: Ibid.

82. Delivery to stranger: Where property was delivered by a common carrier to a stranger who assumed to act for the consignee, and who then turned the property over to such consignee, and claiming to be the consignor received the pay therefor, held, that the loss must fall upon the consignee and not upon the carrier: Ryder v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 51-460.

83. Where the bill of lading showed one name as consignee and following it an entry, "Notify"—, naming another person, held, that the second was also a consignee, and a receipt by such second person from the carrier was proper: State v. McEvoy, 69-63.

84. Damaged condition: The consignee is not bound to accept goods which are offered in a damaged condition: Cobb v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 88-601.

85. Receipt as evidence of condition: An instrument signed by the consignee acknowledging the receipt of the goods in good condition is prima facie evidence of that fact, but is not conclusive, and its effect will turn upon the circumstances of each particular case: Porter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 20-73.

86. Receipt may be demanded: The requirement by a common carrier that the person to whom delivery is made shall give a receipt for the goods showing them to have been received in good condition is reasonable, and a party refusing to execute such receipt cannot recover possession of the goods: Skinner v. Chicago & R. I. R. Co., 12-191.

87. Examination; replevin: The person demanding the goods has a right to make an examination of them to determine whether they are in good condition before giving such receipt, but this examination must be made at the place of delivery and before the removal of the property unless otherwise allowed: Ibid.

88. Where goods are shipped by a common carrier to be paid for by consignee on delivery, consignee has no right, in the absence of consent by consignor, to open the package and inspect the goods before accepting and paying therefor, and he cannot maintain replevin on the refusal of an agent to permit such examination before delivery: Wiltse v. Barnes, 46-210.

89. Responsible for failure to deliver; custom: In the absence of the consignee of the property, or his failure to receive the goods, the carrier should still make all reasonable effort to place the goods in proper hands, or, if that cannot be done, hold them himself and thus end his responsibility as carrier: Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18-555.

90. If, by the regular and uniform course of business of the carrier, goods not delivered are to be disposed of or kept in a particular manner, the carrier cannot terminate his responsibility by lodging them with a third person not authorized to receive them. If delivered to a person as the agent of the consignee, the carrier must know that he is such agent or must have been misled by the consignee or owner in order to excuse himself by such delivery: Ibid.

91. Custody as warehouseman: Where goods are deposited after the termination of the transportation in the warehouse of the carrier in accordance with its published rules, it is after that time liable as warehouseman only and not as common carrier: Ibid.; Porter v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 20-73.

92. Contract of agent for storage: While an agreement made by an agent as to the storage of goods in the carrier's depot might not be valid for want of a consideration, yet a carrier might, nevertheless, be bound thereby so as to prohibit the delivery of the goods to a third person: Angle v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 18-555.

93. An agent having general charge of the business of a common carrier would prima facie have the power to make an agreement allowing goods to remain in the depot, but he could not do so in the face of a rule forbidding the same, known to the other party: Ibid.

94. A contract between the carrier and a warehouseman for delivery by the former to the latter of all grain shipped over the line of the former, and not delivered to the consignee, held, not to be a contract imposing unlawful restraint upon the duties of the carrier: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 83-422, 493.

95. Carrier's liability terminates, when: Where goods are unloaded by the carrier at their destination and placed in a warehouse, the liability of the common carrier ends and that of warehouseman begins, and in the latter relation there is no responsibility for loss in the absence of negligence. But if goods should arrive out of time, and the carrier fail to give notice to the consignee, his liability as a common carrier might be extended: Francis v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 25-60.

96. The liability of a railway company as common carrier of freight terminates, and its responsibility as warehouseman commences, upon the arrival of the goods at the point of destination and their deposit there in the warehouse of the company to await the convenience of the consignee: Mohr v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 40-579.

97. Want of notice to the consignee will not render the company liable for subsequent destruction of the goods without other negligence, at least unless it can be shown that the destruction was due to the want of such notice, and that by reason of a custom of the company to give notice, the failure to give it was negligence: Ibid.

d. Compensation and lien.

98. Presumed: Where goods are delivered to a common carrier for transportation in the usual course of business, the carrier becomes entitled to a reasonable compensation without any agreement therefor, and may recover on quantum meruit. In such case it is not presumed that the transportation was to be gratuitous or that the ordinary liability of a common carrier did not arise: Winne v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 81-583.

99. Guaranty of rates by connecting carrier: Where one carrier furnished, upon request, to a preceding carrier rates of transportation over its own and subsequent lines to the end of the transportation, held, that such representation was personal as between the two carriers and the second did not render itself liable thereby to the shipper for overcharges of subsequent carriers: Hill v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 60-196.

100. Statutory regulation: Interstate commerce: Where a contract of shipment from a point within to a point without the state is entire, it is not affected by a statute of the state in which the contract is made regulating rates of transportation: Carlton v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 59-148.

Compensation and lien.—Passengers.

101. The regulation by a board of railroad commissioners that rates of transportation from a point without to a point within the state shall conform to like distances within the state is unconstitutional and interferes with interstate commerce: State v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70—.

102. Where a contract for transportation by a carrier provided for transportation of the goods from one point within the state to another point also within the state, and the rates of transportation were in excess of those fixed by statute, held, that the excess of charges paid might be recovered back, although it was shown that the intention was that the property should be delivered by the carrier receiving it to a connecting carrier and continuously transported to a point without the state, and although the charge for the entire transportation would have been a reasonable one: Heiserman v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 63-732.

103. Recovery of excessive charges: Where the statute defines the charges which can lawfully be made by a common carrier, charges in excess of those prescribed are unlawful, and may be recovered back in an action for the excess. The amount fixed by statute will be conclusively presumed to be the limit of reasonable compensation: Ibid.

104. The enactment of a statute imposing penalties for excessive charges recoverable by the party injured, and providing a punishment against the agent of a carrier for exacting and collecting excessive charges, does not take away the right existing at common law to recover money paid in excess of a reasonable charge: Ibid.

Further as to statutory regulation of railway rates, etc., see RAILWAYS, VII.

105. Protest not necessary: In an action to recover excessive charges paid, the plaintiff need not show objection or protest prior to or at the time of making payment which is in excess of a reasonable compensation: Heiserman v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 63-732.

106. Lien lost by delivery: The lien of a common carrier for its charges is lost by the delivery of the goods to the consignee: Reinemann v. C. C. & B. R. Co., 51-338.

107. Delivery of a portion of the goods covered by the lien may be made without releasing the balance from the lien for the entire charge of the transportation on the whole: Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Northwestern U. P. Co., 38-377.

108. Lien for expenses: Where by the bill of lading a common carrier was relieved from liability for losses arising from dangers of navigation, etc., and was compelled to incur expenses by way of salvage in recovering the property from a wreck occurring without its fault, held, that its lien covered its charges for salvage: Ibid.

II. CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

a. Who are passengers; regulations; expulsion.

109. When rights commence: One who enters the office or waiting-room provided for passengers, and informs the agent of his intention and desire to become a passenger, and places himself under the direction of such agent, becomes thereupon entitled to protection as a passenger: Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37-264.

110. A person intending to take passage may become entitled to protection as a passenger before entering the train or buying a ticket: Green v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 41-410.

111. Payment of fare; free pass: Payment of fare is not essential to create the relation of carrier and passenger. The carrier is liable for negligence resulting in injury to a passenger riding free: Rose v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 30-246.

112. After expiration of ticket: A passenger riding on a ticket which has by its terms expired is not entitled to transportation, and the fact that he has been improperly allowed to use the same ticket on several occasions after its expiration will not estop the carrier from refusing further to accept it: Sherman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 40-45.

113. Fraudulent ticket: One who tenders in payment of his fare a ticket issued to another person at a reduced rate under the express agreement that it shall not be transferable, such agreement and the name of the person to whom the ticket was issued appearing on the face of the ticket, does not become entitled to the rights of a passenger. A person cannot claim transportation under a non-transferable ticket issued for reduced rates to another. The statutory provisions against discrimination do not change the rule in this respect: Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64-48.

114. Purchase of ticket: The regulation that a passenger shall pay full rate upon failure to procure and present a ticket which he might have purchased from the agent at a reduced rate is not unreasonable: State v. Chovin, 7-204.

115. The carrier may make a regulation requiring passengers to procure a ticket before taking passage in a caboose car attached to a freight train, and may eject from the car, in a proper place and manner, any person failing to comply with such regulation: Law v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 82-534.

116. By statute (15 G. A., ch. 68, § 2; McClain's Ann. Stat., 363) a railway company is allowed to collect an additional sum over the regular rate of fare from passengers who fail to purchase tickets, and the reasonableness of such regulation is not a question for the jury: Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co., 52-342.

117. In an action to recover for being ejected from a train for want of a ticket, where the plaintiff claimed that he was not able to procure such ticket on account of the failure of the company to have its ticket office open before the starting of the train, held, that it was proper to allow defendant to introduce evidence of the character of the station and whether the facilities extended to the traveling public to purchase tickets were such as required for the convenience of the public. While it is required that the office should be open for business a sufficient time before the departure of the train, in order to enable passengers to procure their tickets, receive and count their change, if any, and prepare to board the train, without unnecessary interference with each other, yet it is not required that the office shall remain open up to the instant the train moves off. The question is, might the passenger have procured a ticket within a reasonable time before the departure, and not up to the very moment of departure: Everett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-15.

118. The fact that a station is an unfit place for passengers to remain in waiting for the trains cannot be shown in an action to recover damages for being ejected from a train for not procuring a ticket, that reason not having been alleged to the conductor as a reason for not having a ticket: Ibid.

119. The failure of the company to sell a ticket to a passenger before entering the cars cannot be made a ground for recovery of damages where the passenger afterward tenders with his fare to the conductor the extra amount required on account of not having a ticket: Curl v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 68-417.

120. Mistake in amount of fare; ejection: Where, by mistake of the conductor in making change, the amount paid is less than sufficient to pay for the transportation of the passenger to his destination, the conductor can properly require him to correct such mistake, and upon failure to do so, eject him upon reaching the point to which the amount paid entitles him to carriage: McCarthy v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 41-482.

121. Refusal to pay; expulsion: A passenger who takes his seat in the carrier's conveyance and states his destination, but refuses to pay the fare rightfully demanded, becomes a trespasser and is no longer entitled to the rights and privileges of a passenger and may be rightfully ejected: Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 47-82.

122. After being thus rightfully expelled the passenger cannot again enter the same conveyance to be carried to the same destination originally given, upon payment of fare from the point of expulsion to such destination, and the fact that he procures from the ticket agent a ticket to such destination will not entitle him to passage on the conveyance from which he has been expelled: Ibid.

123. Where payment of fare has been demanded of a passenger and refused, he may be ejected, although he subsequently tenders the amount demanded. After payment is refused all obligation to carry the passenger on that train ceases: Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co., 52-342.

124. A passenger is entitled to a reasonable time after his fare is demanded by the conductor in which to tender it, and if tendered within such reasonable time the conductor cannot refuse it and eject the passenger from the train for non-payment, although he may have already rung the bell for the purpose of stopping the train. The question as to what is a reasonable time is for the jury: Curl v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 63-417.

125. The threat of a conductor to eject a passenger for refusal to pay the additional amount required by reason of not having previously procured a ticket, whereby the passenger is induced to pay the amount demanded, will not be sufficient ground for a recovery by such passenger of punitive damages for injury to his feelings; and held, in a particular case, that the evidence did not show malice or wantonness on the part of conductor: Paine v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 45-569.

126. The fact that the conductor accepts from the passenger the regular fare for the distance to be traveled, at the same time demanding the additional amount for not having procured a ticket, will not render ejection for non-payment of such amount illegal: Hoffbauer v. Davenport & N. W. R. Co., 52-342.

127. Place of ejection: While reasonable and ordinary care must be employed in ejecting a passenger, it is not necessary that it be done at a station or public crossing: Brown v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51-235; Everett v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-15.

128. Damages for ejection: Where the conductor, without wantonness or unnecessary violence or oppression, ejected plaintiff from his train in pursuance of what he supposed to be a valid rule of the company, held, that exemplary damages, or damages compensatory of injured feelings, mental anguish, etc., were not allowable: Fitzgerald v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 50-79.

129. Regulations: A carrier has power to make reasonable regulations for the guidance of its agents in the discharge of their duties and for the conduct of passengers in its charge, and all regulations will be deemed reasonable which are suitable to enable the company to perform the duties it undertakes, and also such as are necessary and proper to insure the safety and promote the comfort of passengers: State v. Chovin, 7-304.

130. Stopping over: When a passenger having a ticket takes his seat in a particular train going through to his destination, the contract of transportation to such destination is an entirety, and neither party can require the other to perform it in parts. The passenger cannot, without the carrier's consent, leave that train and take another and be transported under the original payment of fare: Stone v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 47-82.

131. Persons of color: The carrier has no authority to establish and enforce a regulation depriving a person of color of the rights accorded to white persons upon its conveyance: Coger v. Northwestern U. Packet Co., 37-145.

132. Removal of passenger from station: A railway company will not be liable for damages in causing the removal by a policeman from its depot of a woman of bad character who has gained admission to the ladies' waiting-room at night and at a time long before the train which she claims to intend to take is due: Beeson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 62-173.

133. Where plaintiff, after arriving on defendant's train, left the depot and became intoxicated and returned, not for the purpose of awaiting a train on that road, held, that he was properly ejected. The waiting-room is for the accommodation of incoming and outgoing passengers, and not a place of resort for the general public: Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51-25; S.C. 58-848.

134. Damages for unlawful removal: Where the removal of a person from the depot is affected without an assault and no special damage is shown, the recovery for such act, even if wrongful, would be limited to nominal damages: Beeson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 62-173.

135. Removal of passenger from car: In an action against a railway company for damages caused to plaintiff by being removed from one car to another while the train was in motion, held, that whether there was improper conduct on the part of plaintiff so as to justify the conductor in removing him, and whether there was any unnecessary force used, or whether it was done at an improper time or in an improper manner, were questions of fact for the jury, and that the fact that the train was going at the rate of twenty miles an hour did not necessarily render the removal of the plaintiff improper: Marquette v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 33-562.

b. Liability.

136. What care required: Carriers of passengers for hire are bound to exert the highest skill and prudence and the utmost care and diligence in conveying their passengers, and are of course responsible for the slightest negligence: Sales v. Western Stage Co., 4-547; Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14-383, Frink v. Coe, 4 G. Gr., 555; Moore v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 69-491.

137. It is the duty of carriers of passengers to exercise extraordinary care: Raymond v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 65-152; Sandham v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-88.

138. Stage-coaches and hacks: Therefore, held, that stage-coach proprietors were not only bound to furnish good coaches, harness, and horses, and careful drivers, but to keep such coaches, etc., in good repair and to see that their drivers drive with the utmost skill and diligence: Sales v. Western Stage Co., 4-547.

139. Proprietors of hacks and stages are held to the same degree of care as other carriers of passengers, that is, the utmost skill and care which prudent men are accustomed to use under similar circumstances: Bonce v. Dubuque St. R. Co., 53-278.

140. A railway company is required to use higher care in regard to safety of its passengers than it is to avoid injury to stock upon its track: Sandham v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-88.

141. The duty of a railway company as carrier of passengers is to so manage its train as not to expose such passengers to any danger which human foresight and care could apprehend and provide against. When such danger is reasonably to be expected to arise under the circumstances, it is bound to make provision against all danger which human oversight might expect: Kellow v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68-470.

142. Duty arising from contract: The duty of a carrier to make provision for the safety of its passengers grows out of the contract between them, and if he fails through negligence to provide for that danger and the passenger suffers an injury in consequence thereof, the carrier is held liable on the ground that his negligence constitutes a breach of his undertaking: Ibid.

143. Negligence as to platforms, waiting-rooms, etc.: The general rule is that railroad companies are bound to keep in a safe condition all portions of their platforms and approaches thereto, to which the public do or would naturally resort, and all portions of their grounds reasonably near to the platforms where passengers would naturally be likely to go: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26-124.

144. In a particular case, held, that the jury should have been directed to ascertain from the evidence whether the company had designated or set apart the platform as the place where it required all passengers to enter the cars, and if so, and it was known to plaintiff, and in disregard of such requirement and in advance of time, and without justification for so doing, plaintiff sought to enter at another place and met with injury in so doing, the company was not liable as common carrier: Ibid.

145. In an action for injury received while attempting to get on board a train at a station, by reason of defective steps, the question being whether plaintiffs attempted to do so by an unused, dangerous and unfrequented way, it was held competent to show that they did not, by the fact that such steps were a part of the platform; were in a direct route to the cars; and that they were used, among other things, for the purpose of going to and from another depot: Ibid.

146. There being a common law duty on railroad companies to provide reasonable accommodations at stations for passengers, it is proper to show in evidence, in an action for damages for injuries sustained while going to the train at an unusual time and place, that the waiting-room was so filled with tobacco smoke as to make it offensive to remain there: Ibid.

147. While in an action against a railroad company for injury to a passenger sustained while alighting, evidence is admissible to show that the platform at which the passenger is alighting is too high or too low for safety, yet evidence is not admissible to show that such platform is higher or lower than another platform: Nichols v. Dubuque & D. R. Co., 68-732.

148. If there is a customary time for trains to stop at stations of a particular size, that fact may be shown in an action for personal injuries to a passenger in alighting, in order to show that the stoppage of the train was of customary duration; but it is not competent to allow a witness to state the usual length of time which a passenger train stops at the station in question: Ibid.

149. Negligence in failing to protect against wrongful act: Although the negligence of another may be the proximate cause of the injury, yet if the carrier has exposed the passenger to such danger, which might have been anticipated, and at the same time has taken no precaution to protect him therefrom, the carrier has thereby violated his undertaking with the passenger, and if the latter suffers injury in consequence of this violation the carrier is liable, even though the immediate cause of the injury was the wrongful or neglectful act of the other: Kellogg v. Central Iowa R. Co., 68-470.

150. Directions to passenger: A carrier is liable for the consequences of negligence in giving directions to passengers as to the mode of entering its cars: Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-276.

151. The inexperience of the passenger and the difficulty attending the reaching of the car may be taken into consideration in determining whether it was the duty of the agent of the carrier to assist the passenger in getting upon a car: Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37-264.

152. Not liable to person wrongfully riding: The extraordinary care required of a carrier of passengers toward the passenger does not exist as to a person who attempts to secure passage under a non-transferable ticket issued to another person: Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64-48.

153. Evidence; burden of proof: An accident, such as the upsetting of a stage-coach causing injury to a passenger is prima facie evidence of negligence: Frink v. Coe, 4 G. Gr., 555.

154. Where a dangerous accident occurs which, under ordinary circumstances, would not have happened had the carrier and its employees exercised due care, prudence and watchfulness, proof of such accident, with its attendant circumstances, raises a presumption of negligence, and the burden is then cast upon the carrier to rebut this presumption. To this end the carrier must show that in the selection and operation of the machinery which caused or contributed to the accident it used due care, skill, prudence and watchfulness. It is error in such case to instruct the jury that it devolves upon the carrier to satisfactorily explain the accident, and in the absence of such explanation negligence would be presumed, notwithstanding proof of due care, etc.: Tuttle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-286. And see Evidence §§ 874-7.

155. Testimony as to the condition of the track near the place of the accident should be admitted: Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42-274.

156. Pleading: In an action by a passenger to recover for personal injuries caused by the derailment of a car, it is sufficient, under the Iowa statute, if the petition state enough to raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the company. It need not state all the facts or acts showing want of care on the part of the railroad company: Clark v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 4 McCrary, 360.

157. Contract limiting liability: A carrier of passengers cannot, by notice or special contract, restrict, limit, or avoid its common law liability for negligence: Rose v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 39-246.

158. Contributory negligence; riding in unsafe place: Where a passenger, being asleep when the train stopped at his destination, was awakened by a brakeman and directed to get off quickly, but on coming to the door found the train in such rapid motion that it was dangerous to alight, and while standing on the steps of the platform, without attempting to step off, was thrown off by the jerking of the train, no negligence on the part of the carrier being shown, held, that the passenger was guilty of contributory negligence by reason of remaining in an unsafe position and could not recover: Lindsey v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 64-407.

159. Where a passenger, with knowledge of the regulation of the company that passengers were not allowed to stand on the platform, left his seat before the train reached the station and stood upon the step of the platform awaiting an opportunity to alight as soon as the train should stop, and was by a sudden jerk of the train caused to fall and injure himself, held, that he was guilty of negligence: Bon v. Railway Passenger Assurance Co., 56-664.

Liability as to passengers.

160. A person riding in a place of known danger instead of in the portion of the train set apart for passengers and others not engaged in the operation of the train cannot recover for injuries which would not have resulted had he been in the proper place: Doggett v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 84-284.

161. While the train is not in motion the platform cannot be considered a place of danger: Walter v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 89-83.

162. Getting on or off moving trains: The rule that leaving a train after it is in motion constitutes contributory negligence cannot be applied to a case where the passenger is already in the act of descending the steps of the car, when the train starts: Nichols v. Dubuque & D. R. Co., 68-732.

163. Where persons are in peril and feel obliged to act upon the spur of the moment, they are not necessarily to be charged with negligence if they do not do the right thing: Ibid.

164. While it might not be contributory negligence under all circumstances for a passenger to attempt to get upon a moving train, yet held, under the circumstances of a particular case, the attempt of a passenger to climb upon a freight car while holding a lantern and stick in his hand, while the train was going at such rate of speed that he feared that he would not be able to get upon the caboose when it reached him, constituted contributory negligence: McCorkle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 61-555.

165. Where a passenger, desiring to go upon the caboose of a freight train, was allowed sufficient time for that purpose by the persons in charge of the train, but, fearing that he would not reach the caboose in time, got upon a freight-car and was thrown therefrom and injured, by reason of the car being thrown off the track, held, that he was guilty of such contributory negligence as would defeat his recovery for such injury: Player v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 62-723.

166. Time and place of entering car: A railroad company may make reasonable rules and regulations respecting the time, mode and place of entering cars, and these, when known to the passenger, he is bound to conform to. In this case, held, that if plaintiffs attempted to enter the cars at a place which they knew, or, from the nature of the circumstances surrounding them, ought to have known, was not designed for receiving passengers, and at which the company did not allow passengers to enter, the company would not be liable as common carriers upon their contract for an injury happening in the prosecution of such an attempt: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 26-124.

167. An attempt by a passenger desiring to reach another train in a dark night to crawl under a freight train with locomotive attached is necessarily contributory negligence sufficient to defeat his recovery for injuries resulting from the moving of the freight train without proper signal: Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-83.

168. The fact that an agent of the company makes statements calculated to throw the passenger off his guard as to danger may relieve the passenger from responsibility for want of vigilance, which might otherwise be imputed as contributory negligence; but in a particular case, held, that the passenger was not exonerated from exercising due care by reason of the general statement of the agent that there would be no danger or trouble in going to or upon the car in accordance with directions: Allender v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 37-264.

169. Injuries to passenger from fellow-passenger: If a carrier has no reasonable ground to believe that an assault upon a passenger by another passenger will be made, such carrier is not liable, even though the assault and the injury resulting therefrom might have been prevented by the presence of a sufficient number of employees upon the train: Felton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 69-577.

170. So held, where a passenger riding with other excursionists in a flat-car, the sides of which were not protected by a railing, was thrown from the car and killed by reason of an assault made upon him by another passenger: Ibid.

 Passenger's baggage.

171. Action for breach of contract causing death: Whether, where the death of the passenger is caused by negligence of the carrier, a right of action for breach of the contract arises in behalf of his estate, quære; but at least it must appear, to support such an action, that at the time of the injury the contract was still subsisting: Hyde v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 61-441.

Further as to actions for injuries causing death, see ACTIONS, §§ 78-85.

c. Passenger's baggage.

172. Delivery; custom: Delivery of baggage may be made at the proper place of receiving it under the express assent or authority of the carrier without notice to its employees. Assent may be presumed from the course of business or custom of the carrier: Green v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 38-100.

173. The question whether the evidence establishes a course of business and custom to the effect that the delivery of baggage at the station-house without notice to the agents of the company is regarded by the company as a delivery to its servants, or whether under this custom there is a sufficient delivery, should be left to the jury: Green v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 41-410.

174. When liability commences: It is error, in an action for loss of baggage occurring after delivery to the carrier and before transportation has commenced, to instruct the jury on the theory that the carrier assumes no duties as respecting the baggage of one intending to become a passenger so long as he is in such position as to withdraw his baggage and conclude not to take passage. A person may be entitled to be protected as a passenger without purchasing a ticket or entering the car, and he may also, under similar circumstances, require that his baggage be cared for as the baggage of a passenger, and the liability of the carrier will be the same: Ibid.

175. Where it appeared that the agent of the carrier was advised that plaintiff intended to become a passenger on the morning train, and her trunk was sent to the depot on the evening before, properly marked, as was customary in such cases, and the trunk was locked up in the defendant's baggage room, held, that the liability of the defendant as a common carrier with reference to such baggage attached: Ibid.

176. Liability after arrival at destination: Plaintiff purchased a ticket on defendant's railroad from O. to F. Being unable then to get his trunk he gave a check for it to defendant's agent, who agreed to forward it by next train. Plaintiff after arrival at F. applied each day for his trunk, which had not come, until the third day, when it was there, but had been broken open and its contents stolen in the night while locked in defendant's common passenger room instead of the ordinary baggage room. Held:

(1) Whether defendant was to be held to the diligence of a common carrier or that of a warehouseman, quære; but even if as warehouseman, it was liable for the value of the contents stolen.

(2) That plaintiff was entitled to a reasonable time after the arrival of the trunk within which to receive it.

(3) That the authority of defendant's agent to agree to forward the trunk was immaterial, since the company accepted and undertook to convey and deliver it.

(4) That upon plaintiff's paying his fare, defendant, by undertaking as a part of the consideration therefor and pursuant to its agent's agreement to deliver the baggage by a subsequent train, assumed the ordinary liabilities existing when the passenger goes on the same train: Warner v. Burlington & M. R. R., 22-166.

177. Where trunks were left in the freight room to be called for by the owner and checked as baggage, held, that the company was only liable for them as gratuitous bailees for safe keeping and not responsible for theft without its fault: Van Gilder v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 44-548.

178. The liability of a railway corporation as a carrier of baggage terminates as such upon the expiration of such reasonable time, after arriving at the place of destination, as will enable the traveler to receive and take charge of the same: Mote v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 27-22.

179. When baggage is unclaimed within the proper time after reaching its destination, it is the duty of the carrier to store it in a proper and secure place until called for or disposed of as required by law, and when so stored, the carrier becomes liable as a warehouseman or mere bailee in deposit, and as such is held to common and reasonable care and diligence: Ibid.

180. Statutory provision: Code, § 2188, gives a remedy against a carrier of passengers for damages to baggage, and for detention caused thereby. It does not authorize a recovery on account of detention of baggage or failure to deliver the same, nor for detention of the traveler, unless it be on account of damages done to baggage: Anderson v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co., 32-86.

181. Action by joint owners: Where a box, the joint property of two passengers, and containing personal property belonging to each, was received to be transported for them jointly, held, that they might bring a joint action for the loss thereof: Anderson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 65-131.

 CERTIORARI.

I. WHEN THE WRIT WILL BE GRANTED.

II. PARTIES.

III. PROCEDURE.

I. WHEN THE WRIT WILL BE GRANTED.

1. Common law writ: The writ of certiorari is a common law writ which may be issued by courts having a common law jurisdiction: Helmich v. Johnson, Mor., 89.

2. Discretion of higher court: In an action of certiorari, the result of which is to annul the action of an inferior tribunal, board or officer, it is peculiarly the duty of the court to scrutinize the petition and interfere only in a case properly made, and even then the court may exercise a proper measure of discretion, and in general should exercise its power sparingly. It is not bound to grant a writ on merely technical grounds, and where no prejudice is shown: Woodworth v. Gibbs, 61-398; Johnson v. Supervisors, 61-89.

3. Certiorari and appeal: The writ of certiorari is never used to correct a mere error, but only to test the jurisdiction of a tribunal and the legality of its action: State v. Roney, 37-30.

4. When a party has the right of appeal he cannot proceed by certiorari: Ransom v. Cummins, 66-137; State v. Schmidt, 65-556.

5. Where an inferior court illegally exercises its jurisdiction, and there is no adequate remedy by appeal, the writ of certiorari will lie: Coburn v. Mahaska County, 4 G. Gr., 242.

6. Where a joint action was brought against the several independent districts comprising what had formerly been a district township, for a debt of such district, and proceedings were had for the apportionment of the judgment among the independent districts, held, that certiorari would not lie from the proceedings of the court in making such apportionment. Certiorari will not lie where there is a plain, adequate and speedy remedy by appeal: Independent School Dist. v. District Court, 48-182.

7. The writ will issue when there has been a usurpation of power in the denial of a right to appeal: Davis County v. Horn, 4 G. Gr., 94.

8. After reversal on appeal: The judgment of a lower court being reversed on appeal and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion, such court has no jurisdiction to take any action inconsistent with such opinion, and if it attempts to do so its proceedings may be corrected by certiorari: Edgar v. Greer, 14-211.

9. Justice of peace; summary proceeding: Where a justice of the peace exercises a new jurisdiction created by statute, in which the proceedings are summary, and in a course different from the general principles of the common law, certiorari and not appeal is the proper method of having the action of the justice reversed: Dubuque v. Rebman, 1-444.

10. Judgment wrongfully set aside: Where the court has jurisdiction of the parties at the time of making an order, its action cannot be attacked by certiorari; the remedy then is by appeal. Where, however, during the term at which a judgment was made, approved and signed, but after counsel for one of the parties had left the court, such judgment was set aside and other proceedings had, held, that the order was without jurisdiction and might be corrected on certiorari: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Duffie, 67-175.

When the writ will be granted.

11. Indefinite continuance: Where a cause had been continued "until after the next ensuing term" of court, and neither the day nor the hour fixed, held, that defendant was not bound to appear from day to day to ascertain when it might suit the plaintiff to call up the case, and a judgment rendered in such case against the defendant was without notice to him and void, and that defendant would be entitled to the writ of certiorari as soon as he discovered that judgment had been so rendered, notwithstanding more than sixty days had elapsed since the rendition of judgment: Rowley v. Baugh, 33-201.

12. Failure to appeal: A party who fails to appeal within the time limited by law is not entitled to sue out the writ: Sunberg v. District Court, 61-597.

13. Where a party has, through his own fault, lost a plain, speedy and adequate remedy, which he might have availed himself of, as the right to appeal, he is not entitled to a remedy in certiorari: Fagg v. Parker, 11-18.

14. So he will not be allowed to select some erroneous ruling of an inferior tribunal and have it corrected by certiorari: O'Hare v. Hempstead, 21-33.

15. Thus, under Code of '51, it was held that an error of the county court in rejecting testimony in the proceedings before it should be corrected by appeal, and not by certiorari: State v. Wilson, 12-424.

16. Administrator's settlement: The proper remedy for a refusal of the county court to correct a mistake in an administrator's final settlement is by appeal, and not by certiorari: O'Hare v. Hempstead, 21-33.

17. Condemnation proceedings: Where, in right of way proceedings, it was not claimed that the land was such as could not be taken for right of way, nor that sufficient and proper notice had not been given, but simply that sufficient damages were not assessed and that the award was made on a day subsequent to that fixed in the notice, held, that the remedy, if any, was by appeal, not certiorari: Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. v. Whelan, 64-694.

18. Commissioners properly appointed to appraise damages for the taking of land for a right of way cannot be considered a tribunal exercising judicial functions and held liable for exceeding their jurisdiction or acting illegally when the proceedings are regular, even though the case is one in which there is no right to condemn the right of way: Forbes v. Delashmutt, 68-164.

19. The proceedings of an inferior tribunal to establish a highway will not be annulled on certiorari unless it is shown that it has exceeded its jurisdiction, or is otherwise acting illegally: McCollister v. Shuey, 24-362.

20. Where a board is given a discretion, a court cannot on certiorari inquire into the correctness of their decisions: Hildreth v. Crawford, 65-339.

21. The statutes in reference to this subject do not contemplate that the decisions of inferior tribunals in regard to matters of fact, where the tribunal is clothed with authority to decide with reference to matters submitted to it, and the subject-matter and the parties are within its jurisdiction, may be reviewed by a writ of certiorari: Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61-334; Darling v. Boesch, 67-702.

22. Therefore, held, that in a proceeding by certiorari in the circuit court, the decision of the board of supervisors upon the question whether the public interests demanded a proposed highway, and whether it was practicable and expedient to establish it, could not be reviewed: Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61-334.

23. Board of equalization: Certiorari is not the proper proceeding to control the discretion of a board of supervisors acting as a board of equalization: Smith v. Board of Supervisors, 30-531.

24. The action of the board of equalization in increasing or diminishing the valuation of the property of a tax-payer cannot be reviewed by certiorari. Whatever the motive of the alleged wrongful action of the board, it cannot be deemed illegal in such sense as to be reviewed in that manner: Polk County v. Des Moines, 70—.

25. Where a board of equalization acts in a case not within its jurisdiction, certiorari the proper remedy: Royce v. Jenney, 50-676.

26. County seat; relocation: The action of a board of supervisors in determining upon the sufficiency of remonstrances, and the number of names signed thereto, in proceedings for the relocation of a county seat, is judicial, and may be reviewed on certiorari: Herrick v. Carpenter, 54-840.

When the writ will be granted.—Parties.

27. Intoxicating liquors; permits: The court cannot on certiorari review the finding of the board of supervisors in granting a permit to sell intoxicating liquors, as to the good moral character of the applicant, or as to whether the granting of the permit was necessary for the accommodation of the neighborhood. But it may determine whether the proceedings were illegal by reason of no certificate whatever, signed by the electors as required by statute, having been presented to the county auditor: Darling v. Boesch, 67-702.

28. Tax for railroad; illegal voting: The action of township trustees in determining whether the petition for submission to vote on the proposition to levy a tax in aid of a railroad is of a judicial or quasi judicial character, or whether it is illegal or without jurisdiction, may be determined in this proceeding: Jordan v. Hayne, 36-9.

29. But the question whether there has been fraud or illegal voting cannot be determined, the proceeding not being intended or calculated to discover and defeat such frauds: Ibid.

30. Assessor to correct errors: Where an assessor has failed to make on his books the corrections ordered by the township board of equalization, and such books have passed beyond his control into the hands of the auditor, an action of certiorari to have the same corrected is the proper remedy: Keck v. Board of Supervisors, 37-547.

31. School directors; illegal acts: Illegal acts of a board of school directors in directing their secretary not to certify to the board of supervisors a tax voted by the electors of the district, may be corrected on certiorari: Smith v. Powell, 55-215.

32. City council; streets: Certiorari will lie to control the action of a city council in improperly vacating streets: Stubenrauch v. Neyenesch, 54-567.

33. Legislative acts of a city council in passing ordinances cannot be interfered with by certiorari. So held as to the action of a city council in passing an ordinance to regulate the sale of beer, wine, etc.: Iske v. Newton, 54-586.

34. Remitting taxes: The action of the city council in hearing a petition for the reduction of a tax and granting the same is a judicial action and properly brought in question by certiorari: Collins v. Davis, 57-256.

35. The statute of limitations commences to run against a proceeding by certiorari to correct error in the action of a board of supervisors in holding a petition for the relocation of a county seat sufficient (Code, § 285), from the time the board decides to submit the question to vote, and not from the time it passes upon the petition: Jamison v. Board of Supervisors, 47-888.

II. PARTIES.

36. Person not affected: A person in no way affected by the proceeding cannot interfere therewith by writ of certiorari: Davis County v. Horn, 4 G. Gr., 94.

37. Where the record discloses no specific right on the part of the plaintiff which is violated by the ordinance of a city, he will not be allowed on certiorari proceedings to contest its validity: Iske v. Newton, 54-586.

38. Remission of tax; action by any tax payer: A tax payer may, in this proceeding, question the action of a city council in remitting taxes assessed against another tax payer, although such plaintiff have no greater interest in the matter than other tax payers: Collins v. Davis, 57-256.

39. Pecuniary interest; prohibitory liquor law: While the general rule is that an action of certiorari cannot be maintained for the correction of irregularities or errors in proceedings of the board of supervisors by one having no pecuniary interest in the proceedings, yet under the prohibitory liquor law authorizing the board of supervisors to grant permits for the sale of liquors upon certain requirements being complied with by the applicant, and permitting any citizen to appear and show cause why the permit should not be granted, such citizen has sufficient interest in the granting of such permit to entitle him to have the proceedings reviewed and the errors and irregularities therein corrected by certiorari without having any pecuniary interest in the matter: Darling v. Boesch, 67-702.

 Procedure.

40. Joinder; taxes in different townships: Where taxes have been levied in different townships in aid of a railroad, the levy in each township is to be considered distinct, and tax payers of different townships cannot join as plaintiffs in an action of certiorari to test the validity of such taxes: Woodworth v. Gibbs, 61-398.

41. In a proceeding to review the action of the board of supervisors in assessing the costs of constructing a levee upon adjoining land, different property owners whose property will be subject to assessment on that question may join as plaintiffs: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70—.

42. Several owners of distinct pieces of land cannot join in a proceeding by certiorari to correct the action in assessing damages resulting from the establishment of a road: Chambers v. Lewis, 9-583.

III. PROCEDURE.

43. Special action: Under the Revision, held, that the proceeding by certiorari was a special proceeding and not a special action: Ainsworth v. House, 31-504.

44. Criminal cases; jurisdiction: The district and circuit courts have not jurisdiction indiscriminately under the Code (§ 3217). But the former has exclusive jurisdiction of all such proceedings in criminal cases, and the latter all those in civil cases, as provided in §§ 161, 162: Keniston v. Hewitt, 48-679.

45. Sufficient return; change of county seat: Where a proceeding by certiorari was brought to determine the legality of the action of the board of supervisors in submitting to vote the question of changing the location of a county seat, held, that the return of the board showing upon what evidence the board proceeded, and in what manner they reached the result upon which the order was based, was proper: Stone v. Miller, 60-243.

46. Duty of court to examine: Upon a return of the writ of certiorari, held, that it was the duty of the court to examine not only the statement of the defendant made in the return, but also the evidence submitted: Ibid.

47. Material facts certified: Although the writ may be defective in not having a sufficient certificate as to the record, yet if the facts deemed material are in fact certified, no objection on account of the insufficiency of the writ can be afterwards raised: Richman v. Board of Supervisors, 70—.

48. Waiver of writ: The parties may waive a writ of certiorari and voluntarily submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court: Groves v. Richmond, 56-69.

49. Return as showing notice: When the judge returns that notice has been given, it will be taken as duly and properly established that notice was given in the proper manner; but if the proof of notice is set out, and it appears to be insufficient, the correctness of the finding of the judge as to the notice will be overcome: Schroder v. Carey, 11-555.

50. Allegations to sustain application: The motion for the writ should point out specifically the illegalities in the proceedings complained of: Chambers v. Lewis, 9-583.

51. Direction: The writ should be directed to the officer against whom it issues by name and not merely by his official title: Ibid.

52. Evidence before supervisors; auditor's certificate: In a certiorari proceeding, a certificate of the county auditor as to whether oral evidence was received before the board of supervisors touching a particular question is not competent to overturn the action of the board: Woolsey v. Board of Supervisors, 32-180.

53. Facts not stated in writ: Under the Revision, held, that the court could not, in this proceeding, consider errors or illegalities relating to or dependent upon facts not stated in the petition or the writ: Everett v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 28-417; Smith v. Board of Supervisors, 30-531.

54. Power to hear testimony: Also, held, under the Revision, that the case could be heard only on the record returned and that other evidence could not be introduced: Jordon v. Hayne, 36-9.

55. Under present provisions (Code, § 3222) the court is allowed to consider other evidence than that presented in the return of the writ, but it is not intended to extend the remedy so that inquiry can be made into matters other than the jurisdiction and legality of the proceedings of the inferior court.

Execution and delivery.

It is not the purpose of the statute to change the office of certiorari so that it will operate as an appeal wherein causes may be tried de novo. The provision for the introduction of other evidence is for the purpose of permitting the consideration of all the facts involved in the case bearing upon the issues in the proceeding, touching the jurisdiction and compliance with the law in the case reviewed: Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61-334.

56. On appeal: The supreme court cannot, upon certiorari from the circuit court, inquire whether the evidence before the latter justified the order made, and thus review, as upon appeal, its decision: Wise v. Chaney, 67-73.

57. Bond: It not being provided that judgment upon the bond should be summarily entered against a surety as provided in the case of appeal bonds, such a judgment will be erroneous: Smith v. Bissell, 2 G. Gr., 379.

Sale of property by mortgagor constitutes a crime: See CRIMINAL LAW, §§ 456-460.

As to ACKNOWLEDGMENT, see that title.

As to recording, see RECORDING ACTS.

As to NOTICE, see that title.

When void on account of being made in connection with general assignment, see ASSIGNMENTS, V.

When void as FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, see that title.

I. EXECUTION AND DELIVERY.

1. In parol: A parol agreement for a lien upon personal property may be valid, and will not be within the statute of frauds if money is still to be expended in acquiring the property to be covered thereby: Brown v. Allen, 35-306.

2. By partner: A mortgage of firm property by one partner may be valid if within the scope of his authority: Fromme v. Jones, 13-474. But not without consent of copartner if it will practically terminate the firm business: Osborne v. Barge, 29 Fed. Rep., 725.

3. Parol evidence to show absolute sale intended as a mortgage: It is competent to show by parol evidence that a sale, absolute in its terms, was intended as security for a debt: Votaw v. Diehl, 62-676.

4. Delivery and acceptance: An acceptance by the mortgagee is necessary to constitute delivery. While actual manual delivery is not necessary, there must be that which, in legal contemplation, is equivalent thereto: Day v. Griffith, 15-104.

5. Even if the mortgagor agrees with a creditor to give security, the filing of the mortgage, by the mortgagor, with the recorder, but without the knowledge of the mortgagee, will not constitute a valid delivery: Ibid.

6. The subsequent acceptance of the instrument by the mortgagee, while it will make the instrument valid from that time, will not relate back to the original execution and delivery to the recorder, so as to cut off the rights of a creditor who has secured an attachment before such acceptance: Ibid.

7. Where a chattel mortgage was executed as security for a loan procured from the mortgagee, under an agreement that the mortgagor should give a chattel mortgage on sufficient property to constitute ample security for the loan, and file the same with the recorder for record, held, that such filing for record amounted to a valid delivery to the mortgagee, although he did not know what specific property was covered by the mortgage: Everett v. Whitney, 55-146.

8. Although the execution and filing for record by mortgagor of a mortgage upon certain property, in accordance with a prior agreement to execute such mortgage, may constitute a delivery to the mortgagee, yet, where a mortgage was thus executed and filed in accordance with a prior agreement to secure the debt by chattel mortgage, but without the particular property having been previously agreed upon, held, that such mortgage would not take priority over an attachment levied after the recording of the mortgage, but prior to its delivery to the mortgagee: Cobb v. Chase, 54-253.

9. Where a chattel mortgage from husband to wife was filed by the husband for record and recorded, but it did not appear that it had come into the hands of the wife, or been approved by her until after the accruing of other liens, held, that it would not take priority over such liens: Wadsworth v. Barlow, 68-599.

10. Although it is true that where a mortgage beneficial to the mortgagee is left with the recorder or other person, with the declaration that it is to be delivered to the mortgagee, or is for the mortgagee's use, and the facts come to the mortgagee's knowledge, acceptance from that time may be presumed, yet, where the instrument was filed with the recorder, with no declaration that it was to be delivered to the mortgagee, or was for her use, held, that acceptance by her would not be presumed from the mere fact of knowledge, at least where it did not appear that the mortgage was necessarily beneficial to her: Ibid.

11. Where, at the time a debt is contracted, it is agreed that a chattel mortgage shall be executed upon the happening of a specified event, to cover property specifically named, and the mortgage is executed upon the happening of such event, the law will presume that the mortgagee assented to the mortgage. The assent expressed in the agreement will be deemed to continue up to the execution of the mortgage: In re Assignment of Guyer, 69-585.

12. In such case, where the mortgagor has by agreement bound himself to execute the mortgage, and the mortgagee has assented thereto and agreed to accept it, the mortgagor will be authorized to file it for record, and the person to whom he delivers it will be authorized to do this as agent of the mortgagee: Ibid.

13. The execution of a chattel mortgage to secure a creditor will not prevent the property covered thereby passing by general assignment executed after the execution of the mortgage and before its acceptance by the mortgagee: Gage v. Parry, 69-605.

14. Mortgage upon property held under replevin: Where, in a replevin suit to recover possession of property from an officer, the plaintiff dismissed suit before the joining of issues, but the property remained in his hands, and before the issuance of a writ of restitution plaintiff executed a mortgage upon such property, held, that a subsequent return of the property to the officer, under the writ of restitution, and a new levy thereon by him, would not give him any right prior to the mortgage, it appearing that the mortgagor was in fact the real owner of the property: Case v. Woleben, 52-389.

As to ACKNOWLEDGMENT and RECORDING, see those titles respectively.

II. SUBJECT-MATTER; DESCRIPTION; FUTURE ACQUISITIONS.

15. Certainty of description: A description of the property in a chattel mortgage which will enable third persons, aided by inquiries which the instrument itself indicates and directs, to identify the property, is sufficient: Smith v. McLean, 24-322.

16. Therefore, the following description was held sufficiently definite: "five freight wagons and twenty-five yoke of cattle, being the train now in my possession:" Ibid.

17. Any description in a chattel mortgage, which will enable third persons, aided by inquiries which the instrument itself suggests and directs, to identify the property intended to be covered, is sufficient: Rhutasel v. Stephens, 68-627.

18. Therefore, held, that a chattel mortgage covering "all my stock hogs, being forty, more or less, with the pigs now with them," was sufficient, but that the description "one span of colts, three years old, one gray, and one bay," etc., etc., but making no reference to the ownership of the property, its location, or otherwise describing it, was insufficient: Ibid.

19. In order to charge third persons with constructive notice of a chattel mortgage, the description of the property as contained in the mortgage must direct the mind to evidence whereby the precise thing conveyed may be ascertained, and if thereby absolute certainty may be attained, the instrument is valid. Otherwise it is void as to third persons for uncertainty: Ormsby v. Nolan, 69-130.

Subject-matter; description.

20. A description of a buggy and sulky showing by whom they were made and from whom bought, but not showing their ownership, location, etc., held, not sufficient: Ibid.

21. A chattel mortgage describing the property as in possession of the mortgagor, and showing the county in which the property is located, is sufficient: Wells v. Wilcox, 68-708; Brock v. Barr, 70—.

22. Specific description of animals, with the further fact shown by the mortgage that they are in the possession of the mortgagor, is sufficient: Wheeler v. Becker, 68-723.

23. The description "sixty head of two and three year old steers and forty head of yearling steers, also sixty-five acres of standing corn, situated in Clay township, Shelby county," held, not sufficiently specific, in that there was no suggestion that the animals were all the animals of that age and description which the mortgagor owned in that township: Caldwell v. Trowbridge, 68-150.

24. If the description is correct as far as it goes, but fails fully to point out and identify the property intended to be conveyed, a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer is bound to make every inquiry which the instrument could be reasonably deemed to suggest: Yant v. Harvey, 55-421.

25. Therefore, where a mortgage described a horse as of brown color, whereas the evidence showed that some would call it brown and others would call it black, held, that there was not such a misdescription as to render the mortgage invalid: Ibid.

26. A description of property as a stock of goods, wares and merchandise, consisting of groceries, etc., and all other articles of goods now in stock, etc., in a store-room, etc., held, sufficient to cover kerosene and salt embraced in the stock, the salt being actually stored in a building used for that purpose in connection with the store-room, and the kerosene being at the time of levy under attachment, in front of the building, where it had been rolled out on the same day for a temporary purpose: Stephens v. Pence, 56-257.

27. The terms "goods, wares, merchandise, fixtures, furniture and appliances," used in a chattel mortgage covering a stock of goods in a grocery store, held, not sufficient to include horses and wagons used in connection with the store in the delivery of goods, nor notes, drafts, accounts, etc., kept in a safe in such store: Van Patten v. Leonard, 55-520.

28. Under a chattel mortgage of the fixtures and appurtenances of a daguerrean room, held, that the term "appurtenances" covered such property as appertained and belonged to the room, or remained there permanently, and was used in carrying on the business, such as maps and pictures hanging on the wall, the stove and carpet, the apparatus and furniture necessary for the business, with the machines and stock, etc.: Pickereil v. Carson, 8-544.

29. Mistake in description: If the mortgage contains a specific description which is erroneous, and therefore misleading, it will not be upheld against innocent purchasers: Ivins v. Hines, 45-73.

30. Where a chattel mortgage upon a growing crop described it as upon "township 37, range 90," instead of "township 90, range 37," and a judgment creditor subsequently had the crop sold under execution for his debt, held, that the creditor was not chargeable with notice of the mistake in the description, and was not liable in an action by the mortgagee for the value of the crop: Adams v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 53-491.

31. Description of crop: Where the description of the property covered by the mortgage was "all the cut and growing, and having grown on the" premises described, held, that the description was too uncertain to be of any validity against an officer who had levied upon the property, and that the court would not insert or understand the word "crops" for the purpose of curing the defect: Cray v. Currier, 62-535.

32. Where the mortgage described the property as "all and the entire crop of flax and wheat and other grain or produce raised on" certain premises, held, that the description was too indefinite and uncertain, in that it did not appear where the crops were to be raised, and that even if it could be said to apply only to growing crops, it was insufficient because the year during which they were to be grown was not stated, and that in these respects the mortgage was not such as to put a subsequent mortgagee upon inquiry: Eggerl v. White, 59-464; Barr v. Cannon, 69-20.

33. A mortgage on crops to be sown or planted will not be deemed sufficient as against third persons unless the year or term within which the crops are to be grown is stated: Pennington v. Jones, 57-87.

34. A mortgage upon "all the crops raised by me in any part of Jones county for the term of three years," held too indefinite as against third persons: Muir v. Blake, 57-662.

35. A mortgage upon crops to be raised in the future for a certain year on certain land described is sufficient and will attach to such crops as soon as they come into existence: Wheeler v. Becker, 68-723.

36. Description too indefinite: The description of property as "one oscillating threshing machine, size 6, 30-inch cylinder, and also one Chicago Pitts, ten horse power," held, too indefinite and uncertain to be sustained as between the mortgagee and a creditor of the mortgagor who had attached the property: Hayes v. Wilcox, 61-732.

37. A chattel mortgage upon "sixty head of hogs" without other description, held, not to contain anything which would justify inquiry leading to the identification of the property, and therefore not sufficient notice, as recorded, to charge a subsequent purchaser of the property intended to be mortgaged: Everett v. Brown, 64-420.

38. Actual knowledge: Where it appears from the evidence that an attaching creditor and the officer levying the attachment had due notice of the mortgage prior to the levy, and intentionally levied on property included therein, the fact that the property is insufficiently described will be immaterial: Hall v. Ballou, 58-585.

39. Parol evidence: Where property intended to be covered by chattel mortgage is not so described as that it will, as a matter of law, constitute constructive notice of the mortgagee's rights, the mortgagee cannot recover possession of the property from one claiming under a subsequent mortgage unless he can show, and does show, by evidence aliunde the mortgage, that the property claimed is that mortgaged: Rowley v. Bartholomew, 87-874.

40. The description in a mortgage cannot be varied by parol evidence for the purpose of showing an intent on the part of the parties different from that shown by the mortgage itself: Lormer v. Allyn, 84-725.

41. As between the mortgagee and an attaching creditor it is not proper to receive parol evidence to vary the instrument by showing that the words "goods" and "stock" therein used were intended to include fixtures: Van Every v. Davis, 51-637.

42. Identification: In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage evidence may be introduced to identify the property as that described in the mortgage, although it has been removed or otherwise changed, without any allegation of such removal or change having been made: Odell v. Gallup, 62-253.

43. Extrinsic evidence is only admissible to identify the property covered by the mortgage when the mortgage suggests inquiry which will result in such identification: Ormsby v. Nolan, 69-130.

44. The question, whether the description is such as that the property intended to be covered could be identified therefrom, is one of fact to be determined by the jury: Peterson v. Foli, 67-402.

45. Description of indebtedness: A chattel mortgage to secure a certain sum "for or on account of advances made and money loaned by the party of the second part to" the mortgagor, "together with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the date of each several sum at divers times heretofore advanced by the said party on or before," etc., held, to sufficiently describe an indebtedness which it was given to secure, although such indebtedness consisted of several sums which, with interest, amounted to a few dollars more than the amount mentioned: Clark v. Hyman, 55-14.

46. Fixtures: As to whether a chattel mortgage, executed upon fixtures which are not severed from the realty in fact, will operate as a constructive severance, and pass the title in such fixtures to the grantee, quære; but the recording thereof will not impart to subsequent purchasers of the realty constructive notice of such incumbrance: Bringhoff v. Munzenmaier, 20-518.

Subject-matter; future acquisitions.

47. Where the owner of real property executes a mortgage upon chattels, which may properly be made fixtures, and subsequently affixes them to the realty, a person purchasing or acquiring a lien upon such real property with knowledge of the facts, takes subject to the mortgage; and held, that the mechanic who attached such fixtures to the realty was affected with notice by the recording of such chattel mortgage, and his lien was subject thereto: Sowden v. Craig, 26-156.

48. A chattel mortgage of certain machinery before it was placed in a mill, and which when so placed could be removed without material injury to the main building, held, not to be lost by such use of the property: First Nat. Bank v. Elmore, 52-541.

49. Where a chattel mortgage was given upon a mill separate from the land on which it was located, and afterward the land was conveyed to a party who had knowledge of the mortgage, held, that the purchaser was subject to the lien thereof: Greither v. Alexander, 15-470.

50. Natural increase: Where a mortgage upon two cows was duly recorded, no reference being made to their increase, held, that the mortgagee did not have a lien upon such increase which could be asserted as against a purchaser thereof in good faith, without notice, from the mortgagor in possession, after the increase had attained such age as to be independent of the dam: Winter v. Landphere, 42-471.

51. The chattel mortgagee having the right to possession under his mortgage of the property has also the right to possession of the natural increase of the property. Therefore, held, that, where a chattel mortgage was given upon mares, such mortgage covered foal from such mares until the colts were weaned or should be weaned according to the course of nature, or the usual custom of those raising horses: Rogers v. Highland, 69-504.

52. Future acquisitions: A railway company may mortgage future acquisitions: Dunham v. Isett, 15-284.

53. The future earnings of vessels and railroad companies, as well as property subsequently acquired, may be mortgaged, and such future earnings cannot be seized on execution by garnishment: Jessup v. Bridge, 11-572.

54. While a chattel mortgage may be made to cover future acquisitions, it is necessary that such provision be expressly made in the mortgage in order to hold such property, and if the mortgage refers to a stock of goods, scheduling and describing them, and not specifying future acquisitions, it will not be held to cover additions afterwards made: Phillips v. Both, 58-499.

55. Where the description in a mortgage of a stock of goods included "credits arising out of said business," held, that the mortgage only covered credits existing at the time of the execution of the mortgage and not those subsequently arising: Lormer v. Allyn, 64-725.

56. A chattel mortgage upon "all the stock that I may own during the existence of this mortgage," held sufficiently definite in description to be valid as to stock subsequently acquired: Hughes v. Wheeler, 66-641.

57. Although by strict common law rule a party could not mortgage property not in esse so as to vest the property in the mortgagee when it should come into existence, yet courts of equity, and, under our laws, courts of law, also, will recognize the rights of such mortgagee, and enforce them against all persons having notice of such rights, provided the property described is capable of identification: Scharfenburg v. Bishop, 35-60; Brown v. Allen, 35-806.

58. A mortgage drawn with the intention of covering future acquired property which is at the time in existence, but not the property of the mortgagor, will be valid as to such property when acquired: Hughes v. Wheeler, 66-641.

59. Future crops: The supreme court is not committed to the doctrine that a mortgage upon a crop to be planted and grown is valid as against a creditor of the mortgagor. Whether the rule which has been followed in case of additions to the stock of merchandise covered by a mortgage would be applicable in such cases, quære: Muir v. Blake, 57-662.

60. Before a mortgage on crops to be sown or planted can be regarded as valid against third persons, the year or term in which the crop is to be grown must be stated: Pennington v. Jones, 57-37.

61. A chattel mortgage providing that future acquired property shall be transferred thereby is valid, and such property upon its acquisition becomes subject thereto. The fact that the property is not in existence at the time of the execution of the mortgage will not defeat the notice imparted by such record, after the property comes into existence: Wheeler v. Becker, 68-723.

And as to sufficiency of description of crops, see supra, §§ 31-35.

62. Does not cover proceeds: A chattel mortgage does not cover the proceeds of goods rightfully sold in the ordinary course of trade: Lormer v. Allyn, 64-725.

63. One who receives money from a debtor believing it to be the proceeds of the sale of chattel property is under no obligation to ascertain whether such property is covered by mortgage, and cannot be held as trustee for a mortgagee of the property. If the fact of the existence of the mortgage were known, and the identical proceeds could be traced, a different question might arise: Burnett v. Gustafson, 54-86.

64. A chattel mortgage does not become a lien upon the proceeds of the sale of the property covered thereby, unless the circumstances are such that the mortgagee cannot follow the property. Whether, in case the mortgagee cannot follow the property, he has any remedy, quære: Waters v. Cass County Bank, 65-234.

65. A note given the mortgagor for the purchase price of property covered by chattel mortgage is not subject thereto, and will pass to a purchaser without notice free from any claim of the mortgagee: Kahler v. Hanson, 53-698.

III. VALIDITY AS TO THIRD PARTIES.

As to who are protected against an unrecorded mortgage or bill of sale, when the mortgagor or vendor retains possession, see RECORDING ACTS, III, d.

66. Change of possession:¹ A change in the "actual possession," which will be sufficient under the statute to render the mortgage valid as to third persons without recording, must be something to indicate the change of ownership; if the property be left with the seller, whose relations to it continue unchanged, so far as the world may know from the acts of the parties, the possession will be regarded as continuing in him: Boothby v. Brown, 40-104; Sutton v. Ballou, 46-517; Hickok v. Buell, 51-655; McAfee v. Busby, 69-828.

67. The use of the term "actual possession" implies that a change of possession sufficient to constitute a delivery and pass the property as between the parties may not be sufficient to impart notice to others. To take a case out of the statute, something must be done to impart such notice. Therefore, where there was a sale of a field of corn standing on the farm of the vendor, the vendee not taking immediate charge of the corn nor control of the field, held, that the vendor retained actual possession within the meaning of the section: Smith v. Champney, 50-174; Nuckolls v. Pence, 52-581.

68. There must be an actual change of possession: McKay v. Clapp, 47-418.

69. The statute requires such transfer of dominion over the property as to imply notice to persons dealing with reference to the property that the title has been transferred: or such possession as will put such persons in possession of facts leading to inquiry as to the ownership. The possession need not necessarily be such as to imply notice to the public generally, but is sufficient if it implies notice to those who intend to purchase the property or deal with reference to it: Deere v. Needles, 65-101.

70. Not necessary where property is in the hands of third persons: Where the property is not in the actual possession of the mortgagor or vendor, or in his custody so that there may be manual delivery, an actual delivery is not necessary to the validity of the transaction. If the property is placed in the power of the purchaser, that is sufficient: Barrows v. Harrison, 12-588.

¹ Code, § 1923. No sale or mortgage of personal property, where the vendor or mortgagor retains actual possession thereof, is valid against existing creditors or subsequent purchasers, without notice, unless a written instrument conveying the same is executed, acknowledged like conveyances of real estate, and filed for record with the recorder of the county where the holder of the property resides.

[As bills of sale as well as mortgages of chattels are covered by this provision, so that the same rule as to what is sufficient change of possession or recording, etc., is applicable in either case, all the decisions on that question are collected here.]

Validity as to third parties.

71. If the property at the time of the sale or mortgage is in the possession of a lessee, and remains in his possession, the vendor does not retain the "actual possession" of the property, so as to render recording necessary: Thomas v. Hillhouse, 17-67.

72. So held, also, where the goods were in the hands of a common carrier: Alsberg v. Latta, 80-442.

73. Where the property at the time of the sale is in the actual possession of a third person as lessee or the like, a sale without notice and without change of possession is valid, and it is wholly immaterial in such cases whether or not the owner has the right to the immediate possession: Campbell v. Hamilton, 68-293.

74. Where a landlord assigned his lease to his creditor, who thereupon became entitled to the landlord's share of the crops on the premises, held, such assignment was valid without record as to creditors and purchasers from the assignor without notice of the assignment, there being no retention of possession by the landlord: Lufkin v. Preston, 57-28.

75. Retention of possession by mortgagor not fraudulent: The retention of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor does not, as matter of law, render the mortgage fraudulent and void: Torbert v. Hayden, 11-435; Jessup v. Bridge, 11-572; Fromme v. Jones, 13-474; Wilhelmi v. Leonard, 13-330; Smith v. McLean, 24-322, 330.

76. Possession retained by vendor or mortgagor after recording the instrument is strictly lawful and not fraudulent or a badge of fraud, unless such retention is a part of the consideration of the sale: Jordan v. Lendrum, 55-478.

77. Under the statutory provisions as to recording, the mere retention of the possession of personal property by the mortgagor thereof, when the mortgage is duly recorded, is no longer either per se fraudulent or a badge of fraud in law, although it may be a circumstance with others to prove fraud in fact: Hughes v. Cory, 20-399.

78. The right given by statute to the mortgagor to retain possession of personal property implies the right to a reasonable use thereof, especially when the act of using does not necessarily consume it: Ibid.

79. Right to sell in ordinary course of trade: A chattel mortgage which contains a reservation by the mortgagor of the right to sell the mortgaged property in the usual course of retail trade, with an agreement to keep up the stock to its original value, and a reservation of the right to retain the avails of the sales under an agreement to apply a portion thereof to the payment of the mortgage, is not fraudulent per se, as a matter of law, and whether fraudulent in fact, or not, must be decided upon all the evidence: Ibid.; Meyer v. Gage, 65-606; Maish v. Bird, 22 Fed. Rep. 576.

80. Nor does the fact that the mortgage provides that the debtor shall remain in possession of the goods, receiving the proceeds and paying the same to the creditor's banker, render the mortgage void. Such fact might be considered in determining the question of fraud, but it is not fraud per se: Adler v. Clafin, 17-89.

81. The provision that the mortgagor shall have the right to retain possession and carry on the business in the usual retail way for one year, paying costs and expenses of running the business and keeping up the stock to about what it was at the time of the execution of the mortgage, held, not sufficient to render the mortgage fraudulent in law, although no provision was made for an application of the profits to the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. It might be otherwise if the mortgage should provide for sales that would exhaust the stock without any provision for such application: Jaffray v. Greenbaum, 64-492.

82. The fact that there is no agreement to account to the mortgagee for the proceeds of sales of the mortgaged property in the course of trade does not affect the validity of the mortgage: Clark v. Hyman, 55-14.

83. Reservation of the right to sell in the ordinary course of trade and apply the proceeds to the mortgagor's own use will not render the mortgage fraudulent in law: Sperry v. Ethridge, 63-543; Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

84. Nor will the fact that the chattel mortgage containing such agreement with reference to reservation of possession and right to sell in the ordinary course of trade and apply the proceeds to mortgagor's own use, if given after the mortgagor becomes insolvent, render the mortgage necessarily fraudulent: Sperry v. Ethridge, 63-543.

85. In the federal courts it is held that a mortgage of chattels which permits the mortgagor to remain in possession until default in payment of the debt secured, with power to sell the goods as theretofore, is fraudulent and void in law, and cannot be enforced by a court of equity. This being a matter outside the state statute, the decisions of the United States supreme court will be followed independent of the state decisions: Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 13; Wells v. Langbein, 20 Fed. Rep., 183.

86. Although the rule in the federal courts is that reservation by mortgagor of the right to sell in the usual course of trade renders the mortgage fraudulent and void as to creditors, yet a plaintiff who in proceedings in the federal courts levies upon such mortgaged property as that of the mortgagor, treating the mortgage as invalid, becomes liable in the state court to an action for trespass: Meyer v. Gage, 65-606.

87. Circumstances indicating fraud: The provisions as to application of the proceeds and the fact of insolvency may be considered as tending to prove that a mortgage reserving right of sale to mortgagor was executed with the intent to defraud or delay other creditors: Sperry v. Ethridge, 63-543.

88. The mere fact that creditors who are secured by chattel mortgages are intimate friends or relatives of the debtor does not necessarily show that their mortgages are fraudulent: Jafray v. Greenbaum, 64-492.

89. Fraud in fact: Compliance with the provisions of the recording acts does not preclude the transaction being attacked on the ground that it is actually fraudulent as against creditors: Singer v. Sheldon, 56-354.

90. If the parties to the mortgage have a fraudulent intent, in creating the loan, to hinder and delay other creditors, and thereby confer advantages upon the mortgagor which he would not otherwise possess, this will be a fraud in fact which will render the mortgage void. The fact of fraudulent intent must, however, be shown by extrinsic evidence and found by the verdict of the jury.

It cannot be inferred from the mere provisions of the mortgage: Torbert v. Hayden, 11-435.

91. If possession by mortgagor is accompanied by the power of disposition or use in any way inconsistent with the object of securing the rights of the mortgagee, that fact would be a badge of fraud, not absolute but prima facie, requiring explanation. Whether possession by the mortgagor with a right to deal with the property as his own is fraudulent constitutes a question of intent, and will depend entirely upon the circumstances explaining such acts of ownership: Ibid.

92. The fact that a chattel mortgage is filed for record by the mortgagor, if under circumstances showing good faith, is not evidence of fraud: Mason v. Franklin, 58-506.

93. The fact of a variance between the true consideration and that expressed in the instrument is at most but a badge of fraud, proper to be submitted to the consideration of the jury as a fact bearing upon the question of fraudulent intent: Ibid.

94. The fact that a mortgage is given by an insolvent person for more than is due, and that such insolvency is known to the mortgagee, is a badge of fraud but not conclusive: Wood v. Scott, 65-114.

95. That fact, however, casts on the mortgagee the burden of showing that the mortgage was executed in good faith, and for an honest purpose, and of satisfactorily explaining why the amount named was greater than the actual indebtedness: Lombard v. Dows, 66-243.

96. A chattel mortgage in a certain case, given by the debtor to his brother to secure existing indebtedness, held, not fraudulent as to other creditors: Clark v. Hyman, 55-14.

97. The burden of establishing the invalidity of the chattel mortgage is upon the one who opposes its enforcement. This may be done by showing either that the provisions of the mortgage are such as to prove that the parties thereto intended to commit a fraud upon the rights of others, or by showing that the acts of the parties have been such that fraud is the necessary inference: Maish v. Bird, 22 Fed. Rep., 576.

98. Delay in recording the mortgage was held to be sufficiently explained by the fact that the mortgagor was trying to secure a large loan in New York, and if successful in so doing was then to pay off the mortgage before it was put on record, the mortgage debt not being created by the mortgage but already existing: Ibid.

99. Failure to record a chattel mortgage taken on a stock of goods, whereby other creditors are misled to give the mortgagor a credit which does not belong to him, will invalidate the mortgage as against such creditors without notice: Simon v. Oppeheimer, 20 Fed. Rep., 553.

100. After an assignment by the debtor, such mortgagee is on a like footing with other creditors without notice, of a date prior to the recording of the mortgage: Rumsey v. Town, 20 Fed. Rep., 558.

101. The federal courts do not differ from the state courts in regard to the effect of the state statute, but even under the state decisions actual fraud, which may be inferred as matter of law from the facts of the case, including the provisions of the mortgage, will render it void. Delay of mortgagee to put his mortgage on record, or his allowing mortgagor to sell the property and apply the proceeds to his own use instead of reducing the mortgage debt, so as to defraud creditors, will constitute fraud such as to deprive the mortgagee of the priority of his claim: Lyon v. Council Bluffs Savings Bank, 29 Fed. Rep., 566.

Further as to recording, see RECORDING ACTS.

102. With notice: A chattel mortgagee having knowledge affecting him with notice of the ownership of the property by a third person cannot assert his claims as against the rights of such third person: Bray v. Flickinger, 69-167.

103. Actual notice of a mortgage void for uncertainty will not affect a person with liens or claims thereunder: Barr v. Cannon, 69-20.

Further as to NOTICE, see that title.

104. Conflict of laws; mortgage in another state: In determining the validity of a chattel mortgage made in another state upon property in that state, the courts will follow the interpretation which the courts of that state give to its statutes in relation to the validity of such mortgages: Fisher v. Friedman, 47-443.

105. A mortgage of personal property, properly executed and recorded in another state where the property is, has the same force when the property is removed to this state as under the laws of the state where executed, and will be enforced here, and the possession of the property by the mortgagor beyond the time stipulated, against the consent of the mortgagee, and in spite of his efforts to recover it, will not defeat his rights thereto: Simms v. McKee, 25-341.

106. Consideration; antecedent debt: A mortgage given to secure an antecedent debt is not without consideration as between the parties, even though no extension of time or other new consideration is given, and it will be valid as against a subsequent assignment for the benefit of creditors and claims asserted thereunder: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

107. Where at the time of the contracting of a debt an agreement is made to give security therefor by chattel mortgage upon specified property upon the happening of a contingency, the mortgage executed upon the happening of such contingency will be supported by a sufficient consideration: In re Assignment of Guyer, 69-585.

As to when a chattel mortgage will be deemed void as constituting a portion of a general assignment not for the equal benefit of creditors, see ASSIGNMENT, V.

IV. RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

a. Nature of respective interests.

108. Security: A chattel mortgage is but a security for a debt: Torbert v. Hayden, 11-435.

109. The legal title, so far as it is in the mortgagee, exists for the purpose of enabling him to enforce his lien; the ownership remains in the mortgagor. So held, where it was sought, in an action to recover for a loss under an insurance policy, to defend on the ground that the policy, containing a clause that it should be void if insured was not "the sole and unconditional owner" of the property, was avoided by the fact that the property was covered by a chattel mortgage at the time that the policy was issued: Hubbard v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 83-825, 833, 841.

Nature of respective interests.

110. Possession after condition broken: Personal property becomes vested in the mortgagee in possession, upon failure of the mortgagor to perform the conditions of the mortgage: Talbot v. De Forest, 8 G. Gr., 586.

111. Mortgagor's interest not subject to levy: The mortgagee has the title and right of possession, subject to be divested only on performance of the condition, and the mortgagor has therefore no interest in the property which can be seized and sold under execution: Campbell v. Leonard, 11-489; Gordon v. Hardin, 33-550; Vanslyck v. Mills, 34-375; Porter v. Knight, 63-365.

112. Nor is such interest subject to levy under attachment: Wells v. Sabelowitz, 68-223.

113. The reason of holding that the interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property cannot be levied on and sold under execution is not that he has no interest therein which could be appropriated in satisfaction of his debts, but that the statutes of the state have made no provision under which his interest can be appropriated to that object by judicial sale: Ibid.

114. If mortgagee has the right to take possession, he may do so even after levy, and leave no interest in the mortgagor subject to levy: Wells v. Chapman, 59-658.

115. Where a contract creating a lien carries with it the right to take possession, if, in the exercise of this right, possession is taken forcibly and by violence, the mortgagee may be liable for the injury done in thus taking possession, but not for the value of the property taken in accordance with the terms of the agreement for the lien: Brown v. Allen, 25-306.

116. Where the mortgagor of chattels is in possession and has the right to possession of the mortgaged property for a definite period, his interest prior to the expiration of such period is the subject of levy and sale. But it is otherwise when the mortgagee may take possession at his pleasure, or where the mortgagor's right of possession is for no definite time: Rindskoff v. Lyman, 16-260.

[The rule is now changed by 21 G. A., ch. 117.]

117. Action by mortgagor for wrongful seizure: The mortgagor of exempt personal property may maintain an action for damages where the same has been wrongfully seized and sold upon execution: Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63-204.

118. The fact that the legal title is deemed to have passed to the mortgagee will not prevent such action by the mortgagor as against third persons wrongfully interfering with the property in his hands: Ibid.

119. There is no presumption from the mere fact that a chattel mortgage has been given that the mortgagor is divested of the right to the property covered by it, but that question is to be determined by the stipulations contained in the instrument. Even where the right of possession passes to the mortgagee, the mortgagor retains the right of redemption and the ownership until they are extinguished by the foreclosure of the mortgage; and as against all the world except the mortgagee, or those claiming under him, the mortgagor is entitled to possession, and may maintain an action of replevin as against a person not claiming under the mortgage: Goldsmith v. Willson, 67-662.

120. Assignment of mortgagor's right: An assignment by the mortgagor passes to the assignee the interests of such mortgagor in the property, and the assignee may maintain the same action for recovery of possession as against any one not holding under the mortgage which the mortgagor might have maintained: Ibid.

121. The equity of redemption of the mortgagor of personal property after condition broken is subject to sale or transfer as other property, and passes under a general assignment. After such general assignment the assignee is not subject to garnishment in a suit against the mortgagor: Gimble v. Ferguson, 53-414.

122. Where, by agreement between mortgagor, mortgagee and an attaching creditor, it was agreed that the mortgaged property be sold in bulk, and the proceeds, after satisfying the mortgage, be applied upon the attachment, held, that this agreement transferred the mortgagor's equity of redemption and took priority over a subsequent attachment of such proceeds by another creditor: Phelps v. Winters, 59-561.

123. Possession by mortgagee: If possession is rightfully taken under a chattel mortgage, failure to sell the property cannot make it wrongful: Bradley v. Redmond, 42-452.

Respective interests.—Priority of lien.

124. If the mortgagee has a right to possession, he is not bound to proceed by replevin; but, after demand, may bring action for damages: Tieman v. Haw, 49-312.

125. Where the mortgagee seeks to recover possession of the property by virtue of his mortgage, he must recover on the strength of his own right to the property, and, in the absence of such right, cannot recover the property on the ground that the defendant is a mere trespasser: Eggert v. White, 59-464.

126. If the mortgagee, having the right under the mortgage to take possession, advertise and sell, does actually take possession, the owner cannot maintain an action for the recovery of the property on account of failure to advertise or account for the surplus; his remedy is to redeem, or by some proper proceeding compel sale according to the terms of the mortgage: Whitaker v. Sigler, 44-419.

127. Sale: A mortgage of chattels with power of sale confers no right upon the mortgagee to exchange the mortgaged property for other property, and the effect of such a transaction would be merely to transfer to the vendee the lien held by the mortgagee: Edwards v. Cottrell, 43-194.

128. A chattel mortgage invests the mortgagee with the title to the property, which can only be defeated by a compliance with the conditions of the mortgage, and upon a failure to comply with those conditions, the mortgagee becomes the absolute owner. If a sale is made in good faith, and in conformity with the provisions of the mortgage, it passes the absolute title to the purchaser, although he may be the mortgagee: Bean v. Barney, 10-498.

129. Where, under a power of sale in a chattel mortgage, the mortgaged property was sold by one of the mortgagees, as auctioneer, to a brother of his co-mortgagee and partner, for about one-sixth of its cost, held, that the purchaser took the property subject to the equity or right of redemption in the mortgagor or junior mortgagee: Alger v. Furlley, 19-518.

130. Where property covered by a chattel mortgage containing a power of sale has been sold in such a manner that practical certainty as to the proceeds is not attainable, a court of equity will not ordinarily enter into the field of speculation or probabilities to ascertain the measure of damages, when a reasonably certain measure is presented by the positive evidence in the case: Ibid.

131. The mortgagee is not chargeable with the expense of the return of the property to the mortgagor, after it has been taken possession of by the mortgagee for the particular purpose of subjecting it to the payment of mortgage indebtedness: Campbell v. Wheeler, 69-588.

132. Garnishment of mortgagee: A mortgagor of personal property has a right to redeem, even after condition broken, and the mortgagee, although in possession after such breach, is liable to garnishment by creditors of mortgagor for any surplus remaining in his hands, in case of a sale of the property, beyond what is necessary to pay his claim: Doane v. Garretson, 24-351.

133. A mortgagee of personal property not in possession is not liable to garnishment for such property, or the amount by which the value thereof exceeds his claim: Curtis v. Raymond, 29-52; First Nat. Bank v. Perry, 29-266; Fountain v. Smith, 70—.

b. Priority of lien.

134. Over vendor: The mortgagee of chattel property acquires a superior lien over that of the vendor thereof for purchase money, whose lien is not reduced to writing and recorded: Manny v. Woods, 83-265.

135. Purchase price of seed: The fact that of two mortgages given upon crops to be grown in the future the second one is for the purchase price of the seed will not entitle it to priority over the first: Bradley v. Gelkinson, 57-300.

136. Over landlord's lien: The lien of a landlord upon chattel property of his tenant used on the leased premises is inferior to that of a mortgage thereon, executed and recorded prior to the execution of the lease, even though the mortgagee knowingly permits the property to be used on the leased premises: Jarchow v. Pickens, 51-381.

137. Possession of junior mortgagee: The fact that a senior mortgagee allows a junior mortgagee to proceed to take possession of the property and incur expenses in caring for and disposing of it will not estop such senior mortgagee from asserting his prior lien, if his mortgage is properly recorded and the junior mortgagee has knowledge thereof: Bradley v. Gelkinson, 57-800.

138. An officer who has wrongfully seized mortgaged property in the possession of a junior mortgagee cannot defend against an action by such mortgagee on the ground that a senior mortgagee is entitled to possession. The rights of the junior mortgagee in possession are good against all the world except the senior mortgagee: Sperry v. Ethridge, 70—.

139. Where A. agrees with two persons, B. and C., that he will give each a mortgage upon his stock of goods to cover money borrowed from these persons, and both B. and C. are ignorant that A. owes any one but themselves, A. will have the right to give B. the preference, and the first mortgage recorded by A. in favor of B. will be valid and binding, and cannot be set aside by C., because he did not know that he was getting a second mortgage, nor that A. had acted as he agreed to do and given B. a mortgage and recorded it: Capital City Bank v. Hodgin, 24 Fed. Rep., 1.

140. Lien cannot be extended: The mortgagee cannot extend his mortgage to the protection of other creditors against a subsequent mortgagee without notice of the claims attempted to be thus protected: Hunt v. Daniels, 15-146.

141. Where the mortgagor caused a third person to bid in the property for him at the sale under the mortgage, and repaid to such purchaser the amount of his bid with money borrowed on a new chattel mortgage of the property, held, that the whole transaction amounted merely to an extinguishment of the original mortgage, revesting mortgagor with the title, and that the new mortgage was subject to another mortgage which was junior to the original mortgage but prior in time to the new one: Kemerer v. Bloom, 65-363.

142. Priority over claim of vendee before delivery: Where a manufacturer of buggies made a chattel mortgage upon buggies in his possession not quite finished, held, that the mortgagee acquired thereby a prior claim to that of the person for whom one of the buggies was being manufactured, and who had advanced the purchase price thereof, the chattel mortgagee having notice that the buggy was being manufactured for such person but not that the price had been paid: Hesser v. Wilson, 86-152.

143. Release; duress: In a particular case, held, that the release of a chattel mortgage did not appear to be executed under fraud and duress in such manner as to entitle it to priority over a mortgage executed after such release and intended by the party making the release to be thus given priority: Wood v. Wood, 61-256.

144. Confusion of goods: Where it appears that some of the property included in the mortgage is still in the possession of mortgagor, and it does not appear what, if any, goods have been added to the stock, or the value thereof, the mortgagee will be entitled to priority, it being impossible to say that there are any goods which the mortgage does not cover: Odell v. Gallup, 62-253.

145. Priority over assignment: If a mortgage is given in good faith, neither the assignee of the mortgagor for the benefit of creditors nor the creditors can assert any matter of defense against it which the mortgagor could not have asserted if the assignment had not been made. Such parties have no rights or equities in matters anterior to the assignment, and the assignee is vested with only such interest as the mortgagor had in the property at the time of the assignment, and the creditors for whose benefit the assignment was made can have no higher interest than that: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

146. Rights of assignee of mortgage: Where the purchaser of chattel property covered by a mortgage given to secure a number of notes took with the assurance on the part of the owner that certain of those notes held by a third party were all that remained unpaid, and the mortgage was subsequently released by the mortgagee on the payment of said notes, held, that an assignee of other such notes which had not in fact been paid was not precluded from enforcing them against the property: Martindale v. Burch, 57-291.

147. Taxes not being a lien upon personal property before distraint, a mortgagee who takes possession of mortgaged property and sells it before it is seized for taxes has a prior claim on the proceeds over the claim of the county for taxes against the mortgagor: Maish v. Bird, 22 Fed. Rep., 180.

148. Discharge of lien: The renewal of a note secured by a mortgage does not operate as a discharge of the mortgage, and the execution of a second mortgage to secure the indebtedness does not discharge the first unless by agreement of the parties: Hoffman v. Wilhelm, 63-510.

149. It is a general rule that a purchase by the mortgagee of the mortgaged property does not operate as an extinguishment of the mortgage, when it is the intention to keep the mortgage alive and it is the interest of the mortgagee to keep it alive, and it can be done without prejudice to the rights of the mortgagee or third persons; but such rule has no application to voluntary surrender or discharge of the mortgage, even though procured by fraud: Ibid.

150. Where a creditor was induced to surrender a chattel mortgage securing his claim, and rely upon a levy of attachment upon the same property, but subsequent to other levies, held, that misrepresentations as to the value of the goods would not be sufficient to render such discharge void, and the mortgagee could not afterwards claim priority over the other attachments by reason of his mortgage: Ibid.

V. FORECLOSURE.

151. By sale: In a particular case, held, that the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage in which the sale was in accordance with the agreement between the parties, was valid, no want of good faith on the part of the mortgagee being shown: Gear v. Schrei, 57-666.

152. A mortgagee does not lose his lien upon the property by consenting to the sale thereof by the mortgagor to a purchaser who agrees to pay the portion of the mortgage due, and the mortgage may be enforced against a second purchaser having due notice of the mortgage, although he had no knowledge of the agreement of his vendor to pay the same: Oswald v. Hayes, 42-104.

153. A party claiming to hold a prior incumbrance should be allowed, on application, to be made a party to the foreclosure: Parrott v. Hughes, 10-459.

154. Where a part of the chattels included in the chattel mortgage have been sold, it seems that the purchaser may require the balance of the property to be exhausted before taking the part sold, but he cannot require the mortgagee to foreclose his mortgage before it is due; and where he complains of negligence of the mortgagee in allowing his property to escape, he must show, in order to entitle himself to relief, that such property would have been sufficient to satisfy the mortgage: High v. Brown, 46-259.

155. Contesting sale: After a transfer of the cause to court by injunction or otherwise as authorized by Code, § 3317, in case it is sought to contest the right to foreclose, the case stands as a foreclosure in court, and where usury is made to appear, a judgment of forfeiture in favor of the school fund may be rendered: Hanlin v. Parsons, 33-207.

156. The injunction is not to issue as a matter of right where it is not necessary to protect the rights of parties interested, and they have already adopted another proceeding affording a full and complete remedy: Sweet v. Oliver, 56-744.

157. This provision does not prevent one whose property is seized without shadow of right, upon the pretense that it is covered by the mortgage (as where it has been, by valid agreement, released from the mortgage at the time of its purchase from the mortgagor), from bringing an action at law to recover the property: Black v. Howell, 56-630.

158. Personal judgment: The mortgagee is not precluded from recovery upon the mortgage debt because he permits the property covered by the mortgage to be sold for an inferior claim or lien: Jones v. Turck, 33-246.

159. If, in the foreclosure proceeding, any property be sold not covered by the mortgage, no title will pass by such sale, and therefore injunction cannot be maintained by a junior mortgagee to restrain the foreclosure of a senior mortgage upon property which it is claimed is not covered thereby: Rankin v. Rankin, 67-322.

160. Under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that a sale under mortgage was valid, and that the fact that the property was by a previous appraisal higher than by a subsequent one under which it was sold, was not evidence of fraud: Tootle v. Taylor, 64-629.

Miscellaneous.

161. A sale made under power to sell given by the mortgage, without the posting of notices as required by law, will not be invalid in such sense that it will not confer title upon the purchaser, but it will pass a perfect title to the property and the mortgagor will be divested of his right and interest in it: Campbell v. Wheeler, 69-588.

162. Redemption by creditor: A creditor of the mortgagor may, before forfeiture, pay the mortgage debt and levy upon the property, or, if a forfeiture has taken place, he may tender the amount, and, if refused, go into chancery to redeem at any time before the equity of redemption has been barred by foreclosure, or he may garnish the mortgagee for the value of the property in excess of the debt secured: Torbert v. Hayden, 11-435.

163. When the debt secured by the mortgage is entirely paid off by a sale of a portion of the property sufficient to pay the debt and all costs connected with the sale, the right to possession of the unsold portion of the property ceases to exist either at law or in equity against the mortgagor or his assignee: Landis v. Abrahams, 11-284.

164. In equity: A chattel mortgage may also be foreclosed by an action in equity: Packard v. Kingman, 11-219.

any of the police regulations of the city: Bowlin v. Lyon, 67-536. (But see 20 G. A., ch. 105, which now forbids the denial to any citizen of the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, etc., of inns, public conveyances, theaters, and other places of amusement.)

CODE.

See STATUTES.

COMMON LAW.

1. In Iowa: By the ordinance of 1787 the benefits of the common law were extended to the territory northwest of the Ohio river, and the court can therefore take judicial notice of the fact that the common law exists in the states formed out of such territory: Holmes v. Mallett, Mor., 82.

2. The common law was substituted for the civil in the territory of Missouri, of which the state of Iowa was once a part: O'Ferrall v. Simplot, 4-381.

3. Moreover, the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory made the common law the law of that country, and such ordinance extended over Wisconsin, and the laws of Wisconsin were extended over Iowa: Ibid.

4. Moreover, so many rights and titles, so great interests, have grown up, by and under the common law, that it would be the duty of the court to hold that the people brought it with them: Ibid.

5. Early English statutes: Although by the act of 1840 it was provided that "no statutes of Great Britain shall be considered as law of this territory," held, that the term "statutes of Great Britain" applied only to statutes passed subsequently to the union of England and Scotland in 1707, and not to English statutes modifying the common law passed previous to that time: Ibid.

6. The statute of 27 Elizabeth, designed to protect subsequent good faith purchasers of real estate against fraudulent or collusive transfers, has never been re-enacted in this state, but, as it antedates the settlement of this country, it is part of our unwritten law: Gardner v. Cole, 21-205.

How far applicable.—Conveyance of real property.

7. As to crimes: Although there is no statute declaring the common law in force in this state, it is to be deemed in force without such statutory declaration; so it is held in regard to common law definition of crimes the punishment of which is provided for by statute: State v. Twogood, 7-252.

8. While the statute does not expressly adopt or repeal the common law, yet its principles are recognized in the Code as well as by our courts and are made the rules of decision both in civil and criminal cases: Estes v. Carter, 10-400.

9. How far applicable: While the common law is in force in this state, it is to be regarded as in force only so far as it is applicable to the habits and condition of our society and in harmony with the genius and spirit of our institutions; and in determining whether a particular principle harmonizes with the spirit of our institutions, we must look to the habits and condition of the society which has created and lived under these institutions. In determining whether a particular rule of the unwritten law is applicable, the court is not confined alone to considering whether it is or is not agreeable to our peculiar form of government: Wagner v. Bisell, 3-306.

10. Therefore, held, that the common law rule requiring the owner of cattle to keep them upon his own premises under penalty of being answerable in damages for injuries arising from their running at large, is not conformable to the wants, condition and situation of the people of the state, and, although not expressly abrogated by legislation upon the subject, is not in force: Ibid.

11. Under the same principle, held, that the statute de donis, being in its objects entirely foreign to the genius and policy of our institutions, is not in force in this state as a part of the common law: Pierson v. Lane, 60-60.

12. Abrogation: When the legislature has undertaken to legislate upon a subject by legal enactment, the common law is abrogated as far as applicable to such cases: State v. McGrew, 11-112; Hamilton v. Schoenberger, 47-385.

13. Presumption: The presumption is that a rule of law will be the same in another state as in this state: Leiber v. Union Pacific R. Co., 49-688.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. Conveyance of real property: The validity of transfers of real property is to be determined by the law of the place where the property is situated: Loving v. Pairo, 10-282; Doyle v. McGuire, 38-410.

2. This rule is applicable not only to the manner or form of conveyances affecting land, but to the rights of the parties thereto and their capacity to contract. Therefore, held, that a conveyance of land to the wife, made in Pennsylvania as a satisfaction or security for money advanced to the husband, must be construed in accordance with the laws of Iowa, where the land was situated: Doyle v. McGuire, 38-410.

3. General assignment: The validity of a general assignment, as affecting real property, is to be determined by the law of the place where the property is situated: Loving v. Pairo, 10-282; Moore v. Church, 70—.

4. Devise: The law of the place where the property is situated governs as to the validity of a devise of real property: Lynch v. Miller, 54-516; Ware v. Wisner, 4 McCrary, 66.

5. Law of the forum; set-off: The law of the place of suit governs in regard to matters pertaining to the remedy. Therefore, the question of set-off is to be determined by the law of the forum and not that of the place of contract: Savary v. Savary, 3-271.

6. Release: The effect of the release of one partner upon the liability of a copartner is to be determined by the law of the place of suit and not by that of the place where it was made: Seymour v. Butler, 8-304.

7. Remedy; appraisement: The remedy is to be administered according to the law of the place where the action is enforced. Therefore, held, that the appraisement laws of the state where the property was situated were to be applied, and not those of the place where the contract was made: Shaffer v. Bolander, 4 G. Gr., 201.

Place of contract.—What constitutes.

8. Law of place of contract: Where a sale and delivery of goods took place in one state and notes in payment therefor were executed by the buyer at his place of residence in another state, and forwarded to the seller, held, that the place of sale and delivery, and not the place of executing the notes, was the place of contract: Whitlock v. Workman, 15-351.

9. The law of the place where the contract is made governs in enforcing and expounding it, unless the parties provide for its execution elsewhere, when the law of the latter place controls: Arnold v. Potter, 22-194.

10. If the contract is made in one place to be executed in another, the parties may stipulate by which law it shall be governed, and as to the rate of interest, etc.: Ibid.

11. Garnishment in another state: When debtor and creditor are both residents of this state the former may have an injunction against the latter to restrain him from proceeding by garnishment in another state to subject to the payment of his claim an indebtedness due to the debtor in this state and exempt under the laws of this state: Teager v. Landsley, 69-725; Hager v. Adams, 70—.

12. Penal laws: The courts will not enforce the penal laws of another state, but a law of such state providing for the forfeiture of interest in case of usurious contracts is enforceable: Arnold v. Potter, 22-194.

13. Action for injury causing death: The right of action for an injury causing death exists only by reason of the law of the place of injury: Hyde v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 61-441.

And further, see ACTIONS, §§ 80-88.

14. Contract of common carriers: Where there is a conflict of laws applicable to the case, the parties are presumed to have made part of their agreement that law which is most favorable to its validity and performance: Talbot v. Merchants' Dispatch, etc., Co., 41-247.

15. A contract of affreightment made in another state, for transportation of goods from a point in that state to a point in this state, will be recognized by our courts if valid where made, although it would be void if executed and to be performed here; at least this is true in an action in the courts of this state for the loss accruing under such contract in an intermediate state in which the contract would also be recognized as valid: Ibid.

Presumptions: That the law of another state, when it is called in question, if not shown by evidence, will be presumed to be the same as the law of this state, see EVIDENCE, §§ 563-566.

Lex loci, as affecting BILLS AND NOTES, see that title, §§ 47-53.

As affecting CHATTEL MORTGAGES, see that title, §§ 104, 105.

As affecting CONTRACTS, see that title, §§ 437-441.

CONSPIRACY.

1. What constitutes: Allegations that parties conspired together to do a malicious act cannot alone make a cause of action for damages where nothing unlawful has been done: McHenry v. Sneer, 56-649.

2. A conspiracy cannot be made the subject of a civil action unless something is done which, without the conspiracy, would give a right of action: Jayne v. Drorbaugh, 68-711.

3. Participation: It is not a sufficient defense to a charge of conspiracy to show that the participation of the party was not necessary to the accomplishment of the purpose, and that it would have been consummated if he had not been a conspirator. He is to be held responsible for the natural and ordinary results of his acts, and if they were such as to naturally and ordinarily produce the unlawful result aimed at, he should be held responsible: Green v. Cochran, 43-544.

4. In an action for malicious prosecution, held, that the fact that defendants contributed money to the association of which they were members, for the purpose of prosecuting horse thieves, and that such money was expended in the prosecution of the plaintiff, was not sufficient to render the defendants liable for malicious prosecution unless they aided in the action of the association in making such expenditures: Johnson v. Miller, 63-529.

I. PROVISIONS FOR PROTECTION OF PERSON AND PROPERTY.

a. Due process of law.

1. What constitutes: The rule in respect to due process of law, stated in a general way, is that every one is entitled to the protection of those fundamental principles of truth and justice which lie at the basis of all our civil and political institutions: Trustees of Griswold College v. Davenport, 65-633.

2. Due process of law means in the due course of legal proceedings according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights. It was intended thereby to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice: Foule v. Mann, 53-42.

3. Therefore, held, that the statutory provision limiting the remedy against a sheriff for wrongful levy to a recovery on the indemnity bond given by the plaintiff in execution was void in so far as it defeated the right of the person whose property was illegally taken to sue for the specific recovery thereof: Ibid.

4. The statute requiring that before action can be brought against an officer for wrongful levy of a writ of execution upon property of a person other than the one against whom the writ is directed, notice of the rights of such owner must be given to the officer in writing, is not unconstitutional as depriving the party of his property without due process of law: Cheadle v. Guittar, 68-680.

5. A person may be deprived of property by his own negligence. Also lapse of time may prevent recovery by reason of the statute of limitations, and existing remedies may be taken away and new ones given, all without infringement of due process of law: Ibid.

6. The meaning of the phrases, "due process of law," "due course of law," and "course of the common law," discussed: Mason v. Messenger, 17-261.

7. Partition proceedings: Judgment in proceedings for partition of property, brought against a defendant served by publication only, held not void as depriving the defendant of his property without the benefit of judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law: Ibid.

8. The provisions authorizing a sale of property in a partition suit when division thereof cannot be made are not unconstitutional as depriving the party of his property without due process of law. When parties

by contract assume the relation of tenants in common, the law fixes their respective rights, one of which is that the property may be divided, and, if necessary, sold to effect that object: Metcalf v. Hoopingardner, 45-510.

9. The provisions of certain statutes of the territories of Iowa and Wisconsin providing a method for partition of a tract of land, known as the "half-breed tract," held, unconstitutional as providing for proceedings to determine private rights in a method not in accordance with due course of law: Reed v. Wright, 2 G. Gr., 15.

10. Proceedings in rem against lost goods and property, and against stray animals and against unknown owners of property, have been too long sanctioned to be now called in question as not being due process of law: Kinney v. Roe, 70—.

11. Claim for improvements on land: A statutory provision allowing a money judgment for the value of improvements to be rendered against the owner of the land in proceedings under the occupying claimant law, held, unconstitutional as not constituting due process of law: Childs v. Shower, 18-261.

12. A statute giving to any one who drains mineral land, even though without consent of the owner, one-tenth of the mineral taken therefrom, held, not unconstitutional as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law: Ahern v. Dubuque, etc., Mining Co., 48-140.

13. The short foreclosure of mortgages on real property by notice and sale without action in court as at one time allowed, held, unconstitutional as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law: Thatcher v. Haun, 12-303.

14. But, under the constitution of 1846, which did not contain the clause relating to due process of law, held, that such a proceeding was not unconstitutional: Boyd v. Ellis, 11-97.

15. A proceeding in equity should be classed as due process of law: McLane v. Leicht, 69-401.

16. Taxation: The state has the taxing power, and where property is taken in the valid exercise of that power, the owner is not deprived of it without due process of law: Allen v. Armstrong, 16-508.

17. But there are indispensable prerequisites to the exercise of the power which cannot be omitted without violating the constitutional provision as to due process of law: Ibid.

18. Therefore, held, that the statute making a tax deed conclusive of the regularity of all prior proceedings was unconstitutional: McCready v. Sexton, 29-356, 390.

19. Due process of law means ordinary judicial proceedings in court and has no reference whatever to the taxing power. Where property is taken in the due exercise of that power, it is not taken without due process of law: Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30-9.

20. Therefore, held, that the constitutional provision was not violated by a law authorizing local taxes in aid of railways: Ibid.

Further, as to constitutional power of taxation, see infra, §§ 221-251.

21. Eminent domain: A party cannot complain that his property has been taken for public use without due process of law when it has been taken for a highway by proper proceedings and his claim for damages has been disallowed and he has not taken the proper steps to have the disallowance corrected on appeal: Tharp v. Witham, 65-566.

And further as to taking private property for public use, see infra, I, h.

22. Contempt: A person cannot be imprisoned in pursuance of an order of the court in an investigation authorized by statute, but unusual or unheard of at common law or in the known and regular course of the administration of the law through courts of justice: Ex parte Grace, 12-208.

23. But the power to punish for contempt without the intervention of a jury is not in violation of due process of law: Ibid.

24. Under the chancery practice, as it existed at the time the constitution was adopted, a person could be deprived of his liberty or his property, and such deprivation has always been regarded as having been accomplished by due process of law, although no jury trial was allowed. Therefore, held, that a statutory provision not in accord with the common law, but more nearly like the proceeding in chancery, by which a debtor may be subjected to examination as to whether he has property, not exempt from execution, liable to the satisfaction of an execution against him, and may be imprisoned for contempt in not turning over such property to apply on such indebtedness under order of the court, was not in violation of the requirements of due process of law: Eikenberry v. Edwards, 67-619.

Due process of law.— Trial by jury.

25. Imprisonment for contempt for the violation of an injunction against maintaining a nuisance is not involuntary servitude, within the prohibition of the constitution: Martin v. Blattner, 68-286.

26. License: A permit to sell intoxicating liquors for lawful purposes, granted in pursuance of statutory provisions not requiring the payment of any compensation for such privilege, is not property in such sense that the party having the permit cannot be deprived thereof without due process of law: State v. Schmidt, 65-556.

27. Other cases: A statute authorizing double damages in an action against a railway company for stock killed through failure of the company to maintain a fence along its track does not interfere with the constitutional protection to property nor deprive the company of its property without due process of law: Mackie v. Central R. of Iowa, 54-540.

28. Proceedings by fence-viewers being provided for by statute in the exercise of the authority of the legislature to provide special tribunals to determine the rights of the parties under proper rules applicable thereto, such provisions are not unconstitutional although they may operate to deprive the party of his property without the intervention of judicial proceedings or without allowing him a trial in court upon the facts passed upon by such fence-viewers: McKeever v. Jenks, 59-800.

29. The provisions of the amendment to the federal constitution guaranteeing due process of law, etc., have no application to the state courts except as expressly so provided, but, in the absence of such express provision, are merely restrictions upon the federal government: Boyd v. Ellis, 11-97.

b. Trial by jury.

30. What constitutes: The right of trial by jury implies a trial by jury of twelve men except where the constitution authorizes trial by a less number: Santo v. State, 2-165.

31. The jury contemplated by the constitution is the jury recognized by the common law, which is constituted of twelve persons, and the legislature has no authority, in providing for jury trial under the constitution, to provide for a less number than twelve jurors. Therefore, held, that Code, § 2793, authorizing a verdict by ten or eleven jurors, when the jury has been reduced to that number by sickness, is unconstitutional: Eshelman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 67-296; Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68-137.

32. It is immaterial that the party complaining of the illegality of the jury is a municipal corporation. Although it may be that such a corporation has no constitutional right to jury trial, yet the statute does not profess to make any special provisions for such cases: Kelsh v. Dyersville, 68-137.

33. Less than twelve jurors in inferior courts: As the constitution provides for a trial by a less number of jurors than twelve in inferior courts, and gives such inferior courts jurisdiction of offenses of an inferior grade, a trial in such a court of an offense within its jurisdiction by a jury of less than twelve is not a violation of the right of jury trial: Bryan v. State, 4-349.

34. If, in the inferior tribunal, a party has a trial before the constitutional jury provided for such court, though of less than twelve men, he cannot, of right, claim in the face of the statute a second trial on the merits on appeal to the district court: Des Moines v. Layman, 21-153.

35. A defendant accused of an offense triable under the provisions of the constitution before a justice of the peace by a jury of less than twelve cannot complain of being deprived of the right of jury trial, even though he is not allowed the right of trial by jury on appeal to the district court: Baurose v. State, 1-374.

36. The right to one jury trial is all that is guaranteed, and that is preserved by allowing an appeal to the district court, where the cause is to be tried anew by a jury: Zelle v. McHenry, 51-572; State v. Beneke, 9-208.

37. Ordinance of 1787: In so far as the constitution of the state modifies the common law right of trial by jury and authorizes trial by a jury of less than twelve in inferior courts, it is an alteration of the provision for jury trial found in the ordinance of 1787. The admission of the state under the constitution adopted by it amounted to an abrogation by mutual consent of the provisions of that ordinance in conflict therewith: Higgins v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 60-50.

38. In equity cases: The right of trial by jury does not obtain in cases which are of equitable cognizance: State v. Orwig, 25-280.

39. As cases of mutual account are subjects of equitable jurisdiction, it is not unconstitutional to provide for a compulsory reference in such cases: Burt v. Harrah, 65-643.

40. The provisions of the prohibitory liquor law, allowing an injunction against persons engaged in the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, are not unconstitutional as depriving defendant of the right of trial by jury. Such cases being of equitable cognizance at the time of the adoption of the constitution, and the court of equity having jurisdiction at that time to abate a nuisance, it is within the power of the legislature to enlarge the jurisdiction of the court of equity in such cases so as to allow that remedy even where property rights are involved: Littleton v. Fritz, 65-488; Martin v. Blattner, 68-286.

41. So, the right of trial by jury is not impaired by the provision that foreclosure of mortgages shall be by equitable proceedings, and that in the same action a recovery may be had on the note secured by the mortgage: Clough v. Seay, 49-111.

42. Trial de novo on appeal: By virtue of the constitutional provisions as to jury trial, and as to method of appeal in suits in equity, every party has a right either to a trial by jury or to a trial de novo on appeal: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

43. References: Any provision authorizing the reference of questions of fact in actions by ordinary proceedings, without the consent of both parties, would be in violation of the right of jury trial: McMartin v. Bingham, 27-234; Blair Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Walker, 50-376.

44. Judgment on stay bond: The statutory provision giving to a stay bond the effect of a judgment confessed against the parties thereto is not objectionable as denying them the right of trial, or depriving them of property without due process of law. The bond amounts to a waiver of the privilege which it is competent for them to make: Cavender v. Smith's Heirs, 5-157.

45. Appraisement of property taken for public use: The appraisers appointed to assess damages resulting to a land owner from the establishment of a highway are not a jury within the meaning of the constitutional guaranty of jury trial, and, upon appeal properly taken from their decision, such owner is entitled to trial by jury: Sigafoos v. Talbot, 25-214; and see Des Moines v. Layman, 21-153.

46. Contempt: A statute providing for imprisonment of a debtor for contempt in certain cases, where the object was to enforce the payment of a debt by summary proceedings, held, in conflict with the constitutional provisions for jury trial: Ex parte Grace, 12-208.

And see supra, §§ 22-25.

47. Jury fee: A provision requiring a party to pay a jury fee, or increasing the jury fee, is not in conflict with the guaranty of jury trial: Adae v. Zangs, 41-536; Steele v. Central R. of Iowa, 43-109; Little v. McGuire, 43-447; State v. Verwayne, 44-621.

48. Waiver of jury trial: It was held that in a criminal case the defendant might waive his right to a trial by a jury of twelve and consent to trial by a less number: State v. Kaufman, 51-578.

49. But it was afterwards held that defendant could not waive a jury trial in a criminal case and consent to a trial by the court, for the reason that such a form of trial in a criminal case is not authorized by law: State v. Carman, 63-180.

50. The right of jury trial in a civil case is not an attribute inalienable in its nature and character, but rather a privilege, which may be waived or forfeited: Wilkins v. Treynor, 14-391.

51. Thus, it may be waived by failure of the party to take proper steps to secure a transfer of the cause from the equity docket to the law docket, where by reason of the nature of the case it properly belongs: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33-422, 490.

52. The provisions of the federal constitution with reference to trial by jury have no bearing on the question of the right of trial by jury in the state courts: McLane v. Leicht, 69-401.

 Procedure in criminal prosecutions.

c. Procedure in criminal prosecutions.

53. Indictment: The constitutional provision that offenses of a certain grade shall be prosecuted only on indictment by a grand jury does not limit the power of the legislature to prescribe the form and constituent elements of an indictment, and authorize one as good and sufficient which would not be so at common law: State v. Bevans, 87-178.

54. The number of the grand jury is left to legislative regulation: State v. Ostrander, 18-435.

55. The provision of the federal constitution, that no person shall be held to answer for an infamous crime except upon indictment, is applicable alone to the exercise of power by the federal government, and is not a restriction upon the legislative authority of the state: State v. Wells, 46-662.

56. Form of accusation: An indictment for an offense, the punishment for which does not exceed a fine of one hundred dollars or imprisonment for thirty days, is not authorized, and all proceedings thereunder are unauthorized and void: Walters v. State, 5-507; State v. Kæhler, 6-398; State v. Shawbeck, 7-322.

57. When a defendant is tried before a justice for an offense of which the justice has not jurisdiction, the district court does not acquire jurisdiction on appeal from the judgment of the justice: State v. Carpenter, 23-506.

58. Where defendant is indicted for an indictable offense, but is found guilty of a lesser degree thereof, or of an offense necessarily included in the offense for which he is indicted, he may be convicted and punished for such lesser offense, although exclusive jurisdiction thereof is given to a justice: State v. Shepard, 10-126; State v. Jarvis, 21-44; Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

59. So, under an indictment for larceny, charging the value of the goods stolen to be more than twenty dollars, the district court has jurisdiction to try defendant and sentence him, if found guilty, although the jury find the value of the goods to be less than that amount: State v. Stingley, 10-488.

60. And the question whether the offense is triable as a misdemeanor or a felony is to be determined by the value of the property alleged in the indictment or information, and not by the value ascertained by the verdict of the jury: State v. Church, 8-252.

61. Right of appeal: The provisions of a statute not now in force, giving the state as well as defendant the right of appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace in a criminal trial, held, not in conflict with the constitutional provision saving to defendant the right of trial by jury on appeal from a justice of the peace in a criminal case: State v. Tait, 22-140.

62. Extent of punishment in justices' courts: Where an ordinance provided that, in case of non-payment of a fine, defendant should be imprisoned for a period of time longer than that authorized by the constitution for imprisonment on conviction in an inferior court, held, that the ordinance was not void, but that it might be enforced up to the limit of the punishment allowed: Keokuk v. Dressell, 47-597.

63. The provision of a statute authorizing the imposition of a fine of one hundred dollars, and the imprisonment of defendant until the fine and costs are paid, does not make the case one which is beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, although the length of imprisonment for non-payment of fine and costs may extend beyond thirty days, the limit of imprisonment which the justice may impose. The imprisonment for non-payment of fine and costs is not a punishment for the crime, but a method of enforcing payment: Albertson v. Kriechbaum, 65-11.

64. The provision that only offenses which are punishable by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not to exceed thirty days, are within the jurisdiction of a justice, is not violated by allowing different offenses of the same kind by the same person to be joined in one information before a justice of the peace, although the aggregate of the fines imposed under such information may exceed one hundred dollars: Jackson v. Boyd, 53-536.

65. Right to be confronted with witnesses: The constitutional privilege of de-defendant in a criminal prosecution of being confronted by the witnesses against him has no reference to record evidence, and in a prosecution for bigamy, record evidence of the first marriage of the defendant may be introduced: State v. Matlock, 70—.

Procedure in criminal prosecutions.

66. But this right is violated by allowing the introduction of a certificate of a notary public as to the fact that a bill of exchange has been protested, when such fact is material in establishing the guilt of the accused: State v. Reidel, 26-430.

67. Depositions of witnesses, or minutes of evidence on preliminary examinations, are not admissible as against a defendant in a criminal prosecution: State v. Collins, 32-36.

68. Where a deposition has been taken on behalf of the prisoner and filed in court, it is not error to allow the prosecuting attorney to read the same in evidence, it not appearing that the prisoner sought or desired to withdraw it from the files before the trial of the case: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286.

69. As defendant is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him, if a witness for the prosecution is subpoenaed from another state and the costs are afterwards taxed to the prosecution, such witness should be paid by the county for the distance traveled outside the state as well as in it: Westfall v. Madison County, 62-427.

70. This constitutional provision does not give defendant the absolute right to have a prisoner in the penitentiary or jail produced as a witness. The order which the court is authorized to make in such cases is discretionary: State v. Kennedy, 20-372.

71. Dying declarations may be received according to the rules of evidence without violating this constitutional provision: State v. Nash, 7-347, 377.

72. Waiver of privilege: The right to be confronted by the witnesses against him is personal with the accused and not jurisdictional, and may be waived; so held in a case where, by consent of the accused, a written transcript of the testimony taken on a former trial was read to the jury in place of recalling the witnesses themselves: State v. Polson, 29-183; State v. Fooks, 65-452.

73. Excessive fine or unusual punishment: The statutory provision making officers of municipal corporations personally liable for failure to levy a tax for the purpose of paying off judgments, held, not unconstitutional as imposing an excessive fine or an unusual punishment upon such officers for breach of duty: Porter v. Thomson, 22-391.

74. The penalties provided for violation of the intoxicating-liquor law (20 G. A., ch. 143), held, not excessive within the constitutional provision: Martin v. Blattner, 68-286.

75. Right to bail: Where a bail bond recited that defendant was charged with "feloniously killing two persons," held, that, as the offense was not necessarily punishable with death, bail might be allowed and the bond was not void: State v. Klingman, 14-404.

76. A party charged with murder in the second degree is entitled to bail: State v. Hufford, 23-579.

77. Former conviction or acquittal; fraudulent: Where the former conviction or acquittal was procured by collusion or fraud, it may be treated as a nullity and disregarded: State v. Green, 16-239.

78. What constitutes jeopardy: A dismissal of the proceedings, either by the court or by the district attorney, after the trial has commenced, unless in the cases authorized by statute, will operate as an acquittal: State v. Callendine, 8-288.

79. Although defendant is put upon trial on a good indictment, yet if the verdict is so defective that no judgment can be rendered upon it, it may be set aside and defendant again put on trial. The defective verdict will not amount to an acquittal: State v. Redman, 17-329; State v. Arthur, 21-322.

80. Where the names of the witnesses for prosecution have not been indorsed on the indictment, defendant may be required to consent to their introduction, notwithstanding the defect, or consent to a continuance, but he has no right to ask a verdict nor insist on the procedure as a former jeopardy when again put on trial: State v. Parker, 66-586; State v. Falconer, 70—.

Further as to former jeopardy, see CRIMINAL LAW, III, 11.

81. New trial on appeal from justice's court: A defendant, acquitted before a justice of the peace in a prosecution for a crime over which the justice has jurisdiction, cannot be again tried upon an appeal to the dis-strict court, taken by the state, even though the statute may so authorize: State v. Van Horton, 26-402.

Equality of rights.

82. Conviction of lower degree: Where a defendant has been convicted of a lower degree of the offense than that for which he was indicted and put upon trial, such conviction operates as an acquittal of the degree for which he was tried, and if he appeal and secure a reversal, he cannot be again tried for any higher offense, or higher degree of the offense than that of which he was convicted: State v. Tweedy, 11-850; State v. Clemons, 51-274.

83. Punitive damages, when awarded for a criminal act, do not constitute a punishment in such sense that one who should also be criminally punished for the same act would be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense: Hendrickson v. Kingsbury, 21-879.

84. Searches and seizures: A search warrant is not unreasonable in the legal sense when it is for a thing obnoxious to the law, and of a person and place particularly described, and is issued on oath of probable cause: Santo v. State, 2-165.

85. Therefore, held, that the statute authorizing the issuance of a search warrant for the seizure of intoxicating liquors is not unconstitutional, as not requiring sufficient particularity in description, or as authorizing unreasonable search and seizure: Ibid.

86. Description of the place held sufficient in a particular case: State v. Thompson, 44-399.

Further as to SEARCH WARRANT, see that title.

87. Habeas corpus: The right of appeal in habeas corpus proceedings exists only as provided by law: In re Curley, 84-184.

d. Equality of rights.

As to uniformity of operation of laws, see infra, §§ 331-347.

88. Discrimination on account of color: The constitutional provision guaranteeing equality of rights forbids discrimination by a common carrier against a passenger on account of color. Therefore, held, that a regulation of a steamboat by which a colored person was denied the privilege of a seat at the table provided for passengers could not be enforced: Coger v. Northwestern U. Packet Co., 87-145.

89. Also, held, that colored children cannot be excluded from the public schools, nor compelled to attend a separate school: Clark v. Board of Directors, 24-286; Smith v. Directors, 40-518; Dove v. Independent School Dist., 41-689.

90. Permits to sell liquors: The constitutional guaranty as to equality of rights is not violated by a statutory provision that permits to sell intoxicating liquors shall only be granted to persons of good moral character: In re Ruth, 82-250.

91. Discriminations against corporations: An act providing a special method for the taxation of the property of railway companies, held, unconstitutional because not made applicable to property of the same character owned by private individuals: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633.

92. But a statute authorizing the recovery of double damages for stock injured by a railway company on its track where it has a right to fence is not unconstitutional as denying to any person the equal protection of the law, such provision being intended merely as a penalty for the purpose of inducing the fencing of railroads: Tredway v. Sioux City & St. P. R. Co., 43-527.

Uniformity of taxation, see infra, §§ 235-239.

93. Competency of witnesses: The constitutional provision as to the competency of witnesses renders competent as a witness for the defendant in a criminal prosecution a person who is jointly indicted with him for the same crime but is put upon a separate trial: State v. Nash, 10-81.

94. Even where such defendants are put upon trial jointly, either one is entitled to the testimony of his co-defendant: State v. Giger, 23-313.

95. The legislature may declare that interest in the event of a suit may or may not disqualify a witness, as shall be deemed best; and the statutory provision that husband or wife shall not be a witness for or against the other in a civil action to which either of them is a party is upheld on that ground: Karney v. Paisley, 13-89. But see, also, Blake v. Graves, 18-312.

96. The provision as to the competency of witnesses does not give a party the right to the testimony of a child not possessed of sufficient understanding, by reason of tender years, to feel the obligation of an oath: Kilburn v. Mullen, 22-498.

97. It is not a violation of any constitutional privilege to provide that the credibility of a witness may be affected by the fact as to his sensibility to the obligation of an oath: Searcy v. Miller, 57-613.

e. Establishment of religion.

98. Exemption from taxation: The statute exempting church property from taxation is not in conflict with the constitutional provision as to the establishment of religion: Trustees of Griswold College v. State, 46-275.

99. The use of a school-house for the purpose of religious worship, when authorized by a vote of the electors of the district, is not prohibited: Davis v. Boget, 50-11.

100. Bible in the schools: The guaranty of religious freedom is not violated by the casual use of a public building as a place for offering prayer and doing other acts of religious worship; and the statute allowing the Bible to be used in public schools, with the provision that no pupil shall be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parent or guardian, is not unconstitutional: Moore v. Monroe, 64-367.

f. Ex post facto laws.

101. Defined: An ex post facto law is one which makes acts innocent when done criminal, or if criminal when done aggravates the crime, increases the punishment, or reduces the measure of proof: State ex rel v. Squires, 36-340.

102. An ex post facto law is a retroactive criminal law, and a statute which does not make an act already done a crime, although it subjects the person guilty thereof to liability, cannot be ex post facto: Polk County v. Herb, 87-361.

103. A change in the law by which petit larceny was made cognizable only before a justice of the peace and not upon indictment, held, not to affect the statute as to the punishment of larceny so as to prevent punishment, under the statute, of grand larceny committed prior to the taking effect of the change: State v. Church, 8-252.

As to retroactive laws, see infra, §§ 159-177.

g. Obligation of contracts; vested rights; retroactive laws.

104. A state bankrupt law does prima facie impair the obligation of contracts and is unconstitutional and void, except in case the debtor and creditor are domiciled in the state where the discharge is granted and the law was in existence at the time when the contract was made: Collins v. Rodolph, 8 G. Gr., 299.

105. The appearance of a non-resident creditor for the purpose of opposing the discharge of the insolvent will not constitute a waiver or abandonment of his exemption from the effect of such discharge: Ibid.

106. A discharge under a state insolvent law does not discharge a debt due to a citizen of another state, no matter where the debt was contracted or made payable, unless the creditor has appeared and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court by becoming a party or claiming a dividend: Hawley v. Hunt, 27-303.

107. Existing vendor's lien: The right to a vendor's lien, arising by virtue of contract of sale and conveyance without express reservation thereof, at a time when such lien was recognized, held, not to be affected by subsequent legislation declaring that such a lien should not be recognized or enforced after conveyance by the vendee unless reserved by conveyance, mortgage or other instrument duly executed and recorded: Jordan v. Wimer, 45-65.

108. Attachment: The actual service of an attachment upon property creates a real lien thereon which nothing subsequent can destroy but the dissolution of the attachment. Therefore, held, that an act exempting property of persons in the military service of the United States from levy or sale was not applicable to property already levied on by attachment: Hannahs v. Felt, 15-141; Ryan v. Wessels, 15-145.

109. Change in procedure: A change in the statutory provisions relating to the liability of the wife's property for debts of the husband which diminished such liability, held, not applicable to a contract entered into before such change took place, although proceedings were not commenced nor the property seized until after the change: Schmidt v. Holtz, 44-446.

110. Dower: The widow's right to dower becomes vested at the time of the husband's death and cannot be changed by a subsequent statute: Burke v. Barron, 8-182.

111. A statute increasing the extent of the widow's dower right cannot be made to operate against the purchaser of land conveyed by the husband before the taking effect of the statute: Davis v. O'Ferrall, 4 G. Gr., 168.

112. Negotiability of bills and notes: A statute attaching the attributes of negotiability to instruments which have not been previously negotiable, and thereby cutting off defenses as against an innocent holder, cannot be made applicable to contracts already in existence: Griffey v. Payne, Mor., 68; Harlan v. Sigler, Mor., 39.

113. But a provision that, in case of assignment of such an instrument, suit may be brought in the name of the assignee instead of that of the original payee for the assignee's benefit, merely affects the remedy and may be applicable to assignments already made: Harlan v. Sigler, Mor., 39.

114. Although the legislature is not prohibited from changing the remedy on a contract or the rules of evidence that shall be brought to bear upon it, yet a statute authorizing the defense of fraud to be set up as against a bona fide holder for value of a negotiable instrument acquiring the same before maturity, can only apply to contracts made after the taking effect of the statute: Temple v. Hays, Mor., 9.

115. Effect of sealed instrument: The statute allowing the want of consideration to be pleaded in an action on a sealed instrument does not impair the obligation of the contract when applied to an instrument executed out of the state, where the common law rule making the seal conclusive as to the consideration is in force: Williams v. Haines, 27-251.

116. Corporate franchises; police regulation of: While the legislature may not deprive a corporation of rights vested under its charter without infringing an implied contract between the state and the corporation that there shall be no change in the laws existing at the time of incorporation which shall render the use of the franchise more burdensome or less remunerative, yet a corporation cannot complain of the passage of statutes in the nature of police regulations, although they may operate to its disadvantage: Rodemacher v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 41-297.

117. Therefore, held, that the statute making railway companies absolutely liable for damages caused by fires set out by their engines was not unconstitutional as applied to railways previously chartered: Ibid.

118. The statute (21 G. A., ch. 76) requiring foreign corporations doing business within the state to file articles of incorporation with the auditor, and receive permits to transact business, and subjecting them to penalties for doing business without such permit, held constitutional: Goodell v. Kriebbaum, 70—.

119. Right of municipal corporation in taxes levied: A municipal corporation acquires a vested right in taxes already levied under existing laws, which cannot be destroyed by a subsequent statute releasing property from the payment of such taxes: Davenport v. Chicago. R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633; Dubuque v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39-56; Dubuque v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 47-196.

120. Penalties on railroad taxes: While penalties already accrued upon a tax in aid of a railroad cannot be taken away by the repeal of the statute under which the tax is voted, there is no vested right in the continuance of such penalties: Tobin v. Hartshorn, 69-648.

121. Land dedicated to city for public use: Where, by dedication, the title to property is vested in a city for special public purposes, the legislature cannot authorize the city to sell the land in violation of such trust: Warren v. Mayor of Lyons City, 22-351.

122. Right to taxes not earned: A statute providing that taxes voted in aid of a railway company should not be collected until the company complied with the conditions entitling it to receive such tax from the treasurer, held, not to interfere with vested rights: Harwood v. Case, 37-692.

Obligation of contracts; vested rights; retroactive laws.

123. Redemption and appraisement laws: An appraisement law providing that property levied upon under execution can only be sold at a certain proportion of the appraised value is unconstitutional as applied to contracts entered into before its passage. The law in force when the contract is made necessarily forms a part of the contract and fixes the rights and obligations growing out of it, and any substantial change in the law of the remedy which shall lessen its efficiency or burden it with any new conditions and restrictions comes within the constitutional prohibition: Rosier v. Hale, 10-470; Landis v. Abrahams, 11-284.

124. A law depriving a judgment debtor of the right to have his property appraised, or sold subject to redemption, is not unconstitutional as impairing vested rights: Holland v. Dickerson, 41-367; Babcock v. Gurney, 42-154.

125. But a change in the law regulating judicial sales, by which appraisement is allowed in cases where the right before did not exist, is unconstitutional in its application to sales under judgments rendered upon contracts made before the change in the law took effect: Olmstead v. Kellogg, 47-460.

126. A law giving a right of redemption from sales under foreclosure of mortgage in cases where it did not exist at the time when the mortgage was made, impairs the obligation of the contract and is unconstitutional: Malony v. Fortune, 14-417.

127. Valuation and appraisement laws in general are not applicable to sales under judgments existing prior to their enactments: Burton v. Emerson, 4 G. Gr., 393.

128. A judgment is not a contract within the provision of the constitution prohibiting legislation impairing the obligation of contracts, and valuation and appraisement laws may be applicable to a judgment for costs rendered before the enactment of such laws: Sprott v. Reid, 3 G. Gr., 489.

129. Valuation laws, so far as they do not impair the obligation of the contract, are applicable to executions under a judgment upon a contract entered into before they take effect: Coriell v. Ham, 4 G. Gr., 455.

130. Laws affecting the remedy: The legislature has the power to change the remedy and remedial proceedings upon contracts, and as to them the law in force when the remedy is pursued prevails unless there be statutory provisions preserving the old remedy. So held as to the method of sale under a judgment recovered after the change in the law as to appraisements in an action upon a contract made before such change: Babcock v. Gurney, 42-154; Holland v. Dickerson, 41-367.

131. Statutes may constitutionally be enacted changing the remedy existing when the contract is made, if they preserve existing remedies in substance and with integrity and do not destroy or embarrass the remedies existing when the contract is made so as substantially to defeat the rights of a creditor. A law merely limiting the amount of the costs recoverable does not so affect the remedy as substantially to defeat the rights of a creditors. So held in regard to a statute limiting the amount of attorneys' fees taxable as costs: Kossuth County v. Wallace, 60-508.

132. A change in the statute regulating the place of bringing action to foreclose a mortgage by which the action is authorized to be brought in the county where suit on the note may be maintained instead of in the county where the property is situated, is not such a change in the remedy as to be unconstitutional as to mortgages previously executed: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Gleason, 56-47.

133. A citizen has no vested rights in a particular course of practice in the courts nor to a particular remedy. Remedies are within the control of the legislature, subject to the restriction that the obligation of contracts shall not be impaired and all remedy for the enforcement of rights under a contract shall not be taken away. Retrospective laws which affect pending suits and give a new remedy, modify an existing one, or remove the impediment in the way of a legal proceeding, are not unconstitutional: Tilton v. Swift, 40-78.

134. Rules of practice of a court cannot be regarded as vested rights which may not be modified by a subsequent statute. A party has no vested right as to a particular course of practice: Brotherton v. Brotherton, 41-112.

Obligation of contracts; vested rights; retroactive laws.

135. A law which, by construction, gives a new and more efficient remedy upon a contract does not impair its obligation: Van Metre v. Wolf, 27-341.

136. A change of statutory provisions relating to the production of testimony may be made applicable to suits before commenced: Wormley v. Hamburg, 40-22.

137. A retrospective statute, regulating the remedy but not affecting subsequent rights, is constitutional: Johnson v. Semple, 31-49.

138. So held as to a statute rendering a motion for a new trial in an action at law unnecessary in order to bring before the supreme court, on appeal, the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment: Ibid.

139. Proceedings are to be had in accordance with the statutes in force, even though they may have been passed subsequent to the commencement of the action: Ballard v. Ridgley, Mor., 27; Inghram v. Dooley, Mor., 28.

140. Statutes of limitation relate to the remedy and not to the substance of the contract, and may therefore be made to operate upon prior contracts without impairing their obligations: Maltby v. Cooper, Mor., 59.

141. If a substantial remedy is left for the enforcement of the contract, the fact that by the statute of limitations a particular action for its enforcement is completely barred will not render such a statute unconstitutional as to existing contracts: Ibid.

142. The statute of limitations found in Code of '51 and Rev. of '60, held, not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts, since the right to sue upon accrued causes of action was not cut off: Campbell v. Long, 20-382.

143. Extending time for defending: Laws which merely change the remedy are not liable to constitutional objection, although the remedy may be deemed less convenient than the old one, and may in some degree render the recovery of debts more tardy and difficult; but in altering the remedy the obligation of the contract must not be so impaired that the rights of the party in it are in effect destroyed or the remedy rendered hardly worth pursuing by reason of being burdened with new restrictions. Therefore, held, that statutory provisions giving a defendant who should be in the military service of the United States, or of the state, the right to a continuance in actions pending or afterwards to be brought, did not impose on the remedy such new burdens or restrictions as to impair its benefit, and that therefore such restriction was not unconstitutional as to contracts already existing: McCormick v. Rusch, 15-127.

144. Extending time for bringing suit: A law extending the time within which action may be brought upon a contract is not unconstitutional: Edwards v. McCaddon, 20-520.

145. Nor is an act extending the time within which a defendant might answer in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage open to such objection: Holloway v. Sherman, 12-282.

146. Prohibition of action upon judgment: The statutory provision prohibiting an action upon a judgment within fifteen years from its rendition, without leave of the court, held, not unconstitutional when applied to judgments rendered before its passage, as impairing their obligation. Although it takes away one remedy, it leaves a complete one: Watts v. Everett, 47-269.

147. No vested right in pending action: The bringing of a suit vests no right to a particular decision, and the case must be determined on the law as it stands when the judgment is rendered: Huff v. Cook, 44-689.

148. Right to hold office: Therefore, where a woman elected to the office of county superintendent was held unqualified to fill that office, and subsequently a law was passed providing that no person so elected should be deprived of office by reason of sex, held, that on appeal taken after the passage of the act the statute would be given effect, and the judgment of the court below was reversed: Ibid.

149. In the absence of any express constitutional provision it is competent for the legislature to abolish an office, increase or decrease the duties devolving upon an incumbent, and add to or take away from him his salary. It is also within the legislative power to add to or change the method in which vacancies may occur, and make such changes applicable to existing offices and those holding them: Bryan v. Cattell, 15-538.

Obligation of contracts; vested rights; retroactive laws.

150. Legal tender notes: The act of congress making United States notes a legal tender in payment of debts previously contracted is constitutional: Wilson v. Tribblecock, 28-331; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 28-422, 503.

151. Taxation: A change in the revenue law as to the mode of enforcing a tax does not impair the obligation of contracts: Haskel v. Burlington, 30-232.

152. Exemption from taxation is not a vested right, and may be taken away at the will of the legislature: Shiner v. Jacobs, 62-392.

The right of a municipal corporation to taxes levied is a vested right: See infra, § 248.

153. License: A license to sell intoxicating liquors is not a contract between the state and the person licensed, giving the latter vested rights, but is a mere temporary permit issued in the exercise of the police power, and subject to the direction of government, which may revoke it as it deems fit. Such power of revocation may be exercised by a municipal corporation where the license has been issued by it under authority of law: Columbus City v. Cutcomp, 61-872.

154. Divorce: A legislative divorce is not a law impairing the obligation of contracts: Levins v. Sleator, 2 G. Gr., 604.

155. The decision of a court declaring a contract void is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts. So held in case of bonds issued by counties in payment for stock in railroad companies, where the bonds were held void: McClure v. Owen, 26-243; Railroad Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall., 511.

156. Change in judicial decision cannot be allowed to render invalid contracts which, when made, were held to be lawful: Thompson v. Lee County, 3 Wall., 327.

157. Where a state has passed no law nor put any construction upon any law impairing the obligation of a contract then in existence, but changes its policy or construction of the state constitution in regard to a class of contracts, the validity of any one of that class of contracts will be determined by the law then in force: Railroad Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall., 511.

158. Subsequent contracts: A law enacted prior to the formation of a contract cannot be objectionable as impairing the obligation thereof: Davis v. Bronson, 6-410.

159. Retroactive laws: A constitutional provision is not to be given a retrospective operation unless the words employed show a clear intention that it shall have that effect: Burlington Ferry Co. v. Davis, 48-133.

160. Retrospective laws, as distinguished from ex post facto laws, are not necessarily unconstitutional: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112, 117.

161. Legislation operating retrospectively, to render binding and effective contracts before invalid, is not in conflict with the constitution. It does not impair the obligation of contracts, nor, as between the parties thereto, disturb vested rights: Tilton v. Swift, 40-78.

162. Legalizing acts: A legalizing act merely operating to carry out the intent of the parties, which would otherwise be defeated by formal defects, is valid: Smith v. Callaghan, 66-552.

163. As the legislature might provide by law that a conveyance should impart constructive notice without acknowledgment, so it may by a curative act provide that defective acknowledgments to instruments, which have been duly recorded, shall be legal and valid, notwithstanding such defects; but such curative acts cannot affect rights of third parties which have vested before their passage: Brinton v. Seevers, 12-389; Newman v. Samuels, 17-528; Ferguson v. Williams, 58-717.

164. But held that such acts legalizing conveyances defectively acknowledged were applicable only to conveyances which, without acknowledgment, would have been valid, but not to instruments (as for instance deeds of married women under the law as it then stood) which, unless acknowledged in the manner required, were void: Heaton v. Fryberger, 38-185.

165. A retrospective law authorizing an act, or curing defects in a proceeding which the legislature might have previously authorized, is not unconstitutional: McMillen v. County Judge, 6-391; Huff v. Cook, 44-639.

166. Therefore an act legalizing the estab-

Retroactive laws.—Taking private property for public use.

lishment of a county road is not unconstitutional: Bennett v. Fisher, 26-497.

167. A statute as to the method of enforcing the payment of taxes may be made applicable to taxes delinquent at the time of its passage, as well as those to become delinquent in the future: Sully v. Kuehl, 30-275.

168. In order to a rightful exercise of the legislative power to cure a defective proceeding, the legislature must have possessed the power to authorize the result by a prior legislative enactment; but it is not necessary that it might have accomplished the result in the precise manner adopted to cure the defect; nor is the power of the legislature to cure defective proceedings limited by the fact that but for such curative act the defective proceeding would be wholly invalid or inoperative: State ex rel. v. Squires, 26-340.

169. The power of the legislature to cure defective or irregular proceedings is not limited by the fact that but for such curative act the proceedings would be wholly inoperative; and held, that where the legislature has the power to authorize by general law the levy and collection of special taxes by municipal corporations without limitation as to rate, the legislature may rightfully legalize levies made in excess of lawful authority: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112.

170. A law which purports to legalize an act of a municipal corporation which it had no lawful power to do, not in mere matter of form but in substance, is invalid. The legislature cannot legalize the passage of an ordinance which it could not specifically authorize in the first instance: Independent School Dist. v. Burlington, 60-500.

171. A valid curative act cannot be passed where the act to be cured is prohibited by the constitution: Mosher v. Independent School Dist., 44-123.

172. While retrospective legislation may be proper under some circumstances, held, that a retrospective statute validating a deed by the chairman and clerk of the board of supervisors of a county, conveying to a railroad company certain swamp land belonging to the county, together with a cash indemnity to which the county was entitled from the United States, such cash indemnity not being included in the original contract of sale of said swamp land to the railroad company which the electors had approved as required by law, was invalid: Palmer v. Howard County, 45-61.

173. As the legislature cannot amend corporate charters by special laws, it cannot legalize the passage of an ordinance not authorized by such charter: Stange v. Dubuque, 62-303.

174. But an act legalizing the action of a county superintendent in attaching territory of one district to another, not justified by the circumstances so as to render the original action valid under the statute, may be passed, as no general statute could be made applicable, and therefore the constitutional prohibition against special statutes does not apply: Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 62-616.

175. Where a note individual in form was in fact given in payment for insurance of school buildings, and was signed by the officers of the school district with their individual names, affixing the words "President," "Secretary" and "Director," held, that the statute legalizing all contracts made by school officers for insurance of school buildings as well as evidence of indebtedness therefor, and relieving the members from their individual liability, was not applicable: American Ins. Co. v. Stratton, 59-696.

176. If the legalizing act is invalid it will not affect the former act: Lytle v. May, 49-224.

As to ex post facto laws, see supra, §§ 101-103.

177. Re-enactment of statute: The obligation of contracts is not impaired by the re-enactment of a statute in existence at the time the contract was made: Bridgman v. Wilcut, 4 G. Gr., 563.

h. Taking private property for public use.

178. What constitutes a taking; security: The object of the provision requiring security for compensation is to protect and compensate the owner in case his land is entered upon pending proceedings for an assessment of its value, and if, after final determination thereof and before payment of the damages assessed, the occupancy of the land is abandoned, the owner's title and right of possession

Taking private property for public use.

sion can be extinguished only by the payment of the damages assessed. Although entry is permitted at once upon security being given, such right of possession is but temporary and permissive until the compensation finally determined is paid. In case of failure to perform the obligation and pay such compensation, no right is acquired by the giving of security; and if the security given becomes unavailing to the land owner by way of compensation when the damages are finally assessed, possession can be retaken by him unless such compensation is paid: White v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 64-281.

179. Eminent domain: Power to take private property for public use is one of the sovereign powers of the state. It is a necessary attribute of sovereignty in the state, rather than any reserved right in the grant of property to the citizen: Noll v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. R. Co., 32-66.

180. Public use: The constitution prohibits, by implication, the taking of private property for anything but a public use. The question as to when public exigencies demand the exercise of the power is solely a question for the legislature, upon whose determination the courts cannot sit in judgment; but the question as to what is such a public use as to justify the exercise of the power, is for the courts. However, if a public use be declared by the legislature, the courts will hold such use public, unless it manifestly appears from the provisions of the act that it can have no tendency to advance or promote such public use: Bankhead v. Brown, 25-540.

181. Therefore, held, that an act authorizing the taking of private property for the establishment of a private road was unconstitutional: Ibid.

182. A statute providing for condemnation of right of way for a public highway or railway to mineral land, the right of way thus condemned to be public, is not unconstitutional: Phillips v. Watson, 68-28.

183. Right of way for railways: The use may be a public one, though it be for private profit, and hence the exercise of the power of eminent domain in favor of railroads, mills, etc., is upheld: Stewart v. Board of Superintendents, 30-9. But see Hanson v. Vernon, 27-28.

184. When a right of way is, by statute, taken for the use of a railway company, it is in contemplation of law taken by the state for public use and not simply for the private use of the company in whose behalf it is taken, although the compensation be paid by the company. The easement thus acquired is in the nature of a grant from the state to the company for the uses and purposes fixed by law, and when the company fails to carry out the purposes of the grant the state may transfer the easement to another company upon compensation being made to the former company: Noll v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. R. Co., 32-66.

185. Mill dams: The statute allowing the taking of private property for the purpose of erecting mill dams is constitutional: Burnham v. Thompson, 35-421.

186. Public highways: There is no doubt of the power of the legislature to provide for the condemnation of right of way for public highways upon notice by publication in newspapers or by posted notices. The proceeding is in the nature of a proceeding in rem in which the court acquires jurisdiction of the property which is the subject of the adjudication: Wilson v. Hathaway, 42-173.

187. When the location of a road over a party's land is changed, he should be allowed compensation for the additional damage caused by the change and no more: Israel v. Jewett, 29-475.

188. Vacation of highway: Where a person has only the right to the use of a highway which pertains to the general public, he cannot maintain an action for damages by reason of its vacation. Such proceeding is not the taking of private property within the constitutional provision: Ellsworth v. Chickasaw County, 40-571; Brady v. Shinkle, 40-576.

189. Streets: The use of land for a street is a public purpose for which it may be taken upon rendering compensation, and the court will not review the decision of the city authorities holding that the public interests require a street to be established: Cherokee v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot, etc., Co., 52-279.

190. Use of streets by railway: The legislature may authorize the use of the streets of a city by a railway company for the construction and operation of its road without compensation being made to the city or to adjoining property owners. But the city may have property acquired for other authorized purposes, which could not be so taken without compensation being made: Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 24-455.

191. The statute authorizing a city to grant to railroads right of way through its streets upon condition that compensation for damages be paid to abutting property owners is twofold in its objects: first, to secure to the city control over its streets; and secondly, to secure to property owners compensation for damages. And in a particular case, held, that although the first object could not be accomplished, owing to prior rights having been conferred by another railroad upon the company in question, nevertheless, the second object being a proper one, the statute would be upheld as constitutional: Drady v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 57-393.

192. Improvement of streets: Levying a tax upon property abutting upon a street, to pave such street, is not an exercise of the right of eminent domain, but of the power of taxation: Warren v. Henly, 31-31.

193. The compensation provided by statute for damages resulting from changing the grade of a street is not intended as compensation for the taking of private property for public use, and the constitutional provision as to compensation has no application: Meyer v. Burlington, 52-560.

194. Destruction of buildings to stop fires: An ordinance of a municipal corporation authorizing the destruction of buildings to stop the spread of fire is not an exercise of the power of eminent domain, but a regulation of the right which individuals possess to destroy private property in cases of inevitable necessity: Field v. Des Moines, 39-575.

195. A city cannot exercise the right of eminent domain except when that power is expressly given: Ibid.

196. Prohibitory liquor law: The legislature being the supreme judge and guardian of the public health, safety, happiness, and morals, may, if the traffic in certain property is deemed detrimental or dangerous to these public interests, prohibit it, and declare that property illicitly held, kept, or used, shall be forfeited and destroyed; and such a provision is not one authorizing the taking of private property for public use: Santo v. State, 2-165, 216.

197. The provision of the same statute making the judgment for the wrongful sale of intoxicating liquor a lien upon the property in which the business is carried on is not the taking thereof for public use: Polk County v. Hierb, 37-361.

198. The present statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors (20 G. A., ch. 143) cannot be said to unlawfully deprive the owner of such property of his property without compensation, at least unless it be made to appear that such property was owned by such party prior to the enactment of the prohibitory statute of 1855: McLane v. Leicht, 69-401.

And further see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

199. Just compensation: The provision as to "just compensation" means that the person whose property is taken for public use shall have a fair equivalent in money for the injury done him by such taking. This compensation should be precisely commensurate with the injury sustained from the taking of the property: Sater v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 1-386; Henry v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 2-288.

200. A payment of the damages assessed is a condition precedent to the right to enter upon and take the land under the right of way act, and if the property is taken before such compensation is made, the owner may proceed as against a trespasser: Henry v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 10-540; Daniels v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 35-129.

201. The statutory provision allowing the taking of property pending an appeal in the condemnation proceeding is not unconstitutional: Peterson v. Ferreby, 30-327.

202. It is only when the damages are properly assessed that they are to be paid or secured. The compensation must be ascertained in the mode prescribed by law: McCrary v. Griswold, 7-248.

203. If no damages are claimed, or if the appraisers appointed in the manner prescribed by law ascertain that the claimant is entitled to no damages and no appeal is taken from their decision, the property owner cannot enjoin the condemnation of his property on the ground that compensation has not been made: Connolly v. Griswold, 7-416; Dunlap v. Pulley, 28-469; Abbott v. Board of Supervisors, 36-354; Tharp v. Wilham, 65-566.

204. Benefits: By special constitutional provision, benefits to accrue to the property from the proposed improvement are not to be estimated: Deaton v. Polk County, 9-594; Israel v. Jewett, 29-475.

205. Benefits to result from the construction of the improvement, as well as from the use thereof are to be excluded: Frederick v. Shane, 32-254; Bland v. Hixenbaugh, 39-532.

206. Therefore, in an action for damages for breach of warranty by reason of the existence of a right of way upon land conveyed, the advantages resulting from the construction of a railway upon such right of way cannot be taken into account: Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41-204.

207. Advantages to the land resulting from its better drainage will not be taken into account in estimating the deterioration in value by reason of the taking of a portion thereof for the right of way of a railroad: Britton v. Des Moines, O. & S. R. Co., 59-540.

208. Assessment by jury: An assessment of the damages by a jury of three persons appointed as provided by statute is an assessment by jury as required by the constitution: Des Moines v. Layman, 21-153. But see, contra, Sigafoos v. Talbot, 25-214.

209. A party cannot be deprived of his property without provision for a judicial proceeding either originally or by appeal: Ragatz v. Dubuque, 4-343.

i. Police power.

210. Extent of: The police power is very extended in its application. It cannot authorize the taking of the property of A. and the vesting of it in B., for this the constitution expressly prohibits; but short of this limit scarcely any restriction is imposed upon it: Rodemacher v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 41-297.

211. Citizens of other states subject to: All privileges of citizens of the United States are subject to the police power of the state.

The fourteenth amendment was not intended to limit the power of the states in this respect: Martin v. Blattner, 68-286.

212. All property of the citizen is held subject to the police power and other regulations which the legislature may provide for the protection of the life and safety of the people, and no right of property can intervene to arrest the enforcement of penalties for the violation of the criminal statutes of the state: Ibid.

213. Regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors: The legislature may, in the exercise of its police power, provide that property used with the consent or knowledge of its owner for the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors in violation of law shall be subject to the lien of any judgment rendered against the person occupying the property, on account of such illegal manufacture or sale: Polk County v. Hierb, 87-361.

214. In a proceeding against property to enforce a forfeiture for the improper use of the premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors, the premises may be proceeded against for the abatement of the nuisance, even to the extent of their destruction as provided by law: Our House No. 2 v. State, 4 G. Gr., 172.

215. The legislature may provide for licensing persons engaged in special pursuits, and require the payment of a fee therefor by the person to whom a license is granted: Hildreth v. Crawford, 65-339.

216. But a license thus granted is not a vested right. It is subject to revocation by the authority granting it: Columbus City v. Cutcomp, 61-672.

217. The state has the right and power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage: McLane v. Leicht, 69-401.

218. Regulation of commerce: The state, by virtue of its police power, may enact all such laws as are necessary or proper to protect its citizens in their persons, lives and property, and to guard them against frauds, impositions and oppressions, even where such laws may, in some respects, affect persons or corporations engaged in foreign or interstate commerce; but under this authority the state cannot impose a burden upon such commerce not within the necessary exercise of such power: Council Bluffs v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 45-338.

Taxation.

See further as to regulation of commerce, infra, §§ 260-266.

219. Wharfage dues: In the exercise of their police powers the cities of the state may control the landings of boats and designate places where they shall discharge freight and passengers. It is within their power to require this to be done at wharves erected by them, and to charge a reasonable compensation therefor: Dubuque v. Stout, 32-80; Keokuk v. Keokuk N. L. Packet Co., 45-196.

220. Where a city has the exclusive right under its charter to make wharves, collect wharfage and regulate wharfage rates, it can, consistently with the constitution of the United States, charge and collect wharfage proportioned to the tonnage of vessels from owners of enrolled and licensed steamboats mooring and landing at the wharves constructed on the banks of a navigable river. Such an assessment is not a tonnage tax: Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80.

j. Taxation.

221. Not taking private property for public use: Legitimate taxation is not the taking of private property for public use without compensation within the constitutional provision. The protection afforded the citizen by the government is the just compensation required: Morford v. Unger, 8-82.

222. There are limits beyond which the legislative discretion cannot go in subjecting property to taxation, and while the judiciary will not interpose in every case of injustice or of oppression, yet this power may be so unreasonably and unjustly exercised as to amount to the taking of private property for public use without compensation: Ibid.

223. An unreasonable extension of the limits of an incorporated city, by which land needed only for agricultural purposes is brought within the city limits and subjected to municipal taxation, without deriving any advantage from municipal control, is unconstitutional, even though it is provided that it shall be assessed only at its value for agricultural purposes: Ibid.; Langworthy v. Dubuque, 16-271.

224. But where property included within an extension of the city limits was situated within three hundred feet of the old limits, and used for pork house, etc., and the streets of the city were laid out and worked to and beyond the property, and the surrounding property was laid out into lots and blocks, held, that the proceeding by which it was brought within the city limits was not unconstitutional: Butler v. Muscatine, 11-433.

And as to extension of city limits, see further, MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, §§ 491-508.

225. Compensation: While the right to take private property for public use is conditioned upon compensation, the taxing power is not thus limited: Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30-9.

226. A special participation in the benefits of a particular tax on the part of the taxpayer has nothing to do with the right to impose the tax. The identical revenue collected by the special tax may be used for purposes from which the tax payers of whom it was received derive no benefit: Warren v. Henly, 31-31.

227. Not subject to judicial control: The taxing power being one of the sovereign powers vested in the general assembly by the people, and not being limited either expressly or by implication, the judicial power possesses no authority to limit it: Ibid.

228. Tax in aid of railroad: The imposition of a tax to aid in the construction of a railroad is an exercise of the taxing power for a public purpose: Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30-9; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Shea, 67-728. But see, contra, Hanson v. Vernon, 27-28.

Further, see RAILROADS, I.

229. Taxation of corporations: The constitutional provision that property of corporations for pecuniary profit shall be subject to taxation the same as that of individuals, requires the legislature to provide for the taxation of such property the same as private property, and an act releasing such property from city taxes is void: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633, 642; Dubuque v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39-56. And see Iowa R. Land Co. v. Woodbury County, 39-172.

230. A statute relating to the taxation of express and telegraph companies, held not in violation of the constitutional provision as to taxation of the property of corporations, for the reason that it made such property liable to taxation in the same manner and to the same extent when held by individuals as when held by a body corporate: United States Ex. Co. v. Ellyson, 28-870.

231. Railroad property: So held, also, as to a statute regulating the taxation of railroad property: Dubuque v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 47-196.

232. No constitutional rights are infringed by providing a different method for assessing railroad property than that provided for assessing property of the same nature belonging to other owners: Central Iowa R. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 67-190.

233. As to taxation of railroad property in general, see Davenport v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 16-848; Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Dubuque, 17-120.

See, also, TAXATION, §§ 158-175.

234. Taxation of water-works: The fact that a company operating water-works is exempted from taxation in part payment for water furnished the city does not render the provision a violation of the constitutional requirement as to taxation of corporate property: Grant v. Davenport, 36-896.

235. Uniformity of taxation: The restriction upon the power of taxation that taxes must be uniform is applicable generally to the principle or plan of taxation, and not to specific or particular taxes. It means that all individuals and all classes shall be uniformly taxed, and that all must contribute uniformly with like individuals and like classes to these burdens. The manner of imposing the burden must of necessity be left to the discretion of the legislative branch of the government: Warren v. Henly, 31-81.

236. Special taxes for improvement of streets: Therefore, held, that the levying of a special tax upon abutting property for the improvement of a street by a municipal corporation was a proper exercise of the taxing power: Ibid.

237. While it is competent for the legislature to tax any given species of property to the entire value of the property itself, yet, it is not competent for the legislature to provide for improvements upon the property of another against his will or without his consent (for instance, by the erection of sidewalks), and make him liable beyond the value of the property, or personally liable to any extent: Buell v. Ball, 20-282.

238. Double taxation: The fact that a statute subjects property to double taxation will not necessarily render it invalid, although it would excite the disfavor of the courts: United States Ex. Co. v. Ellyson, 28-870; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ellyson, 28-380.

239. Money and credits of non-residents: A statute subjecting to taxation in this state moneys and credits belonging to a non-resident, but under the control and management of an agent in the state, is not unconstitutional as providing for the taking of private property for public use without compensation: Hutchinson v. Board of Equalization, 66-85.

240. Notice; special assessments: The rule that a citizen shall not be arbitrarily deprived of his property renders it illegal to enforce against such property a tax as to the assessment and levy of which the property owner has had no notice nor opportunity to be heard in pursuance of general statute or special provision: Gatch v. Des Moines, 68-718.

241. Property cannot be taken for the payment of taxes under a special assessment made without notice to the property owner and opportunity to be heard, at least where the assessment is made under a statute or ordinance providing for assessment according to benefits: Trustees of Griswold College v. Davenport, 65-633.

242. So held where a city council was charged with the duty of determining whether any part of the cost of constructing a sewer should be paid out of the general revenues, and if so, what part, the balance being payable by special assessment upon abutting property: Ibid.

243. Judicial proceeding: Courts are not necessary to taxation, and it is generally agreed that property taken for non-payment of taxes is not taken without due process of law, if the tax payer is afforded an opportunity to be heard in relation to the tax, though it be only before the officer clothed with power to assess: Ibid.

244. If there is any ground upon which a tax can be upheld, which has been levied without notice to the tax payer and without an opportunity to be heard, it is incumbent upon the party claiming its validity to show that the notice would have been unavailing: Auer v. Dubuque, 65-650.

245. At no time, nor in any court, nor before any tribunal or officer, has the tax payer the right to have a constitutional jury impaneled for the purpose of determining the rate of the levy or the assessable value of his property: Davis v. Clinton, 55-549; Dunlieth, etc., Bridge Co. v. Dubuque County, 55-558.

246. An act legalizing taxes which are invalid because in excess of authority, but which the legislature has power to authorize, does not interfere with vested rights: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112.

247. Power of city to tax: The legislature may confer on a city council the power to tax transient merchants: Mt. Pleasant v. Clutch, 6-546.

But no such provision can be made as to merchants who are not residents of the state which is not equally applicable to residents: Infra, § 267.

248. Vested right in taxes levied: A municipal corporation authorized to levy taxes acquires a right in taxes levied, and cannot be deprived of such right by subsequent legislation releasing the property from such taxes: Burlington v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 41-134; Dubuque v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 89-58; Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 62-616.

249. Exemption from taxation: Church property may be exempted from taxation without a violation of constitutional provisions against the establishment of religion, etc.: Trustees of Griswold College v. State, 46-275.

250. An exemption from taxation is not a vested right, but may be taken away by statute: Shiner v. Jacobs, 62-392.

251. Federal taxation of state official bonds: The provisions of the act of congress requiring the stamping of official bonds of state officers, held, not unconstitutional, as authorizing the taxation of the agencies of the state government by federal authority: Muscatine v. Sterneman, 30-526.

II. THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

252. The registry laws: The constitution confers upon persons possessing the qualifications mentioned therein the right to vote, which right cannot be impaired by legislation. But the legislature may regulate the exercise of the right, and provide a method for determining whether persons proposing to vote possess the required qualifications. A registry law is therefore not unconstitutional: Edmonds v. Banbury, 28-287.

253. Persons in military service: A statute providing that citizens of the state in the military service should have a right to vote at all elections authorized by law, whether at the time of voting they were within or without the state, and providing for the opening of polls and holding of elections wherever a regiment or battalion of Iowa troops was stationed, held, not unconstitutional: Morrison v. Springer, 15-304.

254. Residence: Where a student entered the state university at Iowa City while still a minor, making his father's home in another county his residence during vacations, and receiving support from his father, without having any definite intention of making Iowa City his home after graduation, held, that he was not a resident of the county in which he was attending school, so as to be entitled to vote there on coming of age: Vanderpoel v. O'Hanlon, 53-246.

255. If a person has actually removed to another place with the intention of remaining there for an indefinite time, and making it a place of fixed residence or present domicile, it is to be regarded as his domicile, notwithstanding he may entertain a floating intention to return at some future time. The place where a married man's family resides is generally to be considered his domicile: State v. Groome, 10-308.

III. POWERS OF FEDERAL AND STATE GOVERNMENTS.

256. State cannot be sued; mandamus against public officer cannot be maintained to compel him to act in his official capacity connected with the liability of the government, unless the government itself is liable and the officer has improperly refused to act. He cannot be compelled to execute a contract fixing a liability upon the government: Chance v. Temple, 1-179, 201.

257. The doctrine that the king can do no wrong does not mean that the sovereignty, through its officers, cannot be guilty of tort, but only that the redress must be voluntary and cannot be coerced: Metz v. Soule, 40-336.

Powers of federal and state governments.

258. Allowance of claim: Where a petition is presented to the legislative department, asking redress for injuries alleged to have been caused to petitioner by wrongful acts of the officers of the state, and a statute is passed for his relief, it must be presumed that liability on the part of the state was recognized, and compensation made in satisfaction thereof. It is not to be presumed that the act was passed out of mere charity, without recognition of the fact that an injury was done for which the state ought to make redress: Ibid.

259. Bankruptcy laws: The national bankruptcy law of 1867 did not operate to wholly suspend state insolvent laws, and the exercise of jurisdiction under the state law was valid, certainly, until the jurisdiction of the federal courts was called into exercise: Reed v. Taylor, 32-209.

260. Interstate commerce: Upon certain subjects pertaining to commerce the states, in the absence of congressional enactments, may adopt regulations, but when congress has assumed to act upon such subjects, a state enactment conflicting therewith cannot be enforced. Therefore, held, that certain state statutes respecting the transfer of freight, passengers, etc., from railways within the state terminating at a certain point, to connecting railways, was void as in conflict with acts of congress authorizing connecting railways to form continuous lines: Council Bluffs v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 45-338.

261. Any regulation of the transportation of interstate commerce, whether upon the high seas or lakes or rivers, or upon railroads or other artificial channels of communication, operates as a regulation of commerce itself: Ibid.

262. A state statute assuming to control and regulate shipments of freight from a point within to a point without the state under an entire contract is an interference with the power of the federal government to regulate interstate commerce, and therefore unconstitutional: Carlton v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 59-148; Kaiser v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 5 McCrary, 496.

263. The railroad commission is not authorized to prescribe that rates of transportation from a point without to a point within the state should conform to the rate for a like distance within the state: State v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70—.

264. A statute (21 G. A., ch. 76) requiring foreign railway corporations and other foreign corporations to procure permits from the auditor of the state before doing business within the state, and subjecting them to penalties for doing business without such permit, held, not to be unconstitutional as a regulation of interstate commerce: Goodell v. Kriechbaum, 70—.

265. A statute requiring railway companies to fix once each year their rates of freight and passenger tariff and post a schedule of the same at each station, and providing a penalty for wilful violation of such statute, or for charging a greater rate than those fixed, held, to be a police regulation only and not a regulation of commerce, and therefore not unconstitutional as applied to transportation from a point within to a point without the state: Fuller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 31-187; Railroad Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall., 560.

266. A statute prohibiting corporations engaged in transporting goods or passengers between different states from limiting their liability as common carriers by contract is not a regulation of interstate commerce so as to be unconstitutional as applied to a contract for transportation from a point within to a point without the state: Hart v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-485.

267. License tax on non-resident merchants: A city ordinance imposing a license tax upon transient merchants and peddlers who are non-residents, which is not imposed upon persons who reside in the state, is unconstitutional: Marshalltown v. Blum, 58-184; Pacific Junction v. Dyer, 64-38.

268. Taxation of telegraph and express companies: While it is not competent for the states by taxation, direct or indirect, to interfere with interstate commerce, yet the property employed therein is not therefore free from taxation. It can be taxed as property but not as a business. So held as to a statute providing for the taxation of telegraph and express companies: United States Ex.

Powers of governments.— Division of power among departments.

Co. v. Ellyson, 28-370; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ellyson, 28-380.

269. Liquor laws: Laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors are police regulations, and are not unconstitutional as an improper regulation of interstate commerce, although they permit the sale of wine from native fruit and prohibit the sale of that manufactured from fruit grown outside of the state: State v. Stucker, 58-496.

270. The state may prohibit the sale of spirits as a police regulation, excepting only the importer of foreign spirits selling in the original quantities imported: Santo v. State, 2-165, 202.

271. Wharfage dues: The provisions of the constitution and of the ordinance of 1787, prohibiting states from taxing interstate commerce, or abridging the free use of the Mississippi river, are not violated by municipal charters and ordinances providing for the erection of wharves by cities on the Mississippi river, and the charge of reasonable compensation for their use: Keokuk v. Keokuk N. L. Packet Co., 45-196.

272. Tonnage dues: Neither are such charters and ordinances unconstitutional as allowing tonnage dues, even though the wharfage fees are made dependent upon the tonnage of the vessels: Ibid.

273. The state as stockholder in corporation: The provision in the state constitution that the state shall not become a stockholder in any corporation is not violated by authorizing aid to be voted by counties of the state towards the construction of a railway: Dubuque County v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 4 G. Gr., 1.

274. An act making an appropriation to a corporation to assist it in testing the validity of the barb wire patents, held, not unconstitutional under the same provision: Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Brown, 64-275.

275. A treaty and an act of congress being each the supreme law of the land, a subsequent act of congress will repeal a previous treaty in the same way that a previous statute would be thereby repealed: Webster v. Reid, Mor., 467.

276. Federal limitations not applicable to states: The limitations in the federal constitution apply to the federal government and not to the states unless it is expressly so provided: Boyd v. Ellis, 11-97; State v. Wells, 46-662; McLane v. Leicht, 69-401.

IV. DIVISION OF POWER AMONG RESPECTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

a. Executive department.

277. Suspension of other state officers: The statutory provision for the suspension by the governor of other officers elected by the people is not unconstitutional: Brown v. Duffus, 66-193.

278. Mandamus against executive officer: It is not in violation of the constitutional provision that the different departments are independent and separate, to allow a court to call in question the action of an officer of the executive department, as, for instance, by compelling the auditor of state by mandamus to issue a warrant for the payment of the salary of an officer, where the auditor has refused to act: Bryan v. Cattell, 15-538.

279. Extra sessions: Although the executive is authorized on extraordinary occasions to convene the general assembly by proclamation, and state to it, when assembled, the purpose for which it is convened, yet when thus convened it has full legislative authority, and is not confined in its action to the special purpose for which it is called: Morford v. Unger, 8-82.

280. Approval of bills: An act is not passed by the legislature until it is approved by the governor, who, for such purpose, is a part of the legislature: United States v. Fanning, Mor., 348.

281. In case a bill is submitted to the governor for his approval during the last three days of a session of the general assembly, and he neither signs nor returns it with objections before the adjournment, it becomes a law only in case he subsequently approves it; and the filing of the bill within the thirty days mentioned, with the secretary of state, without approval or disapproval, will not give it the effect of a law: Darling v. Boesch, 67-702.

282. The fact that a law passed thirty-four years previously did not bear the signature of the governor, held not sufficient to render the act void. The presumption would be that the act became a law by failure of the governor to return it within proper time after its presentation to him: Collins v. Laucier, 45-702.

283. The copy or certificate, in the printed acts, of the approval by the governor is but evidence of the fact and is not essential in order that the act may take effect. It is the approval of the original bill filed in the office of the secretary of state which is required to give the act validity: Dishon v. Smith, 10-212.

b. Legislative department.

284. General scope of power: In ascertaining the power of the legislature under the constitution, the courts look not at what the instrument authorizes but at what is prohibited: McMillen v. County Judge, 6-391.

285. The legislature possesses sovereign legislative power over all subjects except such as are prohibited to it in the state constitution: Boyd v. Ellis, 11-97.

286. The general assembly possesses all legislative authority not delegated to the general government or prohibited by the constitution. The constitution, as applied to the legislative department, is a limitation and not a grant of power: Morrison v. Springer, 15-304. And see State v. Hockett, 70 —.

287. The rule in construing the state constitution is, that the state legislature may exercise all rightful legislative powers which are not expressly prohibited or necessarily included in the prohibited powers: Purcell v. Smidt, 21-540.

288. All the legislative authority inherent in the people is vested in the general assembly, and the legislative power of the general assembly is therefore supreme, except as it is bounded by the limitations written in the constitution: Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30-9, 18.

289. The power of legislation is vested in general terms in the general assembly, and thereby there is conferred upon that body the authority to legislate upon all rightful subjects, unless prohibited from so doing expressly or by clear implication: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633.

290. The theory of the constitution is that all powers not vested in the general assembly remain in the state: State ex rel. v. Wapello County, 13-388.

291. There is, as it were, back of the constitution, an unwritten constitution which guaranties and well protects all the absolute rights of the people. (Per Beck, J.): Hanson v. Vernon, 27-28, 73.

292. While the constitution vests the legislative power in the general assembly and it may legislate on all subjects not prohibited by express words or necessary implication, yet under the constitutional provision placing the educational interests of the state under the management of a board of education authorized to legislate and make all needful rules and regulations in relation to schools, held, that the power to legislate on such subject was thereby denied to the legislature: District Tth v. Dubuque, 7-262.

293. Legislative divorces: Under the terms of the organic law providing "that the legislative power of the territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation," held, that the territorial legislature was invested with as much power as is usually vested in an unrestrained legislative body, and that such power included the power to grant legislative divorces, even where the grounds for divorce were not such as to entitle the party to relief in the courts: Levins v. Sleator, 2 G. Gr., 604. (But under the state constitution, art. III, § 27, legislative divorces cannot now be granted.)

294. The taxing power being one of the sovereign powers of the state vested in the general assembly, and not being limited by the constitution as to the kinds or classes of property subject to taxation, the general assembly has general legislative authority to subject all kinds and classes of property to taxes for all proper purposes: Davenport v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 38-633.

295. It being within the proper scope of legislative authority to pass general laws for the levy and assessment of taxes, the passage of a general law curing and legalizing the levy and collection of taxes irregularly or illegally levied is also an exercise of legislative authority and not an encroachment upon judicial power: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112.

And further as to taxation, see supra, §§ 221-251.

Power of departments.—Legislative.

296. Judicial revision of legislative action: Where the legislative authority reserves to itself the power to act under certain circumstances, the existence of such circumstances is to be determined by it, and a court cannot call into question the propriety of its action: Miners' Bank v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 553.

297. The judicial branch of the government has no power to determine whether an act of the legislative branch is wise or unwise, nor has it power to declare an act void except in cases where the statute in question is plainly, palpably, and without doubt, repugnant to some provision of the constitution: Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Brown, 64-275.

And further, as to when the courts will hold a legislative act unconstitutional, see infra, §§ 368-385.

298. Delegation of legislative power: The legislative authority being vested in the general assembly, it is not competent for it to submit the question whether an act shall become a law to the vote of the people. Therefore, held, that a statute providing for the submission to vote, in each county, of the question as to whether a prohibitory liquor law should be in force in that county, was unconstitutional, and that the act itself was in force throughout the state without such submission: Santo v. State, 2-165, 203; State v. Beneke, 9-203.

299. So the license act of 1857, containing a provision that the prohibitory law of 1855 should not be repealed in any county except by a vote of the people of that county, was held unconstitutional: Geebrick v. State, 5-491.

300. Held, also, that a statute providing for the submission to vote in each county of the question whether a previous prohibitory liquor law allowing the sale of wine and beer should be repealed within that county, and the sale of wine and beer prohibited, was unconstitutional: State v. Weir, 33-134.

301. Held, also, that a statute which prohibited stock from running at large, and was a valid enactment in itself, but contained a section providing that the act should not be enforced in any county until adopted by the electors of that county, was in force throughout the state without any such submission to vote, the provision for a submission being unconstitutional: Weir v. Cram, 37-649.

302. But a statute allowing the county judge to submit to vote in each county the question whether sheep and swine should be allowed to run at large was held not unconstitutional as being a delegation of legislative power, inasmuch as the law itself was in force without such vote, and the people of each county were simply authorized to adopt its provisions as a police regulation: Dalby v. Wolf, 14-228.

303. Although the general assembly cannot delegate to the people the right to make or repeal a law, it has not been held that the state cannot delegate legislative power to municipal corporations within proper bounds: State v. King, 37-462.

304. It is not unconstitutional to provide, in an act enlarging the boundaries of a city, that it shall only take effect after its acceptance by the city council: Morford v. Unger, 8-82.

305. A statute empowering cities of a certain grade to establish superior courts by vote is not unconstitutional as providing for an exercise of legislative power by the people. The statute itself is in force without any vote, but simply confers upon cities an option to be exercised by vote to avail themselves of the power conferred: Lytle v. May, 49-224.

306. A statute conferring upon cities authority to be exercised at their discretion is not void as delegating legislative power. Such statute confers authority which the city may exercise or not, as it chooses: Des Moines v. Hillis, 55-643.

307. The voting of aid to railways by a county is not in derogation of the legislative power vested in the general assembly: Dubuque County v. Dubuque & P. R. Co., 4 G. Gr., 1.

308. Exclusive privileges; monopolies: The provision of the constitution prohibiting the granting of exclusive privileges, etc., does not affect exclusive charters or franchises already granted: Burlington, etc., Ferry Co. v. Davis, 48-133.

309. General and special laws: A statute which operates upon a particular condition and attaches to it certain consequences, so that whenever that condition exists such consequences follow, is a general and not a special statute: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112.

Power of departments.—Legislative.

310. A law which affects all persons who may be brought within the relations for which it provides is a general and not a special law, within the meaning of those provisions of the constitution prohibiting the passing of special laws in cases where general laws may be made applicable. Therefore, held, that the statute regulating the liability of railway companies for injuries to employees is general and not special, within the constitutional prohibition: McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20-338.

311. Special laws as to taxation: The constitutional prohibition of special laws for the assessment and collection of taxes is not infringed by Code, § 814, allowing a debtor to deduct the amount of his moneys and credits in listing his property for assessment: Macklot v. Davenport, 17-379.

312. A law remitting penalties upon taxes not paid within a certain time is not a special law within the meaning of this provision: Beecher v. Board of Supervisors, 50-538.

313. A curative act legalizing the levy and assessment of taxes made for a year when no law authorizing any levy and assessment was in force, held, not in conflict with this section: Boardman v. Beckwith, 18-292.

314. For the incorporation of cities and towns: The legislature cannot pass a special act amending the charter of a municipal corporation. Such act would be in conflict with the clause prohibiting special acts for the incorporation of cities and towns, and would be a law not of general and uniform operation, in a case where a general law could be made applicable: Ex parte Fritz, 9-30; Davis v. Woolnough, 9-104; Hetherington v. Bissell, 10-145; Baker v. Steamboat Milwaukee, 14-214.

315. This provision is not violated by a law empowering cities and towns, incorporated under a special charter, to amend such charter: Von Phul v. Hammer, 29-222.

316. Applicable to municipal corporations: A law applicable to all cities and towns existing under special charter is not unconstitutional, even though it be considered an amendment of their charters: State v. King, 37-462.

317. A law establishing a special court in a particular town named, and providing for the jurisdiction, etc., thereof, held unconstitutional, as being in fact an amendment to the city charter, and as being a local and special law in a case where a general law could be made applicable: McGregor v. Baylies, 19-43.

318. An act which operates upon a particular condition, and attaches to it certain consequences whenever that condition exists, is not in conflict with this provision. So an act applying only to cities under special charters was held not unconstitutional, although it could apply to but few cities: Hassel v. Burlington, 30-232.

319. A statute validating the acts of municipal corporations in levying special taxes in excess of the legal limit, to pay judgments, held constitutional: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112.

320. As the legislature cannot amend the charter of a city, it cannot legalize an act of such city not authorized by the charter, as such an act would be equivalent to an amendment: Independent School Dist. v. Burlington, 60-500; Stange v. Dubuque, 62-303.

321. By the constitutional provision that no corporation shall be created by special laws, it was not intended to repeal city charters already granted: Warren v. Henly, 31-31.

322. The special provision authorizing the general assembly to amend or repeal all laws for the organization or creation of corporations, or granting of special or exclusive privileges or immunities, by a vote of two-thirds of each branch of the general assembly, has reference exclusively to corporations for pecuniary purposes, and does not authorize the amendment of the charters of municipal corporations by special statute: Ex parte Fritz, 9-30.

323. The provisions of the Code relating to the enforcement of judgments against municipal corporations are not in any proper sense amendments to the charter of a city, and are not obnoxious to this constitutional prohibition: Porter v. Thomson, 22-391.

324. Although the passage of a local or special law incorporating a certain school district would be in conflict with the constitutional provision above referred to, yet, a curative act legalizing a defective organization thereof is not unconstitutional. In such case a general law could not be made applicable: State ex rel. v. Squires, 26-340.

Power of departments.—Legislative.

325. Boundaries of counties: The provision that no law changing the boundary of a county shall have effect until submitted to the people of the counties affected, applied: Duncombe v. Prindle, 12-1.

326. Other cases of special laws: A special act authorizing the building of a particular railroad, held, not in violation of the provision of this section, for the reason that the object of the act was to execute certain trusts confided to the state, to secure the building of a railroad on a particular route: Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 24-455.

327. Statutes legalizing official acts done without authority are not invalid on account of being special statutes, for the reason that a general statute could not be made applicable in such cases: Independent Dist. v. Independent Dist., 62-616.

328. An appropriation is necessarily made by a special act, and is not invalid because not general and uniform throughout the state: Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Brown, 64-275.

329. All statutes punishing criminally the violation of law, or providing for the prevention of crimes, are special in their character, and do not come within the restriction that they shall be of uniform operation with respect to different crimes. They may provide remedies and penalties as to nuisances, for instance, committed by the sale of intoxicating liquors, which are not extended to other cases of nuisance: Martin v. Blattner, 68-286.

330. An act providing for the holding of terms of court in a particular county at a place other than the county seat is not unconstitutional. A general law could not be applicable in such case: Cooper v. Mills County, 69-350.

331. Uniformity of operation: If a law operates upon every person within the relations and circumstances provided for, it is sufficient as to uniformity: Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39-112, 116.

332. Therefore, held, that Code, § 1807, as to liability of railroad company for injuries to employees, is not open to the objection that it is not of uniform operation: McAunich v.

Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20-338; Deppe v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 36-52; Bucklew v. Central Iowa R. Co., 64-603; Central Trust Co. v. Sloan, 65-655.

333. So held, also, as to Code, § 1289, making railroad companies liable in certain cases for double damages for stock killed: Jones v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 16-6; Welsh v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 53-632.

334. Uniformity in taxation comes within the purview of the provision as to uniform operation of laws: Dubuque v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 39-56.

335. But a statute providing a special method for the taxation of express and telegraph companies, held not objectionable under this provision, as the burdens imposed by it fell equally upon all citizens coming within a certain class or condition: United States Ex. Co. v. Ellyson, 28-370.

336. It is not a violation of this provision that the general assembly shall provide a different method for assessing the property of railroad companies from that provided for the assessment of other property: Central Iowa R. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 67-199.

337. Also, held, that the power given to cities to improve streets and make the cost thereof a lien upon abutting property was not void as authorizing unequal taxation: Warren v. Henly, 31-31.

338. The fact that a city is authorized to exempt from water rent property within its limits which has not the benefit of the water supply does not render such a provision unconstitutional: Grant v. Davenport, 36-396.

339. A statute allowing each county to determine by vote whether swine and sheep should be allowed to run at large, held not unconstitutional as not being uniform in operation: Dalby v. Wolf, 14-228.

340. The statute prohibiting the sale of ale, wine and beer within two miles of the corporate limits of a municipal corporation, held not objectionable on the ground of want of uniformity in its operation: State v. Shroeder, 51-197.

341. So, also, the statutory provisions as to granting of permits to sell intoxicating liquors, by which a permit could only be given to persons of good moral character.

Power of departments.— Legislative.

were held not unconstitutional: In re Ruth, 32-250.

342. A city ordinance discriminating in favor of resident merchants of such city and against other merchants of the state, by imposing a license tax on the latter, would be unconstitutional as not being of uniform operation: Pacific Junction v. Dyer, 64-38.

See, also, supra, § 267.

343. A curative act is not necessarily unconstitutional as not being of uniform operation: McMillen v. County Judge, 6-391.

344. So a law legalizing the defective organization of a specified school district was sustained: State ex rel. v. Squires, 26-340.

345. The statute providing that the fact that defendant in an action was in the military service of the United States or the state should be sufficient cause for a continuance so long as such defendant was in such service, held not unconstitutional as not being of uniform operation: McCormick v. Rusch, 15-127.

346. An exclusive privilege already granted by due authority before the adoption of the constitutional provision prohibiting exclusive privileges and requiring laws to be of uniform operation, held not to be affected thereby: Burlington, etc., Ferry Co. v. Davis, 48-183.

347. A statute providing for excluding property from city limits would be unconstitutional if not made applicable to cities already incorporated as well as those to be incorporated: Whiting v. Mt. Pleasant, 11-482.

348. Subject to be embraced in title: In an act to amend the charter of the city of Keokuk was inserted a section purporting to legalize elections previously held to determine whether the city council should subscribe to the stock of a certain railroad; held, that such section was not in any sense an amendment to the charter, and the object was not embraced in the title, nor germane to anything contained therein, and the section was, therefore, void: Williamson v. Keokuk, 44-88.

349. Every law prescribing duties must have the sanction of liabilities; therefore, held, that Code, § 1307, prescribing the liabilities of railroad companies in certain cases, etc., was sufficiently embraced in the title of the bill in which it was originally enacted, which was "An act in relation to the duties of railroad companies:" McAunich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20-338.

350. Where an act in one section legalized the organization of a school district, and in another legalized the acts of the officers thereof, held, that the second was so connected with the first that it was sufficiently embraced in the title "An act to legalize the organization of the," etc., or at least that the invalidity on this ground would extend only to the second section: State ex rel. v. Squires, 26-340.

351. Provisions made in an act entitled "An act to amend an act to incorporate the city of Muscatine," for enlarging the corporate boundaries of said city, held, to be sufficiently specified in the title: Morford v. Unger, 8-82.

352. Provisions for excluding territory from the limits of cities already incorporated are sufficiently covered by the title of an act "for the incorporation of cities:" Whiting v. Mt. Pleasant, 11-482.

353. A section contained in an act entitled "An act providing the place of bringing suits in certain cases," designating upon whom service might be made in such cases, held germane to the subject expressed in the title: Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Highsmith, 44-330.

354. Provisions of the Code as to the method of enforcing a judgment against a municipal corporation are sufficiently connected with the subject of the chapter on executions under which they are found, not to be objectionable under this constitutional provision: Porter v. Thomson, 22-391.

355. Act to embrace but one subject: The intention of the provision prohibiting more than one subject being embraced in the same act was to prevent the union in the same act of incongruous matter and of objects having no connection or relation. But there must be some limit to the division of matter into separate bills and acts. It cannot be held that each step should be embraced in a separate act. The unity of object is to be looked for in the ultimate end designed to be attained, and not in the details looking to that end: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 2-280.

356. Therefore, held, that an act containing sixty-six sections, entitled "An act in relation to certain state roads," in which forty-six roads were established, others vacated, and provisions for the relocation of still others were made, was not in conflict with the constitutional provision: Ibid.

357. The statute prohibiting the sale of malt or vinous liquors within two miles of city limits, and giving cities authority to regulate and license the sales of such liquors within those limits, held not unconstitutional as containing more than one subject: State v. Shroeder, 51-197.

358. The fact that the title of an act embraces more than one subject will not affect its validity: Ibid.

359. An act entitled "An act for revising and consolidating the laws and incorporating the city of Dubuque and establishing a city court therein," held not objectionable as embracing more than one subject: Davis v. Woolnough, 9-104, 107.

360. The act of 1855 for the suppression of intemperance, held not to embrace more than one subject, the several provisions therein being but so many steps fairly conducive to the end or object expressed in the title: Santo v. State, 2-165.

361. The act of 20 G. A., ch. 143, amendatory of prior legislation, intended for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and providing for additional penalties and remedies against the violators of the statute, does not embrace more than one subject under the prohibition of this provision: Martin v. Blattner, 68-286.

362. The statute in relation to school bonds (Code, §§ 1821-4) is not unconstitutional as embodying more than one subject: Ackley School Dist. v. Hall, 118 U. S., 135.

363. Publication of statutes: Under the provision found in a former constitution, that statutes should take effect only when published and circulated by authority, held, that the publication without legislative authority was not sufficient to bring the statute into operation: Calkin v. State ex rel., 1 G. Gr., 68.

364. An act conferring upon the governor authority to publish acts of a general nature, and providing that they should take effect from such publication, held unconstitutional as delegating to the governor the power given to the legislature to determine what acts should go into effect by publication: Scott v. Clark, 1-70; Pilkey v. Gleason, 1-522.

365. The legislature at a special session is not limited to legislation upon subjects stated by the governor convening it as furnishing the object of the call: Morford v. Unger, 8-82.

c. Judicial department; declaring statutes unconstitutional; effect.

366. Judicial authority: The provisions of Code, § 481, for proceedings in the circuit court for the annexation of contiguous territory to a city, are not unconstitutional as conferring upon a court powers not judicial in their nature. The question as to whether the conditions therein mentioned exist, or whether, under the circumstances, justice and equity require the annexation, are of a judicial character, and their determination may properly be vested in the judicial department: Burlington v. Leebrick, 43-252.

367. The charter of a city, conferring upon the mayor judicial authority, is not in conflict with the constitutional provision that the three departments of government shall be distinct. The mayor of a city is not a part of the government of the state of Iowa: Santo v. State, 2-165, 220.

368. Power to declare statute unconstitutional: The constitutional provision that no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of the three departments of government shall exercise any function appertaining to either of the others does not prohibit the judicial department from passing upon the legality of the acts of the officers of the several departments: Bryan v. Cattell, 15-588.

369. To the judicial department is intrusted the power to decide all questions of constitutional law. It belongs to that department, as a matter of right and duty, to declare every act of the legislature made in violation of the constitution, or any provision of it, null and void; but the violation of the constitution should be clear and apparent before the act should be declared void: Reed v. Wright, 2 G. Gr., 15.

370. To declare an act unconstitutional and void is the exercise of the highest power of the court and is not to be resorted to unless it becomes necessary. It is the duty of the court to give an act such a construction, if possible, as to avoid the necessity and uphold the act: State ex rel. v. County Judge, 2-280.

§71. The power of the court to hold an act of the legislature unconstitutional and void, while everywhere admitted, is of the most delicate and responsible nature and should not be resorted to unless the case be clear, decisive and unavoidable: Santo v. State, 2-165, 208; McCormick v. Rusch, 15-127.

§72. It is the duty of the court to give a statute such construction, if possible, as will maintain it rather than one which will render it unconstitutional: Santo v. State, 2-165, 208; State ex rel. v. County Judge, 2-280; Duncombe v. Prindle, 12-1; Iowa Homestead Co. v. Webster County, 21-221.

§73. The supreme court will not consider constitutional questions, unless it is necessary for the disposition of the case: Bond v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 67-712.

§74. The court will not decide the constitutionality of a statute unless it be necessarily involved in a case which cannot be disposed of without such decision. If there is any other point upon which the question can be decided, the constitutionality of the statute will not be passed upon. Parties cannot, by waiving other questions, form an agreed case upon which the courts will decide the constitutional question: Dubuque & D. R. Co. v. Diehl, 64-635.

§75. Where a party assails the constitutionality of a statute and goes into the supreme court as appellant, that court will scrutinize the record with considerable strictness to see whether the determination of the constitutional question is necessary to the decision of the case: State ex rel. v. Rosencrans, 65-882.

§76. Appellate courts will not decide questions of constitutional law, unless absolutely necessary, when the bench is not full, or when all of the judges cannot assist in the determination: McClure v. Owens, 21-133.

§77. A statute should be supported unless its unconstitutionality is so obvious as to admit of no doubt: Whiting v. Mt. Pleasant, 11-482.

§78. A court should declare an act of the legislature void only when it violates the constitution so clearly, palpably and plainly as to leave no doubt or hesitation in their minds: Morrison v. Springer, 15-304.

§79. It is an elementary principle in determining the constitutionality of a statute, that any reasonable doubt must be solved in favor of the legislative action, and the act sustained: Gates v. Brooks, 59-510.

§80. The authority and power of the court to annul an act of the legislature in conflict with the fundamental law is universally acknowledged, but this authority should be exercised only when the statute is clearly, palpably, plainly, and beyond reasonable doubt in conflict with the constitution: Stewart v. Board of Supervisors, 30-9.

§81. It is fundamental that a statute should not be declared unconstitutional unless it is clearly so: Central Iowa R. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 67-199.

§82. The court is not authorized to pass upon the justice or expediency of a statute. Expediency and public policy and state necessity are not within its domain. Therefore the court has no authority to annul an act of the legislature as unconstitutional unless it is found to be in clear, plain and palpable conflict with the constitution: Ibid.

§83. Where the legislature had passed an act appropriating a sum of money to aid a private corporation in testing the validity of the barbed wire patents, held, that the courts had no jurisdiction to inquire into the question whether such an appropriation was wise or not: Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Brown, 64-275.

§84. Under the provision of the constitution that a special statute should not be passed in cases where a general law could be made applicable, held, that the legislature is not the sole judge of whether a general law can be made applicable, but that the special law might be declared unconstitutional for the reason that a general law applicable to the subject might be framed: Ex parte Pritz, 9-80.

§85. Where the statute allows an appeal from the action of the board of supervisors in establishing a road, a court in determining such appeal may pass upon the constitutionality of the act under which the road is laid out: Bankhead v. Brown, 25-540.

§86. Construction of the constitution: To arrive at the meaning of words used in a section of the constitution, sections preceding and following it, having reference to the same subject-matter, must be read and considered, unless the words to be construed have such a clear and express meaning that there can be but one conclusion as to what was meant: Allen v. Clayton, 63-11.

387. Where, after considering previous and subsequent sections relating to the same matter, there is any doubt as to the meaning of the language used, then the court may consider, first, the evil intended to be remedied; second, the debates on the subject in the convention which framed the constitution; third, the contemporaneous legislative construction of the constitution; and fourth, the practical construction adopted by the people: Ibid.

388. Effect of unconstitutionality: Where money is paid under mistake of law as to the unconstitutionality of a statute, there being no charge of fraud, duress, deceit or mistake of fact, it cannot be recovered back: Kraft v. Keokuk, 14-86.

389. So held where a license fee for the permission to sell intoxicating liquors had been paid to a city in pursuance of a provision of a statute which, after the expiration of the time for which the license was granted and the enjoyment of the privilege by the person paying the tax, was declared unconstitutional: Ibid.

390. Unconstitutionality of part: Statutes which are partly in conflict with the constitution will be held void no further than as to those parts which are unconstitutional. Provisions which are within the legislative authority will be enforced. The same rule applies in case of the ordinance of a city. But if the parts of the statute or ordinance be necessarily connected and dependent, the whole must fail with the void part: Keokuk v. Keokuk N. L. Packet Co., 45-196; Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S., 80.

391. An act void in part as unconstitutional is not necessarily void in toto. If sufficient remain to effect its object without the aid of the invalid portion, the latter only shall be rejected and the former shall stand: Santo v. State, 2-165, 205.

392. Therefore, held, that the prohibitory act of 1855, one section of which provided that it should take effect from a certain date provided it was adopted by a popular vote, became a law although the provision for such submission was unconstitutional: Ibid.

393. Where an act was in three sections, the subject-matter of the first and third being properly embraced in the title, held, that these portions were constitutional, although the second section referred to a subject-matter not embraced in the title: Henkle v. Keota, 68-334.

394. When one section of a statute is void and others valid, and it evidently appears that one section is the compensation or inducement for the other, and the connection between them is such as to warrant the belief that the valid part would not have been passed alone, then the whole should be held void. But, in a particular case, held, that one section was not an inducement to, but was entirely distinct and separate from the other portion of the act, and that the balance of the act was valid although that one section was unconstitutional: Dubuque v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 47-196.

395. Where a portion of a statute is unconstitutional and that portion affects the validity of the entire statute, it must all fall: Geebrick v. State, 5-491.

396. Where a city ordinance provided that an offense should be punished to a greater extent than the city had authority to inflict punishment, held, that a conviction thereunder would authorize the infliction of punishment up to the limit of the authority of the city: Keokuk v. Dressell, 47-597.

397. Decisions of other courts as authority: In questions arising upon the construction of the laws and constitution of this state, the supreme court of the United States is not the final arbiter, but it is required to look to the courts of this state for the rules of construction of its laws and constitution: McClure v. Owen, 26-243.

398. The construction given to the constitution of a foreign state by the court of last resort of such state will be regarded as authority by the courts of this state: Brown v. Phillipps, 16-210.

399. Distinction between law and equity: The distinction between law and equity is maintained in the constitution, and the two jurisdictions should not be confounded: Cooper v. Armstrong, 3 G. Gr., 120.

And see COURTS, §§ 9-16, 23, 24.

400. Superior and inferior courts: An inferior court is one from which an appeal lies to a superior court, and over which the latter has a supervisory power and control. Under the constitutional provision that the judicial power shall be vested in the supreme court, district court, and such other courts inferior to the supreme court as the general assembly may from time to time establish, courts may be organized not inferior to the district, provided they be inferior to the supreme court: Hetherington v. Bissell, 10-145.

401. A statute for the organization of a city court possessing in some respects a co-ordinate jurisdiction with the district court, held not unconstitutional under such provision: Davis v. Woolnough, 9-104.

As to the jurisdiction of the supreme, district, and other courts under the constitution and statutes, see COURTS.

V. AMENDMENTS.

402. Observance of forms: The provisions of the constitution for its own amendment are not simply directory, to be disregarded with impunity. The department charged with their observance is not the sole judge whether or not they have been complied with. The courts may inquire as to whether an amendment that does not relate to its own powers or functions has been adopted in the manner prescribed in the constitution, and if it finds that the requirements of the constitution have not been observed, it may declare that such amendment has not become a part of the constitution: Koehler v. Hill, 60-548.

403. Effect of adoption of new constitution: Provisions in a city charter inconsistent with the new constitution were repealed by its adoption: Dively v. Cedar Falls, 27-227; Scott v. Davenport, 84-208.

404. Crimes already committed were subject to punishment the same as though the new constitution had not been adopted: State v. Art, 6-511.

CONTEMPT.

As to contempt by ATTORNEYS, see that title, V.

1. Contempt of court: By statutory provision (Code, § 3491), contemptuous or insolent behavior must be toward the court while it is engaged in judicial duty, and such behavior must tend to impair the respect due to its authority in order that such acts may be punishable as contempt: Dunham v. State, 6-245.

2. If by general rule, or by special rule made as to some cause on trial, a publication of the testimony pending the investigation has been prohibited, a wilful violation of such rule might amount to contempt on the ground that it would be a resistance to the rule thus made, and especially if the rule itself declared such act a contempt: Ibid.

3. It would seem that the provisions of the Code must be regarded as a limitation upon the power of courts to punish for any other contempts than those therein specified: Ibid.

4. The publication of newspaper comments upon the decision of a court when the case is disposed of and the decision announced are not punishable as contempt: Ibid.

5. Publication of articles in a newspaper reflecting upon the conduct of a judge in relation to a cause disposed of before such publication does not amount to a contempt: State v. Anderson, 40-207.

6. Argument by attorney: After the decision of the court has been made, the time for argument in reference thereto has passed, and an attorney cannot, except by asking and obtaining leave, further argue the question or deny the statements of the court with reference to the facts involved in such determination: Russell v. French, 87-102.

7. Proceedings to punish: A proceeding for contempt for violating an order of injunction issued in an equity case may be prosecuted in a court of equity. The same court must inflict the punishment for contempt in which the order violated is granted: Manderscheid v. District Court, 69-240.

8. It is proper to conduct the proceedings for contempt under the title of the cause out of which the contempt arises: Ibid.

9. Any irregularity in serving a rule to show cause against punishment for contempt will be waived by the appearance of the party: Ibid.

10. A party charged with contempt has not a right to a jury trial although the act charged also constitutes a crime. The punishment for the contempt is not a punishment of the act as a crime, and the crime may be separately punished: Ibid.

Violation of injunction.

11. Violation of injunction: The writ of injunction, for the violation of which the proceedings are instituted, need not be filed in the proceeding: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69-177.

12. While the provision for a fine of five hundred dollars for violation of an injunction prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors is extraordinary in amount, it is not in that respect unconstitutional: Ibid.

13. Attachment for contempt is the proper mode of enforcing obedience to a continuing order in the nature of a mandatory injunction: State v. Baldwin, 57-266.

14. In replevin: The judge is authorized in vacation to punish as contempt an unlawful obstruction or hindrance to an order for the taking of property: State v. Myers, 44-580.

15. In mandamus: Where a writ of mandamus to collect a tax is disobeyed by the board of supervisors, but one action for contempt is allowed against them, and that a joint action. If the board are severally proceeded against, the actions may be consolidated so long as the act charged is disobedience of the same writ of mandamus: Durant v. Supervisors, Woolworth, 377.

16. Action against receiver: It is contempt to bring an action in a state court against a receiver appointed by a federal court without first obtaining leave of the court appointing the receiver. It is immaterial whether the property is thereby disturbed or not: Thompson v. Scott, 4 Dillon, 508.

17. Refusal to make affidavit: A witness may be punished for contempt in refusing to make an affidavit, and to answer questions as provided by Code, §§ 3692, 3693, and the fact that the affidavit desired would not be legally admissible in the proceeding in which it is sought, is no excuse for such refusal: Robb v. McDonald, 29-330; State ex rel. v. Seaton, 61-563.

18. Refusal to disclose property: Under statutory provisions (Code, § 349) the judge has power to impose a punishment upon a witness who refuses to answer questions propounded to him in a proceeding for the purpose of discovering his property: Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66-629.

19. Attachment of witness: A party cannot take advantage of the refusal of the court to attach a witness for contempt, who refuses to produce evidence: Manning v. Perkins, 16-71.

20. Nature of proceeding: The proceeding to punish a contempt of process is merely incidental to, and, to a great extent, independent of the original proceeding in which it may be invoked. It is in its nature criminal: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2-69.

21. An action for contempt is a criminal action, and if in the federal courts, the United States is a party thereto: Durant v. Supervisors, Woolworth, 377.

22. Arrest: While it is true that proceedings to punish for contempt are in a certain sense of a criminal nature, they are not governed by the code of criminal procedure, but by a special statute, and under such provisions it is sufficient to serve a rule upon defendant to show cause against the punishment, and the court is not bound to secure the arrest of defendant and his personal presence before proceeding against him: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69-177.

23. Where the proper order had been served upon defendant, held, that the court might proceed to take evidence, although defendant was not present personally or by counsel: Ibid.

24. A warrant may be made returnable on a certain day, which may be at a subsequent term, and it may direct the arrest of a person in contempt, in vacation, and provide for his release on bail: State v. Archer, 48-310.

25. Hearing: Where it is complained that after appearance of defendant in answer to a citation to show cause, the case is set down for hearing at such time as not to allow defendant sufficient opportunity to prepare therefor, he should make a special showing for postponement: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69-177.

26. Jurisdiction: In the absence of statute, each court of record is the sole and final judge in matters of contempt with reference to its proceedings: First Cong. Church v. Muscatine, 2-69.

27. The visiting committee of an insane hospital has no authority under the Code to punish a witness for contempt for refusing to testify when summoned before it: Brown v. Davidson, 59-461.

28. Accusation: In a proceeding against an attorney for contempt, the accusation should specify the manner in which he was disrespectful to the court. If it was done by insulting language, the words used by the accused should be given; if by disrespectful acts, those acts should be described so that the accused may know what words or acts he is required to meet. In a particular case, held, that the charge of contempt "in disobeying the orders of your Honor while engaged in your official capacity" was not sufficiently specific: Perry v. State, 8 G. Gr., 550.

29. In such case the finding or judgment should specify the particular charge or charges upon which the attorney's guilt is pronounced: Ibid.

30. Evidence: By statute (Code, § 3497), if the action of the court is founded upon evidence given by others, such evidence must be in writing, filed and preserved, and if the court acts upon its own knowledge in the premises, a statement of the facts upon which the order is founded must be entered upon the records of the court, or filed and preserved when the court keeps no record; and these provisions are applicable to proceedings for a contempt in refusing to deliver property under a writ of replevin: State v. Myers, 44-580.

31. An order entering a fine for contempt will be reversed when a statement of facts, upon which the order is founded, is not entered on the record in a case where the court acts upon its own knowledge: State v. Utley, 13-593; Skiff v. State, 2-550; State v. Dougherty, 32-261.

32. Where neither the record nor the warrant of commitment shows upon what evidence or facts an order of commitment is based, nor whether the same were within the knowledge of the court, the order will be reversed on certiorari: State v. Folsom, 34-583.

33. The affidavit required where the contempt is not committed in the immediate view or presence of the court, or does not come officially to its knowledge, need not show that affiant has personal knowledge of the facts: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69-177.

34. Although a failure of the judge to file and preserve a statement of the facts on which the order of contempt is founded will render the contempt invalid, yet where the transcript of the examination of a witness showing the questions asked, and the refusal to answer, was filed by the judge with his certificate, held, that it constituted a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the statute, although the transcript was made afterwards by a shorthand writer from notes taken at the time: Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66-629.

35. In a proceeding for contempt for publishing false, scandalous and defamatory articles in relation to the judge of the court, it is proper to hear testimony of witnesses as to the meaning and intent of the articles, and whether the same in their opinion referred to or meant the court or the judge thereof: Henry v. Ellis, 49-205.

36. Excuse or explanation: Where a reasonable time is asked to prepare a written explanation, it should be granted: State v. Duffy, 15-425.

37. Upon a proceeding for an alleged contempt in failing to obey an order of court, defendant may by answer show that there was no contempt in fact by reason of the impossibility of performing the required act. He is not required to proceed by appeal or otherwise for a modification of the original order: Hogue v. Hayes, 53-377.

38. A party cannot, in a proceeding for contempt for disobedience to a judicial order rendered by a court having jurisdiction, call in question the correctness of the order itself. The only legitimate inquiry in such case is, did the court have jurisdiction, and did it make an order which has been violated: State v. Baldwin, 57-266.

39. It is improper to punish for contempt, even when committed in the presence of the court, without giving the offending party opportunity to make a written explanation of his conduct under oath for the purpose of excusing the contempt or reducing the punishment, and such reasonable opportunity must be given before the party is adjudged guilty of contempt and punishment therefor is inflicted. When the court deems that a contempt of its authority has been committed in its presence, the attention of accused should be called thereto and a reasonable time fixed within which he may make the written explanation contemplated by the statute. He should not be called upon to do so on the instant when the accusation is made, unless the emergency is more than ordinarily great: Russell v. French, 67-102.

40. Where the statement of an administrator, required by order of court to pay over money received by him as such, shows the receipt of such money, but does not show its disbursement upon lawful claims, he does not purge himself of contempt by showing that he has disbursed the money upon claims not lawfully presented and allowed, and that he has no money of his own with which to satisfy the claim against him: Wise v. Chaney, 67-73.

41. Punishment: The court cannot punish an attorney for contempt by revoking or suspending his license. That can only be done in the manner provided by § 217 et seq.: State v. Start, 7-499.

42. Nor can it, by summary proceeding for contempt, compel a party to deliver to the sheriff a key or property claimed by another: Ibid.

43. A judge may, in vacation, impose the same punishment for contempt as if he were acting in court: State v. Myers, 44-580.

44. The judge or court imposing a fine for contempt may direct imprisonment of defendant until such fine be paid; the extent of imprisonment being limited by the directions of Code, § 4509: Ibid.

45. A party who is in contempt has no right to be heard in defense of the action in which the contempt has been adjudged, but failure to pay money awarded as temporary alimony for which judgment has been entered does not constitute contempt in this respect: Baily v. Baily, 69-77.

That a party in contempt cannot file pleadings so as to save default against him, see DEFAULT, §§ 25-27.

CONTINUANCES.

[The statutory provisions on this subject, Code, §§ 2748-2760, are applicable to both civil and criminal cases: See Code, § 4419.]

1. Discretion: The application for a continuance is addressed peculiarly to the sound legal discretion of the judge, and his ruling thereon will not be interfered with on appeal, unless the supreme court is clearly satisfied that this discretion has been abused and injustice thereby done: Widner v. Hunt, 4-355;

Childs v. Heaton, 11-271; State v. Rorabacher, 19-154; Boone v. Mitchell, 33-45; Finch v. Billings, 22-228; Harrison v. Charlton, 37-134; Peck v. Parchen, 52-46; State v. Wells, 61-629.

2. Application for continuance not based upon absence of witnesses, but upon the ground that the prisoner should suffer substantial prejudice if then compelled to go to trial, is addressed peculiarly to the discretion of the lower court and will not be interfered with unless abused: State v. Reid, 20-413.

3. The discretion which is conferred upon the court is, however, not arbitrary, but is to be governed and controlled by legal rules: Purington v. Frank, 2-565.

4. Where a party clearly brings himself within the law in an application for continuance, and no special circumstances are shown defeating his right, it is the duty of the court to grant the motion, and a refusal to do so will constitute reversible error: Welsh v. Savery, 4-241; State v. Barrett, 8-536.

5. While much is left to the discretion of the court in passing upon such an application, its ruling should not be arbitrary nor in violation of the rights of either party: State v. Painter, 40-298.

An appeal does not lie from the ruling of the court upon a motion for continuance. It is a mere intermediate order, not materially affecting the final decision, and error in the ruling can only be urged upon appeal from the final judgment: See APPEALS, § 39.

6. Grounds; absence of evidence: In a criminal case the state as well as defendant is entitled to reasonable opportunity to procure its witnesses and be prepared for trial, and where a proper application for a continuance is made by the state with sufficient showing of diligence, it should be granted: State v. Painter, 40-298.

7. In a particular case, held, that a continuance should have been granted on application of defendants to allow them to procure testimony as to their general character: State v. Nash, 7-347, 373.

8. Where, in a prosecution for murder, defendant asked a continuance on account of the absence of a witness by whom he expected to prove that he (witness) did the killing, held, that the improbability that the witness would thus subject himself to a criminal prosecution, was not sufficient ground for refusing a continuance: State v. Farr, 33-553.

Party not at fault.—Diligence required.

9. Party not at fault: A continuance should not be granted for a cause growing out of the fault of a party: Connor v. Griffin, 27-248.

10. A continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness should not be granted to defendant in default, who offers no defense, nor when the residence of the witness is not given, and diligence in ascertaining it is not shown: James v. Arbuckle, 8-272.

11. Diligence required: Application for continuance, based upon absence of papers which have been taken from the court by the attorney of the party asking the continuance, may properly be refused: Wright v. Clark, 2 G. Gr., 86.

12. The party seeking a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness must show that he has availed himself of the means given by the statute to procure the attendance of such witness, or to obtain his deposition: State v. Cross, 12-66.

13. The fact that a witness examined before the grand jury, and whose name is indorsed upon the indictment, is subpoenaed by the prosecution but does not appear, cannot be made the basis of a motion by defendant for continuance, after the jury is sworn, upon the ground that he is a material witness for defendant. If his attendance on behalf of defendant is desired, he should be subpoenaed by defendant and steps taken to ascertain whether he will be present: State v. Hayden, 45-11.

14. Where defendant was a resident of California, and his attorney had been for more than two months in communication with him, but it did not appear that he had taken any steps to secure the testimony of his client, held, that there was not sufficient showing of diligence to entitle defendant to a continuance for the purpose of having his testimony taken: Argall v. Pugh, 56-308.

15. Absence of a witness held not sufficient ground for a continuance where the deposition of the witness could have been taken: Bell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64-321.

16. A party must show, not only that he made proper efforts to obtain the desired evidence after he knew that it might be obtained, but also that he used due diligence in discovering it: State v. Bell, 49-440.

17. An affidavit in a particular case, held insufficient, in that it did not show that the witness' absence was unknown until so near the term that his deposition could not be taken: Widner v. Hunt, 4-355.

18. A party is held to greater diligence in procuring the deposition of a non-resident than that of a resident witness: Peck v. Parchen, 52-46.

19. Where a commission issued in December to take the deposition of a witness, and was not returned before trial in the following June, held, that sufficient diligence was not shown: Cole v. Stratford, 12-345.

20. It is not required of a party, in the exercise of proper diligence, that he have witnesses in attendance from a distance to meet a claim not yet made in the pleadings, although he may have noticed that such claim will be made: Sapp v. Aiken, 68-699.

21. The supreme court would be slow to disturb an order of continuance made upon application of the prosecution after the failure of the jury to agree in a criminal prosecution submitted to them, where the ground for asking such continuance is that witnesses for the prosecution have been allowed to depart from the court before the conclusion of the trial and cannot be secured before the next term: State v. Miller, 65-60.

22. A party is not entitled to a continuance for the purpose of taking testimony where the action has been so long pending and the necessity of the testimony has been apparent for such length of time that it is negligence on his part not to have procured his testimony sooner: Greither v. Alexander, 15-470.

23. A party cannot have a continuance on account of the absence of a witness where it does not appear that proper steps were taken to secure his attendance or that the party had any reason to believe that the witness would remain within the reach of a subpoena during the term: Fiske v. Berryhill, 10-203.

24. As to whether sufficient diligence was used under particular circumstances, see Fiske v. Berryhill, 10-203; State v. Scott, 44-93; State v. Spurbeck, 44-667; State v. Dakin, Showing of diligence.—Statement of testimony.

52-395; Brandt v. McDowell, 52-230; Kimball v. Bryan, 56-632; State v. Stone, 65-366.

25. Showing of diligence: It is not sufficient to state that due diligence has been used; the facts constituting such diligence must be shown: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155.

26. The facts constituting due diligence must be shown, and from such facts the court will determine whether the necessary diligence has been exercised: Brady v. Malone, 4-146.

27. Affidavits for the purpose of showing due diligence should be strictly construed and most strongly against the applicant for the continuance: Brady v. Malone, 4-146.

28. The showing in particular cases for a continuance on account of the absence of material witnesses held sufficient: State v. Dakin, 52-395; State v. Nash, 7-347, 373.

29. In particular cases held that the showing of diligence was not sufficient to require the court to grant the continuance: Thurston v. Cavenor, 8-155; Walker v. Scofield, 39-666; Adams v. Peck, 4-551; Brotherton v. Brotherton, 41-112; State v. Spurbeck, 44-667; Randall v. Fockler, 52-618; Finch v. Billings, 22-228.

30. Statement as to what absent witness will prove: Where the application for continuance is made on account of the absence of witnesses, the affidavit ought to give the names of the witnesses, their residence and the particular facts which the party expects to prove, or give some excuse for not doing so, not only in order that it may appear that substantial justice requires the continuance, but because the opposite party has a right to know the facts expected to be proved in order that he may admit them and thus prevent a continuance if he so desires. (Code, §§ 2750, 2751): State ex rel. v. Tilghman, 6-496; Olds v. Glaze, 7-86.

31. The affidavit as to what affiant believes witness will prove must state facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions: State v. Felter, 25-67.

32. A statement that the party expects to prove by the witness "all the material allegations contained in his answer" is not sufficient: Olds v. Glaze, 7-86.

33. The affidavit must show that the witness would, if present, testify to facts material and relevant to the issue: State v. Bennett, 52-724; State v. Williams, 8-533; State v. Falconer, 70—.

34. Where the ground for continuance was the absence of defendants to the suit, who it was claimed were the only witnesses by whom the defense could be proven, held, that the application was not sufficient without setting out the facts to which such witnesses would testify: Jackson v. Boyles, 64-428.

35. Where the showing as to what it was expected to prove by a witness whose absence was made the basis of an application for continuance did not indicate that the matters to which he would testify would show any legal defense, held, that the continuance was properly refused: State v. Clark, 69-196.

36. Admission by opposite party of testimony set out in application:¹ Where the opposite party admits that the witness, if present, would testify to the facts stated, the affidavit may be read to the jury as the basis of such admission: Strong v. Hart, 7-484.

37. But it can be read only in so far as it states facts which the witness, if present, would be allowed to testify to: State v. Sater, 8-420.

38. The admission does not preclude legal objections which might be made to the testimony if the witness was present: State v. Geddis, 42-264.

39. The statements of the affidavit, if admitted and read, are to be taken as the testimony of the witness in court, and cannot be impeached by proof of different statements made out of court, unless a proper foundation therefor has been laid, even though such outside statements were under oath: State v. Shannehan, 22-435.

40. The affidavit and admission are not admissible as evidence at a subsequent term: State v. Felter, 32-49.

41. As to whether the provisions denying a continuance on the ground of absence of

¹ Code, § 2751. If the application is insufficient, it shall be overruled; if held sufficient, the cause shall be continued, unless the adverse party will admit that the witness, if present, would testify to the facts therein stated, in which event the cause shall not be continued, but the party may read as evidence of such witness the facts held by the court to be properly stated.

Showing.—Other grounds.

witnesses in case of admission as to what the witness is expected to prove is in violation of defendant's constitutional right to compulsory process for the attendance of his witnesses, quere: Trulock v. State, 1-515.

42. No other witnesses: The affidavit must show that there are no other witnesses by whom the facts stated can be proved: Thompson v. Abbott, 11-193.

43. But where a party stated in his affidavit that he knew of no person by whom the same facts could be "as fully proved as by said" witness, held, that the affidavit was sufficient: Welsh v. Savery, 4-241.

44. Ability to procure witness at next term: The provision that the affidavit shall show reasonable ground of belief as to the attendance of witnesses at the next term, etc., contemplates more than a mere statement of a belief that the testimony can be procured: State v. Rorabacher, 19-154.

45. A continuance should not be granted upon an affidavit that the party knows of no witness in the state by whom he can prove the desired fact, where he fails to state that there is a person anywhere by whom such fact can be proven: Thompson v. Lord, 14-591.

46. Other grounds of continuance; absence of counsel: A continuance may be granted in a particular case on account of absence of counsel, but if such application is refused, the supreme court would require very strong circumstances, manifesting a clear abuse of discretion, before it would interfere: Brady v. Malone, 4-146.

47. While the absence of a party's attorney on account of sickness might be a ground for continuing a cause to a later day in the same term, under the circumstances of a particular case, held, that it was not sufficient to require a continuance over the term: State v. Ostrander, 18-435, 448.

48. Where it was shown that the attorney for one of the parties at the time of the motion for continuance was very sick and unable to do business, and the nature of the case was such that no other attorney could prepare for its trial at that time, held, that it was error to refuse a continuance, although it appeared that afterwards, and prior to the time of the trial, such attorney had so far recovered as to be at the court-house, though not in a condition to try the case: Rice v. Melendy, 36-166.

49. Absence of the party: To warrant the granting of a continuance on account of the absence of the party himself, the court should require much stricter showing of diligence or cause for such absence than in case of a witness not a party: Gates v. Hamilton, 12-50.

50. Where an affidavit for continuance showed the absence of a party to the suit, but did not show that his presence was necessary except as a witness, and did not state what was expected to be proved by his testimony nor the particular facts to which he would testify, held, that a continuance was properly refused: Jackson v. Boyles, 64-428.

51. The showing in a particular case held not sufficient to entitle defendant to a continuance on account of his own absence: Brandt v. McDowell, 52-230.

52. The appointment of a guardian ad litem may be a proper ground for continuance to enable him to prepare the case for trial: Blythe v. Blythe, 25-266.

Further as to appointment of guardian ad litem, see PARTIES, §§ 235-238.

53. The substitution of an administrator as a party is not a ground for continuance: Masterson v. Brown, 51-442.

54. Military service: Under statute granting to defendants in the military service of the United States the right of continuance in actions brought by or against them, held, that under the terms of the statute the continuance might be granted as well before as after the filing of the answer: McCormick v. Rusch, 15-127.

55. Under such statute, held, that a paymaster in the United States service was entitled to continuance as much as any soldier or other officer, and that the disbanding of the volunteer forces would not take away such right if the condition of the service required him to continue on duty: Clark v. Woodbury, 23-61.

56. Prejudice must appear: Under equity practice, held, that where defendant had called for a replication under oath, and the same was duly given, he was not entitled to a continuance in order to procure attendance of plaintiff as a witness to testify concerning the same matter already embraced in his sworn replication: Stevens v. Campbell, 0-538.

57. Where a criminal case was continued to a special term in the absence of the prisoner on account of the previous connection of the judge with the case, held, that no prejudice resulted to the accused in view of the fact that the continuance would have resulted from operation of law in any event: State v. Linhart, 23-314.

58. A party complaining of the refusal of the court to grant a continuance upon an amendment being filed by the opposite party must show that he suffered prejudice, such as that he had not information of all the evidence required to make his defense, or that his witnesses were not all present, or the like: York v. Clemens, 41-95.

59. Where defendant asked for a two days' continuance for the purpose of procuring testimony, which was overruled, and the cause was proceeded with, but defendant was not called upon to introduce evidence until the third day after, held, that he was not prejudiced by refusal to grant his application: Winklemans v. Des Moines Northwestern R. Co., 62-11.

60. Where a case has been continued upon the application of a party at previous terms, reasonable prejudice should be shown before another continuance is granted: Rosecranes v. Iowa & M. Telephone Co., 65-444.

61. Facts in a particular case held not to show sufficient prejudice to entitle a party to continuance on account of the absence of testimony: Owens v. Hart, 66-565.

62. Time for filing motion: The motion should be filed as soon after the second day of the term as it becomes certain that it will have to be filed: Bays v. Herring, 51-286.

63. If the affidavit is not made on the second day, a sufficient excuse therefor should be stated in the affidavit: Randall v. Fockler, 52-618.

64. If filed after the second day, and no reason for the delay is shown, the motion should be overruled: Lucas v. Casady, 12-567; Chicago & S. W. R. Co. v. Heard, 44-358; Bell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 64-321.

65. Under the facts in a particular case, held, that it did not sufficiently appear that the application was made as soon as it became certain that it would need to be made as required by statute: Bays v. Herring, 51-286.

66. Where the application was made on the day the cause was regularly reached for trial, held, that in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it would be presumed that it was overruled for the reason that it was not made within the time required: Woolheather v. Risley, 88-486.

67. Continuance as to one party: Where the action was against two defendants as a firm and not against them as individuals, held, that a continuance against one would operate as a continuance against both: Butler v. McCall, 15-480.

68. Amendment of application: Before the enactment of the statutory provision (Code, § 2753) that the application shall be amended but once unless by permission to supply a clerical error, held, that the practice of suffering affidavits for continuance to be amended or new ones to be filed was one which might be productive of much evil, and should be permitted, if at all, with great caution: Widner v. Hunt, 4-855.

69. But held that it was certainly within the discretion of the court to refuse leave to amend an affidavit alleged to be insufficient or to file a new affidavit, unless it was for the purpose of presenting facts which have transpired or come to the knowledge of the party since filing the original: Ibid.

70. Affidavits: It is not competent for the attorney to swear to an affidavit as to facts for a continuance which are solely within the knowledge of his client: Ibid.

71. Counter-affidavits: In case of a motion for continuance on account of the absence of evidence, counter-affidavits are not receivable: State v. Bowers, 17-46; State v. Dakin, 52-395; State v. Wells, 61-629.

72. But where the motion was overruled because insufficient in itself, held, that the action of the court could not be reversed on appeal although counter-affidavits had been received and considered: Williams v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 50-561.

73. An application under Code, § 2749, authorizing a continuance when "justice will be thereby more nearly obtained," for instance, where it is asked on account of excitement and prejudice against defendant in a criminal case, the application may be resisted by counter-affidavits as to the matters relied upon: State v. Wells, 61-629.

I. FORM.

1. Under seal; bond: The term bond implies an instrument under seal: Steamboat Lake of the Woods v. Shaw, 2 G. Gr., 91.

2. Effect of: The law in force at the time a contract is made determines whether the instrument is in such form as to be considered under seal or not: Madera v. Jones, Mor., 204.

3. An allusion in the instrument to the seal, without any seal or scrawl in fact, does not make the instrument a specialty: Long v. Long, Mor., 48.

4. A recognizance is an acknowledgment, before some judicial officer, of a previous indebtedness, and must be entered into before and in the presence of such officer. It need not be under seal: Lewis v. Mull, 3 G. Gr., 487.

5. Distinguished from bond: A bond, on the other hand, must be under seal, but need not be executed in the presence of an officer, even though required to be accepted and filed by him: Ibid.

6. Of record; bail bond: At common law the mode for taking a recognizance was for the court or magistrate taking the same to state at large to the bail the obligation and its condition to which they assented. Of this a short minute was made at the time, but it need not be signed. From this minute a formal record of a recognizance was prepared, and upon being filed, it became a part of the record of the court. In whatever form entered into, a bail bond amounts to an obligation of record, being entered into before a court or magistrate duly authorized to do some particular act: State v. Gorley, 2-52.

Execution and delivery.

Further as to bail bonds, see CRIMINAL LAW, III, 12.

7. A judgment is a contract of record, and as one of the essentials of a contract is the assent of both contracting parties, a judgment by confession, entered into at the instance and request of the defendant without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, is not binding: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Mather, 30-283.

II. EXECUTION AND DELIVERY.

a. Signature.

8. Where to appear: It is immaterial in what part of a memorandum of a contract the names of the parties appear. It is a sufficient signing, under the statute of frauds, if a party's name is signed in any part, provided the signature is put there by the party or by his authority, and is applicable to the substance of the written agreement: Wise v. Ray, 3 G. Gr., 430.

9. Pleading; proof: When a written contract is set out in the pleadings and recognized by them on both sides, it is not essential to prove the signature: Brewer's Estate v. Crow, 4 G. Gr., 520.

See further, PLEADINGS, V, d.

10. Signature by one for all: All the persons jointly interested in a written contract as joint contracting parties may be liable, where one or more of the parties sign the same, if the signature is intended to bind all and is so accepted: Seekell v. Fletcher, 53-330.

11. One partner individually for all: So where one partner signs his individual name with the understanding of himself and the other partners that it is to bind the firm, and it is accepted by the other party with such understanding, the firm will be bound: Barcroft v. Haworth, 29-462.

Fraud or mistake: As to how far fraud or mistake can be relied upon to defeat a contract duly signed, see infra, V.

By agent: As to execution of a contract by an agent and how far the same is binding, either upon the agent or the principal, see AGENCY, III, a.

12. Official capacity; personal liability: The general rule is that the language of the body of the instrument controls, and if that imports a personal obligation it will be held to be such, notwithstanding the signers have attached to their names some official designation: and where the contract was one which the signers had no right to execute in their official capacity, and which, in the body of it, appeared to be executed in their individual capacity, held, that they were individually bound: Revolving Scraper Co. v. Tuttle, 61-423.

13. Persons assuming to bind a corporation by covenants made by them in its name become personally liable if there is no corporation to be bound: Allen v. Pegram, 16-163.

14. Where a constable contracted for the board of a prisoner, with the express agreement that the other party should look to the county for his compensation, held, that he did not become personally liable: White v. Jones, 67-241.

And see AGENCY, §§ 98-125, and SCHOOLS, §§ 78-81.

b. Date.

15. Presumption: As between the parties to an instrument, the date thereof raises a legal presumption of the time of its execution, but as to persons not parties no such presumption arises: Meldrum v. Clark, Mor., 130.

c. Certainty of terms.

16. Power to make certain: Where a contract provided for the making of certain improvements in accordance with specifications to be furnished by the other party, held, that as the latter had it in his power to render the contract certain, he could not object to it for uncertainty: Audubon County v. American Emigrant Co., 40-460.

17. Where the vendee of land agreed that in case he sold the same for more than the purchase price, and a reasonable amount in addition thereto, he would pay vendor one-half of the excess, it being contemplated that the land might prove to be coal land and worth much more than the purchase price, held, that such contract was not void for uncertainty: Miller v. Kendig, 55-174.

d. Delivery.

18. By third person: Where a contract was executed and placed in the hands of a third party to be delivered over upon the performance of conditions, held, that such third party had authority to make final delivery without direction from the party to the contract: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Palmer, 42-222.

19. Unauthorized delivery; railway subscription: Where it was provided in a subscription of stock to a railway company that the subscription should be turned over to the company and become binding upon the subscribers when a committee named therein should be satisfied that the road had been completed as therein specified, held, that a delivery of the subscription without the performance of the conditions required was unauthorized and did not bind the subscribers: Davenport & St. P. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 40-477.

20. Delivery after rescission: Where a contract was executed coupled with conditions, such conditions not being performed, and the party to the contract notified the person holding it for delivery that he would not be further bound thereby, and it was afterward delivered to the other party, who had notice of the refusal of the first party to be bound, held, that the contract could not be enforced: Hastings & A. R. Co. v. Miles, 56-447.

III. MUTUALITY AND ASSENT.

a. Mutuality.

21. Essential: Mutuality of obligation is essential to the validity of a contract: Usher v. Livermore, 2-117.

22. Unilateral: While it is competent for parties to make a unilateral contract, the intention to do so must be clear and satisfactory to warrant such a construction: Flanders v. Merrill, 38-583; Nowlin v. Pyne, 40-166.

23. Therefore, held, that an agreement to convey, upon payment of specified purchase money to the other party, was sufficient in a particular case to bind the purchaser: Flanders v. Merrill, 38-583.

24. The fact that a contract recognizes a possibility of failure to perform on the part of one of the parties will not show conclusively that the contract was not intended to be binding upon such party: Nowlin v. Pyne, 40-166.

25. Courts will not give a unilateral construction to contracts, unless their terms clearly and beyond question show that such was the intention of the parties: Barrett v. Dean, 21-423.

26. Privilege to purchase: A contract in a lease of land to sell the undivided half of the premises, in case the lessee shall conclude to purchase at a certain time named, and at a price fixed, is not necessarily wanting in mutuality: Crawford v. Paine, 19-172.

27. Agreement to purchase of third party: A contract between A. and B., by which the former agrees to purchase land of C. and pay C. therefor, cannot be enforced by him, there being no consideration moving from A. to B., and C. not being a party nor bound: Phillips v. Van Schaick, 87-229.

b. Assent.

28. Wanting as to one particular: Where one of the parties named in a contract, when it was presented to him for signature, made a memorandum thereon in pencil, indicating that in one respect the contract was wrong, and then signed it, held, that there was no assent on his part, and that the contract was not binding, although the other party misunderstood such memorandum: Richards v. Burden, 59-723, 736.

29. Illegal condition: Where parties to a contract do not agree as to one of the conditions thereof, the contract is not binding, even though the condition as to which they disagree would be illegal if incorporated therein: Steel v. Miller, 40-402.

30. Assent to entire proposition: While an offer by one party, assented to by the other, will generally constitute a contract, the assent must comprehend the whole of the proposition. It must be exactly equal to its extent and terms and must not qualify it by any new matter. A proposal to accept, or acceptance of an offer on terms varying from those proposed, amounts to a rejection of the offer: Baker v. Johnson County, 37-186.

31. Proposition and acceptance: An acceptance in order to bind the parties must be unequivocal and unambiguous. Its language should be such as to leave no avenue of escape for the party using it from the obligation of the contract based upon such proposition and acceptance: Goodenow v. Barnes, 40-561.

32. Time for acceptance: Where an offer is made without limitation as to time, it will be considered a continuing one, and good for at least a reasonable time unless withdrawn: Judd v. Day, 50-247.

33. Withdrawal of proposition: Where a memorandum of pieces of goods was furnished marked "good for spring orders," and goods were furnished thereunder, held, that the memorandum was but a continuing offer, binding upon the party only so far as acted upon by the other party, and which might be withdrawn at any time without liability in damages for failure to fill further orders after giving notice of such withdrawal: Reis v. McConnel, 60-468.

34. Parol acceptance: Where an offer is made in writing, and the party to whom it is made directs a third person as his agent to obtain better terms if possible, and if not, to accept the offer, and the offer is then accepted in parol, the contract is to be regarded as oral and not written: Hulbert v. Atherton, 59-91.

And see infra, § 55.

35. Concurrent assent: Although consent of the parties is necessary, it is not essential that their wills should concur at the same instant of time. If the assent of the party receiving a proposition is declared before the will of the party making it is revoked, the presumption is, unless the contrary appears, that the will of the latter continues and the contract becomes complete: Moore v. Pierson, 6-279.

36. Contracts by mail; acceptance by letter: When an offer by letter is accepted, the contract is complete, provided the party making the offer is alive at the time of such acceptance: Ibid.

37. When a proposal is accepted by letter, the contract is deemed to become complete when the letter is mailed, provided the offer is standing and the acceptance is made within a reasonable time: Ferrier v. Storer, 63-484.

38. When a negotiation is carried on by letter, the party to whom an offer is made is held to have accepted or rejected it from the time his answer is deposited in the mail: Hunt v. Higman, 70—.

39. Acceptance after the time limited, or in the absence of express limitation, after the lapse of a reasonable time, does not impose upon the person making the offer any obligation, and he is not bound by the acceptance, although he fails to notify the acceptor that the acceptance is too late: Ibid.

40. The burden of proving that the letter of acceptance was mailed within a reasonable time is upon the party seeking to establish the contract: Ibid.

41. Answer must correspond to proposition: To constitute a contract by correspondence one letter must contain a definite proposition and the answer must be an unqualified acceptance: Baxter v. Bishop, 65-582.

42. An offer is not accepted when the reply contains a qualification: Clay v. Ricketts, 66-362.

43. Certain matters contained in a letter making a proposition, held not to constitute a condition upon which the proposition was made, and therefore not necessary to be assented to by the party accepting: Ferrier v. Storer, 63-484.

44. In a particular case, held, that letters between the parties were not sufficient to constitute a proposition on one hand, and an acceptance on the other, for the reason that the proposition did not clearly appear and the acceptance did not conform to the terms of the proposition: Knight v. Cooley, 34-218.

45. Evidence, consisting of letters considered, and held not to amount to an acceptance of a proposition: Crane v. Gritton, 54-738.

46. Receipt of acceptance must be shown: It is not sufficient proof of a contract to show an acceptance of a proposition addressed to the party making it by the party to whom it was made, through the postoffice, without evidence of its receipt by the party to whom it is sent: Compton v. Comer, 4-577.

47. The place of contract is where the offer is made; and where an offer of sale is made, the payment of money by the opposite party in accordance with the proposition should be at that place unless otherwise specified: Sawyer v. Brossart, 67-678.

Assent.—Acceptance.—Advertisements and rewards.

48. Compliance with proposition: While there can be no contract without the consent of the parties, it is not necessary that their wills should concur at the same instant. If A. promises B. to pay him a certain sum of money if he will do a particular act, and B. does the act, the contract becomes binding although B. at the time of the promise does not engage to do it: Goodpaster v. Porter, 11-161.

49. Upon the performance of the condition by the promisee the contract is clothed with a valid consideration which relates back, and the promise at once becomes obligatory: Des Moines Valley R. Co. v. Graff, 27-99.

50. A mere voluntary compliance with the terms of a proposed contract which has never been completed does not render it obligatory upon the other party: Overman v. Kerr, 17-485.

51. Where a step-mother agreed that if her step-daughter would remain unmarried, and live with her and assist her in caring for her property, she would convey such property to such step-daughter, and the latter did remain and perform the services contemplated, held, that an acceptance of the terms of the contract might be inferred from the rendering of the services: Franklin v. Tuckerman, 68-572.

c. Acceptance without signature.

52. Acceptance of written contract: Where a contract is signed by one party and delivered to and acted upon by the other, the latter may maintain an action thereon although it is not signed by him: Dows v. Morse, 62-231.

53. Where one party accepts and adopts as binding upon him a written contract signed by the other party thereto, and acts upon it, he becomes bound thereby to the same extent as if he had put his name to it: Attiz v. Pelan, 5-336.

Vendee may be bound by a contract to convey executed by the vendor and accepted by the vendee, although the latter does not sign it: See VENDORS. §§ 204, 205.

54. Mere verbal consent to the making of a written contract by another, which does not purport to bind the person thus consenting, will not make him a party thereto: Mitchell v. McHenry, 62-352.

55. Oral contract: If the party thus consenting verbally agrees to be bound by such contract, it will be an oral and not a written contract as to him: Ibid.

And see supra, § 84.

d. Public advertisements, rewards, bids, bounty.

56. Representations in public advertisements: Where a bank had induced the public to receive bank bills of another institution by representations in its public advertisements as to the solvency of such institution, and such bills had subsequently become worthless, held, that the bank inducing their acceptance was liable on its representations to every individual who saw the advertisement, or heard their representations, and acted thereon: Tarbell v. Stevens, 7-163.

57. Reward for arrest of criminal or recovery of money: A city cannot legally offer a reward for the arrest and conviction of a criminal: Hanger v. Des Moines, 52-193.

58. Neither can a county offer such reward; but it may offer a reward for the recovery of stolen property: Hawk v. Marion County, 48-472.

59. Where a person in another state acts upon the promise made by a board of supervisors in Iowa to pay a reward for the arrest and conviction of persons who have robbed the county treasury, he is bound to know the fact that the board has no power to offer such reward. In such case the members of the board will not be individually liable: Huthsing v. Bosquet, 3 McCrary, 569.

60. Under the statutory provision (Code, § 4172) that no compensation, fee, or reward can be paid to or received by a public officer of the state for services rendered or expense incurred in procuring a demand for a fugitive from justice, or the surrender of such fugitive from justice, etc., held, that a deputy sheriff who had, under contract with the surety on the bail bond of the escaped criminal, ascertained the whereabouts of such criminal and brought him back under requisition, could not recover from such surety the sum stipulated in the contract: Day v. Townsend, 70—.

Ratification.

61. If the reward for the recovery of the money is independent of that for the arrest and conviction of the criminal, it may be recovered although the latter cannot be: Hawk v. Marion County, 48-472.

62. Where a reward was offered by a county for the recovery of money, held, that a person giving information leading to the recovery of a portion of the money was entitled to a pro rata share of the reward: Ibid.

63. Peace officers acting under process in arresting a criminal are not entitled to a reward offered for such arrest unless the terms of the reward offered clearly include them: Means v. Hendershott, 24-78.

64. Bid: Where the right to reject any and all bids is reserved in a proposal made according to law by the board of directors of a school district to let a contract to the highest bidder, the action of the board in awarding the contract cannot be controlled by an action of mandamus at the suit of a bidder claiming to be entitled to the awarding of the contract: Hanlin v. Independent Dist., 66-69.

65. Bounty: One who volunteers before the offer of a bounty is not entitled to the bounty offered although he believed at the time of volunteering that the bounty had already been offered: Wells v. Scott County, 36-141.

e. Ratification.

66. Estoppel: Where the parties to a contract mutually recognize it as binding upon them by performing its conditions, as well as by temporary modifications of its terms asked by one party and granted by the other, such acts are sufficient to estop both from setting up want of obligation upon either: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33-422, 491.

See further, ESTOPPEL.

67. Ratification of understanding: Where, in a negotiation between parties, one of them acts under his understanding, although an erroneous one, and the other accepts such understanding and proceeds in accordance therewith, he thereby ratifies the contract as understood by the other party: Hayes v. Steele, 82-44.

68. Ratification of act done under duress: If the maker of a note procured by duress afterward accepts the surrender of a prior valid note for the same indebtedness, which prior note is then canceled on the strength of the execution of the second note, he thereby ratifies and confirms the note executed under duress and it becomes binding: Barile v. Breniger, 87-139.

69. Ratification of unauthorized acts of agent: The ratification of an unauthorized act of an agent will bind the principal to the same extent as though the agent had had authority: Berryhill v. Jones, 85-385.

70. Such a ratification relates back in legal effect to the time when the contract was made: Herriott v. Kersey, 69-111.

71. Ratification in part: The principal cannot, of his own mere authority, without consent of the other party, ratify a transaction by his agent in part and repudiate it as to the rest. He must either adopt the whole or none. Therefore, where a ratification is established as to a part, it operates as a confirmation of the whole as to that particular transaction of the agent: Krider v. Trustees of Western College, 81-547.

Further as to ratification of unauthorized acts of agent or officer, see AGENCY, V; and MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, §§ 62-65 and 834-836.

As to ratification of contract as to purchase of land, see VENDORS, §§ 6, 7.

72. Ratification of change of contract: Where a party without authority assumes to change or release a contract obligation in behalf of another, such change will not be binding upon the person in whose behalf it is made unless acquiesced in by him: Doyle v. Rutledge, 22-552.

73. The burden of proof will be on the party relying on such change to show that the party to be bound thereby was made acquainted with the new arrangements and assented thereto: Ibid.

74. Partial payment: Where a school board paid to a teacher a sum of money claimed for services rendered under a contract, but at the same time repudiated the contract, held, that the payment did not amount to a ratification as to the balance of the contract: Herrington v. District T'p, 47-11.

Implied.—Acceptance of services.

IV. IMPLIED CONTRACTS.

a. Acceptance of services.

75. Voluntary service not accepted: The performance of labor for another without privity or request, with no voluntary acceptance of the labor shown, affords no cause of action, however meritorious or beneficial it may have been to the party for whom it was performed: Hathaway v. Winneshiek County, 30-596.

76. Promise implied from request or acceptance of services; quantum meruit: Where one performs services for another at his request or with his consent, without any agreement or understanding as to wages or remuneration, the law implies a promise to pay the reasonable value of the services, and the same may be recovered upon a quantum meruit: Rea v. Flathers, 81-545.

77. Where a party knowingly and without objection permits another to render services for him of any kind whatever, the law implies a promise to pay what the same are reasonably worth: Shelton v. Johnson, 40-84.

78. Gratuitous services; agreement to repay: Where one renders services for another gratuitously, and with no expectation of being paid, there is no moral obligation incurred which will support a subsequent promise to pay. Under such circumstances no obligation, either legal or moral, is incurred: Allen v. Bryson, 67-591.

79. Services of member of family: Ordinarily the law implies a promise to pay for services rendered which are known and accepted; but where the person rendering the service is a member of the family of the person served and receiving support therein, either as child, relative or visitor, the law presumes such services to be gratuitous, and before compensation can be recovered in such cases it must be shown that there was an express promise or a mutual expectation that compensation should be made: Scully v. Scully, 28-548; Harper v. Kissick, 52-733; Keegan v. Mulone's Estate, 62-208.

80. Where plaintiff rendered services as a member of the family of decedent, in the character of a friend, dependent, or protégé, without express contract for payment, or mutual expectation of payment, held, that he could not recover for such services from decedent's estate: Smith v. Johnson, 45-308.

81. Services rendered by a daughter, who has attained majority but has continued to live with her parents as a member of the family, do not give rise to a promise to pay any consideration for such services, and if such services are rendered without any express promise by the father to pay for them, his subsequent agreement to pay would not be supported by any legal consideration: Chadwick v. Devore, 69-637.

82. Where a son, a widower, took up his abode with his parents, who were old and infirm, and carried on the farm on which they lived, receiving his support therefrom, held, that the law did not raise an implied contract for compensation for the services rendered: Wilson v. Wilson, 52-44.

83. Support furnished to member of family does not give rise to an implied contract to pay for the same in the absence of an agreement or understanding that such support should be paid for; but in a particular case, held, that an agreement to pay for such support before it was furnished was sufficiently shown: Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60-424.

84. Where plaintiff's mother-in-law, being infirm, requested plaintiff to take care of her, which he did, she being bed-ridden and not rendering any service in return, and expressing her purpose to pay for such services, held, that she was not a member of his family, and the circumstances would raise an implied contract on which plaintiff could recover for such services: Wence v. Wykoff, 52-644.

85. Where defendant lived with plaintiff, his son-in-law, who was in his employ, and occupied a house belonging to defendant, held, that the circumstances were not such as to defeat plaintiff's recovery for defendant's board: Rogers v. Millard, 44-466.

86. Physician's services; quantum meruit: Where a consulting physician was called by the physician in the case, and rendered services to the patient without notice of an agreement between the attending physician and the patient that such services were to be paid for by the attending physician, held, that the patient was liable to the consulting physician upon an implied contract: Shelton v. Johnson, 40-84.

Acceptance of services.

87. A physician suing for the value of services rendered has not the burden of proving, when lack of skill and care in the treatment is pleaded as defense, that in such treatment he exercised proper skill and care, but the burden of proving such defense rests upon defendant: Robinson v. Campbell, 47-625.

88. The circumstances of a party for whom professional services are rendered by a physician do not constitute an element in fixing the value of such services: Ibid.

89. Services of attorney: Where one of several co-defendants employed an attorney to act for all, and such attorney rendered services with the knowledge of other co-defendants without any knowledge on the part of the attorney of a special arrangement between the defendants as to who should be liable for his compensation, held, that the attorney might recover for such services from one of the co-defendants, notwithstanding a special agreement with him by the defendant by whom he was employed that the one employing him should bear all the expenses: McCrory v. Ruddick, 38-521.

90. Architect's plans furnished at request: Where a committee of the board of directors of a school district instructed an architect to prepare plans to be submitted to the board, the committee not having authority to finally adopt plans, and the architect performed services in the preparation of plans, which were afterward not adopted, held, that he might thereby become entitled to compensation from the school district for the expense of preparing such plans: Driscoll v. Independent School Dist., 61-426.

91. Recovering back money paid: Money voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back: Bailey v. Paullina, 69-463.

92. Where money has been paid upon an executory agreement which is free from moral turpitude and not prohibited by positive law, but is invalid by reason of the legal incapacity of the party thereto, otherwise capable of contracting, to enter into that particular agreement, the money so paid may, so long as the agreement remains executory, be recovered back by the party paying it, in an action for money had and received: Jefferson County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 66-385, 400.

93. Payment of debt by stranger: Where a person not a party to a note, in the presence of the maker, requested a third person to pay it, and such third person did pay it and hand it to the maker, telling him to pay him the amount of the note some time, held, that the request in the presence of the maker without his objection, and his acceptance of the note, raised an implied promise to repay the person who paid it: Bruguier v. Goewey, 39-190.

94. Board furnished decedent: In a particular case, held, that a claim for board and other services rendered to a decedent during ten years preceding his death, without proof of special contract therefor, it being shown that the services were rendered and no payment received, and it not appearing that they were intended as a gratuity, should be allowed: Moser v. Crooks, 32-172.

95. Support of child: In the absence of proof of an agreement to the contrary, the law implies liability on the part of a parent for the support of his child, furnished upon request of such parent: Carroll v. McCoy, 40-38.

96. Where, by agreement between plaintiff and defendant, the former had for eight years cared for and supported the child of the latter under an agreement that such care and support should be without charge in consideration of the society and services of the child, and had at the end of that time surrendered the child without objection or claim for compensation, held, that an action for compensation for such care and support could not afterward be maintained, although there was evidence tending to show that the original contract provided that plaintiff should have the custody of the child for a longer time: Young v. Heater, 68-668.

97. Compensation for wrong done: Whenever a party has derived a pecuniary advantage from a wrong done by him, and it is competent for the party suing thereon to waive the tort and maintain an action upon the promise implied by law, there the obligation to pay is a debt, and this regardless of the form of action in which that obligation is sought to be enforced; but where a wrong is done resulting in no pecuniary advantage to the wrong-doer, and where the action must be in tort, and sound only in damages, there the obligation to pay is not a debt until ascertained by judgment: Warner v. Cammack, 37-642.

98. Burden of proof: An implied as well as an express contract should be established by proof in order to authorize recovery thereon, and the burden of proof rests upon the party seeking to establish such contract: Richardson v. Hoyt, 60-68.

b. Services beyond contract, or under abandoned or broken contract.

99. Extra services under contract: Where a contractor excavating streets under contract was required by the city, and proceeded under protest, to excavate to a greater depth than was properly contemplated by his contract, and such excavation was more expensive than that contemplated by the contract, held, that as to the extra labor involved the contractor was entitled to recover the reasonable value of such labor in addition to the compensation under his contract: Slusser v. Burlington, 47-800.

100. But where the terms of the contract involved the removal of material claimed not to have been contemplated by the parties, and to be more expensive than that contemplated, held, that the contractor could not recover extra compensation therefor after having performed the work under an agreement with the improvement committee that he should present a claim to the city council for extra compensation: Slusser v. Burlington, 42-378.

101. Where a person employed by the week as a man of all work rendered regular service on alternate nights and also upon Sundays in nursing his employer during sickness, and received his regular wages by the week, and also an extra compensation for his services on Sunday, held, that a verdict in his favor for extra compensation for his services at night would not be disturbed: Wilford v. Devin, 43-559.

102. Extra services of county officer: An implied contract to pay the value of services rendered and accepted does not arise in case of services performed by a county officer for the county, for which no compensation is fixed by law: Jefferson County v. Wollard, 1 G. Gr., 430.

103. Acceptance without authority: Restrictions being imposed upon boards of supervisors as to the extent to which they may render the county liable on a contract for the erection of public buildings, the county will not be held liable on quantum meruit, upon an implied contract for services rendered or material furnished in the construction of such a building beyond the terms of the contract; and the fact that the building is accepted and used by the county will not make it liable where such acceptance has in no way influenced the act of the other party in making such additional expenditure: Reichard v. Warren County, 31-381.

104. Services under abandoned contract; quantum meruit: If a man contracts to work by a certain plan, and that plan be entirely abandoned, so that it is impossible to trace the contract and say to which part of the work it shall be applied, the workman will be permitted to charge for the whole work done by measure and value, as if no such contract had been made; but if the contract can be applied to the work performed it should regulate the charge therefor: Hummer v. Lockwood, 3 G. Gr., 90.

105. In a particular case, held, that the facts tending to show an abandonment of the contract were insufficient, and there was nothing to justify an instruction looking toward an entire rejection of the contract, so as to allow a recovery without reference to it, and without being bound by it, as far as the work therein provided for had not been changed: Mather v. Butler County, 28-253.

106. Where a written contract has been abandoned, a reasonable compensation may be recovered for services rendered: McAfferty v. Hale, 24-355.

107. Terms of the contract as regulating compensation: Where by mutual consent there is a material departure from the contract, the party performing services may introduce the contract in evidence to regulate the amount of recovery although the alteration precludes his recovery upon the contract itself: Stewart v. Cruig, 3 G. Gr., 505.

108. Where it appeared, in an action for work done, that the work was commenced under a written contract, held not error for which the judgment should be reversed that plaintiff was required to produce the contract and offer it in evidence, though the action was brought on the common counts and the contract ignored by the plaintiff: Mather v. Butler County, 28-253.

109. If, by the acts of the other party, the person performing labor under a contract is prevented from completing it, he will be entitled to recover for the labor done in proportion to the stipulated price of the whole job: McCausland v. Cresap, 3 G. Gr., 161.

110. If the departure from the original plan is directed or assented to by the person for whom the service is to be performed, such person cannot set off, as against the demand for compensation, any claim for damages resulting from the alteration, nor for delay caused thereby: Ibid.

111. Under a quantum meruit count, the plaintiff may recover for work done and material furnished under a special contract, where the contract has been abandoned or has been fully performed on his part, and the purpose of the action is to recover the compensation unpaid. But he cannot, in an action of this form, recover for materials or work under a special contract, a compensation larger than or other than the price and value fixed in the contract, though for work done or materials furnished outside of the contract he may recover their reasonable value: Mather v. Butler County, 28-253.

As to recovery for part performance, see infra, §§ 533-546.

V. FRAUD, MISTAKE, UNDUE INFLUENCE AND DURESS AS AFFECTING ASSENT.

112. Fraud in procuring signature is not to be presumed from testimony of the party that he did not sign the contract, the genuineness of the signature being established: Jack v. Brown, 60-271.

113. Where the signatures of directors of a school district as individuals to an order for school books for the use of the district, conditioned that it should be binding whenever signed by a majority of such directors, were procured through the representation that the president of the board had agreed to sign the contract, which representation was false, held, that such false representation would constitute fraud vitiating the contract as to the parties whose signatures were procured thereby: Mills v. Collins, 67-164.

114. Where the ratification of a contract by the electors of the county was obtained by fraudulent means, held, that a court of equity would not lend its aid in enforcing it: Palo Alto County v. Harrison, 68-81.

115. Failure to read; negligence: The fact that a party signs a paper without reading it, supposing its conditions to be other than they are, constitutes such negligence as to debar him of any relief therefrom in equity: Glenn v. Statler, 42-107.

116. A party who has signed a written contract cannot be permitted to allege that he was not aware of its contents. The failure to take ordinary precautions to advise himself of the contents of the instrument will constitute negligence: McKinney v. Herrick, 66-414.

117. Where a party, having capacity to read an instrument, signs it without reading and without requesting it to be read, if no device is used to put him off his guard, he is bound by it: Gullihier v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 59-416.

And see BILLS AND NOTES, § 425.

118. False representations: A party who signs a written contract without reading it, and shows no excuse for relying upon the representations of the opposite party as to its contents, cannot escape liability thereon by showing that such representations were false: McCormack v. Molburg, 43-561.

119. A party having ability and opportunity to read an instrument signed by him cannot claim that his signature thereto is procured by fraud, if he affixes such signature without reading or becoming aware of the contents of the instrument signed: Wallace v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. R. Co., 67-547.

And see EQUITY, §§ 137, 138.

120. Evidence of oral representations or inducements, either preceding or contemporaneous with the written contract, cannot be received unless such representations or inducements amount to fraud avoiding the contract: McKinney v. Herrick, 66-414.

121. The false representations of one of several persons associated together as parties to a contract on the one part cannot defeat the rights of the other associates under such contract, when made without their authority or without notice to them: Paddock v. Bartlett, 68-16.

Fraud, mistake, etc., as affecting assent.

122. Where a party signs a written contract with knowledge of its contents and without being misled or deceived with reference thereto, but under the verbal understanding that it shall not be the measure of the liability between the parties, but shall only be used by one of the parties for the purpose of misrepresenting to third persons what the contract is, the party so signing cannot be relieved therefrom on the ground of fraud: Hutton v. Maines, 68-650.

123. The fact that a party signs a paper under a mistaken belief as to his liability does not constitute fraud relieving him from such contract where the mistake is not produced in any manner by the opposite party: Jarosh v. Easton, 57-569.

124. Fraud and misrepresentation in the making of a written instrument constitute a good defense to an action at law upon it where they relate to facts material to the interests of the party, and especially where the party relies upon the other party for truthful information as to the facts upon which the contract depends: Hunt v. Carr, 3 G. Gr., 581.

125. False representations made in procuring a subscription in aid of a railway, held to be sufficient to invalidate such subscription: Davis v. Dumont, 37-47.

126. False and fraudulent representations as to the subject-matter of a contract relied upon by the other party, which operate as an inducement thereto, will defeat recovery by the guilty party even though the fraud was perpetrated prior to the execution of the contract: Nixon v. Carson, 38-338.

127. Parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of establishing such representation: Ibid.

Fraud and false representations as a defense, see FRAUD.

128. Prior letters: A letter from plaintiff to defendant, written prior to the making of the contract sued on, in which plaintiff represented that it had not made any proposition or arrangement to sell its machines to a certain society doing business within the proposed territory of defendant, when in fact it had made such an arrangement, held admissible, not for the purpose of varying the contract, but as showing false and fraudulent representations of existing conditions:

Wilson Sewing Machine Co. v. Sloan, 50-367.

129. Contract procured by fraud of co-maker: Where a suit against joint defendants was compromised by them by the execution of a note, and in an action upon such note against one of them it appeared that at the time of such execution of the note there was an arrangement between the creditor and the other joint maker, by which the latter was to induce his co-maker to agree to the compromise, and was to be himself released from any liability thereunder, held, that the agreement between the creditor and the co-maker constituted a fraud upon the other maker such as to defeat recovery upon the note: Mitchell v. Donahey, 62-376.

130. Party knowing the facts cannot complain: A party who ascertains the facts for himself, or to whom the facts become known before he acts thereon, cannot complain of false representations made with reference thereto by the adverse party: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Palmer, 42-222.

131. Mental weakness: It is proper to instruct the jury to consider the mental weakness, or partial or total want of capacity to contract, of a contracting party, and if the want of capacity is even partial, to allow the jury to consider that fact in connection with representations made, if any, for the purpose of determining whether the party was induced to enter into the contract by fraud: Galpin v. Wilson, 40-90.

132. A very modified degree of mental incapacity will be sufficient to invalidate a transaction if it is accompanied with imposition or any over-exercise of authority: Corbit v. Smith, 7-60.

Further as to mental weakness, see infra, VI. b.

133. Mistake of law: Mistake of a party as to the legal effect of a contract entered into by him, where he knows its language and intentionally signs it, will not release him from its enforcement as entered into: Moorman v. Collier, 32-138.

134. So where a party knew the terms of a bond which he was signing, and through a mistake of law did not understand the effect of the instrument, held, that he was not entitled to equitable relief therefrom: Glenn v. Statler, 42-107.

 Fraud, mistake, etc., as affecting assent.—Capacity of parties.

135. Mutual mistake of fact; defense: Where a material mutual mistake is made by parties in respect to the subject-matter of a contract, the result is that, in contemplation of law, there is no contract. The minds of the parties do not meet. If action be brought on such contract, it is competent for defendant to deny its existence, and in support of the denial he may allege and prove the mistake. Such a defense may be made in an action at law and is not equitable in its nature. But if defendant desires the cancellation of the contract on account of such fraud, or that it shall be reformed in order to express the true agreement of the parties, his relief is to be had by a cross-action and will be equitable in its nature: Carey v. Gunnison, 65-702.

136. Mistake of fact: A contract, in a particular case, for the conveyance and transfer of swamp lands and swamp land indemnity by the county to the defendant, held, voidable by the county as having been made under mistake of fact, the county not having been aware of the fact, known to the other party at the time, that a large amount of swamp land indemnity had already been allowed to the county: Montgomery County v. American Emigrant Co., 47-91.

Further as to mistake, see EQUITY, §§ 129-138.

137. Undue influence: A contract between a devisee under a will and her brother, who was not recognized in the will, by which, in consideration of his assisting her to secure her share, which was in controversy, she agreed that he should have a share in the estate, held not to have been procured by undue influence or fraud: Adams v. Adams, 70—.

Further as to undue influence, see CONVEYANCES, §§ 36-42.

138. Guardian and ward: Undue influence on the part of a guardian in contracting with his ward, even after the termination of the guardianship, held sufficient to vitiate the contract: Tucke v. Buchholz, 43-415.

139. Duress is the actual or threatened violence or restraint of a man's person contrary to law to compel him to enter into a contract or discharge one: King v. Williams, 65-167.

140. The fact that money is paid in satisfaction of a fine, while the party making payment is under arrest, will not be sufficient to show that such payment was under duress: Bailey v. Paullina, 69-463.

141. Threats: In order that duress by threats shall avoid the contract, it must appear that it was wholly in consequence of such threats that the contract was made: Barker v. Brown, 15-70.

142. Effect: Duress, like fraud, does not make the contract void, only voidable. Therefore it is no defense to a negotiable note in the hands of a bona fide holder, acquiring the same before maturity and for a valuable consideration without notice: Veach v. Thompson, 15-380.

143. Who may take advantage of: While it may be that the privilege of avoiding a contract on account of duress is personal, and that no one can take advantage of it but the party himself, yet where one person suffers damage by reason of duress inflicted upon another, the person receiving the damage may recover therefor: Koehler v. Wilson, 40-183.

144. Facts considered and held not to amount to technical duress at law, but to indicate such imposition and undue advantage as would justify a court of equity in refusing specific enforcement of the contract: Richardson v. Barrick, 16-407.

Further as to duress, see MORTGAGES, §§ 5, 6; and CONVEYANCES, §§ 43-45.

VI. CAPACITY OF PARTIES.

a. Infancy.

145. Contract void or voidable: The rule respecting the contract of an infant is, that when the court can pronounce it to be to the infant's prejudice, it is void, and when to his benefit, as for necessities, it is good, and when of uncertain nature, it is voidable at the election of the infant only: Green v. Wilding, 59-679.

146. Disaffirmance: At common law the general rule was that the minor was not bound unless by some act he had positively affirmed the contract, but under the statute a disaffirmance within a reasonable time is necessary to release him from obligation. (Code, § 2238): Wright v. Germain, 21-535; Murphy v. Johnson, 45-57.

Infancy.—Insanity and mental weakness.

147. What will be a reasonable time within which to disaffirm must be determined by the peculiar circumstances of each case: Stout v. Merrill, 35-47.

148. As to what is a "reasonable time," see Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12-195; Wright v. Germain, 21-585; Weaver v. Carpenter, 42-343; Hoover v. Kinsey Plow Co., 55-668.

149. Disaffirmance by an action brought three or four years after plaintiff, a female, attained her majority, the only excuse offered for the delay being that she was informed by her mother and neighbors that she could not disaffirm the contract until her minor brother became of age, held, not within a reasonable time, especially in view of the further facts that she did not ask legal advice, and delayed at least three months after she was informed that she could disaffirm the contract before bringing action: Green v. Wilding, 59-679.

150. In case of the marriage of the minor, a reasonable time for disaffirmance commences to run from the time of such marriage: Jones v. Jones, 46-466.

151. The right of an infant to avoid his contracts is absolute and paramount to all equities in favor of third persons, even purchasers without notice: Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12-195.

152. The restoration of the fruits of the contract is essential to the disaffirmance thereof: Stout v. Merrill, 35-47.

153. Yet the minor is only bound to restore money or property received by virtue of the contract remaining under his control after attaining majority: Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12-195.

154. The statute makes no distinction as between property and money remaining under the control of the minor. He may disaffirm without tendering back either property or money under his control unless it is the identical property or money received by him by virtue of the contract: Hawes v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-315.

155. The agreement of an infant for the repayment of money of which he has had and retains the benefit, not having been disaffirmed within a reasonable time after attaining majority, is binding: Stucker v. Foder, 33-177.

156. The minor may disaffirm his contract before attaining majority. (Overruling Murphy v. Johnson, 45-57); Childs v. Dobbins, 55-205.

157. A minor doing business as an adult, and thus misleading others as to his minority, cannot disaffirm a contract thus made. The statute expressly excepts such contracts from the provisions as to disaffirmance. (Code, § 2239): Oswald v. Broderick, 1-380.

158. The fact that an infant is engaged in business as an adult does not make his contracts binding unless the party with whom he contracts is thereby deceived and believes that he is of age. If the fact of minority is known to the other party, the minor is not bound: Beller v. Marchant, 30-350.

159. The exception here made as to the power of a minor to disaffirm his contracts by reason of his having engaged in business as an adult does not depend upon the extent of his interest or the manner of his connection with the business: Jaques v. Sax, 39-367.

160. Therefore, held, that a minor who was a member of a partnership, but without capital invested, and rendering his services only, as his contribution to the capital of the firm, was still to be considered as engaged in business as an adult: Ibid.

161. The fact that the minor is thus engaged in business as an adult is evidence upon which one dealing with him is authorized to conclude that he is an adult. It is immaterial whether the contract upon which it is thus sought to hold the minor is one relating to the business in which he is engaged or not: Ibid.

162. Personal services: If a minor has been paid for services rendered, he cannot again recover therefor in an action by next of kin: Murphy v. Johnson, 45-57.

b. Insanity and mental weakness.

163. Imbecility: While mere weakness of intellect is not sufficient ground for setting aside a contract, yet if it appears that an unconscionable advantage has been taken of the imbecility of one party, and he has been led to make a very imprudent disposition of property, the contract will be held void in a court of equity, if the nature of the contract be such as to justify the conclusion that the party did not exercise deliberate judgment, but was imposed upon, circumvented or overcome by cunning or artifice, or undue influence: Harris v. Wamsley, 41-871.

 Insanity and mental weakness.—Intoxication.

164. Insane persons: Persons of unsound mind will be held liable as to executed contracts, where the transaction is in the ordinary course of business, is fair and reasonable, and the mental condition was not known to the other party, and the parties cannot be put in statu quo: Abbott v. Creal, 56-175; Behrens v. McKenzie, 23-833; Alexander v. Haskins, 68-73.

165. This rule is not, however, followed by the federal courts in Iowa: Edwards v. Davenport, 20 Fed. Rep., 756.

166. While an insane person may be liable on a contract for necessities, or on an agreement made with a person who has no knowledge of his condition, and by which his estate is benefited, he is not bound as surety on a note given by the maker for an antecedent indebtedness to a person without knowledge of his condition, at least in the absence of any showing that credit was granted on the strength of his name: Van Patton v. Beals, 46-62.

167. A contract with an insane person made by one having knowledge of the insanity will not be sustained: Alexander v. Haskins, 68-73.

168. Where a contract has been entered into (under circumstances which would ordinarily make it binding) by a sane person with one who is insane, and that contract has been adopted and is sought to be enforced by the representatives of the latter, the insanity of such party cannot be set up as a defense by the other: Allen v. Berryhill, 27-584.

169. Where a person of unsound mind makes a contract which is beneficial to him, the law supplies or presumes the existence of the requisite capacity, or estops the other party to set up and sustain such an objection: Ibid.

170. The courts will not, in general, lend their aid to the execution of a contract, where the party sought to be affected was at the time under mental incapacity, unless it be for necessities; but if the incapacity was unknown and no advantage was taken of it, and the contract is executed so that parties cannot be put in statu quo, it will not be set aside. If, however, parties can be placed in statu quo, it will make little difference whether the question arises upon an executed or an executory contract. A party who is actually at the time insane cannot bind himself civilly: Corbit v. Smith, 7-60.

171. Evidence; burden of proof: Where insanity is once shown to have existed, the presumption is in favor of its continued existence till the time of the contract, and the burden of proof is on the party seeking to disprove insanity; but if habitual insanity is not established, the presumption is that the party is like all human creatures, that is, rational, and the fact of a prior period of lunacy will not throw the burden of proof on the party setting up the competency: Ibid.

172. If no extraneous influence is exerted, the character of the action itself will go far to show the capacity of the party at the time: Ibid.

173. Epilepsy not of long duration is not to be considered as amounting to habitual insanity; and if insensibility or unconsciousness is not shown to have existed at the time, the presumption is that the party had sufficient capacity; but if the paroxysms have been violent and frequent in their return, and have continued any considerable length of time, incapacity to contract might result, and the jury or court might be justified in treating the epileptic as habitually insane: Ibid.

174. Evidence in particular cases considered, and held not sufficient to show such insanity on the part of the contracting party as to avoid his acts: Hubbard v. Hoag, 60-756; Baldrick v. Garvey, 66-14.

As to insane persons, see, also, CONVEYANCES, §§ 9-12.

Further as to evidence of insanity, see EVIDENCE, §§ 81-83, 859, 860.

c. Intoxication.

175. Degree; fraud: To authorize the setting aside of a contract on the ground of intoxication of the party, it is necessary that the drunkenness be of an excessive character; but if it appear that the drunkenness was brought about by the other party for the purpose of procuring an unconscionable advantage, and it is shown that the contract is not fair, it will be avoided for fraud: Willcox v. Jackson, 51-208.

Burden of proof as to capacity.—Who may sue; privity.

176. Mere moderate drunkenness will not of itself avoid a deed or contract. To have that effect the intoxication must be so excessive as to deprive the person of the consciousness of what he is doing. Such excessive drunkenness is a defense whether voluntary or procured by the other party: Mansfield v. Watson, 2-111.

177. But if there is a contrivance or management on the part of the other party to draw the person in to drink, and thus to take advantage of his intoxication, it may constitute a defense even where the drunkenness is less than excessive: Ibid.

178. Voidable, not void: In either event, such intoxication only renders the contract voidable and not void, and the party on recovering his understanding may adopt the same: Ibid.

179. Restitution: Whether a party seeking to evade a contract on the ground that he was incompetent to contract on account of drunkenness can be heard to complain without making restitution of the money received under the contract, quære: Hawley v. Howell, 60-79.

d. Burden of proof as to capacity.

180. It is incumbent upon a party seeking to enforce a contract against a person under disability, on the ground that it is an exceptional contract which such person has authority to make, to show that the case comes within the exception: Rodemeyer v. Rodman, 5-426.

Further as to burden of proof in case of disability, see supra, §§ 171-174.

VII. WHO MAY SUE; PRIVITY.

By assignee: That action on contract may be brought by assignee in his own name, see ASSIGNMENT, §§ 28-31; and PARTIES, II, a.

181. Capacity to enforce: If a person executes his obligation to another under an agreement that it shall be transferred to any third person who shall do certain labor, the performance of which constitutes the consideration for the agreement, he cannot question the capacity of the person receiving the obligation and doing the labor thereunder to enforce it against him, if such person could have enforced the contract had it been made with him originally: Courtright v. Deeds, 87-503.

182. Privity: Privity of contract must exist between parties to an action thereon. A mere stranger to the contract cannot maintain action upon it: Davis v. Clinton Water Works, 54-59.

183. Therefore, where a contract existed between a city and a company agreeing to supply the city with water for the extinguishment of fire, held, that a property owner of the city could not maintain an action for damages against the water company for failure to supply water according to the contract with the city, by reason of which failure the property was destroyed by fire: Ibid.

184. The application of the doctrine of privity of contract is much less frequent under our law than it was at common law, for the reason that the statute makes nearly every kind of contract assignable, so as to permit an action in the name of the assignee: Barron v. Easton, 3-76.

185. A person for whose benefit a contract is made may bring action thereon although he is not a party thereto; McHose v. Dutton, 55-728.

186. Where A. has paid the money of B. to C., which C. promises A. to pay to the rightful owner, the law creates a privity between B. and C., and B. may have his action direct against C.: Johnson v. Collins, 14-63.

187. As to the consideration in such cases, it is not necessary that it should move directly from the plaintiff to support an assumpsit. If it moves from a third person, a stranger even, and is adopted by the plaintiff, it is sufficient: Ibid.

188. Action by creditor against new partner: Where an incoming partner agrees with the old partners to assume the debts of the firm, the creditors of the firm may sue upon such contract: Poole v. Hintrager, 60-180.

Action upon a mortgage may be brought directly against a party who has purchased the mortgaged premises and assumed payment of the mortgage: See MORTGAGES, §§ 193-204.

189. Bond for performance of contract: A bond given by a contractor for the erection of a building, providing for the performance of the work according to the contract, may provide for the protection of third parties who furnish material or labor in the completion of the contract, and action upon the bond may be brought by such parties: Baker v. Bryan, 64-561.

190. Where a contractor for a part of the work of constructing a railway agreed by his contract to pay all just claims growing out of such work, whether against him or his subcontractor, by reason of injury to lands, and for provisions and supplies, and board bills of men and teams, and gave a bond for the performance of such contract, held, that parties who furnished labor and material for the construction of the work under his subcontractors were entitled to bring action upon the bond: Jordan v. Kavanaugh, 63-152.

191. Assignee assuming performance: Upon the assignment of a contract, the assumption by the assignee of a promise for the benefit of the obligor named therein, fixes a direct liability upon such assignee in favor of such third party: Scott's Adm'rs v. Gill, 19-187.

192. A party charged by law or agreement with a duty necessary to fix the liability of a third party to the person for whose benefit he is so charged, can, when sued by such person for default, avail himself of any defense available to such third party if he had been sued therefor: Reed v. Darling-ton, 19-349.

VIII. CONSIDERATION.

193. Gift: A mere voluntary agreement, contract or covenant to transfer property will not be carried into effect in courts of equity. Want of consideration is a good defense in such case: Holland v. Hensley, 4-222.

194. Providing for child: The meritorious consideration of providing for a child has always been held sufficient to authorize the enforcement of an executory contract against the party contracting; but where the contest is between one child and other children of the same ancestor, the meritorious consideration operates on both sides, and being equally balanced, equity will not interfere or lend its aid: Ibid.

195. Moral consideration: Something more than a mere moral obligation is necessary to support a contract. The consideration must be such as is esteemed valuable at law: Nightingale v. Barney, 4 G. Gr., 106.

196. Where one person renders services for another gratuitously, and with no expectation of being paid therefor, no moral obligation is incurred by the person receiving the services, supporting a subsequent promise to pay. Indeed, a moral obligation alone is not sufficient consideration for a subsequent promise: Allen v. Bryson, 67-591.

197. A subsequent promise by a father to a daughter who has attained majority, but remains a member of the family and performs services as such, to pay for such services, is not supported by any legal consideration; but a prior express promise to pay for such services will be binding: Chadwick v. Devore, 69-637.

198. Support of parent: The moral obligation of the child to support an indigent parent is not a sufficient consideration for a promise, on the part of the child, to pay for past expenditures made by third persons for the parent: Dawson v. Dawson, 12-512.

199. A disposition of property by the owner in behalf of his children, in consideration of an agreement on their part to support the owner during his life, held valid, as being both for the consideration of support and for that of love and affection: Shaw v. Ball, 55-55.

200. Support of child: The support of offspring, whether legitimate or illegitimate, is a sufficient consideration to support a contract: Armstrong v. Lester, 43-159.

201. Past consideration: A subsequent promise to do something not required by previous contract, without new consideration, is not binding, even though it would facilitate the performance of the original contract by the other party: Handrahan v. O'Regan, 45-298.

202. Payment of another's debt: Where one person voluntarily pays the debt which another was compellable to pay, he may recover the amount so paid upon proof of an express subsequent promise by the other to repay him, the request to pay being implied from such express promise: Bruguier v. Goewey, 89-190.

Consideration.

203. Where a party signed a note upon the statement of others that the money on which the note was given had been borrowed, but that they must have another name, held, that there was a consideration therefor: State v. Haskell, 20-276.

204. A subsequent promise to pay for support previously rendered to the promisor as a member of the family of the promisee would be without consideration: Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60-424. And see supra, §§ 79-85, 187.

205. Indemnity: A promise by one person to another, to indemnify the latter for any liability on an obligation at the time entered into at the request of the former, is not without consideration, and will support a mortgage afterward executed to secure the liability which had in the meantime accrued: Duncan v. Miller, 64-223.

206. What constitutes consideration: Whenever injury to the one party or benefit to the other springs from a consideration, it is sufficient to support the contract: Blake v. Blake, 7-46.

207. Damage, trouble or inconvenience to the promisee constitutes as good a consideration as does benefit or advantage to the promisor. The service rendered by one party to the other at his request is always a good consideration for a promise: Gordon v. Dalby, 30-223.

208. Therefore, held, that where one party had a contract for carrying the mails, and entered into an agreement with another to perform the service for him and receive the entire consideration to which the former was entitled from the government under his contract, there was a consideration for the promise on the part of the original contractor to carry out the agreement: Ibid.

209. A promise of one person to sell and deliver chattels has a sufficient consideration in the promise of another to buy and pay for them: Boies v. Vincent, 24-387.

210. A disadvantage suffered by the promisee will not constitute a consideration for a promise unless it appears that it was suffered at the request, express or implied, of the promisor: Handrahan v. O'Regan, 45-208.

211. A promise which is binding upon no one cannot constitute a consideration for another promise so that the latter may be enforced: Gray v. McReynolds, 65-461.

212. Indemnity to garnishee: A contract by the plaintiff in a garnishment proceeding to indemnify a garnishee for any liability arising out of the payment of a judgment is based upon a sufficient consideration, and upon the garnishee being held liable to the original debtor notwithstanding the garnishment, such contract of indemnity may be enforced: Lucy v. Price, 39-26.

213. Construction of railroad: An agreement to build a railroad into a certain city is a valuable consideration for a subscription by the citizens thereof, whether the agreement is performed or not. Such consideration would support a note given in substitution for another note which was given for the subscription thus made: First Nat. Bank v. Hurford, 29-579.

214. Gold premium: An agreement by a bank, upon return of a certificate of deposit of money payable in gold coin, to pay the sum due on said certificate in currency, adding thereto the premium on gold at that date, held binding: Austin v. Easton, 25-159.

215. Obligation to make improvements under lease: The obligation in a lease that the lessee shall put certain improvements upon the land during the term of the lease may constitute a consideration for the lease although no rent is reserved, and the lessee will be liable in damages for failure to make the improvements as agreed: Packer v. Cockayne, 3 G. Gr., 111.

216. An agreement to marry is a good consideration to support a contract: Armstrong v. Lester, 43-159.

217. Seduction: So held, where defendant in a prosecution for seduction entered into a bond to marry the prosecutrix and support her and the child: Ibid.

218. Other cases: A contract by one person to erect a building on another's land, with the agreement that when the builder shall cease to occupy it the owner of the land shall pay the cost of the lumber used in its erection, is valid: Stevenson v. Robertson, 55-689.

219. Certain inducements to enter into a contract, held sufficient to constitute a consideration: Tripp v. Boardman, 49-410.

Consideration.

220. Contract of agent to sell real estate: Authority given to a real estate agent conferring upon him the exclusive right to sell certain specified property within a given time, unless such authority be revoked, the compensation being named, is binding upon the person thus employing the agent; and in case the agent is defeated in effecting a sale and securing the specified commission by the act of the owner in making a sale within the time limited and without the revocation of the agreement, the agent will be entitled to compensation for damages sustained. The consideration in such case is the labor and expense of the agent in endeavoring to make a sale of the property: Attix v. Pelan, 5-386.

221. Subscriptions: To support an action upon a voluntary subscription it must be shown that money has been advanced or expended in accordance with the terms of the contract and upon the faith of the promise: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57-307.

222. Where a subscription was taken for the purpose of paying off a mortgage upon college property and thus securing the property from danger of sale under the mortgage, and thereupon large amounts were raised and expended for repairs upon the property on the faith of the subscription to extinguish the mortgage, held, that the subscription was binding: Ibid.; S. C., 65-202.

223. Where expenses have been incurred on the faith of a voluntary subscription, it becomes binding: McDonald v. Gray, 11-508.

224. A subscription becomes a contract when accepted by the beneficiary and acted upon by the incurring of an obligation or expenditure of money: McCabe v. O'Connor, 69-134.

225. Where a subscription was taken for a sum to be paid to a needy person to assist her in building a house, held, that such subscription must be deemed to have been by way of gift, and that the person for whose aid the subscription was raised could not be enjoined from disposing of the house in the construction of which such subscription had been used: Ibid.

226. A borrowing of money to pay a pre-existing indebtedness in reliance upon a subscription constitutes a consideration sufficient to support the contract: Presbyterian Church v. Baird, 60-237.

227. A written promise to pay to an educational institution a certain sum per annum for ten years, held to be supported by a sufficient consideration: Burlington University v. Barrett, 22-60.

228. Subscription upon conditions: Where a subscription was taken upon condition that it should not be payable unless a certain amount was raised by a certain time, and it appeared that such amount was raised, held, that defendant, relying upon an averment that a portion of the amount making the requisite total was fraudulently obtained and unenforceable, had the burden of proof to establish such fact: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 65-202.

229. Where it was stipulated in a contract of subscription that the party to whom the subscription was payable should lease specified premises to a third party without rent, held, that a contract of lease in which the nominal rent of one dollar per year was reserved was a substantial compliance with the terms of the subscription: Thompson v. Stewart, 60-223.

230. An agreement to answer for the debt of another, even though in writing as required by the statute of frauds, is not binding if there is no consideration therefor: Bumford v. Purcell, 4 G. Gr., 488.

231. The discharge of a legal obligation cannot be sufficient consideration to support a contract: Newton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 66-432.

232. So where certain contractors had agreed to construct a certain line of railroad, and upon complaint to the company that they were losing money on the contract and would have to abandon it, the company being anxious to secure the completion of the work by the time agreed on, promised to pay whatever the work really cost, held, that the promise of the company was without consideration and could not be enforced: Ayres v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 52-478.

233. Where plaintiff erected a dam which was washed out, and afterwards built another in its place, under an express contract for compensation, held, that even if the first was carried away by reason of its insufficiency there would be no such duty upon the plaintiff to replace it as would render an express promise to pay for the second one without consideration: Hancock v. McFarland, 17-124.

234. Release: An executory agreement of release without consideration cannot be enforced: Norris v. Slaughter, 8 G. Gr., 116.

235. A promise by a person who is already liable on an indebtedness to pay such indebtedness will not constitute a consideration for an agreement to release another party from such indebtedness: Early v. Burt, 68-716.

236. Partial payment of an admitted debt will not support a promise to forgive the remainder of the debt: Bryan v. Brazil, 52-350.

237. Nor will the payment of a part of a debt support a promise to forbear to sue for or press the collection of the balance: State ex rel. v. Davenport, 12-335.

238. An agreement to receive part payment of an indebtedness in full satisfaction, upon consideration of an agreement of the other party to pay expenses which may or may not exceed the balance of such indebtedness, is binding: Kohn v. Zimmerman, 34-544.

239. A compromise, even in settlement of a family difficulty, will not be enforced if executory and without consideration: Norris v. Slaughter, 8 G. Gr., 116.

240. A compromise of conflicting claims, made for the purpose of reaching a settlement of partnership affairs, is sufficient consideration to support an agreement: Goode now v. Parkinson, 67-95.

241. The compromise, among the members of the same family, of disputed claims with reference to family property, has always been regarded by the courts as constituting a valid consideration for the contracts entered into in effecting the settlement: Adams v. Adams, 70—.

242. An agreement of compromise between the parties to an action is based upon sufficient consideration and is binding: Taylor v. Galland, 3 G. Gr., 17.

243. A contract by way of compromise and settlement of a claim which at the time appears valid, although it subsequently turns out to be groundless, is supported upon sufficient consideration: Smith v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 43-239.

244. An agreement to allow judgment to go by default may be a valid consideration for an agreement by the other party that such judgment shall be satisfied out of certain specified property of the debtor: Montgomery v. Gibbs, 40-852.

245. In a particular case, held, that a contract entered into by way of compromise was sufficiently supported by a consideration: Devey v. Life, 60-361.

246. Under the facts of a particular case, held, that there was sufficient matter in dispute, and sufficient uncertainty as to the result, to render a compromise valid: Mills County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 47-66.

247. Where there was an attachment, and creditors were threatening to have it set aside by proceedings in bankruptcy, held, that there was sufficient doubt and uncertainty in respect to the respective rights of the parties to the transaction as to render an agreement by one to waive proceedings a sufficient consideration by the other to share the attached property pro rata: Adams v. Morton, 37-255.

248. The surrender of a claim of interest in real property tending to create a cloud upon the title such as to require the interposition of a court of equity to remove it, is sufficient consideration for an agreement based thereon: Davies v. Beadle, 37-390.

249. A compromise of a doubtful title, when procured without fraud, is a sufficient consideration to support a promise: Richardson v. Barrick, 16-407.

250. Where a party went into possession of land without right thereto, and commenced improvements, and thereafter a compromise was made between him and the person claiming to be the owner, by which it was agreed that rent should be paid for the use of the land, held, that such compromise constituted a sufficient consideration for the payment of rent regardless of whether the person claiming to be the owner had title or not: Bowditch v. Dubuque, 38-341.

251. Composition with creditors: Where it was understood that a composition was to be entered into by nearly all the creditors, whereby the secured notes of defendant for fifty per cent. of the indebtedness were to be accepted in full payment, held, that the fact that defendant had, by secret agreement, paid one of the composition creditors seventy-five per cent. could not be taken advantage of by plaintiff to defeat the composition after having accepted payment of the composition notes with knowledge of the fraudulent agreement: Bower v. Metz, 54-394.

252. Alterations or additions made by one party in or to a contract at the request of the other, and upon representation by the other that if not made he would refuse to carry out the original contract, and made without any consideration, the person making them not being in default as to the performance of the original contract, are invalid for want of consideration: McCarty v. Hampton Building Ass'n, 61-287.

253. Modifications in a contract not yet executed on either part will be supported by the consideration of the original contract: Le Grand Quarry Co. v. Reichard, 40-161.

254. An agreement to pay the consideration in advance instead of on the completion of the contract as originally contemplated, even where the other party has a lien for the amount of the consideration, will support a modification of the contract in other respects: Baker v. Steamboat Milwaukee, 14-214.

255. Where the obligation of one party under the contract as modified has been performed, the other cannot object that such modification is without consideration: Maxwell v. Graves, 59-613.

256. Extension of time: A contract extending the time of an indebtedness without a new consideration is not binding, and does not suspend the right of action upon the original obligation: Price v. Price, 34-404.

257. In the case of a unilateral contract by which the obligor binds himself to pay money on consideration that certain things are performed by the obligee by a certain time, an entry on the back of the written agreement extending the time in which performance may be made, amounts to a new agreement supported by a good and valid consideration: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Penney, 38-255.

258. Where an absolute deed was executed by a wife to secure the debt of her husband already due, and a separate defeasance was executed to her providing that upon the payment of certain sums of principal and interest by her the lands should be reconveyed, held, that this amounted to a binding extension of time, and was a sufficient consideration for the conveyance by the wife: Lomax v. Smyth, 50-228.

259. In a particular case, it being specially found by the jury that a valid extension of time was given to a party, held, that the court could not disregard such finding on the ground that there was no consideration, there being an issue as to the consideration and evidence showing that there was such consideration: Wendling v. Taylor, 57-354.

260. Implied in written contract: A consideration is implied in a written contract (Code, § 2118), and no consideration need be expressed: Peddicord v. Whittam, 9-471.

261. A written contract implies a consideration, and want or failure of consideration must be averred and shown by way of defense: Goodpaster v. Porter, 11-161.

262. Such contracts import a consideration in the same manner that sealed instruments formerly did: Jones v. Berryhill, 25-289, 297.

263. So held as to a written guaranty: Sabin v. Harris, 12-87.

264. A covenant in writing imports a consideration: Arnold v. Kreutzer, 67-214.

265. It is not ground of demurrer to a petition on a written instrument, that no consideration is alleged or appears on the face thereof. Such objection must be set up as a defense: Linder v. Lake, 6-164; Towsley v. Olds, 6-526; Goodpaster v. Porter, 11-161; Henderson v. Booth, 11-212; State v. Wright, 37-522.

266. Parol evidence: The consideration need not appear upon the face of the contract; it may be proved by parol, or inferred from the terms and obvious import of the agreement: Attix v. Pelan, 5-336.

267. Parol evidence is admissible to show a consideration other than that expressed on the face of the contract: Taylor v. Wightman, 51-411.

268. The consideration of a written contract may be shown by parol, and if such consideration is found in an unwritten agreement it may be proved by oral testimony: Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50-293.

269. Want or failure of consideration may be shown: While a written contract imports a consideration (Code, § 2113), it is competent to aver and prove that there was in fact no consideration: Briggs v. Downing 48-550; Byers v. Harris, 67-685.

Consideration.

270. Although a written contract imports a consideration, it is competent to show a failure of consideration to defeat the contract, the burden of proof being upon the defendant: University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57-807.

271. The phrase "value received" does not necessarily import a consideration, and evidence is competent to show that no consideration has been in fact received: Osgood v. Bringolf, 32-265.

272. Extrinsic evidence of a consideration to a written contract adverse to that expressed upon the face thereof is incompetent: Gelpcke v. Blake, 19-263.

273. A defendant relying on want of consideration in a written contract must aver and show not only that he did not receive the consideration specified therein, but also that he did not receive any other consideration: Taylor v. Wightman, 51-411.

274. Contracts under seal: By statute (Code, § 2114) the consideration of a contract is inquirable into, and want of consideration is a good defense though the instrument be executed under seal in another state, where the law presumes a consideration: Williams v. Haines, 27-251.

275. Adequacy of consideration: Each party may exercise his own discretion as to the adequacy of the consideration, and if the agreement be made bona fide, it matters not how insignificant the benefit may be to the promisor, or how slight the inconvenience or damage appears to be to the promisee, provided it be susceptible of legal estimation. If the inadequacy of consideration is so gross as to create a presumption of fraud, the contract founded thereon would not be enforced, but even then it is the fraud which is thereby indicated, and not the inadequacy of consideration, which invalidates the contract: Blake v. Blake, 7-46.

276. Illegality: No action can be maintained on a contract, the consideration of which is either wicked in itself or prohibited by law: Marienthal v. Shafer, 6-223.

277. An agreement on the part of persons interested in a will, in consideration of the agreement of others to pay them the amount they would become entitled to under the will, and allow the will to be defeated and set aside in a probate proceeding for the purpose of depriving others, not parties to the contract, of their rights under such will, is illegal, and the parties carrying out the agreement not to maintain the will cannot afterward recover from those at whose instance they acted, the amount to which they would have been entitled under the will: Gray v. McReynolds, 65-461.

278. Where defendant became indebted to one B. for intoxicating liquors illegally sold, and in consideration thereof agreed to pay an indebtedness owing plaintiff by said B., to which agreement plaintiff consented, releasing B. and accepting defendant as his debtor, held, that the illegality of the transaction between defendant and B. could not be set up as against the plaintiff, it not appearing that plaintiff had any information of the nature of the transaction between defendant and B.: Bower v. Webber, 69-286.

Further as to illegality of contracts, see infra, IX.

279. Compounding of felony: A contract, the consideration of which is the compounding of a felony, cannot be enforced: Peed v. McKee, 42-689.

And see infra, §§ 354-5.

280. Failure of consideration: Where an endowment note was given as alleged in consideration of an agreement that the principal of the fund raised should not be diminished, held, that the diminution of the fund could not be set up as a failure of consideration in an action on the note: Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50-293.

281. The maker of an endowment note to a college, who is entitled to tuition therein upon payment of the note, cannot defend against the note by showing that the college is in the charge of incompetent teachers, and tuition therein would be of no value: Oskaloosa College v. Hull, 25-155.

Further as to failure of consideration, see BILLS AND NOTES, §§ 85-87; SALES, §§ 13-16; and CONVEYANCES, §§ 133, 134.

282. Partial failure: Where a note is given under an entire contract for the purchase of two parcels of real property, the failure of title to one parcel will not constitute a failure of consideration of the note, and the title to the other parcel will constitute a consideration sufficient to support it: Wadsworth v. Nevin, 64-64.

Illegality.—Between belligerents.—In violation of law.

283. An agreement by a county to transfer to defendant a certain number of acres of land therein secured at a certain consideration, and further to sell and assign to defendant all the swamp land claim and interest of the county for a further agreed sum, upon the additional consideration that the defendant should save the county harmless from certain contracts theretofore made by it, held, not to be a severable contract, so that a conveyance of the specified acres of land could stand while the balance of the contract was void for mistake: Montgomery County v. American Emigrant Co., 47-91.

284. A note given in aid of a railway, alleged to have been made upon representations that the road would be aided by a certain other railway, thereby securing valuable connections, etc., held, to be valid, notwithstanding the failure to secure such connections without fault of the company, such matter being an inducement to and not a consideration or condition of the note: Merrill v. Gamble, 46-615.

285. But held, that it being agreed that capital stock of the company to be aided should be issued in consideration of such note, and it appearing that the capital stock of such company had been illegally increased far beyond the amount the company was authorized to issue, and that such illegal stock was beyond the control of the corporation and could not be distinguished from genuine and had become valueless, the maker of the note was not liable: Ibid.

IX. ILLEGALITY.

a. Between belligerents.

286. Citizens of states in rebellion: Contracts between citizens of countries at war with each other are void: Hill v. Baker, 32-302.

287. And held, that this rule was applicable to contracts between citizens of a state in rebellion and citizens of a loyal state: Ibid.

b. In violation of law.

288. Revenue stamp: The fact that a contract had not been stamped, as required by the United States revenue laws, held not sufficient to exclude it from admission as evidence where it did not appear that there was any fraudulent intent in the omission to properly stamp the paper. (Overruling Hugus v. Strickler, 19-413): Mitchell v. Home Ins. Co., 32-421.

289. An intentional omission to stamp an instrument in conformity to the revenue laws constitutes proof of an intent to evade such laws within the meaning of the statute, and the instrument is not receivable in evidence: Byington v. Oaks, 32-488.

290. If an agreement is executed by both parties thereto in duplicate, each party retaining one, it is binding upon the parties, though only one of the duplicates is stamped: Bondurant v. Crawford, 22-40.

As to failure to affix revenue stamp, see, also, BILLS AND NOTES, §§ 68-75.

291. Act prohibited by law: Any promise, contract, or undertaking, the performance of which would tend to promote, advance, or carry into effect any object or purpose which is unlawful, is in itself void and will not sustain an action. In this respect the law gives no countenance to the old distinction between malum in se and malum prohibitum, and a contract having for its object the doing of an act repugnant to the general policy of the common law, or contrary to the provisions of a statute, is void and not to be enforced: Reynolds v. Nichols, 12-398.

292. Prohibited by statute: Therefore, where a statute expressly prohibited the issuing of paper to circulate as money, held, that a trust deed to secure a loan of post notes, which were within the statutory prohibition, could not be enforced: Ibid.

293. Act to which penalty is affixed: The fact that a penalty is affixed by statute to the doing of an act implies a prohibition, though there are no prohibitory words in the statute; and a contract to do the prohibited act will be illegal and void unless it appears that it was not intended that the statute should imply a prohibition: Pangborn v. Westlake, 36-546.

294. Under a statute making it a criminal offense, punishable by fine, to run a threshing machine without having the tumbling-rods boxed, and also subjecting to the same fine any person knowingly permitting his grain to be threshed by such machine, held, that a party who had performed services in threshing under a contract for such work to be done with a machine not having its rods boxed, and which was performed by a machine in that condition, could not recover compensation for services performed: Dillon v. Allen, 46-299.

In violation of law.

295. Under the statutory provision (Code, § 8895) making it a crime in the mortgagor of personal property to wilfully destroy, conceal, sell, or in any manner dispose of the property covered by the mortgage without the consent of the holder of such mortgage, held, that a subsequent mortgage given upon the property by the mortgagor was not void: Tootle v. Taylor, 64-629.

296. It being by statute required that a plat of a subdivision of land laid out as a city or town or an addition thereto shall be recorded before any conveyances are made thereunder, and a penalty being provided for the failure of the owner to comply with such requirements, held, that as the statute imposed no penalty upon the grantee under such circumstances, the conveyance was not void, and might be enforced: Watrous v. Blair, 32-58.

297. And the vendor may, in such case, enforce payment of the consideration: Pangborn v. Westlake, 36-546.

298. Where an act is absolutely prohibited by statute or is contrary to public policy, contracts in furtherance of such act are null and void; but where the statute fixes a mere penalty, contracts in relation to the matters which subject the maker to the penalty are not on that account invalidated. If not intrinsically wrong the individual is permitted to perform the act upon payment of the penalty: Hill v. Smith, Mor., 70.

299. A sale of diseased sheep in violation of statutory provisions is void, so that the purchase price cannot be recovered, even though the buyer knew the sheep were diseased, the statute being for the protection of the public, and not merely for the protection of the purchaser: Caldwell v. Bridal, 48-15.

300. Violation of Sunday laws: An express or implied contract made on Sunday for the sale of property, where the parties are not embraced within the exceptions of the statute prohibiting the doing of business upon Sunday (Code, § 4072), will not be enforced by the courts: Pike v. King, 16-49.

301. Vendee of property sold on Sunday may retain it without paying the price agreed upon. The law will leave the parties where it finds them: Ibid.; Kinney v. McDermot, 55-674.

302. If the contract is to pay for property bought and sold on Sunday, the plaintiff cannot recover the value aside from the contract: Pike v. King, 16-49.

303. A vendee obtaining possession of property under a Sunday contract may maintain replevin for such property when subsequently taken from him by the vendor by force: Kinney v. McDermot, 55-674.

304. The execution of a note on Sunday is within the prohibition of the statute imposing a penalty upon any one engaged "in any labor" on that day, and such note is, as against the maker, void in the hands of the payee or his assignees. And in this respect the laws of another state where the note was executed will be presumed to be the same as those of this state: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112; S. C., 82-559.

305. The burden of proving that a contract made on Sunday is within one of the provisions of the statute exempting works of necessity and charity, and persons conscientiously observing the seventh day, from its operation, is upon the party claiming under the exemption, which is in the nature of a proviso: Ibid.

306. A note signed on Sunday, but not, in fact, delivered until Monday, is not void: Bell v. Muhin, 69-408.

307. The defense that a contract is void because made on Sunday must be specially pleaded: Riech v. Bolch, 68-526.

308. It does not follow that where the contract only is unlawful, the plaintiff cannot recover upon the original consideration in a proper case: Sayre v. Wheeler, 31-112.

309. An action cannot be maintained to recover damages for fraudulent representations made in connection with a Sunday contract: Gunderson v. Richardson, 56-56.

In violation of law.

310. Though the contract be void as made on Sunday, the parties may make a valid contract with reference to the same subject-matter on a subsequent week-day, and it would seem that a subsequent ratification of the Sunday contract would be binding: Harrison v. Colton, 81-16.

311. To amount to the ratification of a contract of lease executed on Sunday something more than mere occupation of the premises must be shown. Such occupancy might render the tenant liable under an implied promise for a quantum meruit, but not for the rent stipulated. To constitute a ratification there must be some new promise to perform the terms of the lease, or something equivalent thereto: McIntosh v. Lee, 57-356.

312. A party to a Sunday contract cannot set up the fact of its execution on Sunday to defeat it in the hands of one who is a good faith assignee thereof for value and without notice of the illegality: Johns v. Bailey, 45-241.

313. A negotiable note made on Sunday, but dated on another day, and having nothing on its face to indicate its invalidity, is not void in the hands of a bona fide holder acquiring it before maturity without notice: Clinton Nat. Bank v. Graves, 48-228.

314. The transferee, after maturity, without knowledge of the fact that the note bearing date on a secular day was actually executed on Sunday, may recover thereon. The defense to the note is not an equity which may be set up against one who purchases after maturity: Leightman v. Kadetska, 58-676.

315. The admission of a debt such as will take it out of the bar of the statute of limitations is not void because made on Sunday: Ayres v. Bane, 39-518.

316. The fact that at the time of receiving an injury for which another would be liable, the person injured is engaged in business in violation of the Sunday law, will not defeat his recovery: Schmid v. Humphrey, 48-652.

317. Nor will the fact that a railway train is operated in violation of the Sunday law render the railway company liable for damages accidentally occurring from the operation of such train without fault or negligence on the part of the company: Tingle v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 60-333.

As to lotteries, gambling contracts and compounding of felonies, see infra, §§ 332-355.

318. Contracts made in another state in violation of the laws of this state: To give effect to contracts made outside of the state is an act of comity due from the courts of the state in which they are sought to be enforced to the state in which they are made, and the rule that a contract, valid where made, may be enforced in another state, although it would not be valid if made in such state, is subject to the following exceptions: (1) That neither the state nor its citizens shall suffer any injury or inconvenience by giving legal effect to the contract which should not in itself, nor in the means used to give it effect, work injury to the state where it is intended to be enforced. (2) That the consideration of the contract be not immoral, and the giving effect to it will not have a bad tendency or exhibit to the citizens of the state an example pernicious and detestable. (3) The contract must not be opposed to the policy and institutions of the state where it is sought to be enforced: Davis v. Bronson, 6-410.

319. Contract in violation of liquor laws: Therefore, held, that under the state statute providing that no action should be maintained in any court of the state for the value of intoxicating liquors sold in another state or country with intent to enable any person to violate the law prohibiting the sale of such liquors in this state, a contract for the sale of liquors made in another state, with the intent to enable the purchaser to sell them in this state in violation of such law, could not be enforced in the courts of this state: Ibid.

320. In case liquors are sold in another state for a resale in this state, mere knowledge that the resale in this state would be in violation of law would not necessarily vitiate or avoid the contract, but it would be a fact from which the jury might infer the existence of an intent to enable the purchaser to violate the law: Tegler v. Shipman, 33-194.

See further, INTOXICATING LIQUORS, VIII. Illegal sales, in general, see SALES, §§ 18, 19.

Against public policy.

c. Against public policy.

321. Dismissal of proceeding to establish highway: A proceeding to establish a public highway being in its nature public and for the benefit of the whole public, a contract by the party who has commenced such proceeding, for its abandonment, is contrary to public policy and void: Jacobs v. Tobiasson, 65-245

322. Official fees: An agreement by a sheriff to accept a fixed sum in lieu of legal fees for services to be performed will be null and void as against public policy and against the provisions of statute, whether the sum to be paid be greater or less than the legal fees: Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 40-200.

323. Omission of official duty: A bond of indemnity given to an officer to secure him against liability for failure to perform his official duty is illegal and cannot be enforced by him: Cole v. Parker, 7-187.

324. Champerty and maintenance: While we have no statute prescribing the offenses of maintenance and champerty, and providing punishment therefor, and a contract cannot be declared void and unlawful on that ground, yet a contract of that nature in contravention of public policy, as tending to prevent or interfere with the administration of justice, will be held void on that ground: Ade v. Hanna, 47-264.

325. Therefore, held, that a bond given by an attorney to his client in which it was agreed that for a compensation the attorney should prosecute the case of his client on appeal, and should save his client harmless from any judgment that might be rendered against him in such case, was void: Ibid.

326. In the absence of statutory provisions, a contract of a champertous nature will be declared void as against public policy: Boardman v. Thompson, 25-487; Hyatt v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 68-662.

327. There is no necessity in this country for enforcing the common law as to champerty and maintenance. The causes which gave rise to the law do not exist here, and as the reason for the law has ceased, the law itself ceases: Wright v. Meek, 3 G. Gr., 472.

328. Champerty cannot be predicated upon the assignment of a note or account and an action thereon, although the assignee gives, as the only consideration therefor, his obligation to pay the net proceeds of the action to the assignor: Knadler v. Sharp, 36-232.

329. An agreement by one party, in consideration of release from a note and the payment of a sum of money, to foreclose a mortgage held by him and procure the conveyance to another of the property sold at the foreclosure sale, held not champertous: Cooley v. Osborne, 50-526.

330. The fact that an action is being prosecuted by attorneys under a champertous contract cannot be set up as a defense therein: Allison v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 42-274; Small v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 55-582.

331. The fact that a contract by which a cause of action is assigned is champertous can be pleaded only in an action between the parties to such contract, and if not pleaded therein, the contract can be enforced as valid between them. A stranger whose interests or rights are not affected by the contract cannot set up champerty to invalidate it. The defense appertains to the contract itself, and can only be pleaded in an action between the parties to it: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69-296.

And further as to champerty, see ATTORNEYS, §§ 94-102.

332. Lottery: A contract contemplating the disposal of property by chance is against public policy and cannot be enforced: Guenther v. Dewein, 11-133.

333. Wager; election bets: A wager contract based upon the result of an election is void, as against public policy: David v. Ransom, 1 G. Gr., 338.

334. Where, in pursuance of a contract previously made between the parties to a wager, plaintiff delivered to the successful party an article and charged it to the other party to the wager, held, that he could not recover from the person so charged the value of the article furnished: Ibid.

335. But held, that a request by the party charged, and subsequent to the determination of the wager, to deliver the article to the successful party, would render him liable if delivery was made in pursuance of such request: Ibid.

336. Recovery of money paid over on wager: Money lost on a wager and paid over cannot be recovered back: Thrift v. Redman, 18-25.

Against public policy.

837. Recovery from stakeholder: A party depositing money or other property with a stakeholder as a wager may recover it back before it is paid over to the winner: Shannon v. Baumer, 10-210.

838. An action may be maintained against a stakeholder who has paid over to the winning party money placed in his hands as a wager after he has been notified by the loser not to do so: Adkins v. Flemming, 29-122.

839. A demand upon the stakeholder by one of the parties to the wager for the entire amount in his hands, on the ground that he is successful in the wager, is not a revocation of the wager so as to entitle him to recover from such stakeholder the amount deposited by him and afterwards paid over in pursuance of the result of the wager to the opposite party: Okerson v. Crittenden, 62-297.

840. Although one who has deposited money with a stakeholder on a wager cannot recover the same back after it is paid over to the winner, yet where a promissory note for an amount greater than the wager was deposited with a stakeholder and by him turned over to the winner, who appropriated it to his own use, held, that the original owner might recover from such winner the excess of the value of the note over the amount of the wager: Shaw v. Gardner, 80-111.

841. Action upon wagering contract: Action cannot be maintained upon a note showing upon its face that it was given in a betting transaction: Sipe v. Finarty, 6-894.

842. And even if the note is given upon an apparent consideration, the agreement between the parties may be such as to make it clearly a wagering contract: Craig v. Andrews, 7-17.

843. The statute (Code, § 4029) declaring all notes, contracts, etc., given upon a gambling or wager consideration void, renders them void even in the hands of an innocent purchaser before maturity: Ibid.; Traders' Bank v. Alsop, 64-97.

844. Where one, in behalf of himself and others, deposited a sum as a wager, held, that in an action to recover such sum from the stakeholder, he could only recover the amount actually belonging to him, the contract being absolutely void and plaintiff having therefore no authority to sue for the others thereunder: Toney v. Snyder, 50-73.

845. Options: To invalidate a contract on the ground of the illegality of the transaction, as being a gambling or option contract, it must be shown by a preponderance of evidence that on the part of both parties the transaction was with the knowledge and purpose that no actual delivery of the property which was the subject of the sale should be made, or, in other words, that both participated in the intention which renders the contract void. If one of the parties acts in good faith, with the intention and expectation of delivering or receiving the property which is the subject of the sale, the transaction as to him will be valid, and will be a sufficient consideration for a contract in his hands based thereon: Murry v. Ocheltree, 59-435.

846. Certain instructions to the effect that instruments purporting to convey the title to grain were void because they were issued to pay losses which might be suffered in the purchase of commodities, wherein it was not the purpose or intention of either of the parties that the purchase or sale should be consummated by the delivery or receipt of the article purchased or sold, but on the contrary it was the purpose of all the parties that the same should be settled by the payment of the difference between the purchase or selling price and the market price at the time of settlement, held correct: Lowe v. Young, 59-864.

847. The option contracts that are void are such as do not contemplate the actual delivery of the commodity purchased, but rather contemplate that the subject of the contract is not intended to be delivered: Gregory v. Wattowa, 58-711.

848. When the parties to an executory contract for the sale of property intend that there shall be no delivery thereof, but that the transaction shall be settled by the payment of the difference between the contract price and the market price of the commodity at the time fixed, the contract is void: First Nat. Bank v. Oskaloosa Packing Co., 66-41.

849. The party seeking to avoid the contract may testify as to the intention with which the contract was made, whether it was that the goods contracted for should be delivered or not: Ibid.

 Against public policy.

350. A circumstance tending to indicate that the transaction is an option contract is that the agent through whom the transaction is made, and who attempts to enforce the contract, did not disclose to the other party the names of the persons with whom, in his behalf, the contract was made: Ibid.

351. Another circumstance tending to show that delivery of the property to the purchaser was not intended, would be that the amount of the pretended purchase appears to be largely in excess of the means of the purchaser: Ibid.

352. If the agent through whom the purchase is made knows that the transaction is an option contract, he cannot recover money advanced by him to one of the parties for the purpose of carrying on the transaction: Ibid.

353. While contracts for the sale and delivery of grain in the future, which are virtually bets in relation to the future price of grain, are of a purely gambling and criminal character, and, where their true character is known, the courts should condemn them and hold them void, yet, in the movements of the grain of the country, contracts for future delivery are, to some extent, a necessity, and they are as legitimate as any other, and that, too, though the parties may contemplate a possibility of settlement by the payment of differences. The real intention of the parties must determine the character of the transaction, and in arriving at the intention the court must be governed by the evidence and not by conjectures based upon its knowledge of other contracts: Tomblin v. Callen, 69-229.

354. Compounding felony: The defendant in a criminal prosecution, being convicted, executed certain notes to the prosecuting witness and her attorneys, which were to be delivered in the event that prosecutrix should sign an application for defendant's pardon, or in case that on appeal and reversal of the case and a new trial, defendant should be acquitted or discharged. And it was also agreed that a civil action by the prosecutrix for damages was to be discontinued. Held, that an agreement for the delivery of the note was void as against public policy, as tending to stifle the prosecution of crime and defeat justice: Haines v. Lewis, 54-801.

355. Evidence in a particular case held not sufficient to show that a contract was entered into for the purpose of compromising a felony: Malli v. Willett, 57-705.

And further, as to compounding felony, see supra, § 279; and CRIMINAL LAW, II, 5, b.

356. Restraint of trade; sale of business; good-will: While contracts in general restraint of trade are void, those which are in restraint of trade as to particular persons or places, or for a limited time, are valid if founded upon proper consideration: Hedge v. Lowe, 47-137.

357. Therefore, held, that an agreement made by a person engaged in the business of selling agricultural implements, in connection with the sale of his business, not to engage in the implement business in the same place, or that vicinity, within five years from that time, either as principal or agent, without the consent of the other party, was valid: Ibid.

358. Such a contract is assignable in connection with the sale of the business by the party with whom it is made to another: Ibid.

359. A covenant binding a party not to engage in a particular trade within two miles of the premises occupied by him at the time of the contract, is not illegal as in undue restraint of trade: Arnold v. Kreutzer, 67-214.

360. The good-will of a trade or business may be the subject of bargain and sale when connected with any particular stock in trade, or with some valuable secret of trade, or with a well-established stand for business. A court of equity will decree specific performance of a contract of sale of the good-will of a business or trade, or the law will give damages for the breach of such a contract: Moorehead v. Hyde, 38-382.

361. An agreement in consideration of a sale of land to another to discontinue keeping a tavern upon an adjoining tract of land is not illegal as in improper restraint of trade, the restriction being within a reasonable limit: Heichew v. Hamilton, 3 G. Gr., 596.

362. A contract not to engage in the practice of law at a particular place is not against public policy: Smalley v. Greene, 52-241.

363. An agreement in a particular case, held to amount to the sale of a medical practice, and an agreement not to carry on the same business in the same place; but held, that such agreement would not prevent defendant, when located in another place, from practicing as a physician in the place where he had formerly been located: Haldeman v. Simonton, 55-144.

Against public policy.—Effect of illegality.

364. A contract for the sale of business of a physician, in which it was stipulated that the seller reserved the right to practice in special cases, construed: Powers v. Strout, 67-341.

As to breach of contract not to carry on business, see infra. §§ 569-572.

365. Monopolies: The power of courts to declare a contract void as being in contravention of sound public policy, like the power to declare a statute unconstitutional, should be exercised only in cases free from doubt. In a particular case, held, that a contract for the erection of an elevator, and the handling of all through grain at a terminal point, where it was necessary to handle it, was not a monopoly in such sense as to be void: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 26-191.

366. Through transportation: A contract by a railway company with the owner of a warehouse by which such company agreed to deliver to the warehouseman all through grain shipped over its line, and pay a certain amount per bushel for the handling of the same, held not void as in contravention of acts of congress intended to secure transportation on through lines without change of cars: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33-422, 498.

367. Construction of railway upon highway: An agreement to do that which is expressly authorized by the law cannot be considered to be against public policy. So held as to a contract with a railway company to erect its line along or near a public highway instead of through lands of the contracting parties: Chicago. R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Spafford, 41-292.

368. Location of railway depot: Defendant, in consideration of the conveyance of certain lots by plaintiff and others, agreed to construct and maintain on such lots the only depot for its road in a city named, but in violation of such contract erected and maintained a second depot in another part of said city. In an action by plaintiff to recover the value of the property conveyed, held, that the contract was void as against public policy, and plaintiff being in pari delicto could not recover: Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58-126.

369. To recover swamp lands: Where the defendant county entered into a contract with plaintiff, by which the latter was to endeavor to secure certain swamp lands, or indemnity therefor, to the county from the general government, and receive one-half the money so secured as compensation for his services, and plaintiff did secure certain sums for the county through congressional legislation, it not appearing that the use of any improper means was contemplated in the contract, held, that it was not void as against public policy: Denison v. Crawford County, 48-211.

370. Contract for materials furnished for improper purpose: To render a contract for a sale of lumber for the erection of a building void, on the ground that the building was to be used for a gambling house, it should appear that the seller knew at the time of the sale that the lumber was to be put to an unlawful purpose, and that he sold it for the purpose of having it used for that purpose: Dorsey v. Langworthy, 3 G. Gr., 841.

d. Effect of illegality.

371. Method of performance: Where the illegality is not in the thing to be done under the contract, but in the manner of performing it, it is not to be presumed that the parties intended a violation of the law, and the fact that it was performed in an illegal manner, when it might have been performed otherwise, will not defeat the right of recovery. (By Adams, J., in dissenting opinion): Dillon v. Allen, 46-299.

372. Partial illegality: Where one makes a contract in part illegal, he will be held to the performance of the legal part if the contract is capable of separation, but if not, then the entire contract is void: Casady v. Woodbury County, 13-113.

373. Estoppel: A contract which is void as against public policy cannot be made to operate as an estoppel. It has no validity whatever: Langan v. Sankey, 55-52.

374. Parties in pari delicto: The law will leave all persons who share in the guilt of an illegal or immoral transaction where it finds them, and will not lend its aid to enforce the contract while executory, nor interfere to rescind it and secure the recovery of the consideration when executed: Harvey v. Tama County, 53-228; Williamson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 53-126.

375. That one of the parties to the contract will be benefited by refusing to enforce it, on the ground that it is illegal and the parties are in pari delicto, will not prevent the courts from adhering to the rule: Dillon v. Allen, 46-299; Caldwell v. Bridal, 48-15.

376. The doctrine of par delictum is not modified by the degree of guilt of the violators of the law, or the turpitude of the offense, nor does it have respect to the punishment inflicted: Steever v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 62-371.

X. CONSTRUCTION.

377. The writing to govern: The written agreement, unless ambiguous, is to be taken as the fair expression of the agreement of the parties: Trustees of Oskaloosa College v. Stafford, 14-152.

As to parol evidence to vary the writing, see EVIDENCE, II, 4.

378. To be construed by the court: Where a contract is in writing it is the province and duty of the court to construe it and inform the jury what the rights and duties of the parties in the premises are: Rohrabacher v. Warc, 37-85.

And further on this point, see INSTRUCTIONS, §§ 196-208.

379. All the parts construed together: An agreement is to be so construed, if possible, as to give effect to all its parts: Greene v. Day, 34-328; Sowers v. Page County, 32-580.

380. Surplusage: The doctrine of surplusage has no application to contracts. Words in a contract, the meaning of which is not inconsistent with words preceding or following, cannot be disregarded: Decorah v. Kesselmeier, 45-166.

381. Inconsistent provisions: Sometimes in order to construe a contract in accordance with the intention of the parties, it is necessary to disregard words which evidently contradict the spirit of the agreement: Davis v. Fish, 2 G. Gr., 447.

382. A contract containing conditions construed, and held that it was not to be taken in a sense which would enable one of the parties to avoid all liability by neglecting to do an act therein contemplated: Rush v. Carpenter, 54-132.

383. Copulative words: Where a bond provided a penalty for the sale by defendant of liquors "to any intoxicated, card playing, whatsoever person or habitual drunkard," held, that the rules of the language required the supplying of the copulative "and" between "intoxicated" and "card playing:" Decorah v. Kesselmeier, 45-166.

384. General clause: General language must be held to relate to the rights and interests of the same nature and description with those which have already been mentioned: Muhaffy v. Muhaffy, 63-55.

385. How intent to be ascertained: The whole contract must be considered in determining the meaning of any of its parts. The first point is to ascertain what the parts mean, and then to put such expression on the contract as to bring it as near their actual meaning as the words the parties saw fit to employ, when properly construed, and the rules of law, will permit. In arriving at this meaning the subject-matter of the contract and the situation of the parties and of the property must be considered: Jacobs v. Jacobs, 42-600.

386. Parts construed together: Under the rule that all the parts of a contract will be construed in such way as to give force and validity to all of them and to all the language used, if possible, held, that a provision in a lease that "the following rents be paid, to wit: Fifty dollars to be paid in money and fifteen dollars in labor," was only changed as to the money payment by a supplemental agreement that "the provision that does provide to be paid in money is to be paid in grain," etc.: Emerick v. Clemens, 26-332.

387. In construing a contract executed contemporaneously with a note and the indorsement thereon, and a mortgage given to secure the same, held, that they should all be taken together; Elmore v. Higgins, 20-250.

388. A contract by which an elevator was erected to handle grain for a railway company, construed, taking its terms in their most natural significance as applied to the subject-matter, and considering as a whole, two agreements, one of which was subsequent and supplementary to the other, and evidently calculated to supply a deficiency in the prior one: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 26-191.

389. To be construed most strongly against the party contracting: Where the language of a writing is ambiguous it should be taken most strongly against the contractor, and especially is this true when a construction of which it is fairly susceptible has been placed upon it, and third parties have been induced to act in the belief that the construction is the correct one: Hopwood v. Corbin, 63-218.

390. The language of an agreement drawn by an attorney, between himself and client, is, in case of doubtful meaning, to be given that construction which is least favorable to the attorney: Schlicht v. Stivers, 61-746.

391. Sense in which understood by opposite party: Under statutory provision (Code, § 3652), when the terms of an agreement have been intended in a different sense by the parties to it, that sense is to prevail against either party in which he had reason to suppose the other understood it: Snow v. Flannery, 10-818; Stout v. City F. Ins. Co., 12-371, 380; Wilkinson v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 30-119, 127.

392. This statutory provision only applies to instruments which arise out of and are the expression of the agreement of two minds: Pierson v. Armstrong, 1-282, 287.

393. If the language used by and known to the parties to the contract is ambiguous or fairly admits of more than one construction, that meaning is to be given it in which it is understood by the other party, whether the party so acting has reason to believe it was so understood by the other party or not: Minnesota Linseed Oil Co. v. Montague, 65-67.

394. Construction by act of parties: Where there is doubt about the construction of a contract, a previous construction placed upon it by the parties themselves may be considered: McDaniels v. Whitney, 38-60.

395. But if the acts of the parties are as consistent with one construction as another, such acts are not to be given any controlling weight: Le Grand Quarry Co. v. Reichard, 40-161.

396. The fact that under a contract to furnish water to a city by which a certain rate of compensation was provided for a specified period, and reduced rates for subsequent periods, the city paid the higher rate for a greater length of time than required by the proper construction of the contract, held, not to bind the city to an improper construction of the contract which was insisted on by the opposite party, and in accordance with which the payment by the city at the higher rate was required: Davenport Water Co. v. Davenport, 64-55.

397. Understanding of the parties: Where in a contract of sale of a stock of goods it was agreed that the price should be the wholesale price less ten per cent., and in computing the amount five per cent. was added to the actual cost price for carriage, but it appeared that by the custom of merchants the term wholesale price meant the actual cost without carriage, held, that the real meaning of the terms used and not their supposed meaning must prevail: Spencer v. Millisack, 52-81.

398. Where the question is as to whether certain acts constituted delivery of property under a contract, it is not material what the party's opinion of the effect of his act was at the time, or the intention with which it was done: Smyth v. Ward's Ex'rs, 46-339.

399. The understanding or intention of a party making a contract does not constitute the limit of his liability thereunder: White v. Van Horn, 19-189.

400. The court will not always construe a contract to mean what the parties to it meant, but will give to it that construction which will bring it as near to the actual meaning of the parties as the words they have seen fit to employ, when properly construed, and the rules of law, will permit: Field v. Schricher, 14-119.

401. Understanding of witness as to meaning of terms: The testimony of a witness as to his understanding of the meaning of the terms used in a contract is not admissible, even where the meaning of the terms in any particular business may be shown: King v. Nelson, 36-509.

Further as to opinions of witnesses, see EVIDENCE, I, 4.

Construction.

402. Surrounding circumstances to show intention: In determining the construction of a contract the subject-matter is to be fully considered. It is equally important to know the situation of the parties and of the property, as also the purpose of the parties in making the contract, for the purpose and intention will be carried into effect so far as the rules of language and law will permit: Field v. Schricher, 14-119.

403. In the construction of a written contract, circumstances surrounding its execution may be introduced in evidence for the purpose of aiding the court in construing it, where there is doubt or ambiguity on its face; but where no such doubt exists, the terms and conditions of the writings alone must determine the construction: Grimes v. Simpson Centenary College, 42-589.

404. In the interpretation of a contract the intention of the parties must be ascertained and followed. For this purpose may be shown the extrinsic circumstances which surrounded the transaction, the objects in view inducing the contract and the actions of the parties in connection with it: Corbett v. Berryhill, 29-157.

405. Custom and usage: The terms of every written instrument are to be understood in their plain, ordinary and popular sense, unless they have generally, in respect to the subject-matter, as by the usage of trade or the like, acquired a peculiar sense distinct from the popular sense of the same words; or unless the context evidently points out that in the particular instance, and in order to effectuate the immediate intention of the parties, it should be understood in some other peculiar sense: Willmering v. McGaughey, 30-205.

406. Therefore, held, that evidence was not admissible to show an understanding of stock dealers as to the language of a particular contract in relation to the sale of stock, in which no technical words were used: Ibid.

407. The parties are presumed to have intended that the language should have its ordinary and received signification, or the meaning which the law attaches to it, but custom may be shown to affect the construction or to substitute in a particular instance a rule resulting from usage, in place of that which the law, not the contract of the parties, would prescribe. Whether this usage be ancient, universal and well established, or merely the manner of doing a particular thing in a small neighborhood or by a small class of men for a few years, if it falls within the reason of the rule which makes it a part of the contract, it amounts to a custom. If it is so far established, and so far known to the parties, as that it must be supposed that they contracted with reference to it, it comes within the reason of the rule. It may be general or local. If general, then a presumption of knowledge on the part of the contracting parties arises. If local, the knowledge of the parties must be proven before it can avail to affect the contract. If established, the length of its duration is not very material. The characteristics of a good custom are said to be that it shall be established, general, uniform, and known to the parties; Rindskoff v. Barrett, 14-101.

408. Where a contract was made for the sale of potatoes of a certain kind, and it appeared that the potatoes offered were not of that kind, but mixed, held, that the testimony of a dealer that the potatoes were what, according to custom, would be called the kind required, was not admissible, it not appearing that the custom referred to was either general or within the knowledge of the party sought to be bound: Woods v. Miller, 55-168.

409. It is competent for parties to contract with reference to a known usage or custom, and evidence tending to support that custom or usage, if pleaded, is properly admitted in construing the contract: Hughes v. Stanley, 45-622.

410. Acts may be interpreted in the light of custom to raise an implied contract, and a contract express or implied may be interpreted in the light of custom for the purpose of determining its nature and extent where they would otherwise be doubtful. This is about the extent of the office of custom: Doughty v. Paige, 48-483.

411. A witness engaged in a particular trade may testify as to the meaning of words in a contract as used in that trade to which the contract relates. Such meaning will be adopted by the court in the interpretation of the contract: Cook Mfg. Co. v. Randall, 62-244.

Construction.

412. Parties to a contract may vary or restrain by an express stipulation certain rules of law so far as they would otherwise apply to or vary their contract. Usage, then, affords the same evidence of intention as the most direct language, and may have the same effect in varying legal rules: Grinman v. Walker, 9-426.

413. Parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing that in the place where the contract was made the words had, by known and established usage, a different meaning from the general and popular one: Steyer v. Dwyer, 81-20.

414. Usage or custom cannot control express language: A custom cannot overcome an express contract, nor defeat an express limitation, nor be received in evidence to change the obvious meaning of words occurring in a written instrument: Wanless v. McCandless, 88-20.

415. A contract cannot be controlled by a custom which the parties have expressly excluded by necessary implication; as, for instance, by providing that a thing which custom affects shall be done in a different way: Randolph v. Halden, 44-327.

416. Customs are subordinate to contracts, and will not control where the contract contains conditions not in harmony therewith: Smyth v. Ward's Ex'rs, 46-839.

417. Where a contract fixes a price, and provides in terms that no extras shall be allowed, a custom to the contrary will not control the express stipulation of the parties: Phillips v. Starr, 26-349.

418. It is not competent to defeat the provisions of a contract by proof of the existence of a custom differing therefrom; for instance, as to the place of payment: Duncan v. Green, 43-679.

419. Where both parties set up and rely upon a contract, the difference between them being as to the terms thereof, custom cannot be shown to control or vary such contract, it not appearing that the contract was made with reference thereto: Windland v. Deeds, 44-98.

420. A warehouse receipt which, by its terms, gives rise to a contract of bailment, cannot be contradicted or varied by evidence of a custom or usage which would require the receipt to be regarded as a contract of sale: Marks v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 43-146.

421. Evidence of custom to explain the meaning of words used in a contract is not admissible, where the contract is expressed in ordinary language, not referring to principles of science or art, nor including technical phraseology, or words used in a technical sense: Cash v. Hinkle, 86-623.

422. Therefore, held, that under a contract for the sale of "sixty-five head of fat hogs, to weigh two hundred and twenty-five pounds and over," it was not competent to prove a custom among dealers by which such language was understood to mean that the lot should average that weight, but that the contract should be construed as requiring the delivery of that number of hogs, each weighing not less than the amount specified: Ibid.

As to evidence of custom, see EVIDENCE, §§ 60-67.

423. Construction in particular cases: In a contract by a railway company agreeing to construct its line through a certain township, and stipulating that it "would erect a depot within one mile of the village of New Hampton in New Hampton township," held, that the contract was sufficiently complied with by the erection of a depot within one mile of such village, although the depot was not located within the township, the description with reference to the township being held applicable to the village and not to the depot: McGregor & S. C. R. Co. v. Foley, 38-588.

424. Where a note for railway stock was given upon condition "that a depot be established within the present town of Wheaton," held, that such stipulation referred to the recorded plat of the town as it existed at the time of the making of the note: Davenport & St. P. R. Co. v. Rogers, 39-298.

425. Under a contract for the erection of a mill, in which the parties warranted it to do good work, and to manufacture an amount of flour per day equal to other good mills with an equal number of burrs of similar dimensions, and having the same quantum of motive power, held, that the warranty was not to be limited to mills constructed upon the same general plan: Mills v. Mabon, 9-484.

Construction.

426. Where a note provided that it was to be paid "on or before the court-house in and for the county of," etc., "is completed," and in an agreement with reference to this note it was described as "payable when the court-house is completed according to the plans and specifications on file," held, that the note itself, and not a recital thereof in the agreement, was to control as to the intention of the parties, and that when the court-house was in good faith accepted by the county supervisors, though it differed from the plans and specifications on file, the note became payable: Levally v. Harmon's Adm'r, 20-583.

427. By a contract plaintiff agreed to "cut all the timber now standing upon the said tract of land that can be cut into cord-wood and saw-logs; . . . but this agreement shall not bind the said [plaintiff] to cut and estimate any timber standing upon said land the cutting of which will cost more than fifty per cent. above the customary rates of cutting and chopping." Plaintiff having cut wood and logs from said land, but having left other timber thereon which defendant claimed that he was, under the contract, bound to cut, and it appearing that none of the timber so remaining could be cut at fifty per cent. above the customary rates of cutting, held, that plaintiff was under no obligation to cut any of said timber, and was not required by the contract to cut and account for all the timber, provided it could be cut at an average of fifty per cent. above the ordinary rates: Wadleigh v. Shaw, 45-585.

428. A contract for furnishing water to a city by a company chartered for that purpose, providing that for a certain period under the charter compensation should be paid at a stipulated rate, and for subsequent periods at reduced rates, construed: Davenport Water Co. v. Davenport, 64-55.

429. The members of a partnership having made an agreement by which one was to take the assets and pay the debts, held, that the question as to whether the parties intended that what one partner might be owing the firm should be considered as assets, or that each partner should be relieved of any liability to the firm or each other, should be submitted to the jury: Carl v. Knott, 16-379.

430. A contract between plaintiff and defendant was that if goods sold by the former to the latter were resold by the latter at or above invoice price, a percentage was to be paid plaintiff in addition to the original price of the goods. It appearing that defendant used due diligence in selling the goods for the highest attainable price, which was less than the invoice price, held, that defendant was under no obligation to keep or render account: Balch v. Ashton, 54-123.

431. The terms of a contract as to compensation for stone work, construed, in a particular case: Shulte v. Hennessy, 40-352.

432. Under a contract for one hundred thousand brick to be "counted and enumerated in the wall according to the custom and rule of brick layers in ascertaining the number of brick in a solid wall, not allowing anything for space occupied by openings in the wall," held, that it was to be construed according to its terms, and the number of brick was to be determined for the purpose of the contract without regard to the actual count: Brown v. Cole, 45-601.

433. A contract as to the disposition or division of lands acquired under a land grant, construed in a particular case: Smith v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 43-239.

434. A particular contract in relation to water-power, considered and construed: Adairs v. Wright, 14-22.

435. A contract as to the grading of a railway, construed: Fish v. Wolfe, 50-636.

436. A contract in a particular case, construed: Whiting v. Root, 52-292.

437. Lex loci: A contract, such as a chattel mortgage, properly executed under the laws of another state, will be regarded as of the same obligation and receive the same interpretation in the courts of this state that it would receive in the courts of the state where it was executed: Smith v. McLean, 24-322.

438. The general rule is that the validity, nature, obligation and interpretation of a contract is to be governed by the law of the place of performance, but if the contract is void or illegal by the law of the place where it is made, it is void and illegal everywhere: McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 24-412.

439. Where an agent takes orders for sale of goods in this state, which are subject to acceptance by the principal in another state, the place of acceptance, and not the place of taking the order, is the place of the contract. But if the agreement is completed by the agent in the state where the order is given, that is the place of contract: Tegler v. Shipman, 33-194; Taylor v. Pickett, 52-467.

440. The common law, or law merchant, where it has received no modification from local custom or statute, will be declared by the courts of this state for themselves, aided by such lights and precedents as may be found in all the authorities and decisions bearing on the question, and the decision of the courts where a contract under the law merchant is made, there being no statutory custom, are not binding upon the courts of this state: Franklin v. Twogood, 25-520.

441. Parties in one state making a contract with reference to the law of another must be held to know the laws of the state with reference to which the contract is made: Huthsing v. Bosquet, 3 McCrary, 569.

Further as to CONFLICT OF LAWS, see that title.

Contracts of sale: As to construction of contracts relating to sales of land, see VENDORS; and of contracts relating to sales of personal property, see SALES.

XI. PERFORMANCE; BREACH.

a. Time of performance.

442. Reasonable time: Where a contract specifies no time within which performance shall be completed, the law implies that its stipulations shall be performed within a reasonable time, to be determined by the jury in view of the circumstances under which the contract was made and the nature of the subject-matter: Curtiss v. Waterloo, 38-266; Livingston v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 35-555.

443. Therefore, where a railway company had contracted with a land owner to construct a cattle pass under its road, held, that the company was not liable for breach of the contract until the pass was demanded for the use and convenience of the land owner: Livingston v. Iowa Midland R. Co., 35-555.

444. Where time is fixed: In an action for breach of contract which by its terms is to be performed by a fixed time, it is error to instruct the jury that the party may recover damages for failure to perform the contract within a reasonable time: Sturgeon v. Hock, 43-155.

445. Waiver of time of performance: Where no objection has been made on account of failure to perform a contract within the time fixed, and no injury therefrom has resulted, delay in performance will not constitute a defense: Hutchinson v. New Sharon, C. V. & E. R. Co., 63-727.

446. Burden of proof: Where it was agreed, upon the transfer of a note, that suit thereon should be brought immediately, but time was not made of the essence of the contract, held, that the party whose duty it was to bring suit did not become absolutely liable for failure to sue at once, or at any particular time, except on proof of damage resulting from neglect to bring suit within a reasonable time, and that the burden of proof as to that fact was upon the party alleging the damage: First Nat. Bank v. Haug, 52-538.

447. Party in default cannot recover: When both parties are at fault in the performance of a contract, the one cannot recover anything against the other by reason of the failure of the latter: Smith v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 43-289.

448. Where one of the parties to a contract for the construction of a railroad agreed to take a certain sum due to the railroad company in stock subscriptions and aid taxes, held, that the party taking the subscriptions and taxes could not recover from the railroad company for the performance of the contract without showing an effort to collect such subscriptions and taxes: Arnold v. River R. Const. Co., 35-99.

449. Executed contract of sale: In an action upon a contract to recover the consideration agreed upon for the sale of property, performance being alleged on the part of the plaintiff and denied by the defendant, held, that as such contract itself showed a sale to defendant of the property, no evidence on the part of the plaintiff was necessary: Atkins v. Anderson, 63-739.

450. Military substitute not mustered in: Under a contract to serve as a military substitute, held, that the acceptance and enrollment of the substitute by a local board, and the issuance by said board of a certificate of exemption to the principal, did not entitle the substitute to recover the price agreed upon when he was afterward rejected before final muster into the service: Rutledge v. Squires, 23-53.

Conditions, etc., to be performed.

b. Conditions and other stipulations required to be performed.

451. Performance of conditions must appear: Where the obligations of a contract on the part of one party are made dependent on the performance of conditions on the part of the other party, the performance or offer to perform such conditions must be shown before the obligation of the contract can be enforced: Courtright v. Deeds, 37-503; Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Greene, 53-562.

452. Where defendant agreed upon a subscription to give certain lots and a sum of money in aid of a church building, provided that such building should be erected on his lots, and the building was erected elsewhere, held, that the amount of the subscription could not be collected from him: Patrick v. Barker, 33-451.

453. Independent covenants: Where an act is to be done by one party before the consideration act has been done by the other, the covenants to do such acts are independent, and the party suing for breach of contract on the part of the opposite party need not allege the performance or offer to perform the covenants on the part of the plaintiff. An allegation that he is ready and prepared to carry out the agreement on his part is sufficient: Lucas v. Snyder, 2 G. Gr., 490.

454. A covenant with a penalty attached will always be considered as independent: Ibid.

455. Strict performance; time material: Where the performance of a particular act in a particular time and manner is made the condition precedent to a contract, the party seeking to enforce such contract must show performance of the condition precedent or something discharging him from such performance. The cases where an exact, precise performance will be dispensed with in a court of law, and a substantial performance will be held to suffice, are, in their nature, exceptional, and can never be made to apply to a case where, by a fair construction of the contract, time is made material: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Boestler, 15-555.

456. Therefore, held, that where, in a subscription to a railway company, it was provided that the road was to be constructed to a particular point and put under contract within a year from the date of the subscription, and completed within twenty months after the contract, a completion of the railway, before suit brought, but after the expiration of the time when the road should have been constructed by the terms of the contract, was not a substantial performance such as entitled the company to recover on the subscription: Ibid.

457. In a particular case, held, upon the construction of two instruments together, that time was not therein made of the essence of the contract: Chicago, I. & D. R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co., 67-324.

Time, when deemed of the essence, see VENDORS, §§ 138-140; and SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, §§ 51-58.

458. Substantial performance: Where a contract was substantially performed, held, that the fact that there was possibly a slight variance would not be considered sufficient to defeat it: Cedar Falls & M. R. Co. v. Rich, 33-113.

459. Railroad subscriptions: Under a subscription in aid of a railway payable upon condition that the depot and track should be within one mile from a certain point, held, that the location of a side track and a depot, part of which was within the limit, was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the contract: Ibid.

460. In an action upon a contract of subscription in aid of a railroad, held, that the condition that the company should build and own the road was sufficiently complied with where the road was operated by the use of rolling stock leased from another road: Courtright v. Deeds, 37-503.

461. Held, that a contract to make C. a station was substantially complied with by the location of a depot about one-fourth of a mile from the town plat: Jenkins v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 29-255.

462. An agreement by a railroad company to "build or allow but one other depot between E. and P.," held not violated by the establishment of a station at a coal bank, where trains merely stop to take or leave cars; nor would a "water station" be a violation of the contract: Mahaska County R. Co. v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 28-437.

 Conditions, etc., to be performed.

463. Where, in a contract of subscription to a railway company, it was first provided that its road should be constructed to a point within three-fourths of a mile of the corporate limits of a certain town, and a subsequent agreement with reference to the same matter referred to the completion of the road to such town, held, that the completion of the road in accordance with the first contract was a sufficient compliance with the conditions of the last: Courtwright v. Strickler, 87-382.

464. In such case, also held, that the construction of a depot within three-fourths of a mile of the incorporated limits of the town, measured in a straight line, was a sufficient compliance with the contract, and also that it was not necessary that all the side tracks, etc., be within such limit, if the building was properly situated: Ibid.

465. Where a condition of a subscription of stock to a railway company was that the road should be located within the limits of a certain town with a station at the same, held, that the condition must be construed as requiring the location of the depot within the limits of the town: Davenport & St. P. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 40-477.

466. Where a railway company obtained subscriptions under an agreement to lay its track into a certain city, and also was to be donated land for the erection of machine shops, etc., held, that there was not a failure of consideration because the shops, etc., had not been erected at the time the action was brought, when it appeared that the track had been laid as agreed, and there was no time agreed upon for the erection of such improvements: First Nat. Bank v. Hurford, 29-579.

467. A railway subscription was payable at a certain date, "provided said company shall have their road built and in operation by the first day of January, 1861;" held, that the obligor was not bound to pay either the payee or an assignee, unless the condition was complied with, and a completion of the road four years after the time specified was not a sufficient compliance: Thompson v. Oliver, 18-417.

468. Performance of conditions upon which money in aid of a railroad was to become payable, held sufficient in a particular case: Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. v. Schewe, 45-79.

469. The contract in a particular case for the payment of money in aid of a railway being conditioned upon the completion of the railway to a given point by a certain time, held, that such condition was not complied with by the completion of other portions of the railway equally advantageous to the defendant: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Whitney, 48-113.

470. A contract of subscription in aid of the construction of a railway in favor of a certain company or any other company which should grade and tie the road, held, not to make the entire grading and tying of the road a condition precedent to the subscription becoming payable: Iowa N. C. R. Co. v. Bliebenes, 41-267.

471. Where a note given in aid of a railway contained the provision, "the road to be finished by" a certain date to a point named, held, that this provision not being preceded by the word provided, did not constitute a condition precedent, failure to comply with which would operate as a forfeiture of all the rights of the payee, but that the maker might recoup any damages resulting from the delay in such completion: Davis v. Cobban, 39-392.

472. A condition in a note given in aid of the construction of a railroad, providing that the road should be built, etc., within a certain time, and the note be payable within a certain time thereafter, held, not to be a condition precedent, so as to render the note void on failure of performance of the contract within the time specified: Traer v. Stuart, 46-15.

473. Other cases of conditions or stipulations: Under a contract to convey "when an act of congress shall be passed confirming the title" to the property, etc., "provided the said act shall be passed during the session of congress next ensuing," held, that the passing of the act was a condition, and if at the end of the session of congress next ensuing no act such as contemplated by the contract had been passed, the contract was void: Clark v. Langworthy, 3-568.

474. Plaintiff contracted to collect money due on sales made by him for defendant, and Conditions, etc., to be performed.—Waiver.

mortgaged property to secure the performance of the contract. Defendant took possession of the property under the mortgage, claiming that plaintiff had not attempted to collect part of the money due on sales remaining unpaid, and, no reason appearing for not doing so, held, that he could not recover: Scott v. Glaze, 29-168.

475. Under a contract for publication by defendant of a book for plaintiff, which contract contained the provision that plaintiff should procure a copyright therefor, held, that failure on part of plaintiff to take such steps toward procuring a copyright as under the copyright laws should be taken before publication, was a failure of performance and relieved defendant from liability for failure to comply with the contract on his part, and that under such contract it was not the duty of defendant to furnish plaintiff copies of printed title of the book, to be forwarded under the copyright laws: White v. Day, 56-248.

476. Where a lease provided for a forfeiture upon failure to perform certain acts, held, that as the parties had voluntarily entered into the contract, it was not for the court to inquire into their purpose in introducing the conditions thereunder, or to express the opinion that in this respect the contract was a harsh one: Patton v. Bond, 50-508.

477. In an action for damages for failure to perform a contract according to its terms, held error to instruct the jury that the deviation from plans and specifications in matters not affecting either the strength, value or convenience of the building to be erected under the contract, would be unimportant. Such an instruction should be limited to slight and unimportant deviations: Fauble v. Davis, 48-462.

478. Evidence in relation to construction of a building under contract held to show a breach of the terms thereof on account of the failure to substantially comply with the requirements: Robertson v. King, 55-725.

479. Where it was provided in a subscription in aid of the erection of a pork-packing house, that a person named and associates should erect such house, with certain capacity, etc., and the provisions of the contract were complied with by the associates of the person named, he, however, withdrawing from the corporation formed for the purpose of carrying out such contract, held, that the contract was sufficiently complied with: Paddock v. Bartlett, 68-16.

480. Failure of third party to perform conditions: Where plaintiff had furnished timbers to a third party under the agreement that they should be paid for by orders of such third party upon defendant which defendant agreed to pay, held, that without such orders defendant was under no obligation to pay, although the orders were wrongfully withheld by the third party: Drake v. Hill, 53-37.

481. Where the mortgagor under a deed of trust sold the property covered thereby to plaintiff, and an agreement was entered into by all the parties that upon the performance of certain things by the plaintiff, the mortgagor should execute other security to the mortgagee under the trust deed and that such trust deed should be released, it being shown by the evidence that plaintiff executed his part of the contract, and that the mortgagor did not execute the other security and release the trust deed, which was subsequently foreclosed by the defendant, who purchased under the foreclosure sale, held, in an action by plaintiff to redeem, that he was entitled to no relief against the defendant mortgagee, but the mortgagor was liable in damages to plaintiff for his failure to perform the agreement: Beeson v. Hunt, 26-439.

482. Burden of proof: Where it is sought to defeat action upon a contract by proof of a parol condition, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show the failure to comply with the conditions: Williams v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 50-561.

c. Waiver or alteration of conditions or stipulations.

483. Excuses performance: If the party to a contract, containing a condition upon the performance of which his own responsibility is to arise, dispenses with such performance, or by any act of his prevents it, the other party is excused from showing compliance with its demands: Attix v. Pelan, 5-236.

 Waiver or alteration of conditions.¹

484. If, by the terms of a contract of sale, the seller is entitled to a written notice of the failure of the property to correspond with the terms of the contract in order that he may remedy defects therein, the fact that he acts upon notice which does not conform to the requirements of the contract will constitute a waiver of such requirements: Davis v. Robinson, 67-855.

485. Where a party intends to require an exact compliance with a contract in respect to notice of breach, etc., he should stand upon the terms of the contract, and any acts indicating his intention not to insist upon such terms will be deemed a waiver thereof: Davis' Sons v. Butrick, 68-94.

486. Where, under a contract to construct a house by a particular time, a party procured extra work to be done, held, that he thereby waived objection to the failure to complete the house by the time specified: Sweney v. Davidson, 68-386.

487. If, before the expiration of the time for performing the conditions of a contract, the opposite party agrees to perform his part without requiring compliance with such conditions, and the other party acts upon or changes his conduct by reason of such declarations, the conditions may be regarded as waived: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Whitney, 43-113.

488. Under a contract to convey land upon the performance of certain conditions intended for the benefit of the grantor, held, that the execution of a conveyance in pursuance of the contract was a waiver of the condition and that a breach thereof could not afterwards be relied on to defeat such conveyance: Audubon County v. American Emigrant Co., 40-460.

489. Where a note for the payment of money in aid of a railway was placed in the hands of third parties to be delivered to the company upon performance of certain conditions, one of which was the entering into an obligation not to erect another depot within a certain distance of the one provided for in the contract, held, that the condition that such obligation must be entered into must be considered waived, in view of the fact that the note was delivered to the company and the construction of its road completed without such condition being insisted upon, it also appearing that no other depot had in fact been built within the prescribed limit: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Palmer, 42-222.

490. Assent to change: Knowledge of change in the method of performing a contract and assent thereto by opposite party will estop him from afterwards objecting to such change: Garretty v. Brazell, 84-100.

491. A contract for the sale of a harvesting machine which provided for its return at a certain place, held to entitle plaintiff to recover thereon, though at defendant's request the machine was delivered at another place, and additional agreements were made not constituting a new contract but additions to the old one: Gammar v. Borgain, 27-369.

492. The bringing of action to recover compensation under a contract waives any breach thereof by the other party, and plaintiff cannot, in addition to compensation, recover damages for such breach: Bush v. Chapman, 2 G. Gr., 549.

493. Independent acts: Where covenants bind the parties to a contract to perform independent acts which separately constitute a consideration for the covenants, the acceptance and the performance of one of the independent covenants with knowledge that another has not been performed will constitute a waiver of such performance: Jordan v. State Ins. Co., 64-216.

494. Therefore, held, that where an insurance policy was issued in consideration of an agreement on the part of assured to pay certain premiums, coupled with a warranty as to the occupancy of the building, held, that the receipt of the premiums with knowledge of the fact that the building was not occupied according to the warranty was a waiver of such breach: Ibid.

495. Waiver of time of performance especially provided for in a contract will not affect the other provisions of the contract, and a recovery may be had after performance in the same manner as though performance had been within the time stipulated: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63-490.

496. Consideration for waiver: A party may waive performance of conditions stipulated in a contract without consideration, and cannot afterwards maintain action for failure to perform such conditions: Stevens v. Taylor, 58-664.

Acceptance of performance.—Excuses for non-performance.

497. Mere silence as to the non-performance of conditions will not be sufficient to constitute waiver of their performance within the time specified: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Boestler, 15-555.

498. Where a contract of subscription in aid of a railway was conditioned upon the completion of the road to a particular point by a particular time, held, that the fact that the subscriber requested other portions to be completed within the time did not constitute a waiver of the particular condition specified: Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co. v. Whitney, 48-118.

d. Acceptance of performance.

499. Effect of: Where a party makes payment under a contract with knowledge of the manner in which it is being performed, and is present during the performance, consenting to such method of performance, and admits he is suited with it when finished and takes possession, these facts may be construed as showing that the contract has been performed as required: Demoss v. Noble, 6-530.

500. The ratification of a contract made with full knowledge of all that has been done thereunder will prevent the party ratifying from taking advantage of any previous failure on the part of the other party to comply with all the terms of the contract: Warren v. Ewing, 84-168.

501. Where the party for whom work is being performed under a contract is present during its progress giving directions concerning it without making objections to the manner in which it is done, and accepts the work without objection, these facts are proper to be given in evidence to rebut a claim for damages for defective execution of the work; but the party is not to be precluded by such an acceptance from showing that such work was defectively or improperly done: Mitchell v. Wiscotta Land Co., 8-209.

502. The fact that an article manufactured and delivered by contract is delivered after the time when by the terms of the contract it should have been delivered, and is accepted and used by the other party, will not constitute an absolute waiver of the right to recover damages for the delay in completion and delivery: Hansen v. Kirtley, 11-565.

503. An acceptance of a house by the owner of the land whereon it is built for him under contract will not prevent him from showing that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner: Kilbourne v. Jennings, 40-478.

504. The owner of property who sees work done thereon under a contract without objection is not prevented from setting up the fact that the work does not comply with the contract: Smith v. Bristol, 88-24.

505. A party suing for compensation for services under a contract in erecting a building upon defendant's real property need not show an acceptance by defendant. The improvement attaches to the realty and passes to the owner without the formality of delivery and acceptance: Crookshank v. Mallory, 2 G. Gr., 257.

506. An offer to pay for work performed in pursuance of a contract, without objection to the manner of performance, is an admission that the work is performed in accordance with the stipulations of the contract: Hutton v. Maines, 68-650.

e. Excuses for non-performance.

507. Act of opposite party: The fact that a party is prevented from completing the performance of a contract on his part by default of the other party will not defeat his right to recover: Shulte v. Hennessy, 40-352.

508. Where a contract provided for the delivery of railway ties upon cars at a particular station, held, that the failure of the other party to furnish cars would not excuse failure to deliver the ties at a place convenient for loading upon cars: Council Bluffs Iron Works v. Cuppey, 41-104.

509. Impossibility of performance; act of God: When a duty is imposed by law, an act of God rendering its discharge impossible will excuse performance, but the performance of a contract will not be excused on that ground. When one binds himself by a solemn agreement to do an act, he is held liable for its performance, though it is rendered impossible by events over which he has no control, provided those events are such as that the parties could have provided against them in their contract: District T'p v. Smith, 39-9.

Excuses for non-performance.

510. The fact that the performance of the terms of a contract becomes impossible or is greatly impeded by the weather, no provision being made against such contingencies, will not afford an excuse for non-performance: Wolf v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co., 64-380.

511. When the performance of a contract becomes impossible by the act of God, the obligor is excused and his rights under the contract are not forfeited. This rule contemplates cases of absolute impossibility to perform. But where, by reason of the sickness of assured, under a policy of life insurance, there was a failure to pay the annual premium, which by the terms of the policy worked a forfeiture thereof, held, that as such payment might have been made by others for the assured, the impossibility of making it personally would not excuse the failure nor prevent the forfeiture: Carpenter v. Centennial Mut. L. Ass'n, 68-453.

512. Mistake: The failure of a party through mistake to perform his contract will constitute no defense, notwithstanding he has used care and diligence in the effort to perform: Robertson v. SeEVERS, 3-281.

513. Equity will not relieve a party from performing the stipulations of a contract upon the express terms therein named when the facts with reference to which the contract is made are equally within the knowledge or means of knowledge of both parties and there has been no fraud or concealment in the transaction: Owens v. Butler County, 40-190.

514. Therefore, held, that, under a contract for the erection of abutments for a bridge to be founded upon the rock, extra compensation could not be recovered by reason of the fact that the rock was deeper below the surface than was expected by the parties: Ibid.

515. Sale of property not on hand: In an action upon a contract for the sale of potatoes, which contemplated immediate delivery, held, that it was not proper to show that the seller did not have the potatoes on hand but was compelled to collect them before filling the contract, in order to excuse delay in performance on his part: Woods v. Miller, 55-168.

516. Change of circumstances: Where, by acts of congress in aid of the formation of connecting lines of railroad and the construction of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi river, certain services which were to be rendered by an elevator company to a railway company in handling grain at its terminus became useless, held, that the railway company was not thereby relieved from liability to pay for services to be rendered under such contract: Railroad Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall., 584.

517. Accidental destruction after completion: Where a contractor undertook to furnish materials for and perform the carpenter work of a building, and after the completion of his contract the building was blown down by a wind storm, held, that his contract had been completed and he was entitled to recover payment therefor: Garretty v. Brazell, 34-100.

518. Under a contract for the construction of a coffer-dam "sufficient to turn the water of the river into the mill-race, so as to allow the mill to run," payment to be made "when the dam is finished and the water turned effectually into the mill-race, so as to permit of the mill being run," held, that if the dam was constructed sufficient to turn the stream into the race so as to supply the mill in the usual stage of water, it was a sufficient compliance with the contract, although it was not sufficient to resist an unusual rise in the stream: Hancock v. McFarland, 17-124.

519. Other cases: Where a telegraph company undertook to furnish to plaintiff true market reports, held, that it was immaterial whether an error therein was occasioned by the defendant in the transmission of such reports or by a preceding company from whom it was understood such reports were to be obtained: Turner v. Hawkeye Tel. Co., 41-458.

520. Where a contract was made for the sale of a lot of cattle, it being understood that the entire lot was to be got together and delivered at one time, held, that it was no defense to an action for breach of the contract by defendant that they could not all be found, it appearing that he did not make diligent effort to find them and did not want to: Boies v. Vincent, 24-387.

Demand; tender; offer to perform.

521. Burden of proof: Where defendant set up failure of plaintiff to perform his contract as a defense to an action thereon, held, that the burden of showing such failure was upon defendant, but this being shown, the burden of showing a valid excuse for such failure was upon the plaintiff, and it was not for defendant to negative such excuse in the first instance: Fauble v. Davis, 48-463.

f. Demand; tender; offer to perform.

522. Demand necessary: Where payment of an obligation was to be made in sawing logs at defendant's saw-mill, held, that the fact that such saw-mill was burned before demand for performance of the service, would not excuse demand and render defendant liable to a money judgment: Davidson v. Overhulser, 3 G. Gr., 196.

523. Demand unnecessary: Where a debt is payable in personal property to be delivered at a particular time, and the debtor fails to make such delivery, the creditor may sue for the money due without demanding the property: Crabtree v. Messersmith, 19-179.

When demand necessary on notes payable in property, see BILLS AND NOTES, §§ 177, 178, 183, 184.

524. Refusal to pay in property according to contract: Under a contract to pay for services in property, the party who has performed the services may recover the money value upon the refusal of the other party to pay the property as agreed: Stewart v. Craig, 3 G. Gr., 505.

525. Readiness to perform: Under a contract for services to be rendered at a future day, there can be no recovery of substantial damages by the person contracting to render the services, unless he can show that he was ready and willing to perform on his part and notified the other party of that fact. Mere readiness is insufficient and is immaterial, unless the other party had knowledge thereof: Watson v. Moeller, 63-161.

526. Effect of tender: In an action upon a promissory note payable in property, proof of an offer to perform by the maker and refusal to receive by the payee is not sufficient to release the maker from the obligation of the contract, but may be shown to defeat action on the note, and excuse the maker from payment until payee shall demand delivery of the property, and notify the maker that he is willing to receive it: Williams v. Triplett, 3-518.

527. Tender of purchase price: In an action for damages for failure to deliver a certain number of sheep of a certain quality according to contract, to be paid for at a specified rate per pound, held, that failure of plaintiff to tender the balance of the purchase price at the proper time was not a failure to perform his part of the contract so as to defeat his action, for the reason that the balance of the purchase price could not be determined until the sheep were tendered and weighed: Aller v. Pennell, 51-537.

528. Tender, when to be made: Tender of payment in order to discharge the conditions of a contract may be made at any hour of the day fixed for its performance when it would not be unreasonable to require the party to whom the tender is made to accept payment: McClartey v. Gokey, 81-505.

529. Therefore, held, that tender of payment of purchase money under a contract to convey made at half past eight in the evening of the day fixed for payment was sufficient: Ibid.

530. Tender of stock on stock subscription: Where a note is executed on a subscription for stock under which it is agreed that the certificates of stock shall be delivered when the note is paid, tender of the certificates must be shown in order to support an action upon the note: Hedge v. Gibson, 58-656; Cooper v. McKee, 49-286; Courtright v. Deeds, 37-503; Lawrence v. Smith, 50-703.

531. A contract payable in stock cannot be sued on until the stock has been demanded: Markley v. Rhodes, 59-57.

532. Contract to teach: Where a teacher employed for a definite time was prevented from completing the service contracted for by a pretended dismissal on the part of the board of directors, and upon appeal to the county superintendent such action was set aside, held, that the teacher was excused from performing or offering to perform his duties under the contract during the pendency of the appeal, but that upon the final decision that the discharge was illegal, he should have performed or offered to perform his duty during the remaining term of the contract, and not having offered to do so, he could not recover for breach of the contract after the time that his discharge was held by the superintendent to be invalid: Park v. Independent School Dist., 65-209.

As to delivery and tender in case of sale of chattels, see SALES, II.

g. Part performance.

As to compensation for services under abandoned or broken contract, see supra, §§ 104-111.

533. Divisibility: Where, by the language of the contract, the work consists of several distinct items, and a price is apportioned to each, action may be maintained on the contract for the price of a distinct item of the work: Dibol v. Minott, 9-403.

534. As to whether a contract, by virtue of which defendant agreed to transfer to plaintiff his bank business and the best building lot in town, to be selected by plaintiff, provided that plaintiff would build thereon and become a resident of the town, and to sell to plaintiff a farm belonging to defendant at a stated sum per acre, and give up to plaintiff defendant's chance of purchasing a certain other tract, was divisible so that without regard to the residence and building plaintiff could enforce against defendant a transfer of the tract of land which defendant had contemplated purchasing and had subsequently purchased, the court was equally divided: McDaniels v. Whitney, 88-80.

535. Under a subscription by a county to the stock of a railway company, by the terms of which certificates of paid up stock were to be issued upon payment of the amounts subscribed, held, that the county was not entitled, after a partial payment of the subscription, to a proportional number of shares of paid up stock, although it had, by adjudication of the courts, been prohibited from making further payment on the ground that the contract was void and without authority: Wapello County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 44-585.

536. Entire contract: A plaintiff suing upon an entire contract and alleging complete performance is not entitled to recover upon proof of partial performance: Logan v. Tibbott, 4 G. Gr., 389.

537. Quantum meruit for partial performance: If a job of work is of some use and value to the employer, although it is not properly done, or within the stipulated time, still the workman is entitled to recover as much as the work is reasonably worth, making such allowances as the circumstances may require for failure to comply with the terms of the contract: Crookshank v. Mallory, 2 G. Gr., 257; Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Gr., 406.

538. If, on failure to perform the whole of a contract, its nature is such that the employer can reject what has been done and refuse to receive any benefit from it, he is entitled so to do, and in such case is not liable to be charged. But where the party receives value, takes and uses the materials, or has advantages from the labor, he is liable to pay the reasonable value of what he receives: Eyser v. Weissgerber, 2-463.

539. But in such case the action must be for the value of the services rendered and not under a special contract. If the action be brought upon the special contract, a recovery cannot be had on account of failure to perform: Ibid.

540. In an action upon special contract, plaintiff can recover the reasonable value of his work and labor although he has not performed such contract according to its terms, subject, however, to a deduction of the damages sustained by the other party by reason of the violation of the contract: Freher v. Geeseka, 5-472.

541. Where a party renders services under an entire contract, but it is broken by his own fault, he can recover for the services performed as upon a quantum meruit, subject to defense on behalf of the other party, based on the breach of the contract, for the purpose of reducing the amount of recovery and deducting what it will reasonably cost to secure a completion of the whole services as well as any damage sustained by reason of the non-fulfillment of the contract: Pizler v. Nichols, 8-106; Byerlee v. Mendel, 39-382; McClay v. Hedge, 18-66; Wolf v. Gerr, 43-339.

542. If, in such case, it is found that the damages are equal to or greater than the value of the services rendered, or that the employer, having the right to the performance of the whole contract, has not received any beneficial services, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. So, also, if it appears that it was expressly agreed that if the employee left the services of the employer before the expiration of the time limited, nothing was to be considered as earned by him, such an agreement would be enforced: Pisler v. Nichols, 8-106.

543. An instruction that recovery may be had for services performed, though not according to the contract, is erroneous unless it recognizes the right of defendant to set off the damages occasioned by reason of the breach of contract: Tait v. Sherman, 10-60.

544. The measure of recovery for the part performance is to be in accordance with the terms of the special contract: Byerlee v. Mendel, 39-382.

And see DAMAGES, §§ 145-147.

545. Where services are rendered in part performance of a contract providing for payment at a specified time in the future, and there is a breach of the contract by failure of such party to complete the services, he should not be allowed recovery even for such partial performance until the time for payment provided for in the contract, even though the amount of the premature recovery is reduced so as to represent the present worth of what may be recovered at the proper time: Powers v. Wilson, 47-666.

546. Where a party has paid a sum of money in part performance of a contract, he cannot, upon a breach on his part as to full performance, recover back what he has paid, less the damages which defendant has suffered by the breach. No right of action can accrue in such cases without some fault on defendant's part: Stevens v. Brown, 60-403.

h. Manner and sufficiency of performance.

547. By a subcontractor; mail contract: Although a contract for service may be of such nature that the rights and obligations of a party thereunder cannot be assigned, yet the contractor may employ other parties to execute the contract on his part; so held with regard to a contract by the government to carry mails, which by the statute is made non-assignable: Gordon v. Dalby, 30-223.

548. A person thus contracting to carry mails may contract with another to perform the service without the consent of the post-office department, and such contract will not be void between the parties; but if such consent is not obtained, the original contractor and his sureties will be liable for any default in the performance of the contract, while the parties to the second contract must settle the question of damages between themselves: Pierce v. Walker, 23-424.

549. Acts not contemplated by the contract: A performance or abrogation of the contract cannot be shown by acts not contemplated by it and done without a purpose or intention to that end: Wendall v. Osborne, 63-99.

550. Workmanlike manner; inadequacy of consideration: Where a contract providing for the construction of a building says nothing as to the manner in which the work is to be done, it is presumed that it is to be done in a workmanlike manner. The fact that the consideration is grossly inadequate will not be proper to be considered in determining the quality of the work required by the contract: Smith v. Bristol, 33-24.

551. Engineer's estimate: When it was agreed that excavations should be made at so much per cubic yard, to be paid upon the engineer's estimates, held, that such estimates were conclusive between the parties in the absence of fraud, mistake, undue influence or want of good faith: Mitchell v. Kavanagh, 38-286.

552. Where a contract for the grading of a railroad contained a provision that the chief engineer of the railroad company should determine the amount and the classification of the work done, and that his decision should be final and conclusive, held, that upon refusal of the engineer to make the estimates and of the railroad company to recognize the contract, the person performing the services under the contract might, in an action therefor, give in evidence the measurements of another competent person to prove the amount of work performed: Crawford v. Wolf, 29-567.

553. Where a contract for the purchase and delivery of ties provided for the retention of ten per cent. of all payments becoming due as the work progressed as security for the completion of the contract, and that whenever, in the opinion of the engineer of the purchasers, the contract was completely performed, the full sum due should be paid, held, that such contract did not prevent the recovery of a quantum meruit for the part performance upon failure to complete the contract: Jemison v. Gray, 29-537.

554. Person authorized to determine sufficiency: A contract which provides that a certain person shall decide all disputes arising during its performance, and that such decision shall be final and conclusive, will not be construed to constitute such person the final umpire to decide mixed questions of fact and law, and to determine the ultimate question of a right to recover: Ibid.

555. Where a contract provides that the person agreed upon shall ascertain and certify the amount due under the provisions of the contract, and he has in fact done so, the other party may then bring suit for such amount: Flynn v. Des Moines & St. L. R. Co., 63-490.

i. Breach.

556. Abuse of discretion, where discretion is given; mining contract: Where defendant entered into an obligation to pay plaintiff a sum of money upon the finding and development of a paying vein of coal, it being provided that defendant should use all reasonable efforts to sell the stock to raise sufficient money to dig a shaft, held, that the failure of defendant to sink the shaft and to develop the vein of coal would not render it liable unless it could be shown that it acted in bad faith, or that there was an abuse of discretion on its part in the prosecution of the work: Oliphant v. Woodburn Coal, etc., Co., 68-332.

557. Refusal to receive property tendered in pursuance of a contract is sufficient to constitute a breach thereof: Buford v. Funk, 4 G. Gr., 493.

558. By a party putting it out of his power to perform: Plaintiff, in an action for damages for breach of contract for sale of cattle, held not obliged to tender the price of the cattle as a condition precedent to recover, after showing a subsequent sale of the cattle by defendant to another person: Boies v. Vincent, 24-387.

559. Before time of performance: If a party to a contract disables himself from performing, he may be sued, as for a breach thereof, before the day for performance arrives: Crabtree v. Messersmith, 19-179.

560. Renunciation; putting out of power to perform: Where a party to a contract, before the time for performance, puts it out of his power to perform, or renounces or repudiates the contract, the other party may at once maintain action for the breach thereof to recover the damages sustained: Ibid.; McCormick v. Basal, 46-235; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 40-264.

561. Breach of promise of marriage: If, before the time to perform a contract of marriage arrives, the promisor renounces the contract, the promisee may treat this as a breach and at once maintain an action; and a subsequent offer by defendant to execute the contract would not be a defense nor go in mitigation of damages: Holloway v. Griffith, 32-409.

See, also, BREACH OF PROMISE.

562. Breach of contract does not terminate it: One of the parties to a contract cannot, by voluntary breach of one or all of its covenants, impose upon the other the necessity of regarding it as wholly abandoned or treating the breach as a total breach, whereby the innocent party would be deprived of benefits or advantages which would otherwise flow from the contract: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 33-422; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 40-264.

563. And if the contract is not wholly abandoned and the acts of the party do not constitute an entire breach, the prior judgment against such party for prior breaches will not operate to bar subsequent actions for other breaches. The breach of the contract not being considered as entire, the party is liable in a subsequent action for damages accruing after the first judgment: Ibid.

564. Divisibility; partial breach: Where a contract between a railway company and the owner of a warehouse provided that the former was to deliver to the latter all through grain of a certain description shipped over their line during a period of years, and pay a certain amount per bushel for the handling of the same, held, that such contract was not entire and indivisible, so that, the time of payment not being provided for, payment was to be made only when all the services were completed, but that the contract required the performance of successive acts, whereby the services of the owner of the warehouse were to be called into requisition, and for any breach of contract on the part of the railway company the warehouseman could at once maintain an action: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 38-422, 492.

565. Collusion or evasion: In such case held, that the railway company could not evade the contract by inducing shippers to bill grain to that point and then rebill it without breaking bulk (the contract with the warehouseman having relation only to through grain), and that the compensation due on through grain could be recovered on grain thus billed: Ibid.; Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 40-264.

566. Assignment does not constitute breach: The act of one party to a contract, in transferring to another the business in connection with which the contract was made, with the stipulation that the assignee shall perform the terms of the contract, does not amount to a breach thereof, terminating his liability for future breaches: Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 38-422, 497.

567. Partial breach: Where plaintiff sold to defendant ten car loads of barley to correspond with a sample, under an agreement that they should be delivered from time to time and paid for by defendant on delivery, and defendant refused to comply with the contract as to payment on delivery of the first car load, held, that the contract was severable, and that the breach of the contract on defendant's part did not release the plaintiff from the obligation to furnish the other car loads as stipulated, defendant having expressed his intention to comply with the provisions of the contract in the future: Myer v. Wheeler, 65-390.

568. A contract for carriage of goods to certain points at certain rates, respectively, but containing the condition that such rates should be the same as the lowest to points named, held, not shown to be broken as to all shipments to both points by proof of lower rates to one of the points: Murphy v. Creighton, 45-179.

569. Sale of good-will: Where defendant sold to plaintiff the good-will of his real estate and law business, agreeing to turn over his list of correspondents, give letters of introduction, etc., and not to engage in the business for three years, held, that after the expiration of that time, it was not a breach of contract to solicit business from his former correspondents: Hanna v. Andrews, 50-462.

570. An agreement by one person, upon the sale of the good-will of his business to another, not to carry on the same business, is revoked by the formation of a partnership between such parties for the carrying on of the business, and is not revived by the dissolution of the partnership: Norris v. Howard, 41-508.

571. A contract for the sale of the good-will of a business in which a party is engaged does not prevent him from taking employment under other persons already engaged in carrying on the same business, provided he acts in good faith and not for the purpose of establishing a rival business: Grimm v. Warner, 45-106.

572. Where, in connection with the sale of land, the grantor bound himself not to carry on the business of keeping a tavern upon adjoining land, held, that such agreement was violated by occasionally keeping travelers for pay, although such grantor did not hold himself out to the world as a tavern-keeper: Heichew v. Hamilton, 4 G. Gr., 317.

Further as to sale of good-will, see supra, §§ 356-364.

As to measure of damage for breach of contract, see DAMAGES, II, c.

573. Rescission after part performance: Where a party to a contract wrongfully rescinds and places it beyond the power of the other to secure any of the benefits in compensation for services rendered thereunder, the party injured may recover the value of such services: Barr v. Van Duyn, 45-228.

574. A party cannot refuse to perform the conditions of a contract on account of violations of conditions by the opposite party, and at the same time consider the contract in existence and sue for further breaches thereof by the other party. If he refuses to perform the conditions on his part on account of breach of the other party, he can only recover damages already occasioned by such breach: Hall v. Stewart, 58-631.

Breach.—Rescission.

575. Breach of covenant by assignee: Where one railroad succeeding to the rights of another became bound to pay the indebtedness of the first company, held, in an action for damages arising from breach of a covenant to maintain a side-track along certain lots, made by the first company in consideration of land furnished for construction, that the making of the covenant by the new company did not discharge the indebtedness of the old company, and whatever of the covenant was not performed, left so much of the indebtedness of the old company unsatisfied: Amsden v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 28-542.

576. Indemnity; assumption of indebtedness: If a condition or promise be only to indemnify and save harmless a party from some consequence, no action can be maintained until actual damage has been sustained by the plaintiff; but if the covenant or promise be to perform some act for the plaintiff's benefit as well as to indemnify and save him harmless from the consequences of non-performance, the neglect to perform the act is a breach of contract and will give an immediate right of action. Upon an undertaking to pay a debt due a third person, the plaintiff may maintain an action without showing that he has paid the debt: Stout v. Folger, 84-71; Lyon v. Aiken, 70—.

As to bond of indemnity, see BONDS, §§ 18-20.

577. A failure to pay interest which is by contract payable annually constitutes a breach of contract upon which action may be brought to recover the interest due: Hershey v. Hershey, 18-24.

578. Diligence in making collection from third person: Where, under contract, plaintiff was to be paid for his work by the city for whom it was performed when the city collected the cost of it from lot-owners, held, that the city was bound to collect the assessment within a reasonable time after the work was done and pay the plaintiff, and a failure so to do would render the city liable to pay the stipulated price. In such case, the burden of proof of diligence would rest upon the city: Morgan v. Dubuque, 28-575.

579. Commission for sale of real estate: Where an agent for the sale of land seeks to recover compensation for effecting a sale, the completion of which has been defeated by the act of the owner in refusing to perform the contract as made, he must show something more than a mere offer to purchase on the part of the proposed purchaser. It must appear that such proposed purchaser was pecuniarily responsible and in a condition to comply with the terms of sale or to respond to an action for damages for failure to perform the contract, if completed: Iselin v. Griffith, 62-668.

580. Illegal contract: A contract by an attorney to turn over to another, buying the good-will of his business, all notes in his hands for collection is illegal, and damages for its breach cannot be enforced: Smalley v. Greene, 52-241.

XII. RESCISSION; MODIFICATION; SUBSTITUTION; RELEASE.

a. Rescission.

581. Facts authorizing must be shown: Under a contract providing that one party might rescind whenever he became dissatisfied with the manner in which a certain part of it was performed by the other party, held, that in order to justify a rescission, he should prove the existence of the facts upon which he relied in so acting: Barr v. Van Dym, 45-228.

582. Contract in favor of third person before acceptance: A contract between two persons for the benefit of a third may be canceled or rescinded by agreement between the parties making it at any time before the third person has become aware of, or has accepted, such contract: Gilbert v. Sanderson, 56-349.

583. False representations as to the solvency of a party will not be a ground for rescinding a transaction involving a transfer of the notes of such party, if it appears that the maker of such notes was solvent at their maturity, and subsequent to their transfer: Stanley v. Irwin, 34-418.

584. Fraud: The party who has been defrauded in a contract is not bound to rescind. He may stand to the bargain and recover damages for the fraud without offering to rescind or giving notice of the fraud: Coe v. Lindley, 32-487.

585. Mistake: Where it appeared that the party was induced to enter into the contract to perform certain labor upon the consideration that work of a particular kind was to be included in the labor to be performed, held, that the fact that such particular work was not included was ground for rescission of the contract: Edmonds v. Cochran, 12-488.

586. Partial breach: Rescission of a divisible contract will not be allowed for a breach thereof unless such breach goes to the whole of the consideration: Myer v. Wheeler, 65-890.

587. Part performance: A party to a contract may not rescind for non-performance, if the failure of the other party be but partial, leaving a distinct part as a subsisting and executed consideration, and leaving also to the party his action for damages for the part not performed, but he must do all that the contract obliges him to do and seek his remedy in damages: Burge v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co., 32-101.

588. Where plaintiff had partially performed a contract on his part by delivering a portion of the property agreed to be delivered, and offered to perform the balance upon defendant's complying with his part of the contract, which defendant failed to do, held, that plaintiff might thereupon treat the contract as rescinded, demand back the portion of the property delivered, and if not returned, recover its value: Hayden v. Reynolds, 54-157.

589. Where an order is given to an individual for an article to be manufactured under certain terms constituting a contract, and such order is filled by the successor in business of such individual, the order and conditions become binding as a contract upon the successor filling the order: Cook Mfg. Co. v. Randall, 62-244.

590. Reasonable time for performance: Where plaintiff was employed as express-messenger and baggage agent, and afterwards discharged before the completion of the term of service contracted for, held, that the employer was bound to give the employee reasonable time and opportunity to become familiar with the business before discharging him for incompetency, the occupation not being one in which it was usual to serve an apprenticeship: Moore v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 65-505.

591. Duty to refund: Where a contract is rescinded by mutual agreement, the law implies, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, a promise on the part of one party to refund to the other the money or the value of the property received upon such contract. But an agreement to the contrary need not necessarily be an express one in order to change the rule: Nason v. Woodward, 16-216.

592. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, where a contract is rescinded and the delivery of personal property thereunder is waived, money advanced in payment for such property must be refunded: Redman v. Malvin, 28-296.

593. Partial failure of consideration; tendering back consideration received: Where a contract is severable and there is a partial failure of consideration on the part of one party, the other party may tender back the property received under that part of the contract, and rescind the contract to that extent; but, if the contract is not severable, in order to rescind, the other party must be placed in statu quo: Allen v. Pegram, 16-163.

594. Putting opposite party in statu quo: When there has been partial performance of a contract, a party cannot rescind without putting the opposite party in the position he was in at the time the contract was made: Moore v. Bare, 11-198.

595. Equity will not decree the rescission of a contract at the suit of one party thereto on the ground that the other has failed to fulfill his part of the engagement, if the other party cannot be placed in statu quo, and injury would result to him by the rescission: Stringer v. Keokuk, Mt. P. & N. R. Co., 59-277.

596. When it is in the power of either party to a contract to rescind it or declare it void, if he does so, he should restore the other party to his former rights by the repayment of money, if money has been paid, or by the return of property, if property has been delivered: Penny v. Cameron, 1 G. Gr., 380.

597. So, where a part of the consideration in property had been paid for a conveyance which the other party refused to execute, held, that upon such refusal action might be brought against him for the recovery of the consideration without previous demand: Ibid.

Rescission.—Modification.

598. Where an agreement to rescind a contract was entered into and never carried out, and was finally abrogated by one of the parties, held, that it was the duty of such party to place the other in statu quo: Wood v. Smith, 51-156.

599. Where it was stipulated in the sale of a machine that, in case it did not correspond with the warranties, or was not made to correspond thereto on notice, the purchaser might return it to the seller, and the latter would then furnish a perfect machine in its place or return the purchase money and notes, held, that an unconditional delivery to the seller after the latter had, upon notice, failed to make the machine work satisfactorily, constituted a rescission of the contract, although the vendee afterwards demanded the return of the purchase money and notes without proposing to allow to the seller the election secured him by the contract, the right to make such election being one which the seller must assert for himself: Davis' Sons v. Butrick, 63-94.

600. A contract cannot be rescinded by one party thereto, unless both can be restored to the condition they were in before the contract was made, unless the contract was obtained by fraud: Hendrickson v. Hendrickson, 51-68.

601. Where there was a contract for exchange of land, and one party, in order to obtain the land which he was to convey, had paid money to a third party, but finally failed to carry out his contract, held, that it was not necessary that the other party should pay to him the money so expended before rescinding the contract: Benson v. Cowell, 52-137.

602. Repayment of interest: It is not necessary, where a party desires to rescind a contract by the repayment of money paid thereon, that he also pay interest on the amount: Ibid.

603. Notice: A party to a contract authorized to rescind it is required to make known to the other his action upon exercising his power to terminate it. So held in case of a policy of insurance which the company might, in a certain event, rescind at its option: Supple v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 58-29.

604. Reasonable time: The rule is that the right of rescission on the ground of fraud or mistake must be exercised at the time of the discovery of the fraud or mistake, or within a reasonable time thereafter: Rawson v. Harger, 48-269.

605. Laches: Where plaintiff delayed for two or three years after discovering the alleged fraud in a contract to give notice of any intention to rescind it, but on the contrary recognized its validity by negotiations for his release therefrom, held, that not having announced his intention to rescind within a reasonable time, his right to rescind, if any, was waived: Evans v. Montgomery, 50-325.

Further as to rescission of contracts, see EQUITY, II, a.

As to rescission of contracts for the sale of land, see VENDORS, IV.

As to rescission of contracts of sales, see SALES, III.

b. Modification.

606. By mutual consent: A party having the authority to contract can consent to a variation of the terms and conditions of a contract previously made: Slusser v. Burlington, 42-378.

607. Consideration: A party alleging a subsequent parol modification of a written contract must show that such subsequent verbal contract was entered into, supported by a consideration. A consideration cannot be presumed but must be proved: Wheeler v. Baker, 59-86.

608. Proof that a party entitled to monthly payments under a written contract had accepted a less amount per month for a portion of the time in full payment, held, not sufficient to prove such subsequent modification: Ibid.

609. Held, that a promise to pay unconditionally and immediately a certain sum in amounts and to persons not specifically designated might be waived by one of the persons entitled to share therein in consideration of a promise to pay to him specifically a designated sum at a future time or on condition: Grimes v. Simpson Centenary College, 48-208.

610. Waiver of conditions: Where a contract was entered into by certain parties to secure advances upon certain conditions, and subsequently, and before the advances were made, certain of such parties executed a bond to indemnify the payee for any loss which he might suffer by a breach of such conditions, held, that as to the makers of such bond it operated as a modification of the previous contract and a waiver of its conditions: First Nat. Bank v. Schlichting, 40-51.

611. Parol evidence; burden of proof: In attempting to enlarge a written contract by parol evidence, the burden is upon the party seeking to establish such modification, but he should not be required to do so by evidence that is clear, satisfactory and conclusive; a preponderance of evidence in his favor is sufficient: Holt v. Brown, 63-819.

That parol evidence of a previous or a contemporaneous agreement or understanding is not admissible to vary the terms of a written contract, see EVIDENCE, II, 4.

c. Substitution; merger; novation.

612. Substitution: Where plaintiff was asserting a claim against defendant and another debtor as jointly liable as partners, and defendant insisted that he and his co-debtor were liable only for one-half each of the indebtedness, and plaintiff accepted from each time-notes for one-half, held, that this was a substitution of a new contract and released defendant from any liability beyond the one-half assumed by him: Drake v. Hill, 53-37.

613. Merger: The parties may, by agreement, substitute an oral contract for a written one, and such substitution will constitute an abandonment of the written contract and not a mere waiver of its terms: Aldrich v. Price, 57-151.

614. Where the parties by agreement enter into a new contract as a compromise of or as a substitution for a former, the new contract being based upon a new consideration, the right of action upon the original contract is lost. It is not necessary for that purpose that it appear that the new contract has been performed. Any action brought must be upon the new contract and not the old one: Merry v. Allen, 39-235.

615. A confession of judgment given by one member of a firm for a firm debt is a merger of the contract debt and it cannot become the subject of another action: North v. Mudge, 13-496.

616. Novation: Where A. owes a debt to B. and B. owes a debt to C., and it is mutually agreed between the three parties that A. shall pay to C. the amount due to B., such agreement will operate to discharge B.'s debt to C. to the extent of A.'s indebtedness to B., although there is no special agreement for discharge: Lester v. Bowman, 39-611; Foster v. Paine, 63-85.

617. But such novation will not release a mortgage given from B. to C. in security of his indebtedness: Foster v. Paine, 63-85.

618. Where a railroad company recognizes its liability to a subcontractor for construction work, and undertakes to pay the same by accepted drafts, a subsequent settlement with the principal contractors, and the cancellation of the contract, will not operate to discharge its indebtedness to the subcontractor. A judgment recovered on such drafts will settle the question of liability, and, under a decree providing for the payment of the indebtedness incurred in the construction of a portion of the road, it is immaterial to whom the company was originally liable: Ney v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 20-847.

619. Extension of time: The giving of a valid obligation payable in the future operates to suspend all right of action on the consideration for which it is given until the expiration of the time given, although the obligation in itself is no payment: Chickasaw County v. Pitcher, 36-593.

d. Release and discharge.

As to PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE, in general, see that title.

620. By joint contractor: One of two joint contractors can, upon consideration, execute a valid release to the other party of claims for damages arising out of the breach of such contract: Stapleton v. King, 33-28.

621. Compromise: An agreement to dismiss an action expressly providing that it shall be a bar to any and all other suits and in compromise and release of all claims and demands of the plaintiff on account of such cause of action, will constitute a defense to any subsequent action thereon unless such agreement is in some way avoided, as by showing that the party was not at the time of executing the agreement in full possession of his mental faculties, or had not knowledge of its provisions, or that in some manner he was imposed upon or deceived: Heironymus v. Heironymus, 64-81.

CONVERSION.

1. What constitutes: It is not material, in order to constitute conversion, whether the defendant came into possession originally by right or by wrong. Where the circumstances of themselves do not amount to an actual conversion, it will be incumbent upon the plaintiff to give evidence of a demand and refusal prior to the commencement of the action. To exercise dominion over the property is, in law, a conversion, and an offer to return the property at another place will not bar the action: Cutter v. Fanning, 2-580.

2. Purchase of a note with notice of the right of another thereto, and collection of the amount due thereon, constitutes a conversion: Allison v. King, 25-56.

3. Where a party holding a certificate of deposit as collateral security surrendered it and accepted a note and mortgage in lieu thereof, held, that he was guilty of conversion and liable for the nominal value of the certificate surrendered: Greenwald v. Metcalf, 28-363.

4. Evidence: Conversion may be shown either by direct proofs of the fact of conversion, or by proof of demand and refusal, without excuse being shown by defendant: State v. Bryan, 40-379.

I. EXECUTION AND DELIVERY.

a. Competency of parties; grantor and grantee.

1. Belligerents: A conveyance between citizens of belligerent nations is void: Hill v. Baker, 32-802.

2. So held as to a conveyance of land in Iowa, made during the rebellion by a person within a state in insurrection to a person in a loyal state: Ibid.

3. Infants: Where an infant holds title in trust and is compellable to convey, a voluntary conveyance by him will bind him and cannot be disaffirmed: Prouty v. Edgar, 6-853.

4. A conveyance by an infant is voidable and not void. If founded on a valuable consideration, it is a valid contract until regularly avoided: Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12-195.

Competency of parties; grantor and grantee.

Further as to capacity of minors, see CONTRACTS, VI, a.

5. Disaffirmance by minor: A minor is bound by his deed unless he disaffirms it within a reasonable time after he becomes of age. (Code, § 2238): Weaver v. Carpenter, 42-343.

6. Where a person, many years after becoming of majority, claimed the right to disaffirm, held, that he was not entitled to disaffirm upon showing that the deed was procured by fraud, diligence to discover the fraud not being shown: Ibid.

7. That the grantee of a conveyance executed during minority remained insane without lucid intervals for eight years after obtaining majority, held sufficient to authorize an action to be brought after that time by his guardian, to set the same aside as being without consideration: Gates v. Carpenter, 43-152.

8. That the property has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser will not prevent disaffirmance: Ibid.

9. Insanity: An executed conveyance for value to a good faith purchaser will not be set aside in equity on the ground of insanity of which the purchaser had no notice, in case he cannot be put in statu quo: Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44-229; Abbott v. Creal, 56-175; Alexander v. Haskins, 68-73.

10. But where the grantee had knowledge of the insanity of the grantor, and the consideration for the conveyance was less than one-third the value of the land, and the grantee had been in possession such length of time that the rents and profits received exceeded the amount paid, held, that the conveyance should be set aside: Alexander v. Haskins, 68-73.

11. Where it appeared that a conveyance was made by a woman so affected by trouble and distress of mind as to be reduced to a state approaching imbecility, and that the price paid was so grossly inadequate as to shock the conscience, a reconveyance was decreed, the rents received by grantee while in possession being deemed equivalent to the consideration paid: Perkins v. Scott, 23-237.

12. The deed of a person who is a monomaniac on certain subjects cannot be set aside on account of such fact, where there is no reason to believe that there was not the full exercise of reason and judgment as to its execution: Burgess v. Pollock, 58-273.

Further as to capacity of insane persons, see CONTRACTS, VI, b.

13. Mental weakness: If the power to contract exists, mere weakness of mind without fraud or undue influence is not sufficient to warrant the setting aside of a conveyance: Campbell v. Campbell, 51-713.

14. Married women:¹ A married woman may incumber or convey real property owned in her own separate right: Sanborn v. Casady, 21-77.

15. The mortgage of a married woman upon her separate property, to secure her husband's debt, if executed for a valuable consideration, would be binding: Green v. Scranage, 19-461.

16. Previous to the present statutory provision (Code, § 2206) declaring that a conveyance, transfer or lien executed by either husband or wife in favor of the other shall be valid to the same extent as between other persons, it was held that a conveyance from wife to husband in connection with an agreement to separate, for the relinquishment of dower, would be upheld, if supported by a consideration and free from fraud: Robertson v. Robertson, 25-850.

17. But it was also held that aside from an agreement to separate, neither husband nor wife had any interest in the property of the other which could be the subject of conveyance between them: McKee v. Reynolds, 26-578.

18. And by statute (Code, § 2203), any agreement between husband and wife, relative to any contingent interest of either in the property of the other, is void: Linton v. Crosby, 54-478.

19. The power of a married woman to acquire by purchase, and contract with reference to real property, discussed and previous cases cited: Shields v. Keys, 24-298.

20. For the history of previous legislation as to the power of a married woman to convey, and the method of executing instruments in such cases, see Simms v. Hervey, 19-273.

21. Where husband and wife agreed to sell the wife's interest in certain real estate, after which the husband alone executed, without delivering, a deed thereto, and received payment of the consideration with the wife's knowledge and consent, and she, after the husband's death, voluntarily executed and delivered the deed, held, that the wife's title was thereby divested: Pursley v. Hayes, 22-11.

22. Where the title is in the wife, and she joins her husband in a warranty deed conveying it, the addition of a clause releasing her right of dower will not limit the estate conveyed by her to her dower interest: Grapengether v. Fejervary, 9-163.

23. A wife joining with her husband in a conveyance of his property merely to relinquish her dower right does not become bound by the covenants of such deed: Childs v. McChesney, 20-481, 486; Lyon v. Metcalf, 12-93.

24. And, therefore, an after-acquired title of the wife does not inure to the grantee in a previous deed of the husband without title, in which deed the wife has simply joined to relinquish dower: Childs v. McChesney, 20-481; O'Neil v. Vanderburg, 25-104; Thompson v. Merrill, 58-419; Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 84.

As to relinquishment of dower, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 306-321.

25. Corporations: A limitation upon the power to sell operates also as a limitation upon the power to convey: Middleton Savings Bank v. Dubuque, 15-394.

26. By officers of corporation: Where a conveyance, duly authorized by the stockholders of a corporation, was made by officers not having authority to make conveyances, and acquiesced in for years by the stockholders with knowledge thereof, held, that such conveyance would not be set aside in equity, whatever might be the rights of the corporation in an action at law: Marshall County High School Co. v. Iowa Evangelical Synod, 28-360.

See further as to conveyances by corporations or their officers, CORPORATIONS, §§ 76-79.

27. Power of attorney: It is incumbent upon a party offering in evidence a deed purporting to be made by power of attorney, to produce the authority by which the deed was made, in order to lay the foundation for the introduction of it as evidence: Hughes v. Holliday, 3 G. Gr., 30.

28. The mere fact that a power of attorney is, in itself, declared irrevocable does not prohibit its revocation, nor render a sale by the agent in his own interest and in fraud of the title of his principal, valid: MacGregor v. Gardner, 14-326.

A conveyance by attorney with intent to defraud his principal may be set aside: See EQUITY, § 121.

29. Charitable uses: Grants, devises, or dedications to public, pious or religious uses, from the necessity of the case, form an exception to the rule applicable to private grants, requiring a grantee as well as a grantor. It is not necessary, in such a case, that the beneficiary should at the time of the grant be clothed with the power or capacity of taking the benefit of the donor's bounty, but the intention of the donor will be executed if this capacity arises within a reasonable time thereafter: Miller v. Chittenden, 2-315, 376.

30. Where the property is in the hands of a trustee, and the object and purpose of the grant look to a future grantee, it will be held in abeyance; and it is not necessary that the trustee shall have the power to create the beneficiary or proceed with the execution of the trust before such creation in order to sustain and uphold such a grant or devise: Ibid.

31. In a particular case, where the conveyance was in trust for a church not yet organized, held, that the organization of a church entitled to take the benefit of the trust within seven years, was sufficient: Ibid.

And in general, see TRUSTS.

b. Effect of fraud, mistake, undue influence, or duress.

32. Mistake; negligence: Where a wife sought to avoid the effect of her signature to a trust deed conveying the homestead on the ground of misrepresentations, made to her by her husband when he presented the deed to her for signature, as to the property described therein, held, that as between herself and an innocent purchaser she could not take advantage of her own mistake or negligence, but, in the absence of fraud, was presumed to have acted voluntarily and with knowledge of all the facts: McHenry v. Day, 13-445.

Effect of fraud, mistake, undue influence or duress.

As to correction of mistake, see EQUITY, II, a.

33. Fraud: Where an uncle procured a conveyance of property from his nephew, who was in the habit of looking to him for counsel and advice, by means of the suggestion that it was necessary to make such conveyance in order to prevent the property being taken by other parties claiming it as heirs, held, that such conveyance could be set aside: Williams v. Collins, 67-413.

34. In the facts of a particular case, held, that the conveyance from a person afterwards adjudicated of unsound mind was obtained with knowledge of his condition and with an intent to defraud him of his property, and therefore should be set aside: Seerley v. Sater, 68-375.

35. In particular cases, held, that conveyances were void for fraud: Sully v. Wilson, 44-394; Harper v. Kissick, 52-733.

As to conveyances in fraud of creditors, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

36. Undue influence: A conveyance, made by an heir, for an inadequate consideration, of all her interest in certain property, without knowledge of the extent of such interest, and to a step-brother, who, with herself, was a member of the family of a step-mother with whom she resided, held, to be made under undue influence, and therefore voidable, although no fraudulent representations on the part of vendee were shown: Davis v. Dunne, 46-684.

37. Where it appeared that the grantee of premises did not pay a consideration for the property, and acquired such conveyance by reason of the exercise of undue influence over the grantor, who was a man of weak intellect, by representations and promises, which were false and made for the purpose of playing upon the grantor's fears and inducing him to make the conveyance, it should be set aside: Oakey v. Ritchie, 69-69.

38. A conveyance made to a woman by reason of the influence which she exercises through unlawful cohabitation is made under undue influence and she cannot derive any benefit therefrom. In such case the burden of proof is upon the grantee to show that the transaction does not grow out of the confidential relations arising from such conduct: Leighton v. Orr, 44-679.

39. Influence obtained by immoral conduct and adulterous relations is regarded in law as undue influence, and when such relations exist, the burden is upon the one claiming under a conveyance executed by the other party to the unlawful relation, to show that it was not procured by undue influence. The unlawful influence will be presumed in the absence of proof of lawful consideration: Hanna v. Wilcox, 53-547.

40. Evidence considered, and held not sufficient to show such weakness of intellect on the part of grantor and undue influence over him by others as to render a conveyance by him invalid: Marmon v. Marmon, 47-121; Jones v. Farris. 70 —.

41. The fact that a conveyance in trust was executed at the urgent solicitation of relatives, held not to render it void as being executed under undue influence, where the influence was exercised wholly with a view to the best interest of the grantor: Riddle v. Cutter, 49-547.

42. Where a conveyance was executed by a father to his children just before his remarriage, and it appeared that it was done with great reluctance and as the result of persistent endeavor on the part of such children, but it did not appear that he was not in the possession of his powers and able to control his own affairs, and it further appeared that he took legal advice and was told that he was under no obligation to make a conveyance, held, there was no evidence of undue influence or duress such as to render the conveyance invalid: Hamilton v. Smith, 57-15.

Further as to undue influence, see CONTRACTS, §§ 137, 138.

43. Duress: A deed obtained by duress is not only voidable but void, as there is no consent: Arnold v. Grimes, 2-1.

44. A mortgage executed by a wife from fear excited by threats, made to her by the mortgagee, of an illegal criminal prosecution against her husband, is invalid; otherwise, if the criminal accusation was well founded, or, upon reasonable grounds, believed to be so by the mortgagee: Green v. Scranage, 19-461.

45. Plaintiff's husband being guilty of the larceny of goods from defendants, some of which were used towards improving the homestead, as a means of securing his immunity from punishment and saving herself and children from disgrace, plaintiff executed to the defendants a conveyance of the homestead; held, that the conveyance was obtained under such circumstances of oppression as to preclude the idea of a free and voluntary act, but it being apparent that plaintiff was willing to secure to defendants whatever was due them by reason of the larceny of her husband, it was held that defendants might keep the property and pay her the value of it above their due, or she might take the property by paying them the amount due: Gohagan v. Leach, 24-509.

Further as to duress, see CONTRACTS, §§ 189-144.

c. Execution.

46. Separate instruments which are executed as parts of the same transaction are to be taken together, although they are not contemporaneous in point of time, and parol evidence is admissible to show that the instrument subsequently executed is made in pursuance of an arrangement entered into at the time of the execution of the previous conveyance: Clapp v. Forster, 67-49.

47. By married women: Since the enactment of the Code of '51, conveyances by married women are to be executed as in other cases, and acknowledgment is not necessary to their validity: Simms v. Hervey, 19-273.

48. Evidence of execution: Where the evidence as to the execution of a deed claimed to be lost was conflicting, held, that the circumstances were such as to support the party alleging its execution: Cameron v. Hovey, 38-598.

As to denial of signature of written instrument, see PLEADING, V, d.

49. Execution in another state: Under Rev. Stat. of '43, a conveyance executed in accordance with the laws of the state where executed was valid in this state: Cady v. Eighmey, 54-615.

50. The presumption as to the date of execution of a conveyance, in the absence of evidence as to the true time, is that it was executed as of the date of the instrument, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence as to when in fact it was executed. To overcome the presumption in favor of the date, and prove that it was made at a time different from that at which it purports to have been executed, when the rights of third parties are involved, the evidence should be clear and satisfactory: Vance v. Anderson, 39-426.

51. An unacknowledged deed made to a minor by his father and produced from the possession of his grandfather, who was his guardian, without other proof of the time of execution than the date given in the deed, held not sufficient to show title in the minor so as to enable him to redeem from a tax sale made subsequently to the date of the deed: Walker v. Sargent, 47-448.

52. The presumption of law, there being nothing in the particular case to repel or rebut it, is that a deed was executed and delivered at its date and upon the consideration recited therein, and this applies as against creditors claiming under the grantor; certainly as against creditors not shown to be such at the time of the deed: Savery v. Browning, 18-246.

53. Acknowledgment as evidence of date: The date of an acknowledgment will be accepted as that of the execution of an instrument: Henry County v. Bradshaw, 20-855.

54. A strong presumption exists in favor of the certificate of acknowledgment as indicating the date of the execution of an instrument: Bird v. Adams, 50-292.

55. In a particular case, held, that the date of the certificate of acknowledgment should prevail over oral evidence of loose and random conversations and admissions in determining the date of the execution: Ibid.

56. Effect of blanks: Under the statute of this state, as at common law, a grantor and grantee, and the thing to be granted, must all be described in a deed, and an instrument in which any of these are wanting at delivery is invalid: Simms v. Hervey, 19-273.

57. Blank as to name of grantor: Where a wife signed with her husband a blank mortgage which was delivered to the husband, who inserted therein a description of real estate owned by the wife, and then delivered the paper to a third party with instructions to negotiate it and insert the name of the mortgagee when negotiated, held, that the instrument was not binding upon the wife: Ibid.

58. Whether a grantor may empower his agent by parol to fill a material blank in a conveyance otherwise duly executed, quære: Ibid.

59. Where it appeared that a conveyance was executed and acknowledged in blank, and filled up subsequent to the trial merely for the purpose of making title to plaintiff in the case on which to base an action, held, that it was not receivable in evidence: Byington v. Oaks, 32-488.

60. A deed executed with a blank as to the name of the grantee, which blank is afterward filled up without the consent of the grantor, will not vest in the party whose claim is thus asserted a legal title; but if, by the contract, the party whose name is inserted is entitled to the land, he has the equitable title, which will prevail over any subsequent purchaser with constructive notice of such conveyance: Clark v. Allen, 34-190.

61. Plaintiff and wife executed a deed to defendant, leaving the space for the grantee's name blank, because they did not know the full name, and delivered it to him with authority to insert his own name, which he did; held, that the deed was valid and complete, whether it was sought to enforce or to avoid it: Davin v. Himer, 29-297.

62. Where one sent a deed to his agent with blanks left to be filled up, with full authority to act for him and fill up the blanks and deliver it, held, that when this was done the deed was perfect, and it was not necessary that the possession of the deed by the grantee should be simultaneous with the assent of the grantor. In such case the assent, when given in person or by agent, imparts validity to the deed: Owen v. Perry, 25-412.

63. Authority may be conferred by parol in express terms to insert the name of the grantee in a deed, perfect in all other respects, and it may also be implied from the acts and conduct of the grantor, as between him and the purchaser in good faith; and the fact that the agent authorized to fill the blank caused it to be done by another will not render the conveyance void: Swartz v. Ballou, 47-188; McClain v. McClain, 52-272.

64. In order that a deed executed in blank shall operate under the law in Iowa as a conveyance of the property described in it, the blank must be filled by the party authorized to fill it, and this must be done before or at the time of the delivery of the deed to the grantee named: Allen v. Withrow, 110 U. S., 119.

65. Insertion of description: Where an instrument described the land as having been bought from a certain person, and its location with reference to the town, and directed the insertion of the description by numbers as soon as such description could be obtained, held, that an insertion thereof, made by the county recorder in pursuance of such authority, was valid: Harshey v. Blackmarr, 20-161.

d. Seal.

66. Essential: Where an instrument of conveyance, executed prior to the statute abolishing the use of seals, was made without seal, held, that it would neither constitute a deed nor a covenant to stand seized to the use of the grantee, and that a defective conveyance would not be construed as such a covenant unless it was sufficient in its formal particulars to constitute a deed: Switzer v. Knapps, 10-72.

67. But held, that such an instrument would constitute a contract to convey: Ibid.

By statute the use of private seals is abolished, and is no longer necessary in conveyances: See Code, § 2112; and CONTRACTS, § 262.

e. Delivery.

68. Essential: The delivery of a deed is essential to its validity, though the parties may have complied with all other requisites: Day v. Griffith, 15-104; Smith v. Smith, 68-608.

69. Intent to deliver: The question of delivery is always one of intention of the parties. If the deed passes into the hands of the grantee without an intention on the part of the grantor that it shall become operative and be used for the purposes intended, it is not a delivery: Steel v. Miller, 40-402.

70. Where a deed was executed by all the grantors but one, and left with the notary for him to sign, and the remaining grantor refused to deliver it, held, that there was no delivery as to any of the grantors: Overman v. Kerr, 17-485.

71. Where a deed was not sufficiently delivered to be valid as a conveyance, held, that it could not be treated as sufficiently delivered to operate as a completed contract: Ibid.

72. Presumption from possession: A deed being in the custody of the grantee will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have been delivered and accepted: Wolverton v. Collins, 84-238; Craven v. Winter, 38-471.

73. Where it appeared from the evidence that all the parties were present at the execution of the conveyance; that immediately thereafter it passed into the hands of the grantees and remained in their possession or control, and that at the time of the execution it was the grantor's intention to deliver it, held, that there was sufficient delivery: Mercer v. Mercer, 29-557.

74. Where it appeared that deceased had executed a deed to his children for certain property, reserving to himself a life estate therein, which was in the possession of grantees at the time of the trial, held, that failure to record the instrument was not sufficient to overcome the presumption of delivery arising from such possession: Blair v. Howell, 68-619.

75. Presumption from recording: The presumption is that a deed, beneficial to the grantee, properly acknowledged and recorded, has been delivered, and the knowledge and assent necessary to a valid delivery will be presumed in the absence of a negative showing: Robinson v. Gould, 26-89.

76. In such a case the burden of proof is upon the party claiming non-delivery, to clearly rebut the presumption arising from the acknowledgment and recording: Craven v. Winter, 38-471.

77. Therefore, held, that delivery of a deed of voluntary conveyance to the wife of grantee, who was a son of grantor, would be presumed to be a delivery to the son: Ibid.

78. While the recording of a conveyance is not proof of its delivery, yet execution of the instrument, and delivery to the recorder in good faith and at the instance of the grantee, may constitute a delivery; but the presumption of delivery would not arise from the fact that the instrument is found recorded, if the grantee has done no act recognizing its existence or validity: Foley v. Howard, 8-56.

79. The fact that the grantor in a deed delivers it to the recorder for record may be a circumstance, with others, tending to show fraud, but does not, of itself, as matter of law, make the deed fraudulent or void: Ward v. Wehman, 27-279.

80. Date of delivery: An instrument being in custody of grantee is presumed to have been delivered and accepted at the date of its execution: Craven v. Winter, 38-471.

As to presumption of date of delivery from acknowledgment and recording, see supra, §§ 50-55.

81. Neglect to deliver: Where a deed was executed before a notary public, and the grantee directed the notary to send it to the county recorder for record, which was not done, through the negligence of the notary, held, that the delivery dated from the time of the execution: Adams v. Ryan, 61-783.

82. Recording without grantee's knowledge: Assent of the grantee to the conveyance will not relate back to the delivery of the deed to the recorder for record where it was without the knowledge of the grantee, and without previous agreement to execute a conveyance of the property referred to: Day v. Griffith, 15-104.

83. Subsequent acceptance by the grantee of an instrument delivered to the recorder without his knowledge will not relate back to such delivery so as to cut out the rights of an intervening attaching creditor: Ibid.

84. Acceptance: Allegation of delivery of a deed necessarily implies acceptance thereof: Davenport v. Whisler, 46-287.

85. Acceptance presumed: Where a husband procured a conveyance to be made by a third person to his wife which was plainly for her benefit, and had the deed delivered to himself, held, that such delivery completed the conveyance of the title to the wife. In such case the acceptance of the grant by the wife would be presumed: Parker v. Parker, 56-111.

86. Where a deed to a child is absolute in form and beneficial in effect, and the grantor and father causes it to be recorded, there is a sufficient delivery to the infant and the title will pass thereby. In such case manual delivery and formal acceptance are not necessary: Cecil v. Beaver, 28-241; Palmer v. Palmer, 62-204.

87. Where the conveyance from the father to the son was filed by the father for record, and after being recorded was taken from the recorder's office by the son, he being a minor, held, that there was sufficient evidence of delivery: Palmer v. Palmer, 62-204.

88. Where the assignment of a contract of purchase of land was made to a minor under two years of age, and afterwards, before he was ten years of age, placed in the hands of an attorney for the assignor, who was a parent of the minor and appointed his guardian, such attorney being employed to protect the rights of the minor under the contract, held, that there was sufficient delivery to the minor to support the assignment: Byington v. Moore, 62-470.

89. Gift to child: Held, that the evidence in a particular case was not sufficient to establish the delivery of certain notes and mortgages executed by plaintiff's father to him as a gift: McKenna v. Kelso, 52-727.

90. Delivery after grantor's death: Delivery to the grantee after the death of the grantor is not sufficient to constitute a conveyance: Otto v. Doty, 61-28.

91. Implied delivery to child before death: Where a father died, leaving among his papers a deed of land duly executed in form to one of his children, held, that the law would give effect to the same if there was anything indicating the intention of the intestate that it should become effective, as for instance the conveying to other children of an equal portion of his real estate, and that a court of equity would, in such case, declare the deed valid in order to effectuate justice. A delivery will be implied or not, according to the intent of the grantor and the surrounding circumstances of the case: Stow v. Miller, 16-460.

92. Where one who has the mental power to alter his intention, and the physical power to destroy a deed in his possession, dies without doing either, and it appears that he manifested an unequivocal intention within a very short time of his death to have this deed operate as a disposition of his property, it will be given effect without formal delivery: Newton v. Bealer, 41-334.

93. Escrow: The mere fact that a deed properly executed is, in pursuance of an agreement to sell, placed in the hands of a third person to hold until the purchase money is paid, does not of itself constitute delivery and entitle the purchaser to possession thereof on payment of the money. There must be some distinct word or act of the grantor, independent of the original agreement, showing an intention thereby to part with control of the deed and lodge it in the hands of a third person, subject to the grantee's control upon performing the agreement on his part: Logsdon v. Newton, 54-448.

94. An innocent purchaser from a grantee in possession under a deed held as an escrow and improperly delivered to the grantee will be protected, it appearing that the original grantor had knowledge of the delivery of the escrow to the grantee and made no effort to deprive him of the possession: Haven v. Kramer, 41-382.

f. Ratification.

95. What sufficient: A recognition which shall have the effect of making valid a deed which, without such ratification, would be ineffectual to pass the title as against the party or subsequent incumbrancers, should be clear and express, or be implied from circumstances equally clear and undisputed: Haynes v. Seachrest, 13-455.

96. The ratification by a grantee of the unauthorized acts of an agent in accepting a conveyance of real estate in payment of a debt, when made before any liens in favor of other creditors attach, renders the conveyance complete and valid: Lampson v. Arnold, 19-479.

97. In case of conveyance by agent: Failure to object, with knowledge of the execution of a conveyance by an agent claiming the right to convey, will constitute a ratification of the conveyance: Alexander v. Jones, 64-207.

98. In a particular case, held, that the grantor in a conveyance had, by his conduct, bound himself by a ratification of the act of his agent in making the same: Burdick v. Seymour, 39-452.

99. Where deeds were taken by a grantee from the agent of the grantor under a claim that the contract under which they were to be delivered was different from that stated by the agent, and with the agreement that if the grantor did not approve of the contract as stated by the grantee the deeds would be returned, and after being notified that the grantor did not agree to the grantee's version of the contract, the grantee failed to return the deeds but put them on record, held, that he thereby ratified the contract and became bound: Meredith v. Callanan, 33-590.

g. Cancellation.

100. By destruction before delivery:

Where a father makes a voluntary conveyance in form to a minor child, retaining the possession of the instrument, it is competent for him, at any time before actual delivery to the child or to some one for the use of the child, to destroy the deed or make any other disposition of the property: Stow v. Miller, 16-460.

101. Redelivery and cancellation: The cancellation of a deed does not revest property which has passed under it by a transmutation of possession; but where at the time a conveyance was executed a portion of the purchase money remained unpaid, and the conveyance, not being put on record, was afterwards surrendered by the grantee by agreement with the grantor, an equivalent of the purchase money received by the grantor being returned, held, that the grantee had thereafter nothing but the naked legal title, and that a judgment creditor levying thereon and buying in the property at a sale under such levy, acquired no title as against the original grantor holding the equitable title: Blaney v. Hanks, 14-400.

As to rescission for fraud or mistake, see EQUITY, II, a.

h. Illegality in execution.

102. Failure to stamp: A deed of conveyance without a revenue stamp such as was required by United States revenue law, held, inadmissible as evidence to prove title: Barney v. Ivins, 22-163.

103. When it was proposed to prove, in an action for the purchase money under a contract to convey, that the vendor tendered the vendee a proper deed, and that several revenue stamps were inclosed therewith which the vendor was to affix and cancel if the vendee would accept the deed, held, that the deed was receivable in evidence without being stamped as required by the revenue laws: Harker v. Cochrane, 86-390.

104. Swamp lands: Under the statute (Rev., § 959) providing that no swamp lands shall be sold at less than $1.25 per acre, held, that a conveyance for a gross sum of all the swamp land owned by the county and not conveyed or disposed of, it being conceded that the amount of such land exceeded the number of acres which could properly be conveyed for the sum named, was void: Savery v. Moore, 61-505.

105. The covenants contained in a deed made by a county and conveying certain swamp lands cannot have the effect of making valid the deed itself, nor the contract evidenced thereby, nor give the deed itself any force by way of estoppel, where the contract itself is forbidden by statute; and the fact that the disability of the county is afterwards removed by repeal of the statute forbidding the contract, and the title to the lands contracted for (to which the county had had no title), is perfected in the county, will not vest the after-acquired title in the grantee: Robinson v. Bailey, 26 Fed. Rep., 219.

II. CONSIDERATION.

106. Stipulation may be: A stipulation contained in a deed will be considered as a part of the consideration for the conveyance: Hull v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 65-713.

107. Presumption: A deed is sufficient prima facie evidence of a good consideration, and throws the burden of proof upon the opposite party to impeach it on that ground: Carson v. Foley, 1-524; Wolverton v. Collins, 34-238.

108. Parol evidence: While a deed is prima facie evidence of the consideration paid, yet for any purpose short of affecting the title, the consideration clause is not conclusive that the money has been paid, and is only prima facie evidence of the amount, which may by parol proof be shown to be greater or less than the amount mentioned in the deed: Trayer v. Reeder, 45-272.

Consideration.

109. The consideration of a deed, when it is itself the contract between the parties, may be shown to be different from that expressed in it: Puttman v. Haltey, 24-425.

110. The clause in a deed acknowledging the receipt of a sum of money as consideration is open to explanation by parol proof: Swafford v. Whipple, 3 G. Gr., 261.

111. A variance between the allegations and the proof as to the consideration will not be fatal. The sum named in the deed is not conclusive: Jones v. Smith, 6-229.

112. The fact that the consideration named in the deed is greater than that actually paid is not sufficient of itself to set the sale aside: Culbertson v. Luckey, 13-12.

113. In an action upon a warranty in a deed it is competent to show that the consideration was greater than the amount named in the deed: Harper v. Perry, 28-57; Lawton v. Buckingham, 15-22.

114. Parol evidence as to consideration not allowed to defeat the deed: While for some purposes the consideration of the conveyance may be shown to be different from that expressed, the rule is that this cannot be allowed for the purpose of avoiding the deed or varying its effect: Dunbar v. Stickler, 45-384.

115. The grantor, having acknowledged the consideration of the deed to be paid, cannot be permitted to contradict that fact by proof, so as to avoid his own solemn act, unless by competent proof of fraud: Rymear v. Neilin, 3 G. Gr., 310.

116. It seems that parol evidence is admissible to prove that the real consideration is other than that stated in the deed, but as to whether parol evidence is admissible to contradict the deed by showing a want of consideration, quære: Day v. Loun, 51-364.

Further as to parol evidence of consideration in a written instrument, see EVIDENCE, §§ 742-749.

117. Burden of proof: As a conveyance imports a consideration, the burden of proof is upon the party denying the consideration to establish such denial: Mansfield v. Watson, 2-111.

Recitals of the deed: The recitals of the deed are not evidence of the payment of consideration as against one not a party to the deed, and the grantee claiming as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of prior unrecorded instruments has the burden of proving by other evidence the payment of a consideration: See RECORDING ACTS, §§ 102-109.

118. Consideration payable at option of grantor: A conveyance in consideration of an agreement to pay specified sums at specified times if demanded, held not to be voidable as being voluntary and improvident: Dunbar v. Stickler, 45-384.

119. Agreement to support as consideration: Where no interests of creditors are involved, the owner of property may convey it in consideration of future support, if done in good faith and without fraud: Dubuque County v. Reynolds, 41-454.

120. A conveyance in a certain case by a father to his son, in consideration of his own support, etc., held not an unreasonable contract under the expectancy of life of the father at the time and other circumstances: Johnson v. Johnson, 52-586.

121. Where a mother resides with her daughter without any express agreement to compensate such daughter for such care and support, there is no moral obligation upon the mother to make such compensation, which will support a conveyance voluntarily made to such daughter but not perfectly executed: Else v. Kennedy, 67-376.

122. Love and affection: A consideration of love and affection is sufficient to support a conveyance of an inheritable estate: Piereson v. Armstrong, 1-282.

123. A conveyance made in consideration of blood, or natural love and affection, is good as between the parties, and all others except subsequent purchasers without notice and creditors: Mercer v. Mercer, 29-537.

124. So held as to a deed from husband to wife: Burgess v. Pollock, 53-273.

125. A voluntary executory contract between parent and child will not be enforced in a contest between one child and other children of the same ancestor, though it will be enforced against the party contracting; but where the contract is executed, as in the case of a conveyance, it will not be disturbed for want of valuable consideration: Mercer v. Mercer, 29-557.

126. In an action to set aside plaintiff's conveyance for the reason that it was made in consideration of love and affection on representations which were untrue, etc., held, that under the circumstances it appeared that the consideration was in fact the settlement of the rights of parties in a dispute and not for love and affection: Bostwick v. Bostwick, 52-721.

127. A release by a father of all his interest as heir in the estate of a deceased son, made to the decedent's widow, held sufficient to convey the interest of the grantor in the real property of decedent although there was no pecuniary consideration for such conveyance, relationship of the parties being a sufficient consideration: Thornton v. Mulquinne, 12-549.

Further as to fraudulent and voluntary conveyances, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

128. Gift to child: As between the parties a conveyance by a father to a child will be held as being founded upon a meritorious consideration; but an executory agreement to convey existing only in parol, unassisted by the fact of possession and permanent improvements, will not be enforced by a court of equity: Moore v. Pierson, 6-279.

129. But where a promise is clearly, definitely and conclusively established, and the child upon faith of it has entered into possession and made valuable improvements, the agreement will be enforced: Ibid.

Further as to GIFTS, see that title.

130. Advancement by a parent to a child is a good consideration and will support a contract except as against other children, and creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice: Patterson v. Mills, 69-755.

131. The presumption in the case of conveyance to a child without consideration is that it is intended as an advancement; and where the agreement for an advancement had not been carried out, and the child took a distributive share of the estate without regard to such advancement, held, that he could not retain the property claimed to have been given to him by the parent, although he had made improvements thereon: McMahill v. McMahonill, 69-115.

132. An advancement is a gift, by anticipation, from a parent to a child, of a whole or a part of what it is supposed such child would inherit upon the death of the parent. If the child accepts and appropriates a full distributive share of the balance of the estate without regard to the advancement, equity will not enforce the agreement of the parent to make such advancement: Ibid.

Further as to advancements, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 268-272, and GIFTS, § 7.

133. Failure of consideration: Failure to pay the consideration upon which a conveyance is made does not render the conveyance void but furnishes grantor the right of action for the stipulated consideration: Lake v. Gray, 35-459.

134. Where a deed was made in consideration of a promise to deliver certain fruit trees, held, that the promise being a sufficient consideration, the title passed to the grantee and through him to his grantees, although the consideration was never paid and the subsequent grantees of the purchaser knew that fact and that the purchaser was worthless: Gray v. Lake, 48-505.

135. Unlawful consideration: The fact that a voluntary conveyance of property is made to a woman with whom grantor is unlawfully cohabiting will not be considered as based upon such cohabitation as a consideration unless such fact is made to appear: Leighton v. Orr, 44-679.

136. Want of consideration: A written instrument of the same date as of the conveyance but in fact subsequently executed, and purporting to render the conveyance conditional, held not binding for want of consideration; but held also, that the circumstances showed that the original conveyance was in fact a mortgage and might be foreclosed as such and the consideration named therein recovered: Ingalls v. Atwood, 53-283.

Further as to construing absolute deeds as mortgages, see MORTGAGES, II.

137. Inadequacy of consideration in a particular case, held not sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the conveyance: Audubon County v. American Emigration Co., 40-460.

138. Setting aside conveyance: Where an action to set aside for want of consideration a conveyance executed during minority of grantor and while he was insane was brought eight years after majority was attained, no lucid interval having intervened, held, that the action was not too late: Gates v. Carpenter, 43-152.

139. Recovery back of consideration: Where a conveyance is rescinded in an action by the grantor, the resulting obligation of such grantor to repay the consideration inures to the benefit of a subsequent grantee: Deere v. Young, 39-588.

Purchaser for valuable consideration: As to who is deemed a purchaser for valuable consideration, and within the protection of the recording laws, see RECORDING ACTS, III, b.

III. FORM, CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.

a. Form.

140. Not material: It is not essential that a deed of conveyance should follow any exact or prescribed form of words. If the intention to convey is unmistakably expressed, that intention will not be defeated by the fact that the instrument also partakes of the nature of a contract: American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 62-182.

141. Grant: The words "have given and granted" are sufficient to constitute a conveyance: Pierson v. Armstrong, 1-282.

142. Release: Although at common law a release was not effectual to convey title, unless the releasee had a former estate in possession, yet the true principle of construction now adopted is that all instruments shall be so construed as to pass the estate when such was the intention of the parties. Therefore, held, that a release by a father to the widow of a deceased son of all the rights of such father as heir in the estate of the son would transfer to the widow the title of the grantor in the real estate of decedent: Thornton v. Mulquinne, 12-549.

143. Interest of grantor: The granting clause in a deed was as follows: "do hereby sell and convey unto said M. the following premises, to wit: all our right, title and interest in and to" a certain lot described; held, to be a grant of the right, title and interest possessed by the grantor, and that the general covenant of warranty following had no application beyond such right and title: McNear v. McComber, 18-12.

144. Where there is a grant of certain real property described, although accompanied with the explanation that the grantor means thereby only to convey his right, title and interest in the premises, followed with a general warranty of title, a breach of the covenant occurs upon the failure of the title to and eviction from the property; but when the grant is simply of the right, title and interest of the estate sold and conveyed, the covenant is limited to the interest the grantor had in the premises, and a failure of such title does not constitute a breach of warranty: Ibid.

145. Life estate: Conveyance in a particular case held by reason of the terms of its premises to be a conveyance of a life estate: Davis v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 67-494.

146. Quitclaim: A conveyance in which the grantor purports to sell and convey, as well as quitclaim, is not a mere quitclaim deed: Sibley v. Bullis, 40-429.

147. The mere fact that a deed contains the words "bargain and sell" does not make it any the less a quitclaim. It is a quitclaim if it conveys, not the property, but the grantor's right, title, interest, and estate, therein: Wightman v. Spofford, 56-145.

148. So, a deed containing the following granting clause: "have bargained, sold and quitclaimed, and by these presents do bargain, sell and quitclaim, all our right, title and interest," etc., etc., held to be more than a mere quitclaim: Wilson v. Irish, 62-260.

149. A quitclaim deed to a person who knows that his grantor has no title to or interest in the property does not confer upon grantee any right whatever: Curtis v. Smith, 42-665.

That a grantee by quitclaim is not protected as a bona fide purchaser, see NOTICE, I, g.

150. Uncertainty as to grantee: Where a contract is made by the owner of land with another for the conveyance of title, and the consideration is furnished by the latter, he will be considered as the grantee although not expressly named as such. The conveyance will not be void for uncertainty as to the grantee: American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 62-182.

151. Under the facts in a particular case, held, that a conveyance of land purchased by the son with money of the father and intended for the father, the name inserted as grantee being one common to father and son, who were not accustomed to use any marks of distinction to indicate which was intended, should be considered as a conveyance made to the father: Balwerk v. Durger, 63-358.

b. Construction.

152. Circumstances and intention: The intention of a party to a conveyance may be ascertained from the entire transaction, and extrinsic circumstances to aid in the construction of the instrument, the situation of the parties and the objects in view in the execution of the instrument may be considered: Craven v. Winter, 38-471.

153. In ascertaining the intent of the parties, the court will always consider the then particular situation, the circumstances attending the transaction, the state of the country, and the thing granted at the time of the grant: Schotte v. Rosiers, 4-328.

As to when a deed absolute in form will be construed as a mortgage, see MORTGAGES, II.

154. Punctuation: While punctuation is a most fallible standard by which to interpret language, yet it may be resorted to when all other means fail. However, if from the instrument it is apparent what the true meaning is, punctuation will not be sufficient to change it: Schotte v. Rosiers, 4-328.

155. Copulative: A deed in a particular case construed with reference to punctuation and the use of the copulative: Ibid.

156. All the parts and ceremonies necessary to complete a conveyance are to be taken together as one act and operate from the substantial part by relation. Therefore, held, that where a title, evidenced by a certificate of purchase of land from the government, had been conveyed and a patent subsequently issued to the original holder of such certificate, the patent would inure to the person to whom the title had been conveyed: Cavender v. Smith, 3 G. Gr., 349.

157. Construction favorable to grantee: If there is ambiguity on the face of a deed, such construction must be given it as will be most favorable to the grantee: Marshall v. McLean, 3 G. Gr., 363.

158. That construction will be followed which would support, rather than that which would defeat, the conveyance: Barlow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 29-276.

159. While it is true that exceptions and reservations in conveyances are to be construed most strictly against the grantor, that is, the party in whose favor they are inserted, yet if it can be fairly ascertained from the language of the instrument what the parties thereto intended, their intention will be given effect: Wiley v. Sirdorus, 41-224.

160. Testamentary disposition; revocation: The test to determine whether the instrument is a deed or testamentary paper, revocable at the will of the maker, is this: If the instrument passes a present interest, although the right to its possession and enjoyment may not occur until some future time, it is a deed or contract; but if the instrument does not pass an interest or right until the death of the maker, it is a will or testamentary paper: Craven v. Winter, 38-471.

161. Therefore, held, that a conveyance by a father to his son, reserving a life estate so himself and his wife, the mother of grantee, was not revocable at will of grantor: Ibid.

162. A deed referring to and incorporating a will is good even if the disposition of the property is to take effect in futuro; and when a deed is to convey land for such uses as are set out in a will, then the will is not revocable, if no power of revocation is reserved in the deed: Ibid.

163. Where a conveyance of an estate of land contained, in addition to the usual words of conveyance, the provision, "to commence after the death of both of said grantors," held, that it was of a testamentary character and subject to revocation prior to the death of the grantors, even though made upon a valuable consideration: Leaver v. Gauss, 62-314.

Further as to testamentary dispositions, see WILLS.

c. Conditions and limitations.

164. The statute de donis is not in force in this state as a part of the common law. Therefore, where a conveyance was made to a married woman and the heirs of her body begotten by her present husband, to have and to hold unto her and said heirs, held, that the grantee took a fee-simple estate and had a full right to convey: Pierson v. Lane, 60-60.

Conditions and limitations.

165. Inconsistent conditions: Where a conveyance is in fee-simple absolute, but contains a condition in conflict therewith, the conveyance will be upheld and the condition considered as void. Therefore, held, that a conveyance in fee-simple with the condition that any portion of the premises held by the grantee at the time of her death should revert to the grantor or his heirs, conveyed an absolute fee-simple estate, and any portion of the premises held by the grantee at her death did not revert to the grantor but passed to her heirs: Case v. Dwire, 60-449.

166. A condition inconsistent with an express grant is void, and such a condition will not be inferred from doubtful and uncertain language: Hurd v. Hurd, 64-414.

167. Restraint of alienation: Where a conveyance is of a fee-simple estate, without reservation of any reversionary interest of grantor, a condition in restraint of alienation is void. So held where the grant was in the words following: "do give my son, J. M., all my interest in the following lands, . . . to have the above described lands his life-time and to go to his children at his death, but if he dies without children, then the above described land to go to his brother, G. M., and at his death," etc., etc., with the further provision, "It is expressly understood that he shall not part with it nor sell it, nor shall any person sell it for him or for debts whatsoever:" McCleary v. Ellis, 54-311.

168. Reservation of life estate: A conveyance with reservation of life estate from year to year, containing a further provision that the right of the grantor to possession under such life estate must be requested in writing before the first day in March in each and every year, reserves to the grantor a full life estate, and the second provision does not create a limitation upon such estate, but relates merely to possession thereunder: Hurd v. Hurd, 64-414.

169. A condition subsequent is not so rigidly construed as a condition precedent; and held, that a conveyance upon condition of defeasance in case the grantee should die without children living at her death was not defeated where the grantee left one child surviving: Pierson v. Armstrong, 1-282.

170. Where conditions inserted in a deed by way of covenants are not conditions precedent to be performed before the title to the land vests in the grantee, and before it is to be appropriated and used, the title will not be set aside in equity for failure to perform the same: Stringer v. Keokuk, Mt. P. & N. R. Co., 59-277.

171. Where a vacation of an alley by the city was procured upon representations of an adjoining owner that he would erect thereon a building of a certain description at a certain cost, and the building erected did not correspond with the representations, held, that the condition of the vacation of the alley was a condition subsequent, and not a condition precedent, and that a court of equity would not declare the vacation void and order the alley reopened: Marshalltown v. Forney, 61-578.

172. Condition precedent; performance: Where a conveyance was delivered in escrow, to take effect when a depot was located as agreed, held, that the mere platting of an addition to the town upon which certain ground was marked depot ground, did not amount to such location as contemplated, nor did a subsequent location of a depot on that spot, made by another company, not succeeding to the rights of the grantee in the deed: Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Wilson, 50-422.

173. Certain conditions to be performed by a purchaser of swamp lands, held, in a particular case, not to be in the nature of conditions precedent to the conveyance: Page County v. American Emigrant Co., 41-115.

174. A conveyance upon condition precedent does not take effect until performance of the condition: In re Smith, 56-270.

175. Conditions and stipulations in conveyances to railway companies: Where a part of the consideration of a conveyance to a railway company of land for depot grounds was expressed to be the permanent location of the depot on the grounds conveyed, held, that such provision was not a promissory undertaking on the part of the grantee to permanently maintain a depot on the land conveyed, and such grantee was not liable for failure to comply with such provision further than to the forfeiture of the right conveyed, for the reason that such provision was a condition subsequent, and not a personal obligation: Close v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-149.

Conditions and limitations.—Effect.

176. Where a deed of a right of way to a railway company contained a provision as to the location of a depot, such proviso was construed to be a condition precedent, the breach of which could be taken advantage of by the grantor (he having remained in possession) without formal entry, by an action to have damages assessed as though no deed had ever been made: Taylor v. Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co., 25-371.

177. Where a conveyance granted the right to use a certain side-track "as now located," and afterwards the grantor relaid such side-track in a somewhat different location, held, that the right to use the side-track, as relaid, existed in the grantee: Fellows v. Webb, 43-133.

178. A conveyance of a right of way to a railway company "as located or to be located by the engineers of said company," held not to be defeated by the fact that the engineer of an assignee of said company located the road, there being no manifest intention to rely on the personal qualifications of a particular engineer: Barlow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 29-276.

179. A conveyance to a railway company granted a strip of land one hundred feet wide through a certain tract as located by the line of road "for the construction of the second division of said railroad," and with a provision "that in case such railroad company do not construct their road through said tract, or shall, after construction, permanently abandon the road through said tract of land, the same shall revert to and become the property of the grantors, their heirs or assigns;" held, that, taking into consideration the situation of the parties at the time the deed was made and the subject-matter, together with the language of the deed and the intention of the parties, the legal effect of the instrument was no more than a conveyance of a right of way: Ibid.

180. Limitation of covenants: A deed contained covenants "that we are lawfully seized of said premises; that they are free from incumbrances; that we have good right and lawful authority to sell the same, and that we do hereby covenant to warrant and defend the said premises against the lawful claims of all persons whomsoever claiming through or under us," the words in italics being written, the others printed; held, that the words in italics appeared from the evidence and the language to have been intended to limit and restrain all the preceding covenants, special as well as general, and that the grantor was not bound to protect the property against incumbrances other than his own and those of persons claiming under him: Crum v. Loud, 23-219.

181. Perpetuity: Where a conveyance is made to the trustees of a religious society without giving the power to alienate and invest the proceeds, the grant is not objectionable on the ground of creating a perpetuity: Miller v. Chittenden, 2-315, 362.

182. Under a statute (Code, § 1920) declaring every disposition of property void which suspends the absolute power of controlling the same for a longer period than the lives of persons then in being and for twenty-one years thereafter, held, that a lease for nine hundred and ninety-nine years was not invalid: Todhunter v. Des Moines, I. & M. R. Co., 58-205.

183. Adverse possession: Even apart from a statutory provision that adverse possession shall not prevent conveyance, by the owner, of his interest, it is doubtful whether the common law rule, which prohibited a sale of property in the adverse possession of another, should longer apply, things in action being now assignable: Foster v. Young, 35-27, 40.

d. Effect.

184. A conveyance by a bankrupt to his assignee will pass the legal title so as prima facie to authorize such assignee to bring action to quiet title: Lewis v. Soule, 52-11.

185. License; revocation: Where an improvement is made under a parol license, an interest is acquired thereby which cannot be revoked either by the licensor or his grantee with notice. So held with regard to a partition wall erected partly upon land of another by parol license of the owner: Wickersham v. Orr, 9-253.

186. Where money or labor has been expended on the land of another upon the faith of a promise given by him, the owner shall not assert his legal right to the soil so as to interfere with the use or enjoyment of the building or structure erected as the result of such promise by the money and labor of the licensee: Ibid.

187. Conveyance as mortgage: In a particular case, held, that under the terms of a conveyance which was in fact a mortgage, the grantor was entitled to the possession of the property until sold to third persons in accordance with provisions therein: Radford v. Folsom, 58-473.

188. Unexpired lease: A conveyance of land with all appurtenant thereto carries with it all the rights of the grantor under an unexpired lease of the premises: Hatfield v. Lockwood, 18-296.

189. Unaccrued rent: Rent reserved by lease, and not accrued at the time of conveyance, passes by the conveyance to the grantee: Winn v. Murehead, 52-64; Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

190. In such case, action against the tenant to recover such rent may be brought by the grantee in his own name: Abercrombie v. Redpath, 1-111.

191. The grantor has no right to receive such rent, but his liability to the grantee, if he should collect the rent, would be for money had and received, and not for a breach of the covenants of his deed: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

192. Reservation of easement: Where a father executed to his children by way of gift a conveyance for certain property, coupled with an oral understanding as to the use of certain portions of such property, constituting an easement in the father over such property appurtenant to other property owned by him, and afterwards such children united in executing an instrument to the father, conveying to him such easement for the mutual benefit of all the parties, held, that such conveyance was valid, to create an easement in the father: Clapp v. Forster, 67-49.

193. A parol reservation of unaccrued rent would be of no validity as against the conveyance: Winn v. Murehead, 52-64.

194. Whether a parol reservation of growing crops at the time of sale or conveyance of the land can be shown in a controversy between the grantor and grantee respecting them, quære: Johnson v. Tantlinger, 81-500.

195. But where it was alleged that grantor had remained in possession under such parol agreement, and with consent of the grantee cultivated such crops which were the produce of his toil and labor, held, that those facts were properly provable in defense to, or reduction of, a claim by the grantee for the value of such crops: Ibid.

196. A parol reservation of standing timber cannot be shown for the purpose of varying the effect of a conveyance of the property: Davis v. Hull, 67-479.

197. Crops: The rule that growing crops follow the title of the land is not applicable to grain which is matured and ready for harvest. It then possesses the character of personal chattels, and is not to be regarded as a part of the realty. Such is the rule, at least, where the question is between the purchaser at foreclosure sale and the tenant of the mortgaged premises: Hecht v. Dettman, 56-679.

198. Crops standing upon land at the time of a sheriff's deed, but already fully matured, do not pass to the purchaser under such deed: Everingham v. Braden, 58-183.

199. Where a landlord who was entitled to a share of the crops upon the leased premises conveyed the same after the maturity of the crops and after a portion thereof had been gathered, reserving to the tenant the right to get off his crops, held, that the interest of the landlord in the crops, harvested and unharvested, did not pass to the grantee: Moffett v. Armstrong, 40-484.

200. Personal property upon the land: A conveyance of real property does not carry with it personal property, such as rails cut and piled upon the land: Robertson v. Phillips, 8 G. Gr., 220.

201. Personal property attached: A conveyance of land, unless exceptions and reservations be therein made, includes not only the earth, but everything attached to it, whether by nature, as herbage, trees, etc., or artificially, by man, as fences, buildings, and the like: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

202. Fences: A fence standing upon land is part of the realty, and passes with a conveyance thereof, even though constructed thereon by mistake by a person having no interest in the property: Burlerson v. Teeple, 2 G. Gr., 542.

Effect.

203. Appurtenances are things belonging to another thing as principal, and which pass as incident to the principal thing. The term as used in conveyances covers nothing but land and such things as belong thereto and are part of the realty; and held, that the term could not be construed to cover fixtures which would not otherwise pass by the deed: Ottumwa Woolen Mills v. Hawley, 44-57.

204. Unexecuted power of attorney: The execution of a power of attorney authorizing a person therein named to convey lands to another upon certain conditions and for certain purposes, does not vest any interest in the land in the person to whom such conveyance is authorized to be made: Tharp v. Brennehan, 41-251.

205. Conveyance to husband and wife jointly creates a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy, or an estate in entirety: Hoffman v. Stigers, 38-302.

206. "Heirs," or other technical words of inheritance, are by statute declared not necessary to convey an estate in fee-simple. (Code, § 1929): Barlow v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 29-276.

207. What interest passes: A conveyance passes any equitable interest the grantor may have in the land, although he have no legal interest: White v. Butt, 32-335, 345.

208. The dower interest of a wife is relinquished by a deed in which she joins with her husband in the granting clause and covenants, although there is no express relinquishment of dower: Edwards v. Sullivan, 20-502; Jones v. Des Moines, 43-209.

209. Inurement of after-acquired title;¹ estoppel: The statutory provision as to after-acquired title does not apply where a deed conveys the estate which the grantor at the time actually possessed, and he subsequently acquires a greater estate: Collamer v. Kelley, 12-319, 326.

210. In order that a conveyance may operate to pass an after-acquired title, it must be so executed that it would have passed such title at the time of execution if the grantor had then had such title: Heaton v. Fryberger, 38-185.

211. Where the wife simply joins with the husband in a conveyance for the purpose of relinquishing her dower, an interest afterward acquired by her will not inure to the benefit of the grantee in such conveyance: Childs v. McChesney, 20-431; O'Neil v. Vanderburg, 25-104; Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 34.

212. Where A. conveyed property to B. without having title thereto, and subsequently C., the owner of the title, conveyed to A., taking from him a mortgage for a part of the purchase money, held, that although the title thus conveyed to A. vested at once in B., nevertheless C. would be allowed to enforce his mortgage against the property in B.'s hands: Morgan v. Graham, 35-213.

213. A mortgage will attach to an after-acquired title: Rice v. Kelso, 57-115.

214. If a warranty deed be executed and duly recorded while the grantor has no title to the land, and full title be subsequently acquired by him, it inures to the benefit of the grantee. The registry also protects him against all subsequent purchasers. But this would not be true of a quitclaim deed, for under such deed a subsequent title does not inure: Warburton v. Mattox, Mor., 367.

215. The statutory provision above referred to, applied: Van Orman v. McGregor, 23-300; Rogers v. Hussey, 36-664; Bellows v. Todd, 39-209, 217; Prouty v. Tallman, 65-354.

216. Estoppel: A conveyance with covenants by the owner of property will estop his heirs from claiming any interest hostile to the rights of the grantee under such conveyance, but will not estop those claiming as heirs of the wife of such grantor from asserting her rights in the property by reason of her dower interest not relinquished in such prior conveyance: Dunlap v. Thomas, 69-358.

217. Where the father of a minor, acting for him without authority, partitioned a piece of land in which the minor had an interest and conveyed the portion set apart to the minor, and upon coming of age the minor ratified such sale by executing a quitclaim deed, held, that he was estopped from asserting any interest in the part conveyed by the

¹ Code, § 1931. Where a deed purports to convey a greater interest than the grantor was at the time possessed of, any after-acquired interest of such grantor, to the extent of that which the deed purports to convey, inures to the benefit of the grantee.

Description.

father to the other joint owner: Drake v. Wise, 36-476.

218. Where a party executed a mortgage in which his father and mother joined, held, that the mother was not estopped from setting up the mental incapacity of the son to execute the mortgage, upon afterward acquiring the title to the mortgaged property: Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 34.

IV. DESCRIPTION.

219. By government survey; judicial notice: Where land is described by the government survey, the court will take judicial notice of its location: Hypfner v. Walsh, 3 G. Gr., 509.

220. Thus, where the numbers of township and range are given, and also the county in which the property is situated, the court will take judicial notice that there could be but one such township in the county, and the description will be sufficient: Stoddard v. Sloan, 65-680.

221. Where the description was of a portion of a government subdivision of a certain section of "township 84, range 26," held, that it was sufficiently specific although the name of the state was not given, it appearing that such description would not apply to any other piece of land covered by government surveys: Beal v. Blair, 38-318.

222. The abbreviations in common use to designate the fractional parts of a section according to the government survey are sufficiently definite: Jenkins v. McTigue, 22 Fed. Rep., 148.

223. Plat and field-notes: In construing a grant of land which is described by the number of the section, or legal fraction of a section, and the township and range, courts will look to the plat and field-notes made and returned by the government surveyors to the surveyor-general's office in order to locate the boundaries of the land: Ufford v. Wilkins, 33-110.

224. The lines actually run upon the ground by the original surveyor become the true external boundaries if they can be ascertained by the monuments erected by the surveyor, and to these monuments, when they exist, courses, distances, and measurements must all yield: Ibid.

225. Where, by mistake, the plat does not represent the survey, the survey will govern: Bradstreet v. Dunham, 65-248.

Further as to government survey, see PUBLIC LANDS.

226. General description: A description embracing all the land inuring to the grantor under a certain contract or deed is a sufficiently definite description: American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 62-182.

227. A conveyance by general description will not be held inoperative in equity in the absence of fraud or of evidence that grantor has acted in ignorance of his rights: Thorn-ton v. Mulquinne, 12-549.

228. Therefore, held, that a conveyance by an heir of all his right to the estate of decedent was sufficient to cover his interest in the real property of such decedent: Ibid.

229. General description not controlled by particular: A certain and particular description should never control a general one which is in itself clear and unambiguous, unless the object of the particular description is to render that which is general and uncertain more specific, definite and certain. Such particular description ought never to limit a grant made certain by a general description, unless it can be clearly ascertained from all the words of the grant that it was the intention of the parties to restrict the grant by the particular description: Marshall v. McLean, 3 G. Gr., 363.

230. So where the description by reference to fractional subdivisions of the quarter-section, clearly and unmistakably indicated the boundary of the land and its exact quantity, held, that such description would not be varied by a reference to a city addition: Cummings v. Browne, 61-385.

231. But where the general description is indefinite and uncertain, and reference to the particular description must be had in order to ascertain with certainty the subject of the grant, the rule as to the particular not limiting the general does not apply, but the whole language will be taken together, and though it may be ambiguous or even contradictory, if upon the whole instrument there is sufficient to manifest the intention of the parties with reasonable certainty, that will suffice: Barney v. Miller, 18-480; Barney v. Ivins, 22-163.

Description.

232. Surplusage: A description complete in itself and free from ambiguity is not to be affected by a subsequent restrictive and disjunctive clause, which may be treated as surplusage: Wright v. Cochran, 8 G. Gr., 507.

233. Where several particulars are given in a grant, all of which are necessary to ascertain the location of the land intended to be conveyed, nothing but what will correspond with all these particulars will pass by the grant; but if there be certain particulars sufficiently ascertained to locate the grant, the addition of a false or mistaken particular or boundary may be rejected: Sayers v. Lyons, 10-249.

234. Repugnant calls: If there shall be in the instrument a repugnant call, which by the other descriptive terms clearly appears to have been made through mistake, the conveyance is not rendered void by reason thereof: Glenn v. Maloney, 4-314.

235. Where the description in the instrument, as applied to its subject-matter, is found to be true in part, but not true in every part, so much of it as is false will be rejected; and it will take effect if sufficient is known to ascertain its application: Ibid.

236. Description of an undefined portion: A deed purporting to convey "forty feet of" a certain lot and block, held fatally defective for uncertainty: Bosworth v. Farenholz, 8-84.

237. Where a grant of any given number of acres is made out of the corner of a tract of land, the premises should be surveyed in a square: Fitzgerald v. Britt, 43-498; Imme-gart v. Gorgas, 41-439; Morris' Adm'rs v. Stuart's Adm'rs, 1 G. Gr., 375.

238. Where a given number of acres are sold off a given side of a government subdivision, the premises are to be surveyed into an oblong square: Morris' Adm'rs v. Stuart's Adm'rs, 1 G. Gr., 375.

239. Incorporating reference from another deed: Although the description in a deed be vague and insufficient, yet, if it refers to another deed in which the land is described with certainty, such reference will render the description certain and sufficient: Nightingale v. Walker, 3 G. Gr., 96.

240. The land included in a guardian's proceeding for sale was previously surveyed and platted into lots, a copy of the plat being part of the record. One deed described, by metes and bounds, one and a quarter acres in "lot one in the survey of said land, being a part of the southeast quarter," etc.; another deed referred to the same survey by date, and conveyed all of said lot one, after excepting, by metes and bounds, the parcel previously conveyed; held, that the description of the premises was sufficiently certain: Pursley v. Hayes, 22-11.

241. Acts of the parties as affecting the construction: Where the description in a deed started from a point forty feet west of the east line of a certain out-lot, but the original plat of the out-lot fixed such east line forty feet east of the same line as fixed in subsequent plats, held, that the fact that the grantee was, by the original owner, allowed for eleven years to remain in possession of and cultivate the tract covered by the deed according to the subsequent plats of the out-lot, was sufficient to show that it was this property which was intended to be conveyed: Foley v. Kane, 53-64.

242. Courses and distances governed by fixed monuments: It is a general rule of construction that courses and distances must give way to natural or artificial monuments or objects: Sayers v. Lyons, 10-249; Gaveny v. Hinton, 2 G. Gr., 344; Sargent v. Herod, 3-145; Sanders v. Eldridge, 46-34.

243. Thus a corner of a lot may constitute a fixed monument governing courses and distances: Sayers v. Lyons, 10-249.

244. The lines actually run upon the ground by the original surveyor become the true external boundaries if they can be ascertained by the monuments, and to these monuments, when they exist, courses, distances and measurements must all yield: Ufford v. Wilkins, 33-110.

245. In establishing a lost survey courses and distances must yield to fixed monuments: Moreland v. Page, 2-139.

246. When a general boundary is merely directory and uncertain it must yield to special or locative calls based upon visible objects: Morrison v. Langworthy, 4 G. Gr., 177.

247. Where the parties to a conveyance stipulated that a house and certain other buildings upon a certain portion of the premises described as "a strip ten yards wide and one hundred yards long," at the west side thereof, should be reserved to the grantor, and it appeared that by mistake of the parties the description did not include the house intended to be reserved, held, that the description must give way to the monuments established, to carry out the intention of the parties, and that the house referred to would be included in the reservation although not on the strip of land specifically described: Gaveny v. Hinton, 2 G. Gr., 344.

Description.

248. Monuments or stakes pointed out by the seller to the buyer as indicating the corners of the land are not to be considered as higher evidence of the true corners than the boundaries ascertained by a survey though made long afterwards, when such monuments have not been established as fixed monuments with reference to which the property is described: Messer v. Reginnitter, 32-312.

249. Bounded by stream or highway: As a general rule a grant of land bounded by a stream or highway covers the fee in the stream or highway to its center, provided that the grantor at the time owned to the center and there are no words or specifications or descriptions to show a contrary intent: Dubuque v. Maloney, 9-450.

250. If lots are sold by their number on the plat, upon which they are represented as bounded by a street or highway, that circumstance raises a strong presumption of intent to pass the title to the center of the street or highway, and it will so pass accordingly unless the highway be clearly excluded: Ibid.

251. But where the call in a deed was "up the west bank" of a certain stream, held, that it could not be construed so that the tract would extend to the middle of the stream: Murphy v. Copeland, 51-515.

252. Low water in a stream marks a permanent and fixed line which can be determined with greater certainty than the line of any other stage of water; and where by conveyance a party acquires title to land bounded by a water-course (which is not navigable), the boundary of his land is the line of low water: Murphy v. Copeland, 58-409.

Where a navigable stream forms the boundary line, the title of the riparian owner extends only to high water mark: See WATERS, II.

253. Distances and quantity: The rule that distances control quantity, in the description in a deed, will not prevail where the intention is clearly expressed that a specified quantity is to be conveyed and no more: Sanders v. Godding, 45-468.

254. Construction: "links:" So held where the land conveyed was, by the very terms of the deed, to be of the area of one acre, and the description could be made to conform to the quantity by interpreting "links" in the description as hundredths of a rod instead of hundredths of a chain: Ibid.

255. Quantity: Where the quantity of land is mentioned in the deed as part of the description, it will be rejected if inconsistent with the actual area of the premises described by known monuments or other certain description: Ufford v. Wilkins, 33-110.

256. Therefore, held, that a conveyance of the sixteenth of a section by government subdivision, passed title to the entire government subdivision, although it was fractional and contained more than forty acres, the amount mentioned in the deed: Ibid.

257. "More or less:" The words "more or less" in a conveyance are only intended to cover a reasonable excess or deficit. If the difference between the real and supposed quantity is very great, both parties will be deemed to have acted under an obvious mistake, which it will be the duty of a court of equity to correct: Hosleton v. Dickinson, 51-244.

258. Evidence is admissible to show that the grantor read the conveyance and referred to the fact that the words "more or less" were omitted, and that the grantee informed him that such omission would make no difference; such evidence being admissible as bearing on the question whether the words were omitted by mistake: Sweezey v. Collins, 40-540.

259. Mistake in survey; restoring lost corners: Where the whole length between remote corners is found to be variant from the length called for, the intermediate lost corners are to be restored by distributing the whole difference in length proportionally between the different parts of the whole line, and it is not proper to throw the entire de-deficiency or excess upon that portion which, as originally surveyed, was intended to embrace the balance of the tract: Moreland v. Page, 2-139; Newcomb v. Lewis, 81-488.

As to correction of description, see EQUITY, II, a.

V. COVENANTS.

a. Object and effect.

260. The title without covenants, at grantee's risk: The general rule is that if the deed contains no covenants, then, in the absence of fraud, all questions of title are at the risk of the grantee. If it does contain covenants, the grantee must have recourse to them: Allen v. Pegram, 16-168.

261. The right of the grantee to relief either in law or equity on account of defects in or incumbrances on the title, in the absence of fraud, depends solely upon the covenants for title which he has received. If he has received no covenant which covers the defect or incumbrance, he can neither detain the purchase money, nor recover it back if already paid. The exception in the case of fraud is the only one recognized to the well-settled rule that the purchaser's right to relief after the execution of the deed depends solely upon the covenants for title which the deed contains: Brandt v. Foster, 5-287.

262. Warranty not implied: By common law, the words "grant, bargain and sell," in the creation of a freehold, imply no warranty whatever, and the conveyance of a fee does not ipso facto imply any warranty: Funk v. Creswell, 5-62.

263. Liability of grantor for fraud: Where grantor, with deliberate intent of defeating a prior conveyance by him, executes a subsequent conveyance, which prevails over the prior one by reason of a defect in the recording, the grantor is liable to his first grantee for the damages occasioned by such fraudulent act, the measure of damage being the value of the land at the time the prior title was defeated: Burdick v. Seymour, 39-452.

264. General warranty: The general covenant of warranty specified in the statutory form for a warranty deed includes and implies the usual covenants in a deed of conveyance in fee-simple, including one against incumbrances. (Code, § 1970): Funk v. Creswell, 5-62.

265. Under this covenant the grantee has all the rights he would have had if the conveyance had contained express covenants of seizin, freedom from incumbrance, right to convey, and the like: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

266. Parol warranty: Whether a warranty not expressed in the deed may be proved by parol, quære: Clark v. Ralls, 50-275.

267. The covenant to warrant and defend the title against all persons whomsoever implies all the usual covenants in deeds of conveyance in fee-simple: Richards v. Iowa Homestead Co., 44-304.

268. Under a statute providing that the words "grant, bargain and sell," in all conveyances, should be construed as expressing certain covenants, held, that the addition thereto in the instrument of the further covenant "to warrant and defend the title to the same property against the claims of all and every person whatsoever from or under him," did not limit the general covenant of warranty implied by statute from the words of the deed, even though a special covenant was unnecessary in view of the general covenant: Brown v. Tomlinson, 2 G. Gr., 525.

269. Covenant of seizin: The covenant that the grantor was seized in fee was, at common law, regarded as a covenant for title in contradistinction to the covenant for quiet enjoyment, which was called a covenant for the possession. So, in the United States, the weight of authority inclines to the rule that a covenant that one is seized means seized of an indefeasible estate; and a covenant for seizin is regarded as a covenant of title, the word being used as synonymous with right: Brandt v. Foster, 5-287.

270. Conveyance of grantor's title with covenants: Where a party conveys all his right, title and interest in the lands described, and covenants to warrant and defend the premises against all lawful claims arising under him, the covenant refers to the land described and not to the right and title of the grantor, and he becomes liable thereunder if there are incumbrances against the land: Funk v. Creswell, 5-62.

Covenants.—Breach.

271. Where one undertook to convey a settler's or claimant's title, using the words "sell, convey and quitclaim" in the granting clause, and covenanted to "warrant and defend the premises," etc., held, that the grantor was liable for a failure of title: Williamson v. Test, 24-138.

272. Exception of incumbrances: Where there was inserted after the usual covenants of warranty the clause, "except a mortgage for $800 to C. H. B.," held, that this exception was intended by the parties to limit the conditions of the covenant against incumbrances: Morrison v. Morrison, 38-73.

273. Agreement for other assurances: The fact that grantor has covenanted to afterwards make other assurances of title which may be required of him will not vitiate the conveyance executed if it is in itself sufficient to pass title: Dussaume v. Burnett, 5-95.

b. Breach; remedies.

274. Eviction: The covenant of warranty is intended to assure to the purchaser the possession of the premises conveyed, and is only broken by eviction: Brandt v. Foster, 5-287.

275. Actual or constructive: This eviction may be either actual or constructive, and the purchaser may consider himself evicted by buying in the paramount title when it shall have been hostilely asserted: Ibid.

276. The ouster or eviction necessary to constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty need not be by process of law. The grantee may surrender the possession when the hostile title is asserted, but if he does so, he assumes the burden of proving that the title to which he surrenders without contest is actually paramount to that of the grantor: Ibid.; Funk v. Creswell, 5-62, 86; Thomas v. Stickle, 32-71.

277. A vendee in possession under title bond is protected in the same way in regard to the purchase of an outstanding title as though he were a grantee with covenants of warranty: Thomas v. Stickle, 32-71.

278. It is sufficient to constitute a breach of the covenant of seizin, or that against incumbrances, that an adverse claim or incumbrance exists, whether asserted or not; but to constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty it is necessary that the adverse claim be hostilely asserted. It need not, however, be asserted by judgment or suit: Funk v. Creswell, 5-62, 89.

279. Sale under subsequent judgment: A warranty in a deed of conveyance is not broken by sale of the property under a judgment subsequently recovered; as for instance where the property is subjected to such judgment on account of the conveyance being in fraud of creditors: Small v. Somerville, 58-362.

280. Covenant of seizin: Where at the time of conveyance the grantor has no title, the covenant of seizin is broken on the delivery of the deed, and it is not necessary to show ouster or eviction to entitle the grantee to recover for the breach: Zent v. Picken, 54-535.

281. Equitable title: The mere fact of the existence of an equitable title in a third person cannot be set up in an action at law as a breach of any of the usual covenants of a deed conveying the legal title: Wilson v. Irish, 57-184.

282. Substantial breach; nominal damages: Until some substantial injury occurs to the grantee in a deed with covenants, no recovery can be had for breach of the covenant of seizin except for nominal damages: Hencke v. Johnson, 62-555.

283. Removal of fixtures: The removal of a stable, standing upon land at the date of a conveyance of the same, by a tenant having the right of removal, no reservation thereof having been made in the deed, is a breach of the covenant of seizin; and this, too, although the covenantee knew at the time of the conveyance that the stable was the property of the tenant, and that he had the right of removal: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

284. A covenant against incumbrances is broken upon the making of the conveyance, if an incumbrance then exists: Knadler v. Sharp, 36-232.

285. Nominal damages: Therefore the grantee may then maintain an action and recover nominal damages although he has not paid off the incumbrances; but such an action to recover would not prevent another action by that grantee or his grantee however remote, when and after either has been required to discharge the incumbrance in order to protect the title: Ibid.

286. A right of way: Where, in pursuance of an agreement between owners of adjoining buildings, a stairway was erected upon the premises of one of them to be used in common, and such premises were afterward conveyed to a third person with covenants of warranty, held, that the right of the owner of the adjoining building to the use of the stairway constituted an incumbrance, and was a breach of the covenant against incumbrances: McGowen v. Myers, 60-256.

287. The right of way for a railroad is an incumbrance and a breach of the covenant against incumbrances: Barlow v. McKinley, 24-69; Gerald v. Elley, 45-322.

288. But the fact that a railroad company is in the use and exercise of ownership of a right of way over land does not establish a right nor raise a presumption of a right thereto, and does not of itself constitute an incumbrance: Jerald v. Elly, 51-321.

289. One who conveys with covenants against any incumbrances by himself does not become liable on his warranty for conveyance of a right of way by a former owner: Brown v. Young, 69-625.

290. Lease: The existence of a valid lease upon the premises at the time of the execution of a deed, conveying the same with general covenant of warranty, is a breach of such warranty, and entitles the grantee to recover at least nominal damages: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

291. Where the grantee undertakes orally to pay the incumbrance at the time of the sale he cannot afterward recover for a breach of the covenant against incumbrances on account of such incumbrance: Wachendorf v. Lancaster, 66-458.

292. So also where the covenantor furnished the covenantee sufficient money to discharge the incumbrance, and the covenantee undertook to discharge it, held, that the covenant was satisfied: Blood v. Wilkins, 43-565.

293. Acquisition of incumbrance by grantor; estoppel: The grantor of premises subject to a mortgage, such mortgage not being excepted from the covenants of the deed, is estopped from afterwards setting the mortgage up against his grantee or any one holding under him. The acquisition of the mortgage by the grantor will amount to a satisfaction thereof: Johnson v. Walter, 60-315.

294. Mortgage excepted from covenants: A party who purchases with notice of a mortgage which is expressly excepted in the covenant of the deed against incumbrances has no right of action against his grantor and no right of subrogation against other security held by the mortgagee in the event of a foreclosure of such mortgage: Morrison v. Morrison, 38-73.

295. Technical incumbrance; nominal damages: Where in the foreclosure of a mortgage the lessee of the premises whose lease was subsequent to the mortgage was not made a party, held, that the purchaser at the foreclosure sale acquired all the rights of the mortgagor as against the lessee, and that upon conveyance by such purchaser with warranty, his grantee acquired all his rights, and that the existence of such lease constituted, thereafter, but a technical breach of warranty entitling the grantee of the execution purchaser to nominal damages only: Downard v. Groff, 40-597.

296. Knowledge by grantee of existence of incumbrance: The fact that the grantee has knowledge of the existence of an incumbrance does not defeat his right to recover damages for such incumbrances in an action for breach of covenant against incumbrances: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422; Barlow v. McKinley, 24-69; McGowen v. Myers, 60-256; Myers v. Munson, 65-423.

297. So held in regard to right of way for a railway: Barlow v. McKinley, 24-69; Gerald v. Elley, 45-322.

298. Detaining purchase money: If covenants of seizin or covenants of warranty have been broken, the purchaser may detain the purchase money in sufficient amount to make good any damages sustained by the breach. He will not be turned over for his indemnity to a separate action on the covenants of the deed when the rights of both parties may be determined in the same action: Brandt v. Foster, 5-287.

299. The party will be allowed in such case to make his defense at law, and if he has had no opportunity to do so, a court of equity will not hesitate to grant relief according to the circumstances of the case: Ibid.

300. If there are no covenants in the deed, then there would be no failure of consideration by reason of any failure or defect in the vendor's title. But if the covenants are general and unlimited, reaching to title as well as to possession, the consideration of the purchase is the present transfer of the vendor's interest, and the covenants of title contained in the deed: Ibid.

301. Breach of warranty may be set up as a defense to an action to recover the purchase money: Ruddick v. Lloyd, 15-441.

302. A purely technical defect in the title will not entitle the grantee, upon foreclosure of a mortgage for the purchase money, to a rebate of interest until a correction of the same, where he has remained in the undisturbed possession and use of the premises: Gifford v. Fetguson, 19-166.

303. Failure of grantee to pay a portion of the purchase money due will not excuse the grantor for failure to pay off an incumbrance on the premises against which he is bound by his covenants: McCrory v. Deming, 38-527.

And further see VENDORS, §§ 66-80.

304. Set-off: In an action for breach of covenant, the grantor cannot set off the amount of an indebtedness on the premises which grantee has undertaken to pay, under an agreement by which the grantor would be liable to the grantee for the amount paid: Ibid.

305. Pleading: In an action upon breach of covenant of seizin, it is sufficient to negative the words of the covenant, and it is not necessary to show wherein the grantor was not lawfully seized: Socum v. Haun, 36-138.

306. Burden of proof of seizin: Where defendant, in an action for breach of covenant of seizin, avers seizin at the time of conveyance, the burden of proof is cast upon him to establish the same: Schofield v. Iowa Homestead Co., 32-317; Barker v. Kuhn, 38-392; Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co., 39-624; Boon v. McHenry, 55-202; Swafford v. Whipple, 3 G. Gr., 261.

307. So, if plaintiff alleges that defendant was not seized and was not the lawful owner, which allegation is put in issue by a denial, the burden rests upon defendant to show seizin. Such answer amounts to an affirmative averment of title: Jerald v. Elly, 51-321.

308. Where the vendee sued to recover damages for breach of warranty, and alleged a specific breach in that when he attempted to take possession of the land he found another in possession under a prior purchase from the defendant, and defendant simply denied the allegation of the petition, the burden of proving the fact constituting the breach of warranty was held to be upon the plaintiff: Wilson v. Irish, 62-260.

309. Burden of proof as to incumbrance: Where plaintiff alleges the existence of an incumbrance, which is denied by defendant, the burden of proof is upon plaintiff: Jerald v. Elly, 51-321.

310. Parol evidence of satisfaction: A party cannot, by parol, engraft an exception upon the terms of a covenant in order to show that the damages arising from a breach thereof have been settled and discharged by an assignment, even if, as averred, the contract and assignment are parts of the same transaction: Myers v. Munson, 65-423.

311. Effect of verdict: When action for the use of premises is brought against an occupant, who gives notice to his grantor with warranty to defend, the latter will be bound by any verdict rendered, and therefore is entitled to bring suit to enjoin the action and have the title determined: Gardner v. Cole, 21-205.

312. Notice to grantor to remove the cloud: Where the legal title at the time of conveyance is in a third person holding the same by fraud, while such facts constitute a breach of covenant, yet the grantee before bringing action against such third person to quiet title, with the intention of holding his grantor liable on his covenants, should give notice to such grantee in order that he may, if he sees fit, bring such action or secure the removal of the cloud upon the title: Yokum v. Thomas, 15-67.

313. Judgment as evidence: The judgment in an action for breach of warranty against a covenantor, of which action the prior covenantor has notice, may be introduced as evidence in a subsequent action against such prior covenantor, to establish the existence of a breach of covenant and for the purpose of determining the amount of damages, which may be different from that recovered in the first action: Myers v. Munson, 65-423.

314. Estoppel: Certain facts held not sufficient to estop plaintiff from suing for breach of covenant of warranty: Ballard v. Burrows, 51-81.

315. Correction of mistake: In an action at law for the breach of a covenant in a deed, the deed must govern; but if by mistake, accident or fraud, it does not correctly recite the contract between the parties, it may be corrected by a court of equity: Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19-422.

Pleading: As to how breach of covenant is pleaded, see PLEADINGS, §§ 99-101.

c. Measure of damages.

316. Nominal damages: There can be no recovery for breach of covenant of seizin beyond nominal damages, until some substantial loss occurs: Boon v. McHenry, 55-202.

317. Where there is a breach of the covenant of seizin by reason of failure of title resulting from an informality in the execution of the deed, which could be corrected at the expense of the grantor, and which does not cause a disturbance of the purchaser's possession, the damages for such breach are limited to nominal damages only: Nosler v. Hunt, 18-212.

318. Where there has been only a technical breach of warranty, grantee will be entitled to only nominal damages: Downard v. Groff, 40-597.

319. Where the grantee does not show any actual or threatened disturbance of possession, and does not offer to return the land so as to become entitled to recover the consideration paid, the recovery for breach of covenants of warranty can be for only nominal damages: Norman v. Winch, 65-263.

320. Expense of perfecting title: Any expenditure which the grantee has reasonably incurred in procuring his title, not exceeding the purchase money and interest, may be recovered from the grantor: Knaßler v. Sharp, 36-232.

321. Where the grantee in a warranty deed afterward, to prevent eviction, buys in a paramount title, he may recover from his grantor in the deed for breach of warranty, and his damages will be the amount actually paid out for such paramount title, not exceeding, however, the consideration mentioned in the original deed. He cannot in any event recover more than the amount necessarily paid in perfecting the title: Richards v. Iowa Homestead Co., 44-304; Brandt v. Foster, 5-287.

322. The vendee has a right to yield to and acquire the superior title, and having done so, he may resort to the covenants of warranty for the recovery of the amounts expended, not exceeding the consideration money and interest received by the person under whom he claims title: Royer v. Foster, 62-321.

323. The amount necessarily expended in perfecting the title is the amount which may be deducted by the grantee from the purchase money, if not already paid: Brandt v. Foster, 5-287.

324. But where the breach of covenant of seizin is interposed as showing partial want of consideration by way of defense to a purchase money note drawing a higher rate of interest than six per cent., the damage resulting from the breach should be deducted from the face of the note and interest allowed only on the balance: Zent v. Picken, 54-535.

325. The same measure of damages is applicable in case of a vendee in possession under a title bond: Baker v. Corbett, 28-317.

326. The proof that the expenditure in perfecting the title was reasonable must come from the grantee seeking to recover: Fawcett v. Woods, 5-400.

327. In case of breach of covenant against incumbrances, the grantee should only be allowed to recover the amount reasonably paid to remove the incumbrance: Guthrie v. Russell, 46-269.

328. The measure of damages in such case is not the amount of the incumbrance but the amount actually paid: Swartz v. Ballou, 47-188.

329. The grantee has the right to discharge an incumbrance and set off the amount against the purchase money notes; and it seems that when the purchase money is not all paid, it is the duty of the purchaser to discharge a lien rather than let the property go to sale: Harper v. Dotson, 48-232.

330. Under the covenant against incumbrances, the grantor must pay a sum of money sufficient to put the grantee in as good a state as if the grantor had kept his covenant: Funk v. Creswell, 5-62; Kostenbuder v. Pierce, 37-645.

331. If the incumbrance is not extinguished, the grantee can recover nominal damages only, but he is not required to wait until he is evicted before suing on the covenant: Funk v. Creswell, 5-62.

332. Easement: In determining the amount of damages where the breach of covenant consists in the existence of a permanent easement, the covenantee becomes entitled immediately to receive from the covenantor such a sum of money as would be a just compensation for the injury, in determining which the reduction in the value of the property by reason of the easement should be considered. The general market value of the property should be estimated and the estimate should be made as of the time of the breach, legal interest being added to the damages from that time: Myers v. Munson, 65-423.

333. Where the incumbrance consists of a permanent easement for a stairway, etc., the damages resulting should be substantially in proportion to the value of the property thus occupied: Ibid.

334. In case of successive conveyances, with a covenant against incumbrances, and a breach of the covenant by reason of a permanent easement, the second covenantee would be entitled to recover more than the first, if the property had increased in value: Ibid.

335. Right of way: Where action was brought for damages resulting from a breach of covenant by reason of the existence of a right of way for a railway over the premises, held, that in determining the damage to be allowed, the relative value of the land as it would have been without the right of way, and what it was with the right of way, should be taken into account in determining what proportion of the actual purchase price should be allowed as damages: Koestenbuder v. Pearce, 41-204.

336. Further, held, that in estimating the damage suffered, all benefit to the land by reason of the construction of the railroad over such right of way should be excluded: Ibid.

337. Consideration money: In an action for damages for breach of warranty, the measure of recovery is the consideration money actually paid and the legal interest thereon: Swafford v. Whipple, 3 G. Gr., 261.

338. The mere fact that there was an outstanding superior title at the time of the conveyance, which has never been hostilely asserted, will not authorize the recovery of the consideration money: Wilson v. Irish, 62-260.

339. The real consideration may be shown to prove the damages, even in contradiction to the deed, but it cannot be shown that the consideration was not wholly or in part received by the covenantor or for his use: Bloom v. Wolfe, 50-286.

340. If the consideration of the conveyance is personal property, in determining the recovery for breach of warranty regard should be had to the value of the consideration as fixed upon by the parties at the time of the trade, rather than its actual value: Williamson v. Test, 24-138.

341. In an action by subsequent transferee: As between the original parties to the deed, the damages for breach of covenant are limited to the actual consideration paid, and parol proof is admissible to contradict the statement of consideration in the deed; but such evidence is not admissible in an action by a subsequent transferee from the grantee, and the measure of damages in an action by such transferee is the value of the land with six per cent. interest from the time of purchase from his grantor, the consideration mentioned in the original deed being taken as a conclusive admission by the grantor therein that such is the value: Short-hill v. Ferguson, 44-249.

342. Proportional recovery: Where plaintiff, being the grantee of certain property, sought to recover for breach of warranty against incumbrances and of title from the grantor of his grantor, and it appeared that the property involved was only a portion of the property conveyed by defendant to plaintiff's immediate grantor, held, that plaintiff could recover only such proportion of the entire consideration received by defendant as plaintiff's portion bore to the whole property, and that the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show what that amount was: Mischke v. Baughn, 52-528.

 Measure of damages.—Covenants running with the land.

843. Where, subsequently to a conveyance of property in a city, the city established its right to a portion of the premises as a street, held, that the measure of damage was the proportion of the purchase price which the part taken bore to the entire tract, the grantee having been allowed to remove the improvements from the part taken to the other portion, and that he might recover also the expense of such removal and the deterioration of the improvements by reason thereof: McDunn v. Des Moines, 39-286.

844. Partial failure of title: In an action for breach of warranty in a deed conveying land purchased from the county as swamp land, and which appeared not to have been certified by the United States land office as swamp, held, that although title might be perfected by proof of the actual swampy character of the land, nevertheless plaintiff had a right under the covenants to a title not subject to such contingency, and might recover the same damages to which he would have been entitled if the failure of title had been absolute: Shorthill v. Ferguson, 44-249.

845. Attorneys' fees: A party recovering damages for breach of warranty is only entitled to recover attorneys' fees incurred in defending an action to maintain his title where he shows the amount of such fees actually paid, or which he is under obligation to pay. That he shows a certain sum would be reasonable is not sufficient: Swartz v. Ballou, 47-188.

846. In an action by a covenantor against his covenantor to recover for breach of contract by reason of which the covenantor has already, in a prior action, been deprived of his possession of the premises, of which action the covenantor had notice, it may be that the covenantor should be allowed to recover for attorneys' fees expended in defending the former action. But where the prior action was not for possession, but merely for damages, the recovery in the subsequent action should not include attorneys' fees expended in defending the prior action, even though the covenantor had knowledge of such action: Myers v. Munson, 65-423.

Contract to convey, measure of damages for breach of covenant in, see VENDORS, § 114.

d. Covenants running with the land.

847. Seizin: In this state, the English rule has been recognized that the covenant of seizin runs with the land and is for the benefit of the party who may be the owner when a substantial breach occurs: Boon v. McHenry, 55-202.

848. A covenant of seizin runs with the land, and a recovery for a breach thereof may be had by the assignee of the grantee: Schofield v. Iowa Homestead Co., 32-317.

849. Such a covenant does not become barred by the statute of limitations until the expiration of the period of limitation after the breach: Wood v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co., 28 Fed. Rep., 910.

850. Liability to subsequent grantees: Where, by agreement between the grantor and the grantee, the former conveyed the premises to a third person as security for a debt of the grantee, and such third person upon payment of the debt conveyed to the original grantee, held, that the original grantor was bound to such last grantee by the covenants contained in the deed to the third person: Barker v. Kuhn, 38-392.

851. A grantor who becomes liable on covenants running with the land is charged with notice of subsequent conveyances or incumbrances of record, and cannot, by settlement with his immediate grantee, cut off the claims of subsequent parties: Devin v. Hendershott, 32-192.

852. Proportional recovery: Covenants running with the land are susceptible of division, so that if the land be conveyed to several persons, each may maintain an action to recover for the land in which he has an interest: Schofield v. Iowa Homestead Co., 32-317.

853. Conveyance of trustee: Where a deed is executed to one other than the purchaser to secure the purchase money, he holds the title in trust for the purchaser, who has the equitable title, and the covenants of warranty may be canceled or enforced by the grantee in the deed: Harper v. Perry, 28-57.

854. The grantee in a trust deed holds the legal title and may recover for breach of covenant running with the land. The mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of covenants in the mortgagor's deed: Devin v. Hendershott, 82-192.

355. Mortgagee: And the same is true of a mortgagee: Rose v. Schaffner, 50-488.

356. A mortgagee who has foreclosed and bid in the property for the full amount of his judgment cannot, in an action on the covenants in the mortgage, recover money paid to release the property from a prior incumbrance: Todd v. Johnson, 51-192.

e. Who liable on covenants.

357. A married woman is liable for a breach of warranty in a sale of her own land as if single: Richmond v. Tibbles, 26-474.

358. Where it appears that a deed, executed by husband and wife jointly, was intended by the parties as a deed of the husband, in which the wife joined to relinquish dower, she will not be bound by the covenants thereof: Schaffner v. Grutzmacher, 4-137.

359. The statutory provision (Code, § 1937) that where husband or wife joins in conveyance of property owned by the other, the party so joining shall not be bound by the covenants unless it is expressly so stated, applies where the person purporting to convey the title has no title, as well as where he is in fact the owner but his title is subject to incumbrances in violation of his covenants. In either case the husband or wife so joining is not estopped from relying upon an outstanding title or incumbrance inconsistent with the conveyance in which he or she joins: Thompson v. Merrill, 58-419.

360. The fact that the land conveyed is not owned by the husband does not render the wife liable to any greater extent under the covenants of the deed than if it had been owned by him, in case the title is not in her, and such covenants will not work an estoppel as to her: Ibid.

361. Trustees: A trustee in conveying land which is the subject of the trust cannot be required to enter into any covenant except against his own acts; but if he binds himself by a personal covenant, even if he describes himself as trustee, he is liable to the same extent as if the property were held and conveyed in his own right: Bloom v. Wolfe, 50-286.

362. Guardian: Where the guardian of a minor, by proper leave of court first obtained, executed a conveyance in which she covenanted for herself, her heirs, etc., that she was authorized, etc., held, that she was bound by such covenants personally and thereby estopped from asserting any claim to the property inconsistent with her grant: Foster v. Young, 35-27.

363. An administrator conveying land in pursuance of a judicial sale thereof by order of court cannot bind the estate by covenants in the deed. The rule of caveat emptor applies to such sale: Hale v. Marquette, 69-376.

364. Covenants on part of grantee become binding upon him by acceptance of the deed although he does not sign it: Close v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 64-149.

Nature; charter; organization.

I. NATURE; CHARTER; ORGANIZATION.

a. Kinds of.

1. Public or private; bank: An incorporated bank, the stock of which is owned by individuals, is a private corporation in which the public has no interest, and over which it has no control except to exercise a supervisory power and to annul its charter when the franchise granted is misused or abused: Miners' Bank v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 553.

2. Agricultural society: The main distinction between public and private corporations is that the general assembly has the exclusive and unrestricted control of the former, while it can in no manner interfere with the right of property in the latter. Thus, though the objects of an agricultural society are public, it is essentially a private corporation. The fact that it is not organized for pecuniary profit does not change its character: Thompson v. Lambert, 44-239.

3. The state university is not a corporation. The act creating it did not make it a public corporation, but its property belongs to the state and is simply appropriated for the purpose specified. It is not, therefore, subject to be sued, and a judgment cannot be rendered against it: Weary v. State University, 42-335.

4. Trustees of public institutions: Where by statute provision was made for a normal school under trustees to be appointed by public authority, and it was provided that certain portions of the income of the state university should be applied to the support of such school, held, that such trustees did not constitute a corporation and could not be sued as such: Drake v. Board of Trustees, 11-54.

5. Voluntary associations: It is the exclusive prerogative of government to create a corporation and invest it with power to sue in its own name, and courts cannot recognize an association not authorized by charter to act as a corporation: Pipe v. Bateman, 1-369.

b. Charter; organization, etc.

6. Vested rights: The charter of a private corporation cannot be repealed by the legislature unless such right of repeal is stipulated for in the charter itself: Miners' Bank v. United States ex rel., Mor., 482.

7. Foreign: Corporations operating railways within the state are subject to the jurisdiction of our courts the same as any person resident within the state: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60-846.

8. When two corporations, one organized under the laws of the state of Iowa, and the other under the laws of the state of Missouri, consolidated in the state of Iowa, held, that the corporation thus formed would be regarded as an Iowa corporation: Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S., 444.

9. Acts of incorporation, in a particular case, held sufficient to constitute a corporation authorized to receive, hold and convey land granted for the purpose of the incorporation: Hervey v. Buchanan, 47-588.

10. Failure to publish notice: It seems that acts of a corporation will not be valid as corporate acts unless publication of notice of the organization is made as required by law: Eisfeld v. Kenworthy, 50-889.

That failure to take the requisite steps for organization will render the corporators liable, see infra, §§ 172, 173.

11. Persons dealing with estopped from setting up defects: The execution of a note to a corporation is an admission of its existence: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

12. Under a statute (Code, § 1089) providing that want of legal organization cannot be set up as a defense either by the corporation, or by a person against whom suit is brought by such corporation, on a contract made with it, or for an injury to its property, or a wrong done to its interest, held, that a party contracting with a corporation could not deny its corporate existence, nor defeat recovery thereon, by proof of violation of the laws of the state in the conduct of its business: Howe Machine Co. v. Snow, 82-433; Courtright v. Deeds, 37-508.

13. Also held, that a person sued upon a contract with a corporation could not set up want of legal organization: Washington College v. Duke, 14-14.

14. When a corporation seeks to enforce the bequest in a will, duly admitted to probate, its claim cannot be resisted on the ground that it has not been legally organized. Such objection can be taken only by a Charter; organization, etc.—Corporate name.

proceeding by quo warranto: Quinn v. Shields, 62-129.

15. Corporation estopped: Among acts which would constitute acting as a corporation, such as by statute would prevent the corporation from denying its legal existence, would be the adoption and use of a corporate seal, the taking of subscriptions and the issue of certificates of stock; but the acts of persons as members of a religious society in holding business meetings, and acquiring property, receiving and paying out money, appointing agents to make settlements, etc., held not sufficient to constitute such "acting as a corporation;" also held, that the passage of by-laws is not an assumption of distinctive corporate powers; nor is the attempt to incorporate: Kirkpatrick v. United Presb. Church, 63-372.

16. Where the corporation has assumed to make a contract authorized by its amended articles, and has received the consideration therefor, it cannot escape liability upon the ground that such amended articles had not been recorded: Humphrey v. Patrons', etc., Ass'n, 50-607.

17. The fact that a member of the board of directors has been irregularly elected constitutes no defense in an action against the corporation for indebtedness created: Carrothers v. Newton Mineral Spring Co., 61-681.

18. The estoppel provided for by statute certainly applies only to a body of men acting as a corporation for pecuniary profit. Whether the section can be applied to persons acting as a corporation other than for pecuniary profit, quære: Kirkpatrick v. United Presb. Church, 63-372.

19. Renewal of charter: Whether the provisions of statute as to renewal of charter are applicable to corporations not organized for pecuniary profit, quære: Byers v. McCartney, 62-339.

20. Binding upon stockholders not assenting: A change in the articles of incorporation made in the manner provided for therein, and properly recorded and published, is as binding upon the stockholders who do not as upon those who do consent thereto: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. White, 5-409.

21. Change of business; effect upon subscription to stock: If a corporation procures an alteration to be made in its charter by which a new and different business is superadded to that originally contemplated, such of the stockholders as do not assent to the alteration will be absolved from liability on their subscriptions to the capital stock: Ibid.

22. But where a change in the charter merely related to the time of payment of instalments of subscriptions to stock, held, that by the subscription under the charter the subscriber assented to the change afterward made in pursuance of such provisions: Ibid.

23. A material or radical change in the objects of a corporation will release the subscriber of stock from liability thereon, but immaterial changes which cannot possibly prejudice such subscriber will not affect him: Union Agl., etc., Ass'r v. Neill, 31-95.

24. An amendment to a charter not materially changing the original purposes of the corporation, held not sufficient to excuse stockholder from liability for stock subscribed: Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Preston, 35-115.

25. Amendments to the articles of incorporation of a college in accordance with provisions made therein for amendment, affecting the method in which trustees were to be appointed, but not the general purposes and objects of the corporation, held not sufficient to release the maker of a scholarship note from his liability thereon: Washington College v. Duke, 14-14.

c. Corporate name.

26. A variance from the true style of a corporation will not have the effect to defeat its contract if it appears that the corporation was intended to be bound by and described in the instrument: Athearn v. Independent Dist., 33-105.

27. Where a note was made payable to the order of "The Equitable Life Insurance Company of Iowa at its office," and was dated at the "Office of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, Des Moines, Iowa," held, that although the two names were not identical, yet it was reasonably apparent that they referred to the same corporation: Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Gleason, 56-47.

28. Where the name of the corporation consists of a number of words, the omission, alteration, or transposition of any of the words in the name used, if the words in the name used are synonymous with the true name of the corporation, it is not a misnomer: Martin v. Central Iowa R. Co., 59-411.

Place of doing business.—Stock.

29. The use of the word "railroad" instead of "railway" in naming a corporation in an indictment for embezzling the funds of such corporation, held not to be material: State v. Goode, 68-593.

30. A railroad company cannot, in a legal proceeding, be properly designated by the initial letters of the words constituting its name, even though it may be possible to show that it is popularly known by its initial letters: Accola v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 70—.

31. Change of name: Where a note given in aid of a corporation operating a college provided that upon the payment of a proportion of the note a scholarship in the college should be issued, and afterward the corporate name of the institution was changed, held, that the new corporation succeeding to the rights of the old might sue upon such note, and the maker would be entitled to a scholarship therein according to the same terms: Trustees of Northwestern College v. Schwagler, 37-577.

32. The corporate name is that which is adopted in the articles of incorporation. If the name is changed it must be done by changing the articles, and the best evidence as to the contents of the articles is the articles themselves; therefore, held, that parol evidence of a change of name was not sufficient: Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. v. Keisel, 48-39.

d. Place of doing business.

33. Office outside of state: Even though the articles of incorporation require the office of the company to be kept in the state where it is incorporated, yet if it violates this requirement and keeps its office in another state, presentment there for payment of a note of the company will be sufficient: Merrick v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 11-74.

34. Acts outside of state: The fact that a certificate of stock of a corporation organized under the laws of this state appears to have been issued at a place outside of the state, will not necessarily render it invalid: Courtright v. Deeds, 37-503.

35. While a private corporation whose charter has been granted by one state cannot hold meetings, pass votes, and exercise powers in another state, yet the persons intrusted with the management of its affairs may make a valid contract in a state other than that of its creation, and a conveyance thus made by the agents of the corporation will be valid: Bellows v. Todd, 39-209.

36. Jurisdiction over: A corporation organized under the laws of the United States, and engaged in the operation of a line of railway extending from a point within this state into another state, is a citizen of Iowa in such sense that it is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state: Mooney v. Union Pacific R. Co., 60-346.

37. Foreign: While every state has power to reserve control over its own corporations, the fact that it does so does not prevent the prosecution within the state of all ordinary business by foreign corporations: Dodge v. Council Bluffs, 57-560.

38. Where a statute confers upon a corporation organized for a particular purpose the right to take private property for that purpose, such authority may be exercised by a foreign as well as a domestic corporation unless expressly limited by statute: Ibid.

39. The right of a corporation to do business and acquire property outside of the limits of the state where it is created may exist without any express grant from the legislature of such state: Ibid.

40. Where the articles of incorporation of a foreign corporation authorized it to construct water-works, without expressly limiting such power to any particular state, held, that the court could not by construction so limit such power: Ibid.

II. STOCK.

a. Subscriptions.

41. What sufficient to constitute: A written subscription for stock implies a promise to pay therefor, although no express promise is contained in the subscription: Nulton v. Clayton, 54-425.

42. Therefore, held, that a written instrument purporting to declare that "the number of shares held by each [of the stockholders] are as follows," amounted to a valid subscription: Ibid.

43. A subscription for stock subject to the by-laws, rules and articles of the corporation, renders the subscriber liable in accordance with the provisions of such by-laws, etc., although the subscription does not contain an express promise to pay: Waukon & M. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 49-121.

44. In parol: In the absence of any provisions in the charter of the corporation or the statutes of the state as to the manner in which such subscriptions to stock may be entered into, the corporation may contract by parol for the disposal of its capital stock: Colfax Hotel Co. v. Lyon, 69-683.

45. Repayment not necessary: A subscriber to stock in a corporation becomes a stockholder therein before payment is made unless there is a provision requiring prepayment as a condition of membership: nor is it necessary that the certificate of stock shall first issue: Waukon & M. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 49-121.

46. Sale below par: The officers of a corporation cannot, without express authority, sell the stock of the corporation at a less rate than its par value as fixed by the charter: Oliphant v. Woodburn Coal, etc., Co., 63-332.

47. A creditor who accepts stock issued to him by the officers of the corporation below par in payment of his debt holds the same as unpaid stock to the extent that its par value exceeds his claim: Jackson v. Traer, 64-469.

48. The public has a right to assume, where the stock of a company has all been issued as full-paid stock, that it has been paid for in full, either in money or in property at a fair value; but while the fact that full-paid stock has been issued upon a partial payment of its face might be ground for proceeding in the interest of the public to wind up the company, it is not a ground upon which the stockholder who has received paid-up stock can object to the validity of the contract for the purchase of such stock: Goff v. Hawkeye Pump, etc., Co., 62-691.

49. The officers of the company cannot accept payment of a subscription to stock in property at a price largely in excess of its real value and thereupon issue certificates showing the stock fully paid, thus releasing the stockholder from further liability to the corporation or its creditors: Osgood v. King, 42-478.

Further as to liability of stockholder for unpaid stock, see infra, §§ 177-185.

50. Release of subscriber: A railroad corporation may make, if acting in good faith, a valid and binding contract, releasing a stockholder from liability upon his subscription to the stock of the corporation, either with or without the consent of the creditors and stockholders: Gelpcke v. Blake, 19-263.

51. Stock note; tender of stock: In an action by a corporation upon a note executed in payment for a subscription of shares of stock under an agreement in pursuance of which certificates are to be issued when the note is paid, it must appear that tender of the stock was made before the action was brought: Hedge v. Gibson, 58-656; Cooper v. McKee, 49-286; Courtright v. Deeds, 37-503; Lawrence v. Smith, 50-703.

52. Overissue or mismanagement as a defense: Where it does not appear that an overissue of stock cannot be distinguished from that legally issued, or that the stock when issued to the subscriber will not be legal, or where an overissue of stock has been canceled before the subscriber becomes entitled to stock under his subscription, such facts will not constitute a defense in an action on his subscription, nor will the fact that the affairs of the company are mismanaged be such defense: Merrill v. Reaver, 50-404.

53. But if the stock has been illegally increased and the certificates thus issued are beyond the control of the corporation, and the illegal stock cannot be distinguished from the genuine, and all the stock is thus rendered valueless, these facts will constitute a defense to a note given for stock which has not been delivered: Merrill v. Gamble, 46-615; Merrill v. Beaver, 46-646.

54. Conditional subscription: Where the articles provided that the corporation should commence as soon as $20,000 of stock was subscribed, and it appeared that $3,000 of stock had been subscribed upon condition, and it was not shown that such subscription had become absolute, and without this stock the requisite amount had not been subscribed, held, that an action on other subscriptions could not be maintained: Oskaloosa Agl. Works v. Parkhurst, 54-357.

55. When subscriptions of stock in a railroad company were made under a special agreement that the proceeds should be applied to a specific object, held, that as the application of the proceeds as agreed could be made, the payment of the subscriptions might be enforced, although the whole capital stock fixed by the articles had not been subscribed: Iowa & M. R. Co. v. Perkins, 28-281.

56. False representations: Where the subscription of stock was made upon the representation that a certain sum was to be invested in the business as working capital, held, that the fact that such sum was not invested would not entitle the subscriber to relief against his contract of subscription: Goff v. Hawkeye Pump, etc., Co., 62-691.

57. Estoppel: Where a subscriber executed a note and mortgage for corporate stock, held, that he was estopped from setting up, as a defense to such note, that the charter of the corporation required a cash payment upon each share subscribed: Franklin v. Twogood, 18-515.

b. Transfer.

58. Provisions of by-laws: Shares in the capital stock of the corporation are the property of and under the control of the shareholder. Even though the by-laws of the association require that in order to constitute a valid transfer the same must be entered upon the stock-book, yet this does not limit the absolute right of sale and alienation by the stockholder: Hershire v. First Nat. Bank, 35-272.

59. The written assignment and delivery of the certificates of stock, coupled with authority to transfer the same upon the books of the company, is sufficient to vest in the transferee the right to the stock: Courtright v. Deeds, 37-503.

60. The transfer of stock on the books of a corporation upon surrender of a previous certificate, without the issuance of a stock certificate in conformity therewith, is sufficient to bind the corporation and third persons to such transfer: First Nat. Bank v. Gifford, 47-575.

61. Statute provisions: The provision of statute as to the transfer of shares is intended as a protection to the company, and only applies where the sale or transfer in some way conflicts with the interests of the corporation: Moor v. Walker, 46-164.

62. A provision of the by-laws of a corporation, that no transfer of stock shall be valid unless approved by the board of directors, may be enforced to protect the rights of the corporation, but cannot be used to defeat the rights of others and operate as a restraint upon the disposition of the stock. The transferee may hold the stock and enforce a transfer thereof in proper form in the absence of any right or lien of the company to or upon such stock: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Wasson, 48-336.

63. Lien: In the absence of contract and provisions of the charter and by-laws, a corporation has no implied lien upon the shares of a stockholder indebted to it to secure such indebtedness, and a transfer of stock by such stockholder to secure his individual debt will not be fraudulent as to the corporation in the event that he is indebted to it, and will be valid although not assented to and approved by its directors as required by its by-laws: Ibid.

c. Assessment.

64. Before subscription of entire amount: In the absence of any restriction to the contrary, capital stock subscribed may be assessed before the entire amount of the capital stock is subscribed: Nichols v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 4 G. Gr., 42.

65. But where the articles of incorporation fix the amount of capital stock, and the number of shares into which it shall be divided, a corporation cannot make an assessment upon the shares of a stockholder for the purpose of carrying on the business of the company until all the stock is subscribed, unless a contrary intention appears expressly or by implication, either in the charter or the contract of subscription: Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Preston, 35-115.

66. Necessary before stockholder becomes liable: Where the terms of the stock subscription were that after a certain per cent. had been paid, the balance should be subject to the call of the directors as they might be instructed by the majority of the stockholders represented at any regular meeting, held, that in the event of insolvency and the neglect or refusal of the stockholders to act in the premises, the court could not compel payment by the stockholders of such balance until it was determined what indebtedness existed showing a necessity for assessment, and a call upon the stockholders had been made: Chandler v. Keith, 42-99.

And further as to liability of stockholders, see infra, V.

67. Assessment by court; receiver: A court has no jurisdiction, in an action against a corporation for the appointment of a receiver, to which certain stockholders are not made parties, to make an assessment by an interlocutory order against such stockholders on their stock notes. If the stockholders are too numerous to be made parties to the suit, that fact must be set up and made to appear at the inception of the proceedings: Lamar Ins. Co. v. Hildreth, 55-248.

68. Notice sufficient: An assessment of the stock, where one is necessary, is only required in order to fix the amount to be called for and the time when it may be called. When the amount and time of payment are fixed by the articles, a notice that the payment is required is all that is necessary to render instalments due as therein provided: Waukon & M. R. Co. v. Dwyer, 49-121.

69. Special conditions: Where a subscription to stock is made under special conditions in regard to the assessment, payments must be made upon the performance of such conditions regardless of provisions of the articles as to assessments on general stock: Iowa & M. R. Co. v. Perkins, 28-281.

d. Attachment.

70. How effected: The shares of a stockholder in a corporation can only be attached by following the provisions of statute (Code, § 2967) requiring notice to be served on the president and secretary of the fact that the stock has been attached. Garnishment of the secretary as an individual will not accomplish the purpose even though he understands that an attachment is intended: Moorar v. Walker, 46-164.

VOL. I—24

III. OFFICERS.

a. Election.

71. Facts in a particular case considered in a controversy between conflicting claims of two sets of trustees, each claiming to be the legally elected trustees of a church corporation: Dressen v. Brameier, 56-756.

b. Powers and acts.

72. Action of majority: A majority of the quorum of a board of directors, all being present, have the power to act and to decide any question upon which they can act: Buell v. Buckingham, 16-284.

73. Directors cannot act individually: A corporation whose business is transacted by a board of directors will not be bound by the assent of a majority of the directors to a contract expressed otherwise than at a duly convened meeting. The assent of the several members separately is not enough: Herrington v. District Tp, 47-11.

74. Implied powers; by-laws: The general power conferred on a board of directors of a corporation to conduct its affairs carries with it every implied power and right requisite to carry out the general powers. Therefore, held, that the adoption of a by-law by a mutual insurance company providing as to the terms upon which policies should be issued would not be without color of authority even in the absence of an express power conferred upon the board to make by-laws: Hygum v. Aetna Ins. Co., 11-21.

75. Implied contract: It is not necessary in every case, in order to bind a corporation, to prove that its officers or agents expressly assumed to bind it by contract, but the terms of the undertaking may sometimes be implied in favor of one who has been led to deal with the officers or agents, with the belief that they are representing the corporation in such contract. But in a particular case, held, that the evidence was not sufficient for this purpose: Storm Lake Bank v. Missouri Valley L. Ins. Co., 66-617.

76. Conveyance; presumption as to seal: The signature of an officer of a corporation, executing an instrument, being proved, the seal will be presumed genuine until the presumption is rebutted. The seal itself is prima facie evidence that it was affixed to the instrument legally, and the burden of proving that it was not affixed legally is upon the party objecting to the instrument: Blackshire v. Iowa Homestead Co., 39-624.

77. Where the signature of the officers of a corporation executing the instrument is proved (as by a proper certificate of acknowledgment), the seal will be presumed genuine, and it will be presumed that it was affixed under proper authority. The burden in such case is thrown upon the party objecting to the instrument to overcome this presumption: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53-101.

78. Where it is competent for the board of directors to direct the execution, by an officer or agent, of a conveyance of its real property, and such conveyance is executed under the seal and in the name of the corporation, the presumption is that such direction was given: Morse v. Beale, 68-463.

79. The seal is prima facie evidence that it was affixed by proper authority, and the court will presume that the instrument was executed by proper authority: Goodnow v. Oakley, 68-25.

80. An assignment of judgment in favor of a bank, signed by persons designating themselves as president and secretary, but without other evidence that they were such officers, held, not sufficient to show that the assignment was with proper authority: Klemme v. McLay, 68-158.

81. Ratification: Where the president and secretary were directed, at a meeting of the stockholders, to execute a conveyance and did so, although the power to make conveyances was vested only in the trustees, and it appeared that the stockholders knew of the deed and the manner of its execution and acquiesced therein for years, held, that the corporation could have no relief in equity against such deed, whatever might be its rights in an action at law: Marshall County High School Co. v. Iowa Evangelical Synod, 28-860.

82. Where a corporation accepted money paid on a settlement made by a committee which the officers of the company must have known was received through the settlement, held, that such acceptance would constitute a ratification of the settlement: Merchants' Union Barbed Wire Co. v. Rice, 70—.

83. Where the reports of the treasurer of a loan association showed money borrowed ostensibly for the use of the association, held, that the association was liable therefor, although the treasurer was in default when the money was borrowed and used the sum borrowed in place of money of the association which should have been in his hands: Leonard v. Burlington Mut. Loan Ass'n, 55-594.

84. Fraud, how alleged: The allegation of fraud and misrepresentation by a corporation is sufficient without alleging that the officers or agents through whom the corporation acted and who made the representations did not exceed their authority: Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co., 5-357.

85. Power to mortgage: Restriction in the articles of incorporation upon the power of trustees to sell certain property of the corporation, held not to be an inhibition upon their power to mortgage the same: Krider v. Trustees of Western College, 81-547.

86. Authority of president: Stipulations of a railway company, entered into by the president with the consent of a majority of the directors, and circulated at the polls on the day of election, for voting upon a tax in aid of such railway, held binding upon the company in the absence of any showing that the president had no authority to make them: Meeker v. Ashley, 56-188.

87. A limitation of indebtedness in the articles of incorporation is binding upon the officers of the company and they cannot render it liable beyond such limit. So held in case of a religious corporation: Wyncoop v. Congregational Society, 10-185.

88. Sale of stock: Officers of a corporation cannot, in the absence of express authority, sell stock for less than its par value: Oliphant v. Woodburn Coal, etc., Co., 63-332; Jackson v. Traer, 64-469.

89. Nor accept payment of a stock subscription in property at a price largely in excess of its value: Osgood v. King, 42-478.

90. But they may release a stock subscriber from his subscription: Gelpcke v. Blake, 19-263.

91. Power to alienate land: It is doubtful whether the general superintendent of a railway company can be presumed to have the power to alienate or charge its lands: Kipp v. Coenen, 55-63.

Officers.— Powers and acts.

92. Parol evidence to show authority: In such case an assertion by the president of the company that the superintendent had such power would not tend to prove it: Ibid.

93. The character of the employment and the nature of the duties of an agent of a corporation may be shown by parol: Leekins v. Nordyke & Marmon Co., 66-471.

94. Service upon officers and agents: The general rule is that notice to the corporation must be served upon some officer or agent who has charge of some duty to which the notice pertains: Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 56-720.

And in general as to the method of serving notice upon corporations, see ORIGINAL NOTICE.*

95. Liability of corporation for mismanagement of officers: A stockholder has no right of action against a corporation for depreciation of stock due to the mismanagement of the officers of the corporation: Oliphant v. Woodburn Coal, etc., Co., 63-332.

96. Liability for money borrowed by officer: Where the fact that an agent of the company had borrowed money and applied it to the payment of corporate indebtedness was known to the managing director, held, that the company was liable therefor: Liebfritz v. Dubuque Street R. Co., 48-709.

97. Fraudulent misrepresentations by officer: Where it was sought to hold a corporation liable as a stockholder in another corporation by reason of fraudulent representations of the officers of the company sought to be held liable, held, that such officers had no authority to make fraudulent representations regarding the other company, and could not, therefore, bind their company or render it liable thereby: Langan v. Iowa & M. Const. Co., 49-317.

98. Ratification: Under particular facts, held, that two members of an executive committee of a county agricultural society had no authority to purchase real property and bind the society by a note to pay for the same, and that subsequent improvement of the property under the direction of the same officers would not constitute a ratification binding upon the society: Tracy v. Guthrie County Agl. Society, 47-27.

99. Notice to officers: A corporation is not chargeable with notice of transactions between its officers acting as private individuals in a private transaction. So held as to an agreement between the president and cashier of a bank as principal and surety on an individual note to the bank: First Nat. Bank v. Gifford, 47-575.

100. Execution of note: A promissory note, signed by the president and secretary of a corporation, in the absence of any showing that by any by-law, resolution, act or custom of doing business authority was conferred upon them to execute notes or transact other business of the corporation, held not binding on such corporation: Catiron v. First Universalist Society, 46-106.

101. Conveyance to trustees: A conveyance to certain persons, "and others, trustees of the," etc., corporation, held, to vest title in the corporation and not in the trustees as individuals: Hervey v. Buchanan, 47-588.

102. Contract of officers for private advantage not binding: A contract made by officers of a corporation, for the purpose of taking advantage of their position as such officers for personal aggrandizement, will be void as against the company if made secretly and without its knowledge, and the officers will not be allowed to derive any advantage therefrom: Blair Town Lot, etc., Co. v. Walker, 50-376.

103. Purchase by officers: A director of a corporation is not necessarily precluded from being the purchaser at a foreclosure sale of the property of the company to pay a debt from the company to such director, but the right to thus purchase should be exercised subject to the rules imposed by the peculiar position of the director. In a particular case, held, that as the director was bound to make a reasonable effort to prevent the property of the corporation from being sacrificed at such sale, and as the amount paid at the sale was grossly inadequate, it should be set aside, there being also some evidence of collusion for the purpose of defrauding the corporation of its property: Hallam v. Indianola Hotel Co., 56-178.

104. Good faith of officer: While an officer is under obligation to exercise the utmost good faith in the discharge of his duties, he is not required to sacrifice his own rights under contract, and he may accept payment or transfer of stock in payment of his own claim against a debtor although a debt of the same debtor to the company remains unpaid: Farmers', etc., Bank v. Wasson, 48-838.

105. The fact that directors of the company contract indebtedness beyond the limit prescribed by the articles of corporation, and cause a mortgage to be executed to secure an amount due to themselves individually, will not defeat their security or give their creditors a right to share in the proceeds of the property mortgaged, it not appearing that there is any negligence or misconduct on the part of the directors: Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co., 70—.

106. A director may become a creditor of the corporation and advance it money, or sell it property, and obligations of the corporation executed therefor may be enforced by him, and if the debt he holds was contracted in good faith, and there was no fraud on his part, he may take security or payment, though the corporation be insolvent, and he may thereby acquire priority in the payment of his claim; but courts will scan such transactions with care and even with suspicion, and require that they be accompanied by the utmost good faith: Ibid.

107. Where the directors indorse the obligations of a corporation to a creditor, no bad faith or fraud on part of the creditor or the directors appearing, the creditor is not required to proceed first against the directors, although the corporation was insolvent at the time such obligations were issued: Ibid.

c. Liabilities.

108. Diversion of funds: To render officers liable under the statute (Code, § 1072) for diversion of funds or paying dividends so as to leave insufficient funds to meet liabilities, it must appear that the entire property of the corporation is not sufficient to pay its indebtedness. A dividend may lawfully be declared although the corporation does not have cash on hand sufficient to pay all its liabilities: Miller v. Bradish, 69-278.

109. The word "liability" as used in this section means existing indebtedness the payment of which can be enforced, and does not include the corporate liability for payment of capital stock, such liability being remote and contingent. The amount of the capital stock is therefore not to be included in determining whether the liabilities of the corporation exceed its funds so as to render the declaration of a dividend illegal: Ibid.

110. If the corporation has sufficient assets to pay all its debts at the time a dividend is paid, then the payment of such dividend cannot be held illegal, nor a diversion of the funds to objects other than those authorized: Ibid.

111. Fraud: Where it is sought to recover from individual officers of a corporation the amount of a judgment against the corporation, under a claim that such officers have rendered themselves liable by fraud, proof of absence of intentional fraud and diversion of assets to their own use will relieve defendants from liability. The statutory provision (Code, § 1071) that intentional fraud in failing to comply substantially with the articles of incorporation, or in deceiving the public, etc., shall subject those guilty thereof to fine and imprisonment, and that any person who has sustained injury from such fraud may also recover damages against those guilty of participating therein, only applies to officers or others guilty of intentional fraud: Hoffman v. Dickey, 54-135.

112. Failure to comply with articles: Under the same statutory provision, held, that in an action for damages thereunder the particular respect in which there was a failure to comply with the articles, etc., resulting in damage to plaintiff, or the particular act of deception, etc., must be specified: White v. Hosford, 37-586.

113. The rule that when there is no principal who can be made legally responsible, the agent who attempts to act for and bind the principal will himself be personally chargeable, applied to the case of officers of a bank illegally organized: Allen v. Pegram, 16-163.

d. Compensation.

114. When an officer of a corporation performs the usual and ordinary duties of his office as defined by the charter and by-laws, he cannot recover compensation for such service unless it has been so specially agreed. He cannot, in such case, recover what his services are reasonably worth, nor will any arrangement as to salaries made prior to the incorporation be binding against the corporation: Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 55-104.

IV. CORPORATE ACTS.

a. Powers.

115. Construction of charter: In conflicts between the sovereign power and grantees enjoying exclusive privileges conferred upon them by acts of incorporation, the charter is to be construed strictly as against the persons upon whom such privileges are conferred: Miners' Bank v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 553.

116. Contracts not under seal; written or oral; ratification: Corporations of all kinds may be bound by contracts not under seal. They may make a binding contract in writing not under seal, and may also be held liable under verbal contracts. So, also, they may ratify and adopt as their own a contract made by an officer out of the usual scope of his duties: Merrick v. Burlington, etc., Plank Road Co., 11-74.

117. Record of action: The recital as to the making of a contract, not entered on the record at the time it was originally written, by the secretary, but at a subsequent meeting directed to be entered on the record, will not be receivable as against the other party to such contract: Colfax Hotel Co. v. Lyon, 69-683.

118. Implied contracts: Where a party with the knowledge and consent of the directors of a corporation borrowed money on his individual note for the use of the corporation, which money was used by it in paying its debts, held, that the corporation was bound to repay to such party the money so borrowed by him: Humphrey v. Patrons' etc., Ass'n, 50-607.

119. Powers: A corporation is presumed to be clothed with the usual powers necessary and proper to enable it as such to carry out the purposes of its existence: Home Ins. Co. v. North Western Packet Co., 32-228.

120. Assignment of claim to insurance company: Therefore, held, that an insurance company had authority to acquire, by assignment, the claims of a shipper of goods insured by it against the common carrier in whose hands they were destroyed: Ibid.

121. Ratification: Corporations may ratify contracts made without their authority and thus become bound thereby like natural persons. Thus an acceptance of payment for services rendered under a contract and in accordance with its terms may amount to a ratification of such contract: Athearn v. Independent Dist., 83-103.

122. Proper objects: For the purpose of effecting the objects of a corporation its powers are as broad and comprehensive as those of an individual, unless the exercise of the asserted power is expressly prohibited: Thompson v. Lambert, 44-289.

123. Borrowing money; misappropriation by officers: Where an agricultural society was organized for the proper objects of such a corporation, the power to borrow money and execute notes and mortgages not being expressly assumed or prohibited, held, that it had by implication authority to exercise such powers as to indebtedness created for the necessary and proper purposes of carrying out the objects of the corporation: Ibid.

124. Suretyship: The simple act of going surety for another is out of the line of the prosecution of any business: Lucas v. White Line Transfer Co., 70—.

125. Mortgages: For a proper purpose it has power to borrow money by executing notes and mortgages: Thompson v. Lambert, 44-289.

126. The power to mortgage the property of the corporation is incident to the ordinary powers of such corporation: Dunham v. Isett, 15-284.

127. Negotiable bonds: And where the power to borrow money may necessarily be implied, it may be exercised by issuance of negotiable bonds: Des Moines Gas Co. v. West, 50-16.

128. Purchase of its own stock: Under a charter by which a corporation had authority to purchase, etc., "any real estate or other property," etc., held, that it was not beyond its power to purchase its own stock: Iowa Lumber Co. v. Foster, 49-25.

129. Endowment fund: Where the articles of incorporation of a college did not expressly give it power to raise and control funds by taking endowment notes, held, by a divided court, that it had the power to accept and enforce payment of such notes: Simpson Centenary College v. Bryan, 50-293.

130. Exemption of property of members from liability for debts: The corporation may exempt the private property of its members from liability for corporate debts: Spense v. Iowa Valley Const. Co., 36-407; Larson v. Dayton, 52-597.

131. The only case in which the private property of members becomes liable for corporate debts is that specified in the statute relating to failure to take proper steps in organizing. (Code, § 1063): First Nat. Bank v. Davies, 43-424, 436.

132. The power to sue and be sued: A corporation must sue and be sued in corporate name: Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. v. Keisel, 43-39.

Further, see PLEADINGS, §§ 130-145.

133. Ultra vires; acceptance of paper upon condition: Where a corporation became the successor to an individual in the manufacture and sale of buggies, held, that it had authority to accept from the individual whom it succeeded an order accepted by him upon particular terms: Cook Mfg. Co. v. Randall, 62-244.

134. Acceptance of note in payment: Held, that a corporation organized for the manufacture and sale of musical instruments, and not having the power to engage in the business of loaning money, might still take from its agent, in payment of an indebtedness due from him, the note of a third party belonging to him: Western Organ Co. v. Reddish, 51-55.

135. Power to hold real property: The power of a railway corporation to whom public lands are granted to hold such lands is a question between the corporation and the government, and cannot be raised as against the corporation by a third party in an action by the company for possession of the lands so granted: Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53-101.

136. Power to sell and convey real property: The grant, by the law under which a corporation is organized, of the power to make contracts gives it the power to make a sale of its real property and convey the same: Buell v. Buckingham, 16-284.

137. A limitation upon the power to sell operates also as a limitation on the power to convey: Middleton Savings Bank v. Dubuque, 15-394.

138. Power over property held in trust: Where property is conveyed to a voluntary corporation in trust with limitations, neither a majority nor minority can rightfully divert the property from the use and trust. A court of equity in enforcing such trust will look to the trust intended, and disregard all questions as to majorities or as to religious creeds or beliefs except so far as is necessary to ascertain the trust intended and apply the property accordingly: McBride v. Porter, 17-208.

139. Power of majority: Property held by a voluntary association or corporation absolutely and without any limitation may be disposed of by a majority, or managed as they please, admitting the minority to the same benefits as themselves: Ibid.

140. Power to take by will: The provisions of the Code (§ 1091) limiting the power of associations or corporations not for pecuniary profit to take by will more than one-fourth of the estate of a person leaving a wife, child or parent surviving, are applicable to voluntary associations of that kind whether incorporated or not: Byers v. McCartney, 62-339.

141. Religious association; expulsion of member; review of action: Where a corporation is organized for the purpose of holding and disposing of the property of a religious society, and its officers are elected by the members of the church, the courts will not interfere by mandamus to restore to membership in the corporation a person expelled from the church organization for an alleged offense where there are no property rights involved: Sale v. First Regular Baptist Church, 62-26.

142. The civil courts will not revise the decisions of churches or religious associations upon ecclesiastical matters, but will interfere with the action of such associations when rights of property or civil rights are involved: Bird v. St. Mark's Church, 62-567.

b. Acts ultra vires.

143. Defense: The rule of ultra vires as to a contract to borrow money prevails in full force only where the contract remains wholly executory, and this is true even as to public and municipal corporations: Thompson v. Lambert, 44-239.

Acts ultra vires.

144. Every person dealing with a corporation is charged with knowledge of its power as set out in its recorded articles of incorporation. Where a third party makes with the officers of the corporation an illegal contract, beyond its powers, as shown by its charter, such third party cannot recover because he acts with knowledge that the officers have exceeded their power, and between him and the corporation or its stockholders no amount of ratification by those authorized to make the contract will be valid: Lucas v. White Line Transfer Co., 70—.

145. Where the officers of a corporation make a contract with third parties in regard to matters apparently within their powers, but which upon proof of extrinsic facts (of which such party had no notice) lie beyond their powers, the corporation must be held unless it may avoid liability by taking timely steps to prevent loss or damage to such third parties: Ibid.

146. Where an officer of a corporation signed the corporate name to a bond as surety, held, that the fact that other persons, having knowledge of the want of power of the corporate officer to enter into such a contract, also signed their names as sureties, would not enable such persons to enforce liability on such bond as against the corporation: Ibid.

147. Retaining benefits: A corporation cannot retain benefits derived from an ultra vires contract and at the same time treat the contract as entirely void, unless, perhaps, in cases where the other party has assisted wilfully in putting it beyond the power of the corporation to return what is received on such contract: Ibid.

148. Acts of officers: Where the corporation has permitted its officers to engage in ultra vires transactions, and, in prosecution of such transactions, the officers commit a wrong or tortious act without the fault of the injured party, the corporation is estopped from taking advantage of the ultra vires character of the original undertaking: Ibid.

149. Stockholder cannot plead; estoppel: Where certain stock in a corporation was transferred as collateral security, and subsequently bonds of the corporation, largely in excess of the indebtedness authorized by its charter, were fraudulently issued and sold, held, that the party holding the stock as collateral security, having failed to exercise any control over the affairs of the corporation to secure honest and competent management, was, by such omission, chargeable with negligence, and in equity would not be protected against the holders of the fraudulent bonds. Also, held, that the same would be true of a stockholder acquiring his stock with a knowledge or presumed knowledge of these fraudulent transactions: Des Moines Gas Co. v. West, 50-16.

150. Negligence in making objection: The stockholder who seeks to prevent the consummation of an illegal corporate act, or to avoid it, should be swift to make known his desires and assert his rights through the tribunals appointed for that purpose; therefore, held, that a stockholder who knew of a proposition to borrow money for a particular purpose, and failed to object when he might have done so before the lender had parted with the fund, could not afterward resist enforcement of the debt: and that this would be true to a greater extent if the funds were used in such way as to result presumably to the benefit of the stockholder: Thompson v. Lambert, 44-239.

151. Corporation estopped from setting up limit of indebtedness: Where a corporation is authorized to contract indebtedness, it will be estopped from setting up the limit of indebtedness fixed by its articles where the consideration of such indebtedness has been received: Humphrey v. Patrons, etc., Ass'n, 50-607.

152. Indebtedness for borrowed money: Similarly the corporation will be estopped from setting up the want of authority as a defense as against money advanced to pay indebtedness in excess of such limit: Ibid.

153. Who may set up defense of ultra vires: Whether the defense of ultra vires can be set up by one not a party to the illegal transaction, as for instance by the maker of a note transferred by the payee to the plaintiff corporation which it is claimed the corporation as such had no power to take and hold, quære: Western Organ Co. v. Reddish, 51-55.

Corporate liabilities.—Liability of stockholders.

c. Liabilities; levy upon corporate property.

154. The capital stock of a corporation is in one sense a liability, but it is not an indebtedness. The corporate liability for the payment of the capital stock is remote and contingent: Miller v. Bradish, 69-278.

155. Bonds in hands of bailee: Where bonds of a corporation have been negotiated, and repurchased by it in payment of a debt due, but before their actual return and while in the hands of a bailee, they are subject to levy under execution: Hetherington v. Hayden, 11-835.

156. Garnishment of trust fund: Where certain bonds were deposited with the garnishee, as trustee, to be distributed to the stockholders of the corporation defendant under a certain contract, held, that the trustee was subject to garnishment for such bonds in his hands, under a judgment against the corporation: Warren v. Booth, 51-215; S. C., 53-742.

V. LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

157. Not liable in general: If the individual property of the stockholder is exempted from liability for corporate debts, he cannot be held liable for such debts even where there is no capital stock in existence from which they may be paid: Spense v. Iowa Valley Const. Co., 36-407.

158. The fact that a stockholder requests a party to become surety for the corporation will not render such stockholder individually liable: Larson v. Dayton, 52-597.

159. Exemption from liability must appear: Where a statute exempted from liability for corporate debts, stockholders in corporations organized under the general incorporation laws, held, that in order that the stockholders of the corporation should be exempt from liability it must appear that the corporation was organized under such general statute: Kaiser v. Lawrence Savings Bank, 56-104.

160. Where a corporation is stockholder in another corporation, the stockholders of the former are not thereby individually stockholders in the latter, and cannot be held liable as such: Langan v. Iowa & M. Const. Co., 49-817.

161. Under a statute (Code, § 1068) rendering stockholders liable for the debts of the corporation in case of failure to comply with statutory provisions as to organization and publicity, held, that a failure to file the articles did not alone render the stockholders individually liable: First Nat. Bank v. Davies, 43-424; Eisfeld v. Kenworth, 50-389; Stokes v. Findlay, 4 McCrary, 205.

162. In the clause of such statute "in relation to organization and publicity," the word "and" should be construed as "or." A failure in either respect will render the stockholders individually liable: Eisfeld v. Kenworth, 50-389.

163. So held in case of a failure to publish any notice whatever: Ibid.; Marshall v. Harris, 55-182.

164. Where the articles of incorporation did not state the principal place of business, or the time of commencement of business, held, that the publication of such articles was not sufficient notice, and that there was such failure to comply with the requirements as to notice as to render the stockholders individually liable: Clegg v. Grange Co., 61-121.

165. Failure to comply with the statutory requirements as to posting a copy of the by-laws and a statement of the amount of capital stock subscribed, etc., will not render the stockholders liable: Langan v. Iowa & M. Const. Co., 49-817; McKellar v. Stout, 14-359.

166. A failure to properly keep the books, as required by statute, does not render the stockholders individually liable. If the books are fraudulently kept, those guilty of participation in the fraud may be held liable: Langan v. Iowa & M. Const. Co., 49-817.

167. Nor does the incurring of liabilities greater than allowed by statute render the stockholders individually liable: Ibid.

168. Stockholders in railway companies: Under the statutory provisions above referred to, stockholders in railway companies are, by express provision, not liable beyond the amount of stock held by them in such companies: First Nat. Bank v. Davies, 43-424.

169. A construction company having power under its articles to construct and operate a railway is a railway corporation within the meaning of the statute: Ibid.; Langan v. Iowa & M. Const. Co., 49-817.

 Liability of stockholders.

170. Fraud: To render stockholders liable under Code, § 1071, for fraud in deceiving the public as to the means or liabilities of the corporation, there must be something done with the fraudulent intention of deceiving. The intention to deceive is not sufficient. There must be some act fraudulently done: Miller v. Bradish, 69-278.

171. Fraud in such cases is not to be presumed. The fact that a person is a stockholder in an insolvent corporation does not, of itself, render him liable: Spense v. Iowa Valley Const. Co., 38-407.

172. Failure to incorporate: While there may be irregularities or omissions to comply with provisions merely directory, which would be sufficient to sustain an action brought to declare a forfeiture, but are insufficient to sustain an action to enforce individual liability of a stockholder, yet if the attempt to incorporate is under a general law, and there is a material non-compliance therewith, then there is such want of incorporation that exemption from individual liability is not secured: Kaiser v. Lawrence Savings Bank, 56-104.

173. In case of suit against individuals claiming exemption from liability on the ground of their having become a corporation under a general statute, a stricter measure of compliance with the statutory requirements must be shown than in case the plea of nul tiel corporation is set up in a suit between the corporation and the stockholder or other individual, on liability contracted: Ibid.

174. Banking corporations: The constitutional provisions (art. 8, § 9) rendering stockholders in banking corporations or institutions individually liable to an amount equal to their respective shares, applies only to banks of issue, and not to banks merely of discount and deposit: Allen v. Clayton, 63-11.

175. Under such constitutional provisions the liability of a stockholder in a bank is not limited in an action against him by a creditor to the proportional sum that can be collected from another stockholder, nor is it affected by the fact of fraudulent acts of the receiver or officers of the bank, nor can such stockholder delay the collection of the amount for which he is liable in order to secure contribution from other stockholders also liable: Stewart v. Lay, 45-604

176. Apportionment: In an action by a creditor of the corporation against a stockholder to compel payment of the balance due on stock, held, that under an allegation that the plaintiff was enforcing his claim unequally against different stockholders, and accepting settlements with others without crediting the payment thereof upon his claim, a receiver should be appointed and the prosecution of plaintiff's action be enjoined until the amounts due from all the stockholders could be ascertained and reported so that a pro rata apportionment might be made: Habitzel v. Latham, 35-550.

177. Stock issued at less than par: The officers of the corporation cannot issue to a creditor stock of the corporation to be accepted by him at less than its par value in payment of his claim, with the agreement that it is to be paid-up stock, and the creditor thus accepting stock becomes liable as the holder of unpaid stock to the extent that the par value exceeds the debt for which it is taken: Jackson v. Traer, 64-460.

178. A creditor thus accepting stock becomes a stockholder although he has not subscribed for stock. A subscription for stock is only necessary to render a person a stockholder where the stock is not delivered: Ibid.

179. The fact that the stock was, at the time of its issuance and acceptance, worthless, would not relieve a stockholder, accepting it, from liability: Ibid.

180. Unpaid instalments: Where all the capital stock of a corporation outstanding was such as had been issued to stockholders who had conveyed to the corporation the patent-right for an article which the corporation was authorized to manufacture, and such patent-right had become worthless, held, that such stockholders could not claim that their stock was paid up, and were liable for the amount of their stock: Chisholm v. Forny, 65-333.

181. Officers of a corporation cannot, by agreement with a stockholder, release him, to the prejudice of creditors, from his obligation to pay his subscription unless the transaction is characterized by the utmost fairness. Therefore, held, that conveyances of real estate made to a corporation by directors and other stockholders in full payment of their stock, at a price largely in excess of its real value, did not release such stockholders from liability for the excess of their subscriptions over the real value of the property conveyed, even to creditors becoming such after the conveyance: Osgood v. King, 42-478.

182. Where the president of a corporation gave a mortgage to the corporation in payment of shares of stock to the amount of such mortgage, and the same was included in the statement of the company's assets, held, that he could not afterwards surrender such stock and receive back the mortgage after insolvency of the company: Burnham v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 36-632.

183. Although the mortgage in such case provided that it was payable in the capital stock certificates of the company, yet, held, that as those doing business with the company had not an opportunity to know the terms of the mortgage, it could not be discharged as to the creditors of the company by surrender of the identical shares of stock which had been issued therefor: Ibid.

184. Subscription payable in property: The fact that a subscription for stock was to be paid in property instead of money does not relieve the subscriber from liability, if the property was not turned over as agreed. The company cannot, by any arrangement or action upon its part, release the subscriber from his liability: Singer v. Given, 61-93.

185. Set-off: The subscriber cannot, as between himself and the creditor, set up claims for services, or for use of property, for which the corporation is indebted to him: Ibid.

186. Judgment against stockholder: An execution against the company can only be levied on the private property of a stockholder after a judgment has been obtained against him as provided by statute. (Code, § 1084): Bayliss v. Swift, 40-648; and see Hampson v. Weare, 4-13; Bailey v. Dubuque Western R. Co., 13-97.

187. That section contemplates the rendition of a judgment against the stockholder, and not merely the awarding of an execution against him: Singer v. Given, 61-93.

188. The action against the stockholder, contemplated by statute, is an ordinary action, followed by an ordinary judgment; after which an execution against the corporation may, to the extent of such judgment, be levied upon the private property of the stockholder: Bayliss v. Swift, 40-648.

189. A prior statute upon the same subject considered: Donworth v. Coolbaugh, 5-300.

190. Valid claim against corporation: To charge a stockholder, it must appear that there was a valid claim against the corporation: Corse v. Sanford, 14-235.

191. In a proceeding against the stockholder to charge him with payment of a judgment for a corporate debt, the judgment against the corporation is not open for re-examination: Donworth v. Coolbaugh, 5-300.

192. Demand upon officers; evidence: Under a statute (Code, § 1083) providing that property of a stockholder cannot be levied upon while corporate property can be found, but that issuance of execution and demand upon some one of the last acting officers for property on which to levy, without any property being pointed out, shall be sufficient proof that no property can be found, held, that the fact of demand and refusal may be shown by the official return upon the execution, and such return, as between the corporation and the creditor, must be regarded as conclusive. Evidence may be introduced to show that no such return was made, but it is not competent to dispute it by showing that no demand was made as therein stated: Singer v. Given, 61-93.

193. Stockholder primarily liable: Where there is a failure to comply with the requirements of the statute with reference to organization and publicity, such as to render the stockholder individually liable, he becomes primarily liable, and may be sued in the first instance. His relation to the creditor is not different from what it would have been if no attempt had been made at incorporation: Marshall v. Harris, 55-182.

194. Statute of limitations: Whether the stockholder can be made liable until judgment has been rendered against the corporation or not, the statute of limitations as affecting the action against such stockholder cannot be enlarged on account of any failure or delay in obtaining judgment against the corporation: First Nat. Bank v. Greene, 64-445.

195. Assignee of stock; collateral security: Under the national banking act making stockholders liable, in case of failure of the bank, in an amount equal to the amount of stock held by them, a holder of stock at the time of the dissolution of the bank becomes liable for the indebtedness thus arising upon such stock, although he holds the shares as collateral security, or as a trustee: Hale v. Walker, 31-344.

Renewal; dissolution; forfeiture.

As to assessments on stock not fully paid up, see supra, §§ 64-69.

VI. RENEWAL; DISSOLUTION; FORFEITURE.

196. Resignation of officers: A corporation has an existence per se, so as to maintain succession and hold and preserve its franchises, though its functions may for the time being be suspended for the want of means of action, as for instance by the resignation of all its officers: Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18-469.

197. Winding up affairs: The voluntary dissolution of a corporation does not take away its power to act for the purpose of winding up its affairs, nor affect the right of a creditor, in equity at least, to be released from the inequitable consequences of such dissolution: Ibid.

198. A corporation will be kept alive by statute for the purpose of discharging its contracts and disposing of its property: Muscatine Western R. Co. v. Horton, 38-33.

199. Sale of franchise; dissolution: The sale by a corporation of its franchise, even though it may amount to a voluntary dissolution, will not terminate the corporation so far as its continued existence is necessary for the purpose of winding up its affairs: Ibid.

200. A corporation cannot in its corporate name institute proceedings asserting its non-existence at a prior time, and ask release from a decree rendered against it when it does not appear to have ever been revived: Muscatine Turn Verein v. Funck, 18-469.

201. Abandonment of charter: Where a party bought in the property of an agricultural society at a sale, and thereupon all the members but one transferred their membership to him, and considered the organization abandoned, held, that the remaining member could not bring suit in the name of the corporation to set aside the conveyance: Union Agl. Society v. Gamble, 52-524.

202. Repeal of charter: Where the power is reserved to the legislature in the charter to annul or vacate the same in the case of abuse of, or misconduct as to, its privileges by the corporation, the courts cannot inquire into the grounds upon which a repeal has been made by the legislature: Miners' Bank v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 553.

203. Forfeiture: Where a state has recognized the validity of a corporation by entering into contracts with it and executing conveyances to it, no mere irregularity in the mode of doing corporate business can deprive the corporation of the right to hold the property or of the power to alienate it. Irregularities in the mode of transacting such business cannot be shown for the purpose of defeating title acquired through such corporation: Bellows v. Todd, 89-209.

204. Suit to declare forfeiture: If, as a legal and necessary consequence of certain acts, a foreign corporation has ceased to have a corporate existence, and plaintiff claims that he is thereby injured, or that certain benefits have accrued to him, he may, by averring these facts, have his remedy, and need not in the first instance institute proceedings for the purpose of having it declared that the corporate existence has ceased: Carey v. Cincinnati & C. R. Co., 5-357.

205. But if the corporation has suffered no act which per se works a forfeiture or dissolution, and an inquiry as to whether there has been such irregularity in its proceedings becomes necessary, the question cannot be inquired into by courts in this state, either in a direct or collateral proceeding. The judgment must be obtained in the state granting the corporate powers: Ibid.

206. Dissolution; jurisdiction in equity: Courts of equity, aside from statutory authority, do not exercise jurisdiction over a corporation as over a partnership to dissolve it or distribute its assets, but will afford a stockholder relief from the malfeasance of those intrusted with the management of the corporate business: Walsh v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 30-133.

207. Renewal: Whether the provisions of Code, § 1069, as to renewal of corporations, is applicable to corporations not for pecuniary profit, quære: Byers v. McCartney, 62-339.

Security for.—Taxation of.

COSTS.

I. SECURITY FOR.

II. TAXATION OF.

As to taxation of attorneys' fees as costs, see ATTORNEYS, IV.

I. SECURITY FOR.

1. Statutory provisions as to security¹ apply to domestic as well as to foreign corporations: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38-446.

2. These provisions are not applicable to proceedings in justices' courts: Smith v. Humphrey, 15-428.

3. Whether, in an action on appeal from a justice's court, security for costs can be required, quære; but the motion therefor should at least be made at the earliest practicable moment: Adae v. Zangs, 41-536, 540.

4. These provisions for requiring a cost bond have relation to the ordinary forms of action and are not applicable to a proceeding for the trial of exceptions to a claim or demand filed against the estate of an insolvent: Meyer v. Evans, 66-179.

5. When application to be made: This section does not mean that a party may have his own time to file the motion. When the time arrives for an answer, demurrer, or motion, he may properly be required to do something, and if he chooses to make the motion, he must make it instant, or within such time as is given him by the court. If he fails, without sufficient excuse, he may properly be held to have waived his right to file the motion, and may be required to answer or demur: Sprague v. Haight, 54-446.

6. Where defendant did not file his motion for security for costs by noon of the second day of the term, nor by the further time fixed by the court therefor, but filed such motion after the time fixed by the court for answering, held, that the right to insist on such motion was waived and the motion properly overruled: Ibid.

7. The express provision of the Code that the defendant shall make and file an affidavit before answering, applies to the cases contemplated in reference to a subsequent removal of plaintiff from the state: Gilbert v. Hoffman, 66-205.

8. Affidavit of defense: The affidavit that the party has a good defense need not state the facts constituting such defense. The affidavits and counter-affidavits provided for in the latter part of the section are as to facts on which the motion is based, for instance, the residence or non-residence of plaintiff: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38-446.

9. Attorney as surety: The statutory provision (Code, § 2981) that no attorney or other officer of the court shall be received as security in any proceeding in court does not render a bond upon which an attorney has been accepted as surety void as to him, and he cannot escape liability under such provision. It simply authorizes the officer to refuse to accept such surety: Wright v. Schmidt, 47-238.

10. This provision applies not only to bonds for costs, but to injunction, attachment and other bonds: Massie v. Mann, 17-181.

11. An appeal will lie from an order dismissing the action for want of a bond when required, but not from an order requiring a bond: Des Moines Valley, etc., Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38-446.

II. TAXATION OF.

12. What taxable: Under the statutory provision (Code, § 2942) authorizing the clerk to tax in favor of the party recovering costs various items specified, and "any further sum, for any other matter which the court may have awarded as costs in the progress of the cause, or may deem just to be taxed," the court may tax in addition to compensation for services specially mentioned in the statute, a further sum for other matters when deemed just. Thus, held, that the cost of writing down the testimony by a person appointed by the court for that purpose, on agreement of the parties, might be taxed as costs: Kuhnlee v. Independent Dist., 86-99.

¹ Code, § 2927. If a defendant shall, at any time before answering, make and file an affidavit stating that he has a good defense in whole or in part, the plaintiff, if he be a non-resident of this state, or a private or foreign corporation, before any other proceeding in the cause, shall file in the clerk's office a bond with a sufficient security to be approved by the clerk for the payment of all costs which may accrue in the action in the court in which it is brought or in any other to which it may be carried, either to the defendant or to the officers of the court. The application for such security shall be by motion, filed with the case, and the facts supporting it must be shown by affidavits annexed thereto, which may be responded to by counter-affidavits on or before the hearing of the motion, and each party shall file all his affidavits at once, and none thereafter.

Taxation of.

13. But the section affords no warrant for taxing up as costs any fee for officers, except it is allowed by law: Sprout v. Kelly, 37-44.

14. Jury fees: Although a trial occupy but part of a day, if there is no other jury trial on the same day, a full day's jury fee should be charged up. What should be the rule when there is more than one jury trial on the same day, quære: State v. Verwayne, 44-621.

15. In action by minor: In an action for an infant by his next friend, such "next friend" is liable for costs: Vance v. Fall, 48-364.

16. In an action by a minor in his own name, a valid judgment for costs may be rendered against him: Albee v. Winterink, 55-184.

17. In action against administrator: Where, in an action by the widow against the administrator of her deceased husband's estate, the administrator did not defend, but counsel appearing for the heirs defended in his name and plaintiff secured judgment, held, that the costs of the suit should not be taxed against the estate, but against the heirs in whose behalf the defense was conducted: Drummond v. Irish, 52-41.

18. In case of dismissal: Plaintiff is liable not only for costs taxed at the time of such dismissal, but for all costs properly taxable in the case: Aches v. Hancock, 4-568.

19. When taxable to plaintiff: Where defendant's answer was in effect a counterclaim, and he was successful thereon, held, that the costs incurred by reason of the trial of such issue should be taxed to plaintiff: Judd v. Day, 50-247.

20. Where, as to the matter in litigation, defendant was successful, but was ordered to pay off a claim upon the property involved which was acquired by plaintiff pending the suit, held, that no costs appearing to have been incurred as to the repayment of such claim, it was proper to tax costs to plaintiff: Semple v. McCrary, 46-37.

21. Where the merits of a proceeding by injunction were found substantially against plaintiff, held, that the costs were properly taxed against him, although as to a matter which might have been corrected without action he was successful: Tredway v. McDonald, 51-663.

22. Under the peculiar circumstances of a particular case, held, that the costs were properly taxed to plaintiff: Bare v. Wright, 28-101.

23. Where it was provided by statute (not now in force) that in actions for tort brought in the district court, if plaintiff recovered less than fifty dollars he should recover no more costs than damages, held, that upon recovery of less than fifty dollars he became liable for the costs incurred in excess of the amount of damages: Britton v. Wright, 1 G. Gr., 426.

24. Where defendant admitted plaintiff's claim, and the only contest was on a counterclaim in which defendant was successful, held, that plaintiff should pay all costs excepting those for commencing action and entering judgment for balance found due him: Hall v. Clayton, 42-526. See, also, Judd v. Day, 50-247.

25. Costs against defendant: Where plaintiff sought, by motion, to have a judgment which had been discharged restored, and defendant resisted, held, that upon the sustaining of the motion all of the costs should have been taxed against the defendant: Kanke v. Herrum, 48-276.

26. Where plaintiff sought to set aside a tax title for fraud, and offered to pay the amount justly due from him to the owner of such title, and succeeded in the action, held, that costs should be taxed against defendant notwithstanding judgment was entered in his favor for taxes, interest and penalties: Springer v. Bartle, 46-688.

27. Disclaimer: A party who, having filed a disclaimer of interest and moved to be dismissed after such motion is denied, contests plaintiff's right to recover, and is defeated, is liable for costs notwithstanding such disclaimer: Wilcox v. Goldsmith, 44-573.

28. Apportionment:¹ While the statutory provisions as to apportioning costs refer pri-

¹ Code, § 2933. Costs shall be recovered by the successful against the losing party. But where the party is successful as to a part of his demand, and fails as to part, unless the case is otherwise provided for, the court may, on rendering judgment, make an equitable apportionment of costs.

§ 2934. In actions where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants, the costs shall be apportioned marily to a case where the petition embraces several causes of action, or where several issues are joined thereon, or upon new matter in the answer, they may include a case where plaintiff recovers upon his demand, and defendant in whole or in part upon his counter-claim: Arthur v. Funk, 22-238.

29. Where plaintiff sued defendant for assault and battery and slander, and defendant defended and also set up a counter-claim for slander, and the jury returned a verdict of ten dollars for plaintiff for the assault and battery and a like amount for defendant for slander, held, that the action of the court below in taxing certain unnecessary costs to one party and dividing the balance equally between them was proper, it being impossible to assort the witnesses and apportion the costs on each issue tried: Ferguson v. Thorpe, 54-422.

30. Where plaintiff asked the reformation of a deed, but the relief granted was only a portion of that asked, held, that the claim was not indivisible and that an apportionment of the costs was proper: Strayer v. Stone, 47-333.

31. In an action before a justice upon four separate items, plaintiff recovered judgment, but upon appeal he obtained a general verdict for a less amount; held, that the case was a proper one for apportionment of costs, and that Code, §§ 3592-3, as to costs in cases of appeal from justices, did not prevent such apportionment: Howder v. Overholser, 48-365.

32. In an action for the recovery of certain articles of specific personal property, where plaintiff recovered as to certain articles and failed as to others, held, that an apportionment of costs was proper: Whitaker v. Sigler, 44-419.

33. So held, also, where plaintiff failed as to a part of his demand, and had increased the costs by bringing his action in equity, when, as to a part of his claims, an action might have been brought at law: Hatch v. Judd, 29-95.

34. Where a number of witnesses were summoned by plaintiff, and in attendance, to testify touching an issue presented by the pleadings, and the defendant, just before the impaneling of a jury, withdrew his answer and thereby rendered the testimony of such witnesses unnecessary, held, that although defendant was successful in the suit, it was proper to tax up a portion of the costs against him: Whitney v. Hackney, 20-400.

35. Equitable apportionment of costs made in a particular case: Starr v. Case, 59-491.

36. As to apportionment of costs of compensation of a receiver, see French v. Gifford, 81-428.

37. Where plaintiff's claim is indivisible and he recovers a portion of the amount claimed, the costs should be taxed to defendant. There is no ground in such case for apportionment: Upson v. Fuller, 43-409.

38. Where plaintiff recovers the whole of his claim, an apportionment of costs should not be made: Drummond v. Irish, 53-41.

39. Nor should apportionment be made when recovery is had for less than his claim, if the claim is indivisible: Hammond v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., 49-450.

40. Failure of plaintiff to recover a portion of the amount claimed does not exempt the defendant from liability for any part of the costs unless there was a tender made and pleaded, or an offer to permit judgment to be entered for a sum equal to or greater than the amount of the judgment finally entered: Rand v. Wiley, 70—.

41. Where plaintiff obtains relief in part, the costs may properly be charged to defendant in the discretion of the court: Burton v. Mason, 26-392.

42. Where final judgment is rendered for defendant upon a voluntary nonsuit or plea in abatement, there should not be an apportionment of costs: Hyde v. Cole, 1-106.

43. Discretionary: An order apportioning the costs will not be interfered with on appeal where the record does not show the basis on which the order was made below: Brinck v. Neiweg, 29-444.

44. The order as to costs is largely discretionary, and where no abuse of discretion is apparent, the action of the court below will not be disturbed on appeal: Boone County v. Wilson, 41-69.

45. The question of costs rests very largely in the sound discretion of the trial court.

according to the several judgments rendered; and where there are several causes of action embraced in the same petition, or several issues, the plaintiff shall recover costs upon the issues determined in his favor, and the defendant shall recover costs upon the issues determined in his favor.

Taxation of.

Where a petition embraced several distinct charges, amounting to two hundred and forty-nine dollars, and plaintiff recovered only five dollars, held, that it was not error to assess one-third of the costs against him: Andrews v. Zimmerman, 42-708.

46. The apportionment of costs in certain cases is in the discretionary power of the trial court, and that discretion will not be interfered with on appeal unless an improper exercise thereof is shown: Bush v. Yeoman, 30-479.

47. The presumption in regard to the action of the court as to apportionment of costs is in favor of the correctness of such action, and the ruling will not be disturbed on appeal unless all the facts and circumstances are before the court, and it is manifest that the ruling is wrong: Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41-204.

48. When the record does not disclose the facts or circumstances attending the trial, the action of the lower court in refusing to tax in defendant's favor costs accrued in support of his cross-claim, only a small portion of which was established, will be presumed to have been based upon sufficient reasons: Arthur v. Funk, 22-288.

49. The mere fact that a decree in favor of the defendants directed that they pay the costs in the first instance, to be afterward recovered by them of the plaintiffs, held, not of itself sufficient to warrant a reversal, when the facts on which the court acted were not shown: Scott's Adm'rs v. Cole, 27-109.

50. Offer of judgment: Where, in a proceeding to condemn the right of way for a street, plaintiff offered to submit to judgment in a certain amount, and on the trial a less amount was found for defendant, held, that it was not a case for taxing costs against defendant, the action not being one for the recovery of money within the provisions of Code, § 2900: Cherokee v. Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot Co., 52-279.

51. Where an offer to confess judgment has been made which is insufficient in amount, it will have no effect upon the question of costs where the matter to which the confession relates is only one of the questions upon which the controversy is determined: McClatchey v. Finley, 62-200.

52. Affidavits as to costs: The court may, in determining the matter of costs, consider affidavits and counter-affidavits, or may require the affiants brought in and subjected to examination and cross-examination: Packer v. Pucker, 24-20.

53. Judgment: Where a court has jurisdiction to render judgment it may also render a valid judgment for costs: Sprott v. Reid, 8 G. Gr., 489.

54. One who is served with notice of an action which does not state that no personal claim is made against him, cannot, after default and judgment against him for costs, have such judgment corrected or inquired into by an injunction. Having the power to render such judgment, the court's action can only be corrected by motion or on appeal: Davis v. Keith, 23-419.

55. A provision in a judgment for the recovery of costs by the successful party against his adversary is an adjudication with reference thereto: Fairbairn v. Dana, 68-231.

56. And the correctness of such determination cannot be urged by motion to retax the costs: Ibid.

As to what is a sufficient record of a judgment for costs, see COURTS, §§ 204, 205.

57. Retaxing costs: The ruling on a motion to retax costs because certain costs taxed in the case were unnecessary cannot be reviewed where it is not affirmatively shown to what extent, if at all, unnecessary costs were taxed: Toohey v. Lowell, 68-661.

58. A motion to retax costs cannot be made in the lower court while the case is pending in the supreme court on appeal: Levi v. Kar-rick, 15-444.

59. Collection of judgment for: The judgment, so far as it covers costs, is for the use of the parties entitled to such costs, and the successful party has no interest in that part of the judgment except in so far as such costs have been paid by him; therefore a payment to him of the costs covered by the judgment will not release his judgment debtor from the claims of parties entitled to such costs: McConkey v. Chapman, 58-281.

60. Fee bill: The party against whom the judgment is rendered is primarily liable for all the costs to the parties entitled thereto. They may issue their fee bill therefor, and failing in that they may, by motion, require the successful party to pay such of the costs as accrued at his instance, as provided in Code, § 2935. The statute does not contemplate the issuance of a fee bill against a party against whom no judgment has been rendered: Ibid.

61. Officers and witnesses entitled to fees in a case cannot have process issued for the collection of such fees. The judgment is subject to the control of the party in whose favor it is rendered: Ex parte Hampton, 2 G. Gr., 137.

62. If fees are unreasonably delayed in their collection the person entitled thereto may proceed against the party liable: Ibid.

I. JURISDICTION OF PARTICULAR COURTS.

- a. Supreme court of state.

1. No original jurisdiction: The supreme court has no original jurisdiction. It can review or correct judgments of a lower court only upon appeal or writ of error: Powell v. Spaulding, 3 G. Gr., 417; Westbrook v. Wicks, 36-382.

2. It cannot grant an injunction upon an original application, although the judges of the court are authorized to issue injunctions as judges: Reed v. Murphy, 2 G. Gr., 568.

3. It cannot, in the first instance, grant an attorney's lien, as that would be an exercise of original jurisdiction: Preston v. Daniels, 2 G. Gr., 536.

4. It can only try issues presented on appeal. It cannot, by way of a ruling on a motion, determine that, by reason of matters arising pending the appeal and shown by affidavit, appellee should be barred from further prosecuting the case: Simonson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 48-19.

5. Jurisdiction not conferred by consent: Parties cannot by agreement confer jurisdiction upon the supreme court in a case in which an appeal is not authorized. So held, where, by consent, an appeal in a criminal case was taken without judgment having been rendered: Rutter v. State, 1-99.

6. Appellate jurisdiction at law: The statutory provision (Code, § 8169) dispensing with the necessity of a motion for new trial is not in violation of the constitutional provision that the supreme court shall have jurisdiction in actions at law only for the correction of errors. Previous to that statute the ruling of the lower court on a motion to set aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence was reviewed as a matter of law, and the statute simply acts as a standing motion for a new trial: Coffin v. City Council, 26-515; and see Delvee v. Boardman, 20-446.

7. In a law case it is a court for the correction of errors at law, and it will not decide a case upon an agreed statement of facts which does not purport to embody the evidence, and when no error of law is presented: Harvey v. Miller, 25-219.

8. Regulation restricting appeals: The rule of the supreme court requiring the certificate of the trial judge in an appeal, where the amount in controversy is less than one hundred dollars, to state the question involved on which the decision of the supreme court is desired, is not nugatory as limiting the jurisdiction of the court: Wilson v. Iowa County, 52-339.

9. Appeals in equity: The distinction between the law and equity attributes of the supreme court is too well defined in the constitution to be erased by legislative action: Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Gr., 224.

Supreme court.—District and circuit courts.

10. The supreme court can only acquire jurisdiction in a chancery cause by appeal, and it can only review and decide questions made in and decided by the court below. Upon a trial de novo of a chancery cause, it cannot consider new testimony, and it has no power to entertain a bill of review: McGregor v. Gardner, 16-538.

11. The method to be pursued for securing a trial de novo upon appeal may be regulated by statute: Richards v. Hintrager, 45-253.

12. The right to a trial de novo upon appeal cannot be insisted upon unless the method prescribed by statute for securing such form of trial has been pursued: Cross v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., 51-683.

13. The statutory provision that an appeal is only allowed when the amount in controversy is not less than one hundred dollars, unless there is a certificate of the trial judge that there is a question involved upon which it is desirable to have the decision of the court, is not unconstitutional as depriving the party, in cases involving less than one hundred dollars, of his right to appeal in equity: Andrews v. Burdick, 62-714.

14. But the right of trial de novo in equitable actions cannot be entirely taken away by statute: Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44-192.

15. Jurisdiction of the supreme court in chancery cases can be exercised only upon appeal and not upon writ of error: Stockwell v. David, 1 G. Gr., 115.

16. The supreme court has jurisdiction to hear a case de novo on appeal only in actions in chancery and not in special proceedings: Brett v. Myers, 65-274.

17. Its jurisdiction may be restricted by the general assembly; and therefore, held, that where an act gave the district court final jurisdiction in a matter, there was no right of appeal from its judgment to the supreme court: Lampson v. Platt, 1-556.

In general, as to the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, see APPEALS.

b. District and circuit courts of state.¹

18. The district court is a court of general jurisdiction. It may have jurisdiction over any case brought within its district except so far as the exercise of its jurisdiction is prescribed by statute. The general and unlimited scope of its jurisdiction is illustrated by the fact that it is styled the district court for the state, held in and for a particular county, and its judges are judges of the state with authority to grant writs running into every part of the state. The legislature cannot deprive it of its jurisdiction or limit such jurisdiction, but the manner of its exercise may be prescribed by law: Laird v. Dickerson, 40-665.

19. The jurisdiction of the district court, which is a superior court of general original jurisdiction, can only be taken away by express words or irresistible implication. Therefore, held, that a statute which prohibited the bringing of action in the district court on claims against an estate for a mere money demand except with the approbation of the county court was not intended to take away the jurisdiction of the district court, but merely as a restraint upon plaintiff: Sterritt v. Robinson, 17-61.

20. And in such case, held, that the failure on the part of plaintiff to obtain such leave must be set up as a defense and could not be made the ground of a collateral attack on the judgment: Cooley v. Smith, 17-99.

21. The statutes conferring jurisdiction upon the probate court do not defeat or oust the general jurisdiction of the district court: Harlin v. Stevenson, 30-371.

22. As the district court is one of general jurisdiction, its powers are such as to give it cognizance of proceedings by creditors to compel an administrator to sell real estate for debts, and of all other proceedings except where jurisdiction is denied or taken away by express language or necessary implication: Waples v. Marsh, 19-381.

23. At law and in equity: The district court is invested with all the powers of a court of law and those of a court of equity, and the distinction between the two jurisdictions is recognized. This distinction the legislature cannot take away: Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 G. Gr., 224.

24. Under statutes different from those now in force, held, that in a proceeding in ¹ The circuit court is now abolished and its jurisdiction, in general, added to that already possessed by the district court: 21 G. A., ch. 134.

District and circuit courts.

equity, the court possessed no jurisdiction to render in favor of the party such judgment as he might show himself entitled to at law: Roberts v. Taliaferro, 7-110.

25. Supervisory powers: By statute, the general supervision of the circuit court over inferior courts, etc., in civil matters, is exclusive, and so is that of the district court in criminal matters. Jurisdiction in proceedings by certiorari is not given indiscriminately to both courts, but each court has jurisdiction in that class of cases under its supervision: Keniston v. Hewitt, 48-679; Groves v. Richmond, 58-570.

26. The supreme court will recognize the want of jurisdiction of the district court in certiorari in civil cases, though the objection be not made below nor on appeal: Groves v. Richmond, 58-570.

27. The circuit court has exclusive jurisdiction over appeals in the trial of contested county elections: McKinney v. Wood, 35-167.

28. The statutory provision (Code, § 162) giving the circuit court jurisdiction in all appeals and writs of error over inferior courts, tribunals and officers, and the general supervision thereof in all civil matters, to prevent or correct abuses where no other remedy is provided, does not permit appeals in cases where there is no statute authorizing them; as for instance from the action of fence-viewers: McKeever v. Jenks, 59-850.

29. Circuit court: Where the circuit court has exclusive jurisdiction and a change of place of trial is granted, it should be sent to some other circuit court and not to the district court: Schuchart v. Lammey, 62-197.

30. The fact that a certain court is given exclusive original jurisdiction of an action does not imply that such jurisdiction is final and without review on appeal: Conboy v. Iowa City, 2-90.

31. Probate jurisdiction:¹ The probate court has not jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of the personal property of a person who was not a resident of the county at the time of his death and held no property there, merely on the ground that the property was brought into the county after his death for a special purpose and removed again before the appointment of such administrator: Christy v. Vest, 36-285.

32. If there is any claim due the estate of decedent on which action might be maintained in the courts of this state by an administrator properly appointed, the courts of this state have jurisdiction to appoint such administrator. So held as to a cause of action accruing in another state under the laws of that state for causing the death of decedent, defendant being suable in Iowa: Morris v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 65-727.

33. The fact that a court, in granting administration upon the estate of a foreign decedent, appoints an administrator for the sale of real estate in that county, does not limit its jurisdiction as to property in other counties of the state: Lees v. Wetmore, 58-170.

34. Jurisdiction of the probate court is not exclusive as to land belonging to an intestate, which is not required for the payment of debts and remains in the possession of the heirs after administration is concluded, and an action against heirs in possession by a person claiming to be heir may be brought in another court: In re Seaton's Estate, 58-523.

35. Where the relief sought is the enforcement of a lien, the action may properly be brought in equity, there being no method of obtaining relief in probate proceedings: Goodnow v. Wells, 67-654.

36. Under the Revision, the county courts did not have exclusive jurisdiction of all matters connected with the settlement of the estate, and no express power was granted them to entertain a creditor's bill to command an administrator to sell real estate for debts: Waples v. Marsh, 19-381.

37. The court having taken jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, such action cannot be attacked collaterally by showing that there was no property in the county to warrant such appointment: Murphy v. Creighton, 45-179; Lees v. Wetmore, 58-170.

38. The probate court has exclusive juris-

¹ Code, § 2312. The circuit court of each county shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of the probate of wills, and the appointment of such executors, administrators, or trustees, as may be required to carry the same into effect; of the settlement of the estate of deceased persons, and of the persons and estates of minors, insane persons, and others requiring guardianship, including applications for the sale of real property belonging to any such estates, except as prescribed in chapters one and three of title fifteen.

District and circuit courts.

diction of an action to probate a will, but such probate is not conclusive on adverse parties, and an original action to set the will aside may be instituted in the district court: Leighton v. Orr, 44-679.

39. A circuit court, as a court of probate, does not have exclusive jurisdiction of a suit on an administrator's bond: Wheelhouse v. Bryant, 13-160; Jenkins v. Shields, 36-526.

40. An order of a probate court approving the report of an administrator, in which he certifies to a distribution of all the funds to certain heirs, is not an adjudication that there are no other heirs: Crosley v. Calhoon, 45-557.

41. A probate court may appoint a referee in the matter of the examination of administrator's accounts: In re Heath's Estate, 58-36.

42. The jurisdiction of the circuit court as a court of probate relates to probate matters exclusively, and no chancery powers are thereby conferred upon it. It may regulate the distribution of property to legatees, but cannot supervise the management of such property by the legatees charged with a trust duty in respect thereto by the will, the execution of trusts being within the jurisdiction of a court of equity: Perry v. Drury, 56-60.

43. The provisions as to the probate jurisdiction of the circuit court do not defeat or oust the general equity jurisdiction of the district court: Harlin v. Stevenson, 30-371.

44. The jurisdiction of the probate court in relation to estates of insane persons does not exclude that of the district court in an action of right between an insane person and others: Flock v. Wyatt, 49-466.

45. The authority given by Code, § 2315, to the clerk of the circuit court to appoint guardians, etc., in vacation, does not confer upon him authority to approve a guardian's bond in vacation: Reno v. McCully, 65-629.

46. The circuit court, as a court of probate, may authorize expenditures by a guardian for the support and education of the ward, without notice to the ward. Such a proceeding is not adversary in its nature and does not partake of the character of an action: Breuer v. Stoddard, 49-279.

47. Where a probate court directed that notice of an application by the administrator for sale of the real property to pay debts of the estate should be served by publication for two weeks in a newspaper, which order was complied with, held, that the court thereby acquired jurisdiction as against non-resident defendants to act upon such application: Casey v. Stewart, 60-160.

48. The hearing of a probate matter may be ordered to be had at a place other than the county seat: Ibid.

49. The circuit court cannot sit outside of the county for the transaction of probate business, and an order made in such matter outside of the county will be void: Capper v. Sibley, 65-754.

50. Where a proceeding which should have been in probate is brought in law or equity, the error is merely one as to the forum of the action and cannot be raised on appeal, if not interposed in the lower court: Goodnow v. Wells, 67-654.

51. Nor can such objection be taken advantage of by demurrer, but it must be raised by motion to transfer the proceeding to the proper docket as provided in Code, § 2519: Ashlock v. Sherman, 56-311.

52. Where the parties submitted to the circuit court a controversy involving the allowance of claims against the estate upon an agreed state of facts, held, that the circuit court might determine such question, although it was not one involving the exercise of probate jurisdiction: Baugh v. Barrett, 69-495.

53. Concurrent jurisdiction: The fact that jurisdiction in a particular class of cases exists in one court by virtue of statute, and by subsequent statute jurisdiction thereof is vested in another court, does not operate as an implied repeal of the previous statute. The jurisdiction of the courts is to be regarded as concurrent: Hummer v. Hummer, 3 G. Gr., 42.

54. In such case, if a proceeding has been commenced in either court, the jurisdiction of the case being thereby assumed in accordance with the law, the other court would be precluded from taking cognizance of it: Ibid.

55. It is no interference on the part of one court with the jurisdiction of another for a person, not a party to an attachment suit in the one, to bring an action of replevin in another against the sheriff for property seized by him under such attachment: Seaton v. Higgins, 50-305.

Other state courts.—Federal.

56. The court first obtaining jurisdiction of the person of the accused in a criminal case retains it to the exclusion of another court seeking to obtain such jurisdiction and will proceed to try the case and administer justice. So held where defendant was indicted in one county for a crime which was indictable in either one of two counties, and was afterwards indicted and first arrested in the other county: Ex parte Baldwin, 69-502.

57. Jurisdiction of inferior courts not exclusive: Under the provisions of the Revision of 1860 giving a right of appeal from the county court to the district court, held, that the original jurisdiction of the district court in such cases was not excluded: Waples v. Marsh, 19-381.

58. The jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction is not limited by the provisions giving justices of the peace jurisdiction in cases where the amount does not exceed one hundred dollars. The courts of general jurisdiction have original jurisdiction in such cases: Koons v. Dyer, Mor., 98; Hudson v. Matthews, Mor., 94; Bush v. Elson, Mor., 316; Chapman v. Morgan, 2 G. Gr., 374; Nelson v. Gray, 2 G. Gr., 397; Hutton v. Drebbilbis, 2 G. Gr., 593.

59. In actions of forcible entry and detainer, exclusive jurisdiction is given to justices of the peace, and the district or circuit court cannot exercise original jurisdiction therein: Dicks v. Hatch, 10-380; Easton v. Fleming, 51-305.

c. Other state courts.

60. Superior courts: The jurisdiction of superior courts over appeals in civil cases from justices of the peace in the township is not exclusive of that of the circuit courts in the respective counties: Hickox v. Nutting, 55-403; Hickox v. Burlington, C. R. & M. R. Co., 55-431.

61. The superior court has, as to cases originally brought therein, concurrent jurisdiction throughout the county with courts of general jurisdiction. The limitation of jurisdiction to the township in which the city is located applies only to appeals and writs of error from justices of the peace: Winet v. Berryhill, 55-411.

62. The act (16 G. A., ch. 143; McClain's Ann. Stat., 140) authorizing cities of a certain population to establish superior courts upon the adoption of a proposition to that effect by popular vote is not unconstitutional as providing for the exercise of legislative power by the people. It confers upon cities certain powers which may be accepted and exercised by a vote of the people, but the validity of the act of the legislature is not made dependent upon popular vote: Lytle v. May, 49-224.

63. Police courts: Neither the constitution nor any statute gives a defendant tried before a police magistrate for violation of a city ordinance, the right of trial by jury: Zelle v. McHenry, 51-572.

64. Nor is there any provision for change of venue from such a court in such proceeding: Ibid.

65. Mayor's court: The court of a mayor is not a court of record: Santo v. State, 2-165, 230.

66. County court: Under a statute providing for a county judge and authorizing him to hold a county court, held, that the official acts of the county judge were acts of the county court, whether judicial or ministerial, and that county judge and county court were convertible terms: Lee County v. Nelson, 4 G. Gr., 348.

67. The territorial courts of Iowa held not to be foreign courts with respect to the courts organized under state authority: Wright v. Marsh, 2 G. Gr., 94.

d. Federal courts.

68. Appeal to supreme court of the U. S.: The fact that the validity of a state statute is called in question on the ground that it is in conflict with the constitution of the United States must appear on the face of the record, and a certificate to that effect will not be given by the state supreme court where the question is not made in the record but is first suggested in the argument of counsel on a petition for rehearing in the latter court: Martin v. Cole, 38-141.

69. Where a state and a federal question are presented to the state court, and the federal question not being necessarily involved in the decision, the state court ignores it, and bases its decision wholly on the state question, the United States supreme court has no jurisdiction: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 112 U. S., 123.

70. Where the record shows that plaintiffs in error claimed in the state court that the contract made with defendants in error had been rendered void and of no force and effect by the constitution of the United States, and of certain acts of congress, and that the supreme court of Iowa denied this claim, a federal question is presented which will give the United States supreme court jurisdiction under the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act: Railroads v. Richmond, 15 Wall., 3.

71. Writs of error from the state supreme court to the supreme court of the United States must be signed by the chief justice of the state court: Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 14 Wall., 26.

72. Where writ of error is allowed by the state supreme court, and a citation signed, but the same, with supersedeas bond, is not filed with the clerk until after the expiration of the sixty days allowed therefor by the statute of the United States, the judgment is not superseded: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Grinnell, 53-55.

73. Federal courts not foreign: The circuit courts of the United States are not to be regarded as foreign tribunals by the courts of that state in which the federal court was holden which rendered the judgment, so as to allow a party to relitigate in an action on such judgment the same defenses which were pleaded by and decided against him on the first action: Thomson v. Lee County, 22-206.

74. The state and federal courts for Iowa are not foreign to each other in any such sense that proceedings will be allowed to be pending in each court at the same time between the same parties for the enforcement of the same rights, which would result in the granting of the same remedy operative within the same territorial limits: Radford v. Folsom, 4 McCrary, 527.

75. Interference of state courts; injunction: The state courts have no jurisdiction, power or authority to interfere by injunction to restrain a party who has recovered judgment in a federal court, or the officers of that court, from enforcing such judgment: Shimer v. Hammond, 51-401.

76. The state court cannot interfere with the execution of process from a federal court: Seaton v. Higgins, 50-305.

77. The supreme court of the United States is the final arbiter respecting the extent of the judicial power of the United States and the jurisdiction which the federal courts possess under constitutional legislation of congress: Holman, 28-88.

78. In the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, the state and federal courts cannot interfere with the operations of the other at any time, whether before or after judgment: Ibid.

79. Where plaintiff has the constitutional right to bring his action in the federal court, its jurisdiction will not be ousted by proceedings touching the subject-matter in the state court. Nor can a state court interfere with the execution of process issued from the federal court to enforce its judgment in such a case. A decision of the latter when made is binding on the state court: Ibid.; Clark v. West, 197.

80. Mandamus: Although the federal courts have jurisdiction to enforce the execution of a judgment therein against county officers by mandamus, yet it being the duty of county officers by statute to apply to the federal court for the satisfaction of a judgment, the duty of making such application is one which may be enforced by mandamus in the state courts: Brown v. Brown, 32-498.

81. Penalties under United States laws: The federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of cases arising under penal statutes of the United States. Whether the penalty of the national banking act in respect of usury by banks authorized under that act is far penal in its nature that congress gave the state courts jurisdiction thereof is attempted in that act, quere. But that in an action by a national bank in a state court, the defendant might recover on the ground of the invalidity of the claim on the ground contained usurious interest: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114.

82. Equity practice: The rules of procedure of the circuit court of the United States

Federal courts.

chancery causes are such as are prescribed by the supreme court of the United States, and the provisions of the state statutes cannot be considered in determining the effect of proceedings therein: Scully v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 46-528.

Bankruptcy proceedings: The jurisdiction of the federal courts in bankruptcy proceedings is exclusive and the state courts can exercise no jurisdiction therein: See BANKRUPTCY, §§ 3-7.

83. Subject-matter: Where the jurisdiction of the federal courts is extended to a class of cases by reason of the subject-matter of the action, such jurisdiction attaches without regard to the parties, and where it attaches on account of the remedy sought and the form and course of proceedings, such jurisdiction is not exclusive of a proceeding in any other form in a state court having jurisdiction, although the subject-matter is the same: Home Ins. Co. v. North Western Packet Co., 32-223.

84. Admiralty and maritime jurisdiction: The judicial power of the United States in admiralty cases is limited by the proceedings had, the form and manner of the action, and the form in which it is prosecuted, and exclusive jurisdiction is not given to the federal courts over subjects which may be the foundation of action in admiralty, and also, according to the course of common law, in chancery or at law. In such cases, the state courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the United States admiralty courts: Ibid.

85. The Missouri river is such a river that the federal courts have jurisdiction over admiralty cases arising thereon: Walters v. Steamboat Mollie Dozier, 24-192.

86. Removal of cases; amount in controversy: Where the petition asked judgment for a sum less than $500, and interest at such rate and for such time as that it would be sufficient to make the amount exceed $500, held, that the amount in controversy was sufficient to authorize the removal: Brayley v. Hedges, 53-582.

87. Citizenship: Residence and citizenship are not synonymous terms, and a petition to remove a cause to a federal court, which alleges that the parties reside in different states, is insufficient: Delaware R. Const. Co. v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 46-406.

88. In an action against a railway company incorporated under the laws of Illinois, and having therein its principal place of business, but operating, as lessee of a domestic corporation, a railroad in Iowa, in which action it was sought to recover damages for an injury occurring on the leased line in Iowa, held, that defendant should, for the purpose of determining his right to remove the cause to the federal courts on the ground of citizenship, be regarded as a citizen of Illinois, and that, although suable in this state, because doing business here under the sanction of the state laws, it was not deprived of the right to be regarded as a citizen of Illinois, for the purpose of removal of the action: Treadway v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 21-351.

89. Where suit is brought by a trustee, who is such in good faith and has power to control the claim, the citizenship of persons beneficially interested, but not parties to the record, is not considered on the question of removal. If the assignment by virtue of which plaintiff sues is not effectual to confer upon plaintiff the power to sue, defendant's remedy would not be to remove the suit, but to defeat plaintiff's action on the ground that he is not the real party in interest: Vimont v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64-513.

90. Where a cause of action is assigned so as to vest the legal title to the claim in plaintiff for the purpose of preventing the transfer of the cause to the federal court on account of difference in citizenship of the parties, it is immaterial that the motive of the assignment was to defeat such transfer: Ibid.; S. C., 69-296.

91. Where plaintiff sues as assignee, and is a citizen of the same state as defendant, there cannot be a removal of the cause to the federal court, although, had the action been brought by the assignor, there would have been such difference in citizenship of the parties as to authorize such removal: Ibid.; Goodnow v. Litchfield, 67-691; Goodnow v. Oakley, 68-25.

92. The controversy: To authorize a removal to the federal court it is necessary that there be a "controversy," and where defendants have not answered or demurred to the petition for removal, and it is not shown that there is a defense, there is no such contro-

Federal courts.

106. Upon the filing of a petition in a state court presenting a sufficient case for removal to the federal court, the rightful jurisdiction of the state court comes to an end, and the state court cannot permit an issue upon the allegations of the petition to be raised, and upon its determination order or refuse the removal of the case, as it may find the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the federal court is based: Van Horn v. Litchfield, 70—.

107. In a particular case, held, that the petition and bond for removal being sufficient in form, removal could not be refused on account of certain averments in a prior affidavit made for requiring security for costs: Ohle v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 64-599.

108. Rightfulness of removal: Where a party has, by motion in the federal court, sought to have the case in which proceedings for removal have been taken remanded to the state court on account of the insufficiency of such proceedings, he will be bound by the disposition of the case made in the federal court, and cannot afterward question the sufficiency of the proceeding in the state court: Ryan v. Mathews, 64-250.

109. Effect of removal upon prior proceedings: The removal of a cause into a federal court under the judiciary act of 1789 does not ipso facto render a delivery bond in attachment inoperative, nor does it so change the liability of the sureties as to discharge them: Ramsey v. Coolbaugh, 18-164.

110. An order in regard to the withdrawal of a delivery bond, after the bond is filed in the federal court, upon removal, is not a further proceeding in the cause, within the meaning of the act authorizing a removal of causes to the federal courts: Ibid.

111. Right of foreign corporations to remove: The state statute (21 G. A., ch. 76) requiring foreign corporations to procure permits from the auditor of state before doing business in the state, and providing that the removal of a case by such corporation to the federal court shall constitute a revocation of such permit, held unconstitutional. (Reversing Goodell v. Kriechbaum, 70—): Barron v. Burnside (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 7 S. C. Rep., 981.

112. Following state decisions: The decisions of the supreme court of a state interpreting a statute of such state are binding upon the federal courts: Goodnow v

Wells, 67-654; Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 18; Davenport Nat. Bank v. Mittelbuscher, 4 McCrary, 361.

113. The judgment of the state supreme court against the constitutionality of a state statute concludes the federal courts from upholding the statute and they will not attempt to do so: Kaeiser v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 5 McCrary, 496.

114. However little the federal courts may approve the decisions of the state courts, the former will not set up a different rule of property with respect to state laws, but will follow the state decisions in such matters: Burham v. Fritz, 4 McCrary, 410.

115. The question as to whether certain acts of the county constitute a conveyance by it of lands received from the United States is a question depending upon state and not on federal law: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 112 U. S., 123.

116. As to a question of general law not depending upon state statutes, the federal courts will follow the decisions of the supreme court of the United States rather than those of the state wherein the case arises: Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 18; Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 34.

117. When the federal courts are called upon to consider contracts resting upon state statutes which were valid at the time they were made, according to the decisions of the highest courts of the state, and were entered into on the faith of those decisions, they will decline to follow later decisions of the state declaring the invalidity of such statutes. But in other cases the federal courts will hold themselves bound to accept the constructions given by the courts of the states to their statutes: Supervisors v. United States, 18 Wall., 71.

118. Bonds of counties issued in aid of railways after the state courts have held such bonds invalid will not be enforced in the federal courts: Foote v. Mt. Pleasant, 1 McCrary, 101.

119. A state law of practice has no effect proprio vigore in the courts of the United States, and can only be made effectual in those courts by adoption by a rule of the circuit court for that district: Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall., 409.

Lien of judgments of federal courts, see JUDGMENTS, § 509.

Federal courts.

eral question not being necessarily involved in the decision, the state court ignores it, and bases its decision wholly on the state question, the United States supreme court has no jurisdiction: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 112 U. S., 128.

70. Where the record shows that plaintiffs in error claimed in the state court that the contract made with defendants in error had been rendered void and of no force and effect by the constitution of the United States, and of certain acts of congress, and that the supreme court of Iowa denied this claim, a federal question is presented which will give the United States supreme court jurisdiction under the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act: Railroads v. Richmond, 15 Wall., 8.

71. Writs of error from the state supreme court to the supreme court of the United States must be signed by the chief justice of the state court: Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 14 Wall., 26.

72. Where writ of error is allowed by the state supreme court, and a citation signed, but the same, with supersedeas bond, is not filed with the clerk until after the expiration of the sixty days allowed therefor by the statute of the United States, the judgment is not superseded: Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Grinnell, 53-55.

73. Federal courts not foreign: The circuit courts of the United States are not to be regarded as foreign tribunals by the courts of that state in which the federal court was holden which rendered the judgment, so as to allow a party to relitigate in an action on such judgment the same defenses which were pleaded by and decided against him on the first action: Thomson v. Lee County, 22-206.

74. The state and federal courts for Iowa are not foreign to each other in any such sense that proceedings will be allowed to be pending in each court at the same time between the same parties for the enforcement of the same rights, which would result in the granting of the same remedy operative within the same territorial limits: Radford v. Folson, 4 McCrary, 527.

75. Interference of state courts; injunction: The state courts have no jurisdiction, power or authority to interfere by injunction to restrain a party who has recovered judgment in a federal court, or the officers of that court, from enforcing such judgment: Shimer v. Hammond, 51-401.

76. The state court cannot interfere with the execution of process from a federal court: Seaton v. Higgins, 50-305.

77. The supreme court of the United States is the final arbiter respecting the nature and extent of the judicial power of the United States and the jurisdiction which the courts of the United States possess under the constitutional legislation of congress: Ex parte Holman, 28-88.

78. In the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, the state and federal courts will not interfere with the operations of each other at any time, whether before or after the judgment: Ibid.

79. Where plaintiff has the constitutional right to bring his action in the federal courts, its jurisdiction will not be ousted by proceedings touching the subject-matter in a state court. Nor can a state court interfere with process issued from the federal courts to enforce its judgment in such a case. The decision of the latter when made is binding on the state court: Ibid.; Clark v. Wolf, 29-197.

80. Mandamus: Although the federal courts have jurisdiction to enforce the payment of a judgment therein against a county by mandamus, yet it being the duty of the county officers by statute to apply a tax levied for the satisfaction of a judgment to its payment, the duty of making such application is one which may be enforced by mandamus in the state courts: Brown v. Crego, 32-498.

81. Penalties under United States laws: The federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of cases arising under penal statutes of the United States. Whether the provision of the national banking act in regard to usury by banks authorized under that act is so far penal in its nature that congress cannot give the state courts jurisdiction thereof as is attempted in that act, quære. But held, that in an action by a national bank in a state court, the defendant might resist the validity of the claim on the ground that it contained usurious interest: National Bank v. Eyre, 52-114.

82. Equity practice: The rules of practice of the circuit court of the United States in Federal courts.

106. Upon the filing of a petition in a state court presenting a sufficient case for removal to the federal court, the rightful jurisdiction of the state court comes to an end, and the state court cannot permit an issue upon the allegations of the petition to be raised, and upon its determination order or refuse the removal of the case, as it may find the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the federal court is based: Van Horn v. Coolbaugh, 13-164.

110. An order in regard to the withdrawal of a delivery bond, after the bond is filed in the federal court, upon removal, is not a further proceeding in the cause, within the meaning of the act authorizing a removal of causes to the federal courts: Ibid.

111. Right of foreign corporations to remove: The state statute (21 G. A., ch. 76) requiring foreign corporations to procure permits from the auditor of state before doing business in the state, and providing that the removal of a case by such corporation to the federal court shall constitute a revocation of such permit, held unconstitutional. (Reversing Goodell v. Kriechbaum, 70—): Barron v. Burnside (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 7 S. C. Rep., 981.

112. Following state decisions: The decisions of the supreme court of a state interpreting a statute of such state are binding upon the federal courts: Goodnow v

Wells, 67-854; Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 18; Davenport Nat. Bank v. Mittelbuscher, 4 McCrary, 361.

113. The judgment of the state supreme court against the constitutionality of a state statute concludes the federal courts from upholding the statute and they will not attempt to do so: Kaeiser v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 5 McCrary, 496.

114. However little the federal courts may approve the decisions of the state courts, the former will not set up a different rule of property with respect to state laws, but will follow the state decisions in such matters: Burham v. Fritz, 4 McCrary, 410.

115. The question as to whether certain acts of the county constitute a conveyance by it of lands received from the United States is a question depending upon state and not on federal law: Adams County v. Burlington & M. R. R. Co., 112 U. S., 123.

116. As to a question of general law not depending upon state statutes, the federal courts will follow the decisions of the supreme court of the United States rather than those of the state wherein the case arises: Crooks v. Stuart, 2 McCrary, 18; Edwards v. Davenport, 4 McCrary, 34.

119. A state law of practice has no effect proprio vigore in the courts of the United States, and can only be made effectual in those courts by adoption by a rule of the circuit court for that district: Mayor v. Lord, 9 Wall., 409.

 Organization.—What constitutes court.

II. ORGANIZATION; EXERCISE OF POWER.

a. What constitutes court; functions of judge.

120. Open court: To give existence to a court, its officers and the time and place of holding it must be such as are prescribed by law. The term "open court" as used in the statutes is to be understood as conveying the idea that the court must be in session, organized for the transaction of judicial business. Hence, a trial before a referee cannot be considered a trial in open court: Hobart v. Hobart, 45-501.

121. Who entitled to be present: While witnesses may be separated and excluded from the place of trial, in the discretion of the court, upon the application of a party, an exception arises in the case of a party to the action, who has the right to be present during the trial. Jemison v. Gray, 29-537.

122. That there may be a separate examination of witnesses, see Hubbell v. Ream, 31-289.

123. Judge; unauthorized person cannot act as: A person not duly authorized and qualified by law cannot, by consent of parties or by direction of the duly qualified judge, act as judge in the trial of a cause: Michales v. Hine, 3 G. Gr., 470; Winchester v. Ayres, 4 G. Gr., 104; Petty v. Durall, 4 G. Gr., 120; Smith v. Frisbie, 7-486.

124. It is not proper for a judge of the court to have an attorney substituted temporarily in his place, even by consent of parties, and himself act as attorney for one of the parties to the case: Wright v. Boon, 2 G. Gr., 458.

125. The judge may, during the argument of the case to the jury, properly be absent from the court room for the purpose of hearing another case, or otherwise: Hall v. Wolff, 61-559.

126. If it appears that the judge required arguments to the jury to be made while he was absent attending to other business in a separate room, such fact will not be ground for reversal if it does not appear but that such absence was necessary, or that prejudice resulted or might be inferred therefrom: Baxter v. Ray, 62-336.

127. Substitute: Where a statute provides that, in case of the absence or disability of the judge, a certain other officer designated shall act in his place, it must appear, in order to support an action of the person thus designated in sitting as judge, that the contingency upon which he was authorized to act had occurred: Burlington University v. Stewart's Ex'rs, 12-442; State v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 50-692.

128. A judge may hold court in another district than his own by exchange under the provisions of statute: State v. Stingley, 10-488.

129. Such provision (Code, § 175) is not unconstitutional: Ibid.

130. Judge previously interested: A judgment rendered by a judge who has previously been an attorney in the case is not to be deemed absolutely void, where it does not appear that the judgment has ever been questioned or objected to by the party interested: Floyd County v. Cheney, 57-160.

131. Change of judge: Where, after the submission of a cause on deposition to the judge of the circuit court, the circuit was so changed that another judge became judge of such court, held, that a decision of the cause by the new judge was proper: Manning v. Mathews, 66-675.

132. Where at one term of court a judge signs or makes a memorandum of a decree which is not entered at that term on the record, and before the next term the judge goes out of office, his successor should cause the record to be made up from the previous decree or memorandum, and cannot regard the cause as open for trial: Tracy v. Beeson, 47-155.

133. Where the judgment rendered by one judge, upon the report of a referee, was set aside by his successor as having been improperly entered in vacation, and a new judgment to the same effect was rendered, held, that the unsuccessful party had no right to have his exceptions to the referee's report passed upon anew by the incoming judge: Mellinger v. Von Behren, 58-874.

134. Powers may be conferred upon the judge which cannot be exercised by the court of which he is judge: Cummings v. Des Moines, W. & S. W. R. Co., 86-173.

135. Territorial judges: The constitution under which Iowa was admitted having divided the state into four judicial districts instead of three as there had been under the territorial constitution, held, that until an election of officers under such constitution there were no judges in such districts, although by the constitution the officers of the territory were authorized to act until new officers were elected: Allen v. Dunham, 1 G. Gr., 89.

Time and place of holding court; terms.

b. Time and place of holding court; terms.

136. Sunday; dies non: A verdict rendered on Sunday, or a judgment entered on that day, is void: Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Gr., 406. (But by statute, Code, § 191, a verdict may be received or a jury discharged on Sunday.)

137. To avoid a judgment, regular on its face, on the ground that it was rendered on Sunday, the fact that it was so rendered should be clearly established, beyond the reasonable doubt naturally arising from the difficulty of establishing the precise time of a transaction: Bishop v. Carter, 29-165.

138. Extent of term: In contemplation of law, aside from statute, the whole term of the court is considered but one day; and where a term of court commenced during the year for which grand jurors were properly summoned, held, that they did not cease to be grand jurors during the existence of the term although it extended into another year: State v. Winebrenner, 67-230.

139. Acts after expiration of term: Where the term of court is limited, any action after the end of the term is void: Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Gr., 406.

140. A court cannot hold a term in one county on a day when, by statute, the same judge is required to hold court in another county. An adjournment of the term in the latter county and a continuance of the term in the former will not cure the defect: Grable v. State, 2 G. Gr., 559; Sheppard v. Wilson, Mor., 448.

141. Where a trial is commenced in the midst of a term, under the bona fide expectation and belief that it can be concluded before the day shall arrive when the judge is by law directed, but not imperatively required, to hold court in another county, he may remain and conclude that case, receive the verdict and pass judgment, even though this may happen to be done on a day when regularly he would be opening or holding court in another county: State v. Knight, 19-94.

142. It being provided by statute (Code, §§ 167-8, 185-6) that where a jury trial has been commenced during the term in one county, the verdict of the jury may be returned after the opening of court in another county, and judgment rendered thereon, the verdict in such a case may be returned after the expiration of the term and to the judge in person: Tilton v. Swift, 40-78.

143. This statute changes the rule announced by the decisions previously referred to, and under it a term of court in one county may legally be extended beyond the time at which the same court, by the terms fixed by statute, should be in session in another county. At least a judge may, if he sees proper, extend the term in one county during the first three days in another county: Cook v. Smith, 54-686.

144. The fact that the trial is had and completed during the time fixed for the court to be held in another county, the term of such other county having, however, been previously adjourned, will not constitute error: State v. Stevens, 67-557; State v. Peterson, 67-564.

145. The fact that it appears on the record that a judgment was rendered in the court of one county three days after the term of the same court should have commenced in another county, held, not sufficient to render such judgment void, even though it did not appear affirmatively of record that the term of court fixed for the other county had been adjourned: Weaver v. Cooledge, 15-244.

As to judgments rendered in vacation, see infra, §§ 157-169; and JUDGMENTS, §§ 152-158.

146. Change of term by statute: Where by statute, which took effect on the third day of the term of court, the time of holding the terms of such court was changed, held, that such change did not apply to the term then being held, and that it might be continued: Clare v. Clare, 4 G. Gr., 411.

147. Special terms: The authority to hold special terms should never be withheld from a court. It may be regarded as a right which a court of general jurisdiction should exercise ex officio: Harriman v. State, 2 G. Gr., 270.

148. Where a special term of court was provided for the trial of criminal cases only, held, that the jurisdiction of the court at such term was that provided for the trial of criminal cases in general, and was not limited merely to the trial of those in which there was consent: State v. Smith, 7-244.

149. And held, that at such special term an indictment might be found: State v. Nash, 7-347.

150. The court may call a grand jury together at a special term: State v. Reid, 20-413, 424.

151. Whether a judge may, for the purpose of concluding a trial begun during a regular term of court, appoint a special term at a day fixed by law for the regular term in another county, quære: State v. Knight, 19-94.

152. Under statute authorizing special terms, held, that a special term which was ordered for the same day fixed for the general term of the same court in another county, the general term being subsequently adjourned to a later date, was not illegal: State v. Clark, 30-168.

153. A special term is not a continuance of the regular term after an adjournment, but is a new term: Dryden v. Wyllis, 54-667.

154. Adjournments: The judge is clothed with full power over the adjournments of his court: State v. Clark, 30-168.

155. A telegram from the judge to the clerk, making the proper direction as to adjournment, is a sufficient written order for adjournment within the requirements of the statute: State v. Holmes, 56-588.

156. Where the judge, being absent from the state, wrote and telegraphed to the clerk to adjourn the approaching term of court to a further date, and the clerk, in accordance with the telegram, published a notice of the adjournment, and notified parties, jurors and witnesses, but no proclamation of the adjournment was made at the day for opening the term, and the written order was not filed nor entry thereof upon the record made until after the opening of the term at the time to which it was so adjourned, nor until after defendant, who was held for trial at the regular term under a continuance from a previous term, had filed his protest against being tried at such adjourned term, held, that a nunc pro tunc record of the order was sufficient, and the trial of defendant was properly held at the adjourned term, no prejudice being shown: State v. McGuire, 58-165.

157. Judgment in vacation: Whether a decree entered in vacation is void or merely irregular, the parties seeking to have it set aside in equity must offer to pay the amount appearing to be justly due, or allow judgment to be rendered for that amount: Byers v. Odell, 56-618.

158. A judge has no authority, without consent of parties, to render a decision in vacation discharging a garnishee: Laughlin v. Peckham, 66-121.

159. An entry of judgment made by the clerk in vacation, no action of the court authorizing or approving it being shown, is void: Balm v. Nunn, 63-641.

160. Where, upon the appearance of defendant at a subsequent term, the judgment in vacation was set aside and a new judgment entered of that term, held, that the new judgment was not void: First Nat. Bank v. Hostetter, 61-395.

161. It is only where authority is specially conferred by statute that the judge is authorized to make orders and exercise judicial functions in vacation: Prosser v. Prosser, 64-378.

162. An order of the judge may issue in vacation directing the sheriff as to publication of notice of sale under execution: Herriman v. Moore, 49-171.

163. Consent of a party to the cause being determined in vacation, implied from the conduct of his attorney in not objecting to its being held over for that purpose, held sufficient to authorize such decision: Myers v. Funk, 51-92; Babcock v. Wolfe, 70—.

164. Where, by agreement of parties, either party was to have a certain time to file a motion for a new trial to be decided in vacation, and thereafter a motion for a new trial was filed and so decided, held, that a motion in arrest of judgment could not be filed and decided in vacation under the same agreement, it not being expressly provided for therein: Scribner v. Ruthersford, 65-551.

165. Where parties in open court agreed that judgment should be entered upon the disposition of a motion for a new trial, and that such motion for a new trial might be decided in vacation, held, that a judgment entered in vacation in pursuance of such arrangement was proper: Hattenback v. Hoskins, 12-109.

Time and place of holding court; terms.—Records.

166. An agreement for a decision in vacation implies that the judge will decide the case at his chambers or wherever he may be when he finally considers it: Johnson v. Mantz, 69-710.

167. Entry of judgment in vacation, when it is not practicable to prepare and enter it in term time, is, by statute, valid: Traer v. Whitman, 56-448. And held, that a decision of a cause submitted to be decided in vacation, which was signed and forwarded to the clerk while the judge was in office, but not received by the clerk until the judge's term had expired, was valid: Babcock v. Wolfe, 70—.

168. Entry of judgment on confession may be made by the clerk in vacation and approved at the next term: Kendig v. Marble, 58-529.

169. Under Code, § 3894, with reference to granting temporary injunctions by a judge during vacation, held, that the judge had authority to grant such injunction at any time when the court was not actually in session, and that such authority was not limited to the period intervening between different terms of court: Thompson v. Benepe, 67-79.

Further as to judgments in vacation, see supra, §§ 139-145; and JUDGMENTS, §§ 152-158.

170. Place of holding court: Notwithstanding the statutory provision that courts must be held at the places provided by law, probate courts are expressly authorized (Code, § 2818) to appoint the time and place for the hearing of matters requiring notice: Casey v. Stewart, 60-160.

171. But such provision as to probate courts does not authorize a probate court to sit outside the county, unless perhaps by consent of parties, and any order made by the court outside the county in which the case is pending is void: Capper v. Sibley, 65-754.

172. A trial at a place not within the county where the suit was pending, had by agreement of parties during vacation, held binding: O'Hagen v. O'Hagen, 14-264.

173. Where it is agreed that a case shall be heard in vacation at a particular place, and it is heard, but at another place, the record showing that counsel on both sides were present at the argument and made no objection to the place of hearing, it will be presumed that objection to the place was waived: Johnson v. Mantz, 69-710.

174. A party is bound to take notice of the place of sitting of the court, where, by reasonable effort, he might have ascertained such fact: Jordan v. Circuit Court, 69-177.

175. Where it appears that a court was sitting at some place other than the court-house, it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that it was at a place properly provided for the purpose, if any reason appears why the court-house might not be a proper place: State v. Sheldy, 8-477, 509.

176. The legislature may by special act authorize the holding of court at a place other than the county seat: Cooper v. Mills County, 69-350.

c. Records.

As to JUDGMENTS, see that title, I, d.

177. What deemed part of: An affidavit for publication when filed becomes a part of the record: Bradley v. Jamison, 46-68, 73.

178. A motion and affidavit in support thereof filed in the case do not become a part of the record unless embodied in a bill of exceptions: Cook v. Steuben County Bank, 1 G. Gr., 447; Abbee v. Higgins, 2 G. Gr., 535.

179. A judgment entry is to be construed in the light of the pleadings and the entire record: Fowler v. Doyle, 16-534; Mayfield v. Bennett, 48-194.

Further as to what constitutes the record, see APPEAL, VI, e; EXCEPTIONS, §§ 69-76.

180. Filing of pleadings: Under the statutory provision as to filing of pleadings, held, that where a pleading is marked filed by the clerk, but no entry of such filing is made on the appearance docket, it cannot be considered as having been filed: Padden v. Moore, 58-703.

181. Thus where a petition in attachment was marked filed, but not entered on the appearance docket, held, that the action was properly dismissed upon motion, as the court was bound to consider the petition as not filed: Nickson v. Blair, 59-581.

182. This provision does not apply in respect to the filing of depositions: Byington v. Moore, 62-470.

183. Nor to the filing of bills of exceptions: Royer v. Foster, 62-821.

184. The filing consists in the delivery of the paper to the clerk and his receiving it to be kept on file in his office. It is not essential that it shall be indorsed as filed, although that would be the better practice. The indorsement is simply evidence of the filing: State v. Briggs, 68-416; and see State v. Patterson, 23-575.

185. Notice of filing of pleadings: After completed service or voluntary appearance a party is deemed in court and must take notice of what is done therein up to the time of final judgment, but after judgment he is not bound to take notice of further proceedings: Wright v. Leclair, 3-221.

186. Notice of filing of motions: Under Code, § 2914, a party must take notice of motions filed during the term. No other notice is necessary: Wagner v. Tice, 36-599.

187. Notice of a motion for change of venue, made in vacation, should be given as required by that section: Preston v. Winter, 20-264; Loomis v. McKenzie, 31-425.

188. A motion to set aside a judgment rendered at a prior term should not be heard without notice to the parties interested: Keeney v. Lyon, 21-277.

189. Return of papers taken from the files: A court has the power to enter an order for the return of papers withdrawn from the records without previous notice to the party required to return them: Wisconsin, I. & N. R. Co. v. Given, 69-581.

190. Appearance docket; indexing: The indexing in the appearance docket is no part of the filing, and the failure to index will not defeat the notice which is imparted to third persons by the commencement of an action affecting real property: Haverly v. Alcott, 57-171.

191. Judge's calendar not part of record: The judge's calendar or docket is not a record of the court: Rogers v. Morton, 51-709; Traer v. Whitman, 56-443; Case v. Plato, 54-64.

192. Where a decree was entered in vacation containing provisions not for memorandum on the judge's docket that such provisions would not be void: Traer v. Whitman, 56-443.

193. The judge's minutes kept, his calendar are not sufficient to make of record exceptions taken by a party on ruling of the court: Lewis v. May.

194. The judge's calendar is not provided for by law, and the entries therein constitute the mere announcement of the judge's mental conclusion, as to the court's action: Miller v. Wolf, 63-344; Manley, 63-344.

195. The judge's minutes upon the calendar do not constitute a judgment if it was sought, in an action on an appeal bond, to prove the dismissal of the injunction by proof of the entry in the judge's calendar "dismissed as premature," and the stipulation was not that the evidence was held not sufficient: Leacock, 59-42.

196. The entry in the judge's calendar for the guidance of the clerk, and is evidence tending to show that the case was ordered where such fact is recited: Estate of Edwards, 58-431.

197. While the judge's notes will control or vary the formal judgment, yet, in the absence of higher proof, they are entitled to their due weight as to the facts aspired or was done in the case: Kellion, 9-329.

198. The bar docket constitutes the records of the court, and can only be a part of the record in a particular case being incorporated into or sufficient by a bill of exceptions: Gifford, 57-272.

199. Judgment; entry of: A judgment cannot exist merely in the memory of the officers of the court, or a memorandum entered on books not intended to be a part of the record of judgments: Balm v. Nunn.

200. It is essential to the validity of a judgment that it appear upon the record. This is approved by the judge, and constitutes the only proof of his acts: Case, 54-64.

201. The judgment docket is intended to show merely an abstract of the judgment, and it is contemplated that it shall up from a judgment previously entered in the judgment book: Ibid.

202. Where the entry of judgment in the record book was blank as to amount of recovery except the amount of costs, held, that it was only an entry of judgment to the amount of such costs, although the judge's calendar contained an entry directing the clerk to assess the amount of recovery, and the judgment docket contained an entry of an amount so assessed by the clerk: Ibid.

203. The only legal evidence of a judgment is the clerk's entry in the record book as provided by law, and the abstract of the same in the judgment docket. It cannot be proved by a memorandum in the judge's calendar: Miller v. Wolf, 63-233.

204. Where, at the time of a purchase of land from a judgment debtor, the amounts of the judgment and costs were left blank, but were afterward filled up by the clerk in vacation, held, that as the judgment was at least valid as to the costs, the purchaser did not take free from the lien of the judgment: Lind v. Adams, 10-398.

205. A judgment "for costs taxed at $—" is valid for such costs as may be taxed in the case: Frankel v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 70—.

Further as to judgment for costs, see COSTS, §§ 53-56.

206. Judgment docket: Where the abstract of the judgment as contained in the judgment docket is introduced in evidence without objection, it should be regarded as evidence even without proof of the loss or destruction of the original: Moore v. McKinley, 60-367.

207. Where the entry upon the judgment docket was erroneous by reason of a mistake of initials, and it did not appear whether there was a mistake in the judgment record or not, held, that it would be presumed, for the purpose of supporting an attachment proceeding, that the judgment was properly entered upon the record: Preston v. Wright, 60-351.

208. Indexing judgment docket: If a party is not charged with constructive notice of a judgment by what appears in the index book, he is not bound to look further, and is therefore not bound by what appears of record; so held, where there was a mistake in the first name of the party against whom judgment was rendered: Thomas v. Desney, 57-58.

209. The entry and indexing of a judgment as A. B. v. C. D. et al. does not operate as notice to strangers of such judgment as against co-defendants of C. D., whose names do not appear: Cummings v. Long, 16-41.

210. A judgment not indexed is not notice to the purchaser at foreclosure sale of premises upon which such judgment would be a lien, and the holder of such judgment cannot therefore redeem in equity from such sale: Sterling Mfg. Co. v. Early, 69-94.

211. Even though a judgment is not properly indexed, a sheriff's deed thereunder duly recorded imparts notice of all prior proceedings: Cushing v. Edwards, 68-145.

212. Notice of judgment or order: A party is bound to know and take notice of any judgment or order that is entered in an action to which he is properly made a party, whether the records of the court are read from time to time as required by statute, or not: Finch v. Hollinger, 47-173.

213. After judgment a party is not bound to take notice of further proceedings: Wright v. Leclair, 8-221.

As to correction of entry without notice, see infra, §§ 243-246.

As to notice of filing pleadings, motions, etc., see supra, §§ 185-188.

214. Signing and approval of record: The salutary provisions as to the signing of the record by the judge are directory only, and the failure to comply therewith does not render the judgment void: Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11-558; O'Hare v. Leonard, 19-515; Childs v. McChesney, 20-481; Hamilton v. Barton, 20-505.

215. An approval of the entries at any succeeding term relates back to the time of the entry, and is as effectual as if given at that time: Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11-558.

216. The reading, approval, and signing of a judgment entry made in vacation at the next term of court does not make it valid where there is no authority to enter a judgment in vacation. Approval at the subsequent term is only allowable as to entries authorized to be made in vacation: Townesley v. Morehead, 9-565; McClure v. Owens, 31-183; Spear v. Fitchpatrick, 37-127.

Records.

217. Although the record of the judgment is not read and approved until the term after it is made, exceptions thereto must be taken at the term when the judgment is entered: State v. Orcig, 34-112.

218. The expiration of the term of a judge before the approval and signing of the record does not make judgments rendered by him void: Tracy v. Beeson, 47-155.

219. A judgment is valid though the record be not signed by the judge: so held as to a decree signed by the judge in vacation, filed with the clerk, and entered by him without the record being signed: Traer v. Whitman, 56-443.

220. Although the practice of procuring the signature of the judge to a form of decree is to be commended as tending to secure accurate records, such signature is not the signature of the record contemplated by the statute: Bosch v. Kassing, 64-312.

221. Entry by clerk without authority: The clerk has no authority to enter up a decree not warranted by the entry on the judge's calendar: Smith v. Cumins, 52-143.

222. Signature of clerk: As the court knows its own clerk and his deputy, it is not necessary that the signature of either one of them to a jurat should be authenticated by an official seal: Finn v. Rose, 12-565.

223. Correction of records: During all the term the record is under the control of the court, and at any time before adjournment an order of nonsuit or a judgment by default may be set aside on proper showing: Taylor v. Lusk, 9-444.

224. The court has the power at any time during the term to have the record corrected so as to conform to its ruling: Robbins v. Neal, 10-560.

225. The court has discretionary power to modify or reverse any order during the term at which it is made: Chapman v. Allen, Mor., 23.

226. The court, upon discovering an error or mistake in its ruling, may, before the record is signed, or at any time during the term at which it is made, amend or expunge the record so as to correct such mistake: Brace v. Grady, 36-352.

227. A default improperly entered may be set aside without following the provisions of statute with reference to setting aside defaults: Boals v. Shules, 29-507.

228. The power of the courts to revise, correct and change their sentences, at the term at which they were pronounced and before anything has been done under them, has long been recognized both in this country and in England, and any doubt as to the existence of the power is removed by statutory provision. (Code, § 178): State v. Dougherty, 70—.

229. A court may, on its own motion, correct its record; and may, upon discovering mistake or error in its rulings, expunge the first ruling from the record and make a different one: Wolmerstadt v. Jacobs, 61-372.

230. Until the record is signed, it is not conclusive upon the court as against a bill of exceptions subsequently signed: Shepherd v. Brenton, 15-84.

231. A total omission to make any entry of record may be supplied at the succeeding term: Tracy v. Beeson, 47-155.

232. Correction at subsequent term: The power to change entries, on account of evident mistake, is not necessarily limited to the term next succeeding the one at which they were made. A correction in a particular case, held proper under peculiar circumstances: Hurley v. Dubuque Gas, etc., Co., 8-274.

233. Entries made at a previous term may be altered and corrected for mistake when it is clearly made to appear: State v. McComb, 18-43, 48.

234. Where a verdict is returned but no judgment rendered thereon at that term, it is not error to render such judgment at a succeeding term to supply the omission: Shepherd v. Brenton, 20-41.

235. The statutory provision that entries made and signed at a previous term can be altered only to correct an evident mistake (Code, § 179) does not deprive the court of the power to make a nunc pro tunc entry at a subsequent term, of a fact, such as consent of parties to trial by a certain method, etc.: Buckwalter v. Craig, 24-215.

236. A nunc pro tunc order showing certain facts in regard to the impaneling of a grand jury at a previous term, held allowable: State v. Munzenmaier, 24-87.

237. By analogy these provisions will be followed in the supreme court: Roberts v. Corbin, 26-315, 331.

Records.

238. The statute provides for the correction of entries made, approved and signed at a (not the) previous term: Goldsmith v. Clausen, 14-278.

239. The proceeding by motion to correct a judgment entry reciting a judgment against a party, where it appears that no judgment was in fact rendered, is not limited to one year: Shelley v. Smith, 50-543.

240. Even though the court has the power to correct its record after the term and before it is signed, it should not do so unless it clearly and beyond cavil appears that the correction should be made. Except for the purpose of correcting some mistake, the record, at least after the adjournment of the term, is an absolute verity in all courts, including the court making it, and it is doubtful whether a court should correct it upon affidavits after the adjournment of the term, unaided by anything in the record, or within the recollection of the judge, which tends to corroborate the facts stated in the affidavits. If the court after the adjournment of the term refuses to correct its record upon parol evidence, the supreme court will not interfere unless there is record evidence supporting the claim that there is a mistake in the record: State v. Crosby, 67-352.

241. Where a judge at a term of court signs a decree which is filed with the papers but not recorded at that term, and before the next term of court goes out of office, the court at the succeeding term cannot consider the cause as still open but should enter the decree previously signed: Tracy v. Beeson, 47-155.

242. Action of the judge in ruling upon a motion for supplying an omission in the records will not be overruled on appeal where it appears that the facts which it is sought to make of record transpired in the trial before him, and that the evidence upon which he acted in correcting the record was conflicting: Stockdale v. Johnson, 14-178.

243. Notice of correction: The court may at the next term after making an entry in vacation proceed to correct or expunge it without notice to the party at whose instance it has been made. For all purposes connected with the approval of the entry the party must be regarded as in court: Carpenter v. Zuver, 56-390.

244. After the entry of final judgment in the case and approval thereof by the court, it loses jurisdiction to make an order setting aside such judgment, even during the term, after the attorney for the party has left the court: Hawkeye Ins. Co. v. Duffie, 67-175.

245. A motion at a subsequent term to modify the decree in a matter affecting another party should not be sustained, no notice of such motion having been given to the party adversely interested: Wetmore v. Harper, 70—.

246. The court cannot, after a judgment, execution and sale, so amend its record as to show proper service of notice which did not before appear, without notice of the proceeding for such amendment having been given to the opposite party: McGlaughlin v. O'Rourke, 12-459.

That a party is bound to take notice of the entry of a judgment or order, see supra, §§ 212, 213.

247. Correction of evident mistake: An amendment of the record upon motion of one of the parties, supported by an affidavit setting forth an agreement as to what should be submitted to the court, cannot be made under the authority to correct an evident mistake: Eno v. Hunt, 8-436.

248. Entry nunc pro tunc: Where the court has failed to make record entry of an essential act, such omission may be supplied upon motion nunc pro tunc, but such entries are limited to supplying omissions occurring through oversight or negligence, and cannot be made to alter or expunge a record: Goodrich v. Conrad, 28-298.

249. Held not error, in an action on a bail bond, to admit in evidence the entry of the court ordering the bond filed nunc pro tunc, it appearing that the bond had been in fact deposited in the clerk's office at and ever since the date upon which it was so marked as filed: State v. Guisenhouse, 20-227; State v. Patterson, 23-575.

As to judgment entered nunc pro tunc, see JUDGMENTS, §§ 143, 144.

250. Supplying lost records: The power of supplying a new record where the original has been lost or destroyed is one which pertains to courts of record of general jurisdiction independent of legislation. It is inherent in such courts, and is not taken away in reference to judgments by the statute with reference to an action on a judgment the record of which has been lost or destroyed: Gamon v. Knudson, 46-455.

Records.—Rules; assignment of causes.

251. In a proceeding to supply lost records it is error to make the substitution in such form as to bind a party holding under the original party to the proceeding without proof that the record as it originally existed was such as to be binding upon the new party: McDonald v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 61-192.

252. Where an indictment is lost, the court may, upon motion, substitute a copy, and proceed thereon as upon the original: State v. Rivers, 58-102; State v. Stevisger, 61-623.

253. Evidence as to the contents of records of the court destroyed by fire, held sufficient in a particular case to establish a decree of divorce rendered therein: In re Estate of Edwards, 58-431.

254. Where a pleading supposed to be lost is supplied by a copy and afterward the original is found, the substitute should be, on motion, stricken from the files: Sweet v. Brown, 61-669.

As to restoring records of judgments which have been lost or destroyed, see JUDGMENTS, §§ 145, 146.

255. After the taking of an appeal the lower court may correct its record: Maxon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 67-226; Mahaffy v. Mahaffy, 63-55.

256. The power to supply lost records may be exercised whenever the protection of the rights of parties demands it. Therefore, held, that where, after the perfection of an appeal, the evidence in the case was lost, so that the appeal could not be prosecuted, the proper remedy was to apply to the lower court to supply such record by substitution, and that the loss of the record was not a ground for a new trial: Loomis v. McKenzie, 48-416; Steiner v. Steiner, 49-70.

257. If the record of the lower court does not correctly state the facts, a party desiring to appeal should prosecute the correction of the record there; it cannot be changed or corrected on appeal: Duffees v. Sherman, 48-287.

258. In a certain sense the court below retains jurisdiction so long as anything remains to be done by it. It may order a lost record to be substituted, and do whatever else is proper to be done to enable the supreme court to review the alleged errors: Becker v. Becker, 50-189; State v. Dillard, 52-749.

259. Presumption in favor of record: The records of a court, regular upon their face, have a large degree of sanctity attached to them, and are not to be lightly overcome: Wheeler v. Cox, 56-86.

260. Where the record of the court states an act of the court, it will be presumed to have occurred in open court: State v. Hirronemus, 50-545.

See further, JUDGMENTS, §§ 147-151.

261. Complete record: The provision of the statute as to making a complete record in cases where title to land is involved applies only to cases where plaintiff on one side claims title, legal or equitable, and the defendant disputes the plaintiff's title, claiming title in himself or another: Smith v. Cumins, 52-148.

262. In a proper case for making a complete record, all that should be recorded is the original notice and return, the pleadings and the judgment or decree. Depositions and matters of evidence should not be recorded: Ibid.

263. Incumbrance book; index: An entry by the sheriff in the incumbrance book of a levy of attachment as provided for by statute becomes notice though not indexed: Blodgett v. Huiscamp, 64-548. (But as to index of judgments, see supra, §§ 208-211.)

d. Rules; assignment of causes.

264. Rules: As to power to make rules, method of adoption, publication, etc., see State v. Ensley, 10-149.

265. A rule of the circuit court in regard to filing transcripts on appeals from justices, upheld: Pinders v. Yager, 29-468.

266. It may be provided by rules of the court that defendant shall be required to appear and answer by noon of the first day instead of the second day of the term: McGrew v. Downs, 67-687.

267. Rules of court properly adopted, until repealed or changed, have the force and effect of law as applied to the rights of parties, and Process.—Condonation.

in their construction the same rules should be applied: David v. Aetna Ins. Co., 9-45.

268. A rule of court providing that witnesses subpoenaed in different cases between different parties should draw but one per diem, upheld: Meffert v. Dubuque, B. & M. R. Co., 34-430.

269. A rule of court must be abrogated in the same manner and under the same authority by which it is made. It cannot be abolished by an order of the judge resting only in parol: Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Marchand, 5-468.

270. The supreme court cannot take notice of rules of a district and circuit court unless they are embodied in the record: Lyon v. Byington, 7-422; Horseman v. Todhunter, 12-230. (This is now changed by statute, Code, § 2709.)

271. Assignment of causes: The court may, after an assignment of causes has been made, make a re-apportionment, and if the party is not taken by surprise, or thus prevented from obtaining his testimony, he will have no ground of objection: Elliott v. Cadwallader, 14-67.

272. Dropping case from docket: Jurisdiction of the cause is not lost by the fact that there is no formal continuance from term to term, or that the cause is dropped from the docket: Langford v. Ottumwa Water Power Co., 53-415.

e. Process.

273. Process defined: Davenport v. Bird, 34-524.

274. Attestation: In the attestation of a writ under seal, the seal should be referred to: Riggs v. Bagley, 2 G. Gr., 383.

275. Process issued by the clerk in which the teste recites "witness my hand," signed with the name of the clerk, is sufficient without reciting such name in the teste itself: East v. Parks, 4 G. Gr., 80.

276. Abuse of process: A party to the suit can gain nothing by fraud or violence under pretense of process, nor will fraudulent or unlawful use of process be sanctioned by the courts. In such case parties will be restored to the rights and position they possessed and occupied before they were deprived thereof by fraud, violence, or abuse of process: Reifanyder v. Lee, 44-101.

277. The law will not permit any one to gain any benefit or advantage by the fraudulent use or other abuse of its process: Patterson v. Pratt, 19-358.

278. Where an officer arrested a party outside of the limits of his county under the representation that he had a writ of attachment, and got possession of property thereunder, held, that the process had been improperly used and that the judgment obtained thereunder should be discharged: Pomroy v. Parmlee, 9-140.

279. When a defendant is put on trial under indictment for a crime charged to have been committed in this state, it is no defense that he was arrested in another state without authority and brought to this state by force and against his will: State v. Ross, 21-467.

280. The court will not, upon the trial of a criminal prosecution under the plea of not guilty, inquire as to whether or not defendant was improperly brought within the jurisdiction of the court: State v. Day, 58-678.

COVENANTS.

See CONVEYANCES, V.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

As to actions for SEDUCTION, see that title.

1. Condonation: In an action for criminal conversation evidence of subsequent matrimonial cohabitation cannot operate to defeat the husband's right of recovery even if it may be considered in mitigation of damages: Verholf v. Van Houwenlengen, 21-429.

2. The fact that after knowledge of the wife's criminality plaintiff has continued to live with her upon the same terms as before does not show assent or connivance on his part: Stumm v. Hummel, 39-478.

3. Damages: In an action for criminal conversation the fact that plaintiff has not lost the society or affection of his wife and that his family has not been broken up will not preclude recovery for more than nominal damages: Ibid.

4. Evidence of premeditated design to commit the injury against plaintiff is receivable to show the full extent of the injury: Ibid.

5. In an action the gravamen of which is criminal conversation, plaintiff cannot recover damages for the alienation of the wife's affections otherwise than by debauching: Wood v. Matheus, 47-409.

Miscellaneous.

6. Negligence: The fact that by reason of the confidence in his wife entertained by plaintiff defendant had opportunity to commit the wrong will not defeat the husband's right to recover in the absence of knowledge of the criminal intimacy or of circumstances from which his assent can be presumed: Ibid.

7. Intimacy before marriage: Where the husband married the wife upon the recommendation of defendant that she was a good girl and the husband believed her to be so, held, that criminal intimacy of defendant with her before marriage, that being her only bad conduct, could not be considered in mitigation of damages: Ibid.

8. Previous chastity: While the fact that plaintiff's wife before marriage had been guilty of unchaste conduct will not take away the right of action for criminal intimacy subsequent to marriage, it may be shown to reduce the amount of damages, and it is also proper to show, by way of offsetting such evidence, that such misconduct, prior to marriage, was confined to relations with defendant himself: Concey v. Nicol, 34-533.

9. Limitation of action: Although the fact of illicit intercourse prior to the period of the statute of limitations should not be proved for the purpose of establishing the right to recover therefor, yet it may be shown to the jury and considered by them to strengthen evidence introduced in proof of acts of adultery committed within the period of the statute of limitations: Ibid.

10. Divorce not a bar: A subsequent divorce is not a bar to the prosecution of an action for criminal conversation: Wood v. Matheus, 47-409.

11. Evidence: It is material in actions for criminal conversation to ascertain upon what terms the husband and wife lived together before the seduction, but in a particular case held, that it was immaterial to show statements made by them as to the failure of the husband to support and maintain her: Kilburn v. Mullen, 22-493.

12. In an action for criminal conversation the marriage may be proven by evidence of the parties or of others, record evidence not being required: Ibid.

13. Proof of criminal intercourse between defendant and plaintiff's wife occurring before the marriage to the latter, held admissible without the fact being pleaded, as tending to establish the subsequent acts: Stumm v. Hummel, 39-478.

14. An instruction allowing the jury to take into consideration the resemblance between defendant and the child of plaintiff's wife, claimed to be the offspring of the illicit connection, provided their judgment and experience teach them that there is anything reliable in such resemblances, that it would be safe for them to form an opinion upon, held not erroneous: Ibid.

For other cases as to resemblance of child, see EVIDENCE, §§ 813-815.

IV. PROCEDURE IN INFERIOR COURTS.

As to procedure before magistrates on preliminary information, see supra, III, 6.

As to procedure on binding over to keep the peace, see supra, III, 2.

I. WHAT ACTS CRIMINAL.1. In general.

1. Common law crimes: While the principles of the common law enter into all our criminal adjudications, where the jurisdiction of our courts has been established by law, still they do not confer upon the courts the power to try and punish an offense that is not made a crime by the supreme law-making power of the state: Estes v. Carter, 10-400.

2. Therefore, held, that as there is no provision in the statute for the punishment of the common law crime of sodomy, it is not actionable per se to charge a person with the commission of such crime: Ibid.

3. Common law definitions: Where the Code declares a crime punishable and provides a punishment for it, the definition of the crime may be determined from the common law. So held as to the offense of assault and battery which is made punishable by the Code but is not defined: State v. Twogood, 7-252.

4. Strict construction of penal statutes: Criminal statutes are inelastic and cannot by construction be made to embrace cases plainly without the letter though within the reason and policy of the law: State v. Lovell, 23-304.

5. Forfeiture: The fact that an act or omission renders a party liable to a pecuniary forfeiture, which when collected goes into the public treasury, does not render the act or omission a crime: Polk County v. Hierb, 37-361.

2. Capacity and intent.

a. Infancy, coverture, insanity and intoxication.

6. Infancy: The law presumes that persons between the ages of seven and fourteen years are incapable of committing any crime, and in a prosecution for the commission of a crime by a person between those ages, it is incumbent upon the state to show that defendant had sufficient capacity to know that he was committing a crime before he can be convicted: State v. Fowler, 52-103.

7. Coverture: A prima facie case of coercion such as to relieve a married woman from liability for her criminal act is made when it is shown that the act was done in the presence of her husband: State v. Fitzgerald, 49-260.

8. Insanity, delusion: In case of partial insanity or delusion, if the act, which is done under the impulse of the insane delusion, is one which defendant knew at the time to be contrary to law, he is punishable. The law considers him as to his responsibility in the same condition as if the facts in which his delusion exists were real: State v. Mewherter, 46-88.

9. A defendant claiming exculpation on the ground of insanity must make it appear from all the facts and circumstances of the act as disclosed by the testimony that he was insane and that the offense was the offspring of such insanity. Whilst a person resting under a peculiar delusion as to some particular matter, and perfectly sane as to other matters, cannot be regarded as sane, yet he would be criminally responsible for his acts unless they could be attributed to his particular delusion: State v. Stickley, 41-232.

10. Insane impulses: If defendant's act was caused by mental disease or unsoundness which destroyed his power to rationally comprehend the nature and consequences of his act, and which, overpowering his will, irresistibly forced him to its commission, he is not amenable to punishment; but if he is in possession of a rational intellect and allowed his passion to escape control, he cannot claim the protection of insanity: State v. Felter, 25-67.

11. The doctrine as to insanity stated in the last foregoing case has been too long followed in this state and acquiesced in to be now questioned: State v. George, 62-682.

12. If a person allows a feeling of passion or revenge to so take possession of his mind as to impel him to an act of violence, he is still responsible therefor if his act was an outgrowth of passion or revenge, and not of insanity: State v. Stickley, 41-232.

13. If, on account of mental disease, defendant is not able to distinguish right and wrong, and has not a knowledge and understanding of the character and circumstances of his act and power of will to abstain from it, he is not legally a responsible being: State v. Mewherter, 46-88.

14. Mental disease, to constitute a defense, must have destroyed defendant's power to comprehend rationally the consequences of his act, and overpowered his will. An uncontrollable propensity must have been the effect of a diseased mind to shield the perpetrator of crime from punishment: Ibid.

15. The alleged insanity and the alleged crime must be connected, and the latter the offspring of the former, in order that the perpetrator of the criminal act shall be held irresponsible. Medical theorists have propounded doctrines respecting insanity which a due regard for the safety of the community and an enlightened public policy prevent jurists from adopting as a part of the law: State v. Hockett, 70—.

16. The jury must be clearly satisfied that, at the time the crime was committed, defendant was laboring under a mental disease or monomania, such as irresistibly and uncontrollably forced him to commit the crime. Unless it appears that defendant's mind was so deranged that he did not know the nature of the act, or that he was doing wrong, he is not to be held irresponsible: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

17. Evidence; presumption: The law presumes all men sane until insanity is established by competent evidence to the satisfaction of the jury: State v. Bruce, 48-530.

18. Where a condition of insanity is shown to exist, it will be presumed to continue until the contrary is shown by evidence or presumptions arising on the facts of the case: State v. Jones, 64-849, 860.

19. Inquiry as to the conduct and appearance of accused, as indicating insanity, should not be limited to the time of the alleged crime. Conduct, language and appearance of accused previous to that time may be shown, though their weight as evidence of sanity or insanity diminishes as they recede in time. Where such evidence is introduced in connection with the opinions of witnesses it may be considered as bearing upon the value of the opinions and also on the independent question of insanity: Ibid.

20. While insanity may be established by proofs which are not direct and positive, yet the jury are not required to find insanity from slight evidence, but only when the evidence is of a reliable character, satisfying them that the defense has been made out: State v. Hockett, 70—.

As to evidence of insanity in general, see EVIDENCE, §§ 81-88, 384-398, 859, 860.

21. Epilepsy: The fact that defendant is subject to attacks of epilepsy is not necessarily such evidence of insanity as to excuse the defendant from responsibility. Common observation teaches that there are persons afflicted with this disease who during intervals between the convulsions are perfectly sane and rational: State v. George, 62-682.

22. Burden of proof: The burden of proving insanity rests upon the defendant and he must overcome by a preponderance of evidence the proof of sanity on behalf of the prosecution: State v. Geddis, 42-264.

23. It is not necessary that the evidence of insanity shall satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt; but it is sufficient if from all the evidence they are reasonably satisfied that defendant is insane. If weight or preponderance of testimony shows insanity of defendant, it raises a reasonable doubt of guilt: State v. Bruce, 48-530.

24. It is error to charge the jury that, if the evidence shows that the insanity of defendant was probable, it will not overcome the presumption of sanity, and that more than this is required to satisfy the minds of the jury that defendant is insane. The presumption of sanity simply imposes the burden of proof upon the defendant. It supposes an equilibrium of proof, and the party holding the affirmative is not entitled to judgment unless he places evidence in the scale which will turn it; but if the party sustaining this burden gives evidence which creates a probability, he thereby overcomes the presumption against him and is entitled to judgment: State v. Jones, 64-349.

Further as to burden of proving insanity, see infra, §§ 1600-1604.

25. Intoxication: Unless the intoxication of defendant at the time of the commission of the act was so great as to deprive him of the power to deliberate and form a guilty intent, it is no excuse or palliation for the act: State v. Bruce, 48-530, 532.

26. Evidence of drunkenness on prior occasions depriving defendant of his reason is not admissible for the purpose of showing that drunkenness at the time of the commission of the crime had that effect: State v. Hart, 29-268.

27. That defendant was intoxicated with liquor furnished him by the person killed is no defense for a homicide: State v. Soper, 70—.

28. Intoxication may be shown in defense where a specific intent is necessary to constitute the crime charged, for instance, assault with intent to commit rape. It is error to instruct that drunkenness is more of an aggravation than an excuse: State v. Donovan, 61-369.

29. Held, also, that evidence of intoxication was admissible where defendant accused of burglary sought by proof of intoxication to show that the breaking and entering was not with an intent to commit a crime: State v. Bell, 29-316; State v. Maxwell, 42-208.

b. Intent; ignorance or mistake.

30. Presumption of intent: Malice is presumed from the commission of an act wrongful in itself and without just cause or excuse: State v. Decklotts, 19-447.

31. An instruction that an axe is a deadly weapon and that the law presumes a criminal intent from the use of a deadly weapon, held proper in a trial for murder committed in that manner: State v. Ostrander, 18-435.

32. Men are presumed to intend all the natural and probable consequences of deliberate acts: State v. Jones, 70—.

As to presumption of malice in homicide, see, further, infra, §§ 1—.

33. Mistake: If one intentionally fence within the limits of a high impeded travel, such act constitutes a nuisance, and is none the less a nuisance count of the belief of the party that it is not in the highway. The fact, however, may properly be considered in mitigation of punishment: State v. 372.

34. Advice of counsel: It is no defense for one who, desiring to vote at an election, is in doubt as to the fact of his citizenship, to take advice of counsel and then, in accordance with such advice, might be convicted in a prosecution for illegal voting, if he can prove or as tending to disprove any criminal intent. But proof that he consulted others not learned in the law will not be received: State v. Sheeley, 1—.

35. Mistake where party is ignorant of the facts: Where there is a general inhibition upon acts of a certain class, followed by a permission to act under certain circumstances, the act must be undertaken to do the act must be known that the circumstances are such that the act is legal. Therefore, held, in the case of the sale of intoxicating liquors, such sales are permitted by law under certain circumstances, but are forbidden to minors, the seller is bound to know that the person to whom sold is not a minor: Jamison v. Burton, 1—.

36. Where the statute makes the sale of intoxicating liquors to a person of a certain character, the fact of knowing the condition of the person to whom the sale is made is not essential to render the sale illegal: Church v. Higham, 44-4—; v. Sautbine, 49-650.

37. Where a person is engaged in a business that becomes unlawful or criminal under certain conditions, he must exercise his peril, taking care that his acts are lawful: State v. Probasco, 62-400.

38. Therefore, held, that under a statute providing a penalty for allowing a person to remain in a saloon, the owner of the saloon and his employees are punishable

 Defense of person or property.

ing a minor to remain therein, although the fact of his age was not known, no vigilance to ascertain the facts having been exercised: Ibid.

39. Under a statute providing a punishment for enticing away an unmarried female under fifteen years of age for the purpose of prostitution, held, that the fact that the defendant believed, and had reason to believe, that the person injured was over fifteen years of age, constituted no defense: State v. Ruhl, 8-447.

40. In a prosecution for assault upon a female child under ten years of age, held, that in order to constitute the offense it was not necessary that defendant should know that the child was under that age: State v. Newton, 44-45.

Further as to evidence of intent, see infra, §§ 1544-1558.

c. Defense of person or property.

41. Self-defense: Where a homicide is shown to have been committed in proper self-defense, there can be no conviction in any form, and the law of self-defense therefore has no place in the definition of any particular degree of criminal homicide: State v. Castello, 62-404.

42. Prevention of felony: A person may repel force by force in defense of his person or property, against one who manifestly intends, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony on either, and the taking of life in either case is justifiable. But, when the attack is not felonious, and the party assailed has no reason to believe that he is in danger of death or great bodily harm, he has no right to take the assailant's life: State v. Kennedy, 20-569; State v. Collins, 32-36.

43. Great bodily harm: The law gives a person the same right to use such force as may be reasonably necessary to protect himself from great bodily harm, as it does to prevent his life being taken: State v. Burke, 30-381; State v. Fraunburg, 40-555.

44. An instruction that, in order to make out self-defense, the taking of the life of deceased must have appeared to the defendant reasonably necessary to save his own life, held erroneous, as leaving out the feature of preservation from imminent and enormous bodily injury, felonious in its character: State v. Benham, 23-154.

45. Must be necessary: If it is not apparent from the manner of the assault, the nature of the weapon used, and the like, that the assailant intended to commit a felony, that the danger was imminent and that the species of resistance used was necessary to avert it, the party assailed is not justified in resorting to the use of a deadly weapon and using it in a deadly manner: State v. Thompson, 9-188.

46. If there is no reason for the belief by the defendant that his person is in danger of death or great bodily harm, or that more than an ordinary battery is intended, he has no right to take the life of the assailant: Ibid.

47. The killing of an assailant is justifiable on the ground of self-defense only when it reasonably appears to be the only means of saving the life of the party assailed or preventing some great injury to his person. If the danger which seems to threaten the person assailed can be avoided or prevented by any other means in his power, he is not justified in taking the life of the assailant: State v. Mahan, 68-804.

48. There may be such disparity between the parties in physical strength, and the assault may be of such a ferocious character, as that, although made without any weapon at all, it would be highly dangerous to the person assailed; but where the possession of a weapon is the only circumstance relied upon as showing that the assault was dangerous, it is not error to instruct the jury that no words spoken by assailant, however insulting, and no assault without a dangerous weapon or the appearance of one, would justify the person assailed in taking life in self-defense: Ibid.

49. It is error to instruct the jury that if one is attacked by a person not armed with any weapon of offense, and the person assailed is able to defend himself from such attack without resort to the use of a deadly weapon, or, if so assailed, he can retreat, with evident safety, or if he can call others to his aid, and that is apparent to him, these circumstances or any of them will show the absence of any necessity for killing assailant. While it is the duty of the person assailed to use all reasonable means to protect himself without resorting to a deadly weapon, yet he is not bound to act with an infallible judgment, and the facts recited, while they would be circumstances against defendant, would not be necessarily conclusive: State v. Cross, 68-180.

50. Where a defendant accused of murder sought to justify the act as done in defense of the life of another, and it appeared that after all attempt upon the life of such other person had ceased, defendant followed up and assaulted deceased, held, that the facts did not show any justification even though it should appear that deceased was the first assailant: State v. Maloy, 44-104.

51. In a particular case, held, that there was nothing to justify an assault claimed to have been made in defense of the person of another from apprehended danger, and that the court would have been justified in refusing to submit the question of self-defense to the jury: Ibid.

52. Danger must be real and immediate: Even if the person acting in defense of the life of another believes that assailant is going to procure a weapon for the purpose of continuing the assault, this will not justify the former in running after him and voluntarily placing himself in the way of peril. The party should wait to see whether there was any such peril before making the assault in self-defense: Ibid.

53. A person assaulted is not justified in killing his assailant in self-defense unless such killing was to all reasonable appearances necessary to preserve his own life or prevent great bodily harm: State v. Middleham, 62-150.

54. To justify the taking of human life on the ground of self-defense, there must be such appearance of an impending danger as that the killing of the assailant reasonably seems to be the only means of preventing the threatened injury: State v. Shelton, 64-333.

55. It is not error to confine the jury, in considering the question as to self-defense, to a case where it is absolutely necessary or reasonably seems to be absolutely necessary to do the act for the preservation of life, etc.: State v. Crawford, 66-318.

56. Nor is it erroneous to direct the jury that defendant is excusable if he acted as an ordinarily courageous man would have done under the same circumstances: Ibid.

57. Apprehension of danger; reasonable belief: Where defendant attempts to show that he was acting in self-defense, the charge of the court should direct the jury to ascertain whether all the circumstances in the evidence show an intention on the part of the assailant to take life or inflict some dreadful bodily harm. In such case the party assailed might lawfully take the life of the assailant, provided he used all the means within his power to save himself or prevent the assault, such as retreating if practicable, or by disabling his adversary, if he might do so, and it would be well to add that if the defendant had reasonable ground to believe that his assailant only intended an ordinary assault, he would not be justified in taking the life of his assailant, and if, under such circumstances, defendant fatally shot deceased, he would be guilty of at least manslaughter: State v. Benham, 23-154.

58. Where one was shot while attempting to whip another with an ox gad, held, that the attention of the jury should have been called in the court's charge to the circumstances of the attack, the physical capacity of the parties, the size and character of the ox gad, etc., as important considerations in determining whether defendant was within the law of self-defense when he did the shooting: Ibid.

59. In determining whether defendant was justified in acting in self-defense, the inquiry is whether the danger was actual to defendant's comprehension, not whether it existed in fact, nor whether injury was actually intended by deceased. But the danger must be evident or actual to the prisoner, as compared with danger remote or problematical: State v. Neeley, 20-108.

60. While it is not necessary that the danger should in fact exist, there must be actual and urgent danger according to the defendant's comprehension as a reasonable man: State v. Collins, 32-36.

61. It is not necessary, in order to the exercise of the right of self-defense, that the danger should in fact be such that a party could only save his life by killing his assailant. It is only necessary that to the defendant's comprehension as a reasonable man there is actual and real danger: State v. Fraunburg, 40-555.

62. It is error to instruct the jury that if the danger be not great and imminent, and the necessity urgent to use extreme force in repelling the assault, the law regards the person using such extreme force as the aggressor, for the reason that such instruction omits the element of reasonable apprehension on the part of the person resisting: State v. Shelton, 64-333.

63. It is for the jury, and not for defendant, to judge of the apprehension of danger. The question is, whether defendant, as an ordinarily prudent and cautious man, had reason to apprehend loss of life or great bodily harm: State v. Abarr, 39-185.

64. The question is, not whether defendant was able, from the circumstances, to form a correct judgment as to the danger, but whether the facts as they appeared justified a reasonable belief of actual necessity; not what conclusion defendant drew from the circumstances, but what inference ought in reason to have been drawn: State v. Sterrett, 68-76; State v. Archer, 69-420.

65. An instruction that defendant was not justified in taking life in self-defense, unless he believed that the deceased intended to take his life, held proper and not materially different from the usual instruction as to having reasonable ground to believe. It must be assumed that what a person has reasonable ground to believe he does believe, and conversely, as to what a person does not believe, there is to his mind a lack of reasonable ground to believe: State v. Donnelly, 69-705.

66. Where defendant seeks to show self-defense in a prosecution for homicide, it is not proper to admit evidence of a particular physical weakness of deceased, by reason of which he was not as strong as his appearance would indicate, where the fact of such physical weakness did not appear to have been known to defendant: State v. Cross, 68-180.

67. Use of deadly weapon: Instructions as to when a person assaulted would be justified in using a deadly weapon in self-defense, considered and approved: State v. Sullivan, 51-142.

68. The facts of a particular case held not to support the plea that the killing was justifiable as in self-defense: Ibid.

69. In case of mutual combat: One who seeks to bring on a quarrel cannot avail himself of the plea of self-defense, if he takes the life of the other person engaged in the quarrel: Ibid.

70. A man may not kill another, even in combat, unless such killing shall be necessary for his self-defense. If there is no necessity, real or apparent, he may be guilty of murder in the second degree, even though he entered the combat with no intent to kill: State v. Morphy, 33-270.

71. An instruction that defendant could not excuse a killing as in self-defense if he sought deceased with a view to provoke a difficulty or bring on a quarrel, held correct: State v. Stanley, 33-526.

72. If one invite or provoke an assault to be made on himself, for the purpose of securing a pretext or opportunity for the killing of the assailant, the assault will furnish no justification or excuse for the killing: State v. Cross, 68-180.

73. Change of conduct; burden of proof: After entering a combat there may be a change of conduct or action on the part of the person engaged therein, such as to entitle him to claim that killing afterwards committed was in self-defense, but the burden of proof as to such change of conduct or action would be upon him: Ibid.

74. If it appears that defendant, with a loaded weapon, sought deceased with a view of provoking a difficulty or with the intention of having an affray, and the difficulty did ensue, he cannot, without some proof of change of conduct or action, excuse the homicide upon the ground that the deceased fired the first shot. If it appears that the prisoner did not exercise the intention of withdrawing from the combat sought by him, but that by seeking and continuing therein he brought upon himself the necessity of killing deceased, he cannot be regarded as acting in self-defense: State v. Neeley, 20-108.

75. Duty to retreat: The rule requiring the person assaulted to retreat before he will be justified in using a deadly weapon in self-defense does not apply where the party assaulted is in his own habitation: State v. Middleham, 62-150.

76. The right to take life in self-defense does not arise even in case of an attempt on the part of the assailant to commit a felony or inflict great bodily injury, if the person assailed can manifestly secure his safety by retreating. In such case it is not necessary to take the life of the assailant to prevent the consummation of the felony attempted: State v. Donnelly, 69-705.

 Defense of person or property.

77. Where a person is assaulted with a deadly weapon he is not required to fly from his adversary and go to the wall before he can justify the taking of the life of such adversary in self-defense: Tweedy v. State, 5-433.

78. In defending person, habitation, or property, against one who manifestly intends and endeavors by violence and surprise to commit a known felony on either, the person assailed is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he finds himself out of danger: State v. Collins, 32-36.

79. Defense of others: Where defendant claimed to have been one of a party assailed by a hostile party with deadly weapons, and that the killing was in self-defense, held, that the jury should have been instructed that defendant, if he had well grounded apprehension that their lives were in danger, was authorized to defend his associates, even to the extent of taking the lives of the assailants, and that it was error to confine instructions as to self-defense to the defense of defendant's own person: State v. Westfall, 49-328.

80. A master may do that to protect his apprentice which another party could not do without being the assailant or giving considerable provocation for an assault: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

81. In cases of trespass: A party cannot justify an assault as made in protection of property upon mere fear or suspicion of an encroachment: McAuley v. State, 3 G. Gr., 435.

82. A bare trespass against the property of another, not his dwelling, is not a provocation sufficient to warrant the owner in using a deadly weapon in its defense, and if he does so, and kills the trespasser, it is murder, although the killing be actually necessary to prevent the trespass. If it appears that the intention was not to take life, the offense may be extenuated and be no more than manslaughter. If the killing be done in passion or heat of blood, it may be manslaughter but cannot be less: State v. Vance, 17-138.

83. A party has no right to prevent or resist a trespass which would not amount to more than a misdemeanor by means calculated to endanger life or inflict great bodily harm, and he will be civilly liable for any injury thereby committed, even to a person trespassing or committing a misdemeanor: Hooker v. Miller, 37-613.

84. An assault with a revolver cannot be justified on the ground that the person assaulted was a trespasser and the purpose of the assault was to remove the trespasser from the premises. An attempt to use such a weapon for such purpose is unlawful: State v. Montgomery, 65-483.

85. A party is not precluded from availing himself of the plea of self-defense for the reason alone that the assault upon him was provoked by his trespass, that trespass not having been created for the purpose of provoking the assault nor with the knowledge or expectation that it would have that effect: State v. Archer, 69-420; State v. Perigo, 70-.

86. Resistance to officer: The right to use force in defense of one's person and property does not authorize the defendant in execution to resist forcibly an officer in the discharge of his duty: Cokely v. State, 4-477.

87. Burden of proof in cases of self-defense: Proof of the homicide will not throw upon defendant the burden of proving, by preponderance of evidence, excuse or justification arising from self-defense, where such excuse or justification is apparent from the evidence of the prosecution or from the circumstances attending the homicide: Tweedy v. State, 5-433.

88. Where defendant undertakes to establish that the homicide for which he is on trial was committed in self-defense, it is error to instruct the jury that the burden of proof is upon him to show that he did it in self-defense. He is entitled to acquittal if he shows by the facts attending the commission of the offense, as appearing from his own evidence or that of the prosecution, that there is a reasonable doubt that his act was wilful: State v. Porter, 34-131.

89. Where there is evidence tending to show that the defendant acted in self-defense, the jury should be instructed that the burden of proof is on the state to show, from the circumstances attending the commission of the offense, that the homicide was not committed in self-defense: State v. Fowler, 52-103; State v. Cross, 68-180.

90. Evidence of character of deceased: Where defendant, charged with felonious homicide, attempts to show that he acted in self-defense, he may introduce evidence to prove that deceased was of a quarrelsome and violent disposition or character: State v. Graham, 61-608.

91. The rule allowing the quarrelsome and dangerous character of deceased to be shown in evidence as bearing upon the question of self-defense cannot be extended to permit evidence that the manner of deceased was reckless: State v. Middleham, 62-150.

92. Evidence of particular fights and quarrels of deceased is not admissible as showing his character as bearing upon the question of self-defense: State v. Abarr, 39-185.

93. Threats: Evidence of threats by deceased against defendant are only competent when it appears that they were made in the presence of or communicated to defendant: State v. Sullivan, 51-142.

94. Evidence of threats made by deceased against defendant in prior quarrels, and of his conversations and conflicts with others, held not competent: Ibid.

95. Evidence of threats: The testimony of a magistrate before whom defendant had been bound over to keep the peace toward deceased as to such proceedings and as to threats made, etc., held competent as to the threats and as to the arrest and proceedings for the purpose of identifying the time and explaining the circumstances under which the threats were made: Ibid.

96. Where defendant attempted to justify an assault resulting in death on the ground of defense of the life of another, held, that evidence of previous threats by deceased against the life of the person assaulted, which were not communicated nor known to defendant, were not admissible: State v. Maloy, 44-104.

97. The decided weight of authority is to the effect that threats uncommunicated are inadmissible. The one exception to the rule seems to be that where evidence has been given making it a question whether defendant perpetrated the act charged in defense of his person against an attempt to murder him or inflict some great bodily harm upon him, violent threats made by deceased against defendant may be proved, though not communicated: State v. Elliott, 45-486.

98. State of feeling: While knowledge of previous threats and of a violent and dangerous natural disposition on the part of deceased may be shown to have been communicated to defendant previous to the homicide, it is not proper to show the communication to him of the fact that deceased knew of defendant's having been engaged in a criminal prosecution against him and that he was much incensed about it, and was a quick-tempered and very powerful man: State v. Cross, 68-180.

99. Angry appearance of deceased immediately preceding the encounter in which the homicide was committed, claimed to be in self-defense, held admissible: Ibid.

100. But held, that the angry appearance of deceased at an interview with defendant three years previous to the homicide was not admissible: Ibid.

101. The fact of newspaper comments having been made with reference to a criminal prosecution against deceased, in which defendant testified against decedent before the grand jury, is not admissible in evidence: Ibid.

102. The fact that defendant testified against deceased before the grand jury is not competent evidence as bearing upon the question whether, in taking the life of deceased, defendant was acting in self-defense. Such evidence would not tend to show the character and extent of the hostility of deceased, even in connection with evidence tending to show an attack of deceased upon defendant, and therefore would not tend to show the character of the attack: Ibid.

103. Ill-will of deceased toward defendant and former quarrels between them cannot be considered in determining whether defendant was justified in believing himself in such peril that he was warranted in using a deadly weapon in self-defense: State v. Sullivan, 51-142.

104. Evidence: In a prosecution for murder committed in a general fight between hostile parties, where self-defense was claimed, held, that the fact that on previous occasions the party to which defendant belonged had sought to avoid quarrels and conflicts with the other party, should have been admitted: State v. Westfall, 49-328.

Negligence or recklessness.—Principal and accessory.

105. In such case, held, also, that evidence offered by defendant that the members of the opposite party had been drinking should have been admitted: Ibid.

106. Where defendant sought to show self-defense as an excuse for using a deadly weapon in a manner causing bodily injury, to protect himself against injuries anticipated by reason of threats, held, that it was not proper for his counsel to ask him, while a witness, what he had done between the time that the threats were made and the meeting at which the injury was inflicted, to prevent the party making the threats from putting such threats into execution: State v. Noble, 66-541.

107. On a trial for murder, held proper to allow a witness to state complaints made by deceased to him against defendant in connection with the fact that he told defendant of such complaints, and defendant's answer thereto: State v. Moelchen, 53-810.

d. Negligence or recklessness.

108. Recklessly shooting into a crowd and wounding some one not intended is criminal: State v. Myers, 19-517.

109. If one fires a gun recklessly or heedlessly and kills another, the offense will be at least manslaughter, though the weapon be pointed in the direction of deceased by accident, with no design to wound or kill. If the act is likely to kill deceased or persons generally, and death ensues, the crime is murder or manslaughter according to the degree of deliberation: State v. Vance, 17-138.

And see further, infra, §§ 186-189.

3. Degree of connection with the act; principal and accessory; combination.

110. Principal and accessory: To constitute a principal in the second degree there must be a participation in the act committed, and also presence either actual or constructive. Mere presence without participation will not be sufficient: State v. Farr, 83-553.

111. A person who is present aiding and abetting others who actually commit the assault is himself guilty with the others although he does not himself actually strike: State v. McClintock, 8-208.

112. One who is actually present aiding or abetting the deed, or is constructively present, as by keeping watch at a distance to prevent surprise or the like, is guilty as principal of any act done in pursuance of the original design: State v. Nash, 7-847, 385.

113. Evidence that defendant knew that horses were to be stolen and went to the place, or near by, and was in position to give the alarm, and also that before the stealing he agreed to take care of the families of the felons while they were disposing of the property, held sufficient to warrant his conviction as an accessory: State v. Stanley, 48-221.

114. An accessory before the fact is liable for all that ensues upon the execution of the unlawful act contemplated, but not for a crime not contemplated by him nor necessarily involved in the completion of the act but intentionally committed by the principal. Therefore, held, that an accessory who rowed the principals ashore in a boat, for the purpose of assisting them in robbing the safe of a mill, was not accessory to the crime of robbery committed by such principals in knocking down and taking money from the night watchman in charge of the mill: State v. Lucas, 55-321.

115. In a particular case, held, that the jury were warranted in finding that defendant was accessory to the crime of robbery committed in the prosecution of a conspiracy to commit burglary: State v. Lucas, 57-501.

116. In order to render a party liable as accessory to a crime, the evidence must with reasonable certainty point out the particular crime as to which he is accessory and that defendant had knowledge of and aided in its commission. Knowledge of the crime obtained after its commission is not sufficient: State v. Clouser, 69-813.

117. Under the statutes prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors except for specified purposes by persons having permits, no penalty being prescribed for the purchase of such liquor from a person illegally selling, such purchaser is not guilty of a crime in such sense that he may be excused from testifying as to the purchase, on the ground that he would thereby criminate himself: Wakeman v. Chambers, 69-169.

118. In view of the statutory provision (Code, § 4314) which abolishes the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and directs that all persons concerned in the commission of a public offense, or aiding and abetting in the commission thereof, although not present, must be indicted, tried, and punished as principals, held, that under an ordinary indictment charging the commission of a crime, the defendant might be proved guilty of aiding and abetting in such commission: State v. Hessian, 58-68; Bonsell v. United States, 1 G. Gr., 111.

119. Under this statute, all persons concerned in the commission of a public offense, including aiders and abettors, are guilty as principals: State v. Brown, 25-561; State v. Thornton, 26-79.

120. Under such statutory provision, two or more may be jointly indicted for a criminal act which is of such nature that it can be actually committed by but one person: State v. Comstock, 46-265.

121. Liability for acts of confederates: Where two persons engage in an unlawful act, such as the resisting of an officer, each is accountable, not only for his own acts but for the acts of the other done in the execution of the unlawful purpose, and the presumption of malice and the consequences of the crime attach equally to both: State v. Zeibert, 40-169.

122. If two persons engage in an assault and aid each other therein, each is responsible for whatever is done by the other, also for the consequences resulting therefrom. If they are acting together in making an unlawful assault, it is not necessary, in order to render one of them responsible for the consequences, that he should assist in striking or that he knew or supposed that the other would strike: State v. Maloy, 44-104.

123. If it does not appear that one defendant acted in combination or joint purpose with others, then he should not be convicted for a crime committed by the others, unless the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he and not some one else committed the crime charged: State v. Westfall, 49-328.

124. It is not necessary that the evidence of an unlawful combination to commit a crime should be direct and positive. It may be shown from the circumstances connected with the transaction: Miller v. Dayton, 57-423; State v. Lucas, 57-501.

125. Instructions as to liability of persons jointly participating in a murder committed in the prosecution of a common unlawful design, held proper under the circumstances of the case: State v. McGuire, 53-165.

Further as to liability for acts of confederate in cases of homicide, see infra, § 184.

126. When two or more persons combine to do an unlawful act, and declarations and acts of each, made and done with reference to the common purpose, implicate all alike, each is guilty of the offense as a principal: State v. Myers, 19-517.

As to conspiracy, in general, see infra, II, 3, c.

Admission of persons conspiring together to do an unlawful act may be received in evidence as against each other: See infra, §§ 1479-1484.

127. Acts of agents: Where a person is engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law, or keeping them with intent to sell, he is criminally liable for the unlawful acts of his servant or agent done in the course of the business; but where liquors are lawfully kept for sale with intent to sell only for legal purposes, the owner will not be criminally liable for an illegal sale by his agent or clerk, made without his knowledge or consent: State v. Hayes, 67-27.

II. PARTICULAR CLASSES OF CRIMES.

1. Offenses against life or the person.

a. Homicide.

128. Human being; infant unborn: An infant in the womb is not a human being within the meaning of Code, § 3848, defining murder; certainly not before it is quick: Abrams v. Foshee, 3-274.

129. An infant does not become possessed of independent life in such sense as to be subject of homicide until independent circulation has been established: State v. Winthrop, 43-519.

Homicide.

130. It is not necessary that an indictment for murder should allege that the deceased was a human being: State v. Stanley, 33-526, 531.

131. Malice aforethought: In murder of either degree there must be malice aforethought, express or implied: State v. Johnson, 8-525; Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

As to charging malice aforethought in the indictment, see infra, §§ 145-148.

132. Malice aforethought is essential to the crime of murder, but it is not necessary that it should have existed for any considerable length of time. It is sufficient if it existed for any length of time before the commission of the act: State v. Decklotts, 19-447.

133. Malice inferred: Malice may, as at common law, be implied in case of homicide from any act unlawful and dangerous in its nature, unjustifiably committed. Therefore, held, that death caused in an unlawful attempt to procure an abortion was murder in the second degree: State v. Moore, 25-128.

134. Persons conspiring to do an unlawful act which is a trespass only will be guilty of murder only when death results in the prosecution of the design; but if the unlawful act be a felony, or more than a trespass, death resulting will be murder in all, although it happen beside the original design: State v. Shelledy, 8-477, 505.

Further as to presumptions as to intent, see supra, §§ 80-82.

135. Use of deadly weapon: The malice implied by the use of a deadly weapon is malice aforethought, such as will sustain a conviction for murder. Malice may be inferred from the deliberate, violent use of a deadly weapon: State v. Zeibart, 40-169.

136. When a man assaults another or uses upon another a deadly weapon in such a manner that the natural, ordinary and probable result of the use of such weapon in such manner would be to take life, the law presumes that such person so assaulting intended to take life: State v. Sullivan, 51-142; State v. Hockett, 70—.

137. But it is error to charge the jury that malice is proved by the selection and use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner without legal excuse. Such fact merely raises a presumption of malice subject to be rebutted: State v. Townsend, 66-741.

138. An instrument may or may not be a deadly weapon, depending upon the manner in which it is used; and in a particular case, held, that a stick of wood might be found to be a deadly weapon: State v. Brown, 67-289.

139. The fact that deceased was in a feeble condition, so that a blow of less force caused his death than would have been required to take the life of a healthy man, even if that fact is not known to the assailant, will not constitute a defense: State v. Castello, 62-404.

140. Where it appeared that defendant sought a meeting with deceased at which the act was committed by the use of a revolver, held, that his having used a revolver tended to indicate that defendant sought the meeting with the intent to take the life of deceased: State v. Jones, 64-349.

As to assault with intent to murder, see infra, §§ 249-254.

141. Resisting officer: In a prosecution for murder in resisting an officer, the official character of the officer need not be shown by record evidence. It is sufficient if it is shown that he was acting as officer de facto: State v. Zeibart, 40-169.

142. Death from wound: If death ensues from a wound given in malice, not in its nature mortal, but which being neglected or mismanaged causes death, this will not excuse the person who gave it, and he will be held to have caused the death, unless he can make it clearly and certainly appear that the maltreatment of the wound or the misconduct of the person wounded, and not the wound itself, was the sole cause of the death: State v. Morphy, 33-270.

143. Malpractice of physician: A person who assumes to act as a physician in good faith, with good motives and honest intentions, however erroneous the course of treatment he adopts, is not to be held criminally liable if death results from such treatment: State v. Schulz, 55-628.

144. Indictment: It is not necessary that an indictment for murder should specifically charge, as at common law, that the defendant murdered the deceased. The use of other words of the same import will be sufficient: State v. O'Neil, 23-272.

145. Although the indictment must charge that the killing was done with malice aforethought, it is not essential that these identical words be used. It is sufficient if words are used of the same import, or if it clearly appears from the language used that malice aforethought is charged, or can, without doubt, be implied: State v. Thurman, 66-698.

146. Therefore, where the indictment charged murder in the second degree, committed by the administration of drugs and the use of an instrument for the purpose of procuring an abortion, and charged these acts as maliciously done, and with the specific intent to produce an abortion, held, that malice aforethought was sufficiently charged: Ibid.

147. In an indictment for murder under our statute it is necessary to charge that the homicide was done with malice aforethought: State v. Newberry, 26-467.

148. Words used in the indictment in a particular case, held to be equivalent to the expression "malice aforethought:" State v. Neeley, 20-108.

149. In an indictment for murder it is sufficient to aver that the wound was inflicted on the person of deceased, that his death was caused by it, and that the act was within the jurisdiction of the court. The wound need not be more particularly described: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286.

150. Murder in first degree: The distinctive peculiarity of murder in the first degree, as defined by statute, is that it must be accompanied with the premeditated intention to take life. The killing must be premeditated. Wherever, then, in case of deliberate homicide, there is a specific intention to take life, the offense, if consummated, is murder in the first degree. If there is not a specific intention to take life, it is murder in the second degree: State v. Gillick, 7-287, 311.

151. An intention to take life may be presumed from the use of a deadly weapon in a manner in which death would most likely ensue, and proof of such a killing is primary evidence that it is wilful, deliberate and premeditated: Ibid.

152. Premeditation implies more than deliberation. It means to meditate and deliberate before concluding to do the deed; not only to wilfully take life, but to predetermine, to contrive by previous meditation: State v. Johnson, 8-525.

153. The distinctive peculiarity constituting murder in the first degree is that it should be accompanied with a premeditated determination to take life. The killing must be premeditated, but no specific time is required for premeditation or deliberation: Ibid.

154. The intent must have preceded the killing long enough to admit of premeditation and deliberation. They need not have existed for any particular length of time, if previously formed and continuing until the killing: State v. Soper, 70—; State v. Hockett, 70—.

155. It is not sufficient to charge murder in the first degree that the indictment alleges the killing as wilful and premeditated only: State v. Boyle, 28-522.

156. The indictment must charge that the killing was wilful, deliberate and premeditated. The allegation that the assault was so will not suffice: State v. Knouse, 29-118; State v. Thompson, 31-393.

157. So, an indictment charging that the assault was wilful, deliberate and premeditated, and that the blow from which deceased died was wilful, deliberate and premeditated, but not charging that it was dealt for the purpose of killing, or that the killing itself was wilful, does not charge murder in the first degree: State v. McCormick, 27-403; State v. Watkins, 27-415.

158. The facts to bring the case within the first degree of murder must be set out. Naming the offense in the introductory and closing portions of the indictment as murder in the first degree will not cure the defect. An indictment which would be sufficient at common law for murder is not necessarily sufficient to charge murder in the first degree under the statute: Ibid.

159. To constitute the crime of murder in the first degree, it is essential that the killing be done with malice aforethought; that it be done wilfully, and also that it be done deliberately and premeditatedly; but if it is charged and proven that the wounds were inflicted with specific intent to kill, and also that they were inflicted deliberately and premeditatedly, it is not necessary that it be charged and proven that the intent to kill was deliberate and premeditated: State v. Shelton, 64-333.

Homicide.

160. A wilful killing is simply an intentional killing, and nothing more is necessary to make the killing wilful except the intended result of the act. It is not necessary, therefore, to charge that the killing was wilful where it is charged that the act causing the homicide was done with the specific intent to kill and murder: State v. Townsend, 66-741.

161. It is not necessary in charging murder in the first degree to use the precise language of the statute. It is sufficient if the words used are fully equivalent: Ibid.

162. An indictment charging an assault with intent to kill, wilfully, etc., and that defendant did thereby, wilfully, etc., inflict a mortal wound of which the deceased then and there did die, sufficiently alleges murder in the first degree although there is no averment that the killing was done wilfully, etc.: State v. Stanley, 38-526.

163. Proof of design to kill at the time of killing would show malice aforethought, but would not show premeditation or deliberation: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

164. The proof of killing, without more, does not raise the presumption that such killing was wilful, deliberate and premeditated: State v. McCormick, 27-402.

165. Whether, in case the killing is committed in the perpetration or intent to perpetrate some of the felonies mentioned by the statute, it should be charged as wilful, deliberate and premeditated, quære: Ibid.

166. Where death is caused by the administration of poison, the crime will be murder if the poison is unlawfully administered and without a good intention. Such administration of poison constitutes the required deliberation, premeditation and intent to kill, and it is immaterial whether or not there is a specific intent to kill: State v. Wells, 61-629.

167. The expression "lying in wait" used in the statute in defining murder in the first degree means lying in ambush or concealment: State v. Cross, 68-180.

168. The jury cannot find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree when the indictment is only sufficient to charge defendant with murder in the second degree: Fouts v. State, 4 G. Gr., 500.

169. It is prejudicial error to put a party on trial for murder in the first degree under an indictment charging only murder in the second degree, although the party is only convicted of the lesser offense: State v. Boyle, 28-522; State v. Knouse, 29-118.

170. Where, on an indictment not sufficient to charge murder in the first degree, the defendant was found guilty in that degree, and defendant on appeal asked that the sentence be modified to one which would be proper under the indictment for the second degree, the court so reduced the sentence: State v. McCormick, 27-402.

171. But where, in a similar case, defendant denied the sufficiency of the evidence to establish his guilt in any degree, and demanded a new trial, held, that he was entitled thereto: State v. Watkins, 27-415.

That it is error to put a defendant on trial for a higher crime or degree of crime than charged in the indictment, see infra, § 1257.

172. In a particular case, held, that the evidence, although circumstantial, was sufficient to sustain a conviction for murder in the first degree: State v. Stanley, 38-526.

In a trial for murder in the first degree, the court should define all the degrees of criminal homicide: See infra, §§ 1209-1217.

173. Murder in second degree: A specific intention to kill is not essential to constitute murder at common law, nor under our statute, to constitute murder in the second degree: State v. Decklotts, 19-447; State v. Morphy, 38-270; State v. Mewherter, 46-88.

174. An allegation that defendant caused death by acts intended to produce miscarriage when not necessary to save life, sufficiently charges murder in the second degree: State v. Leeper, 70—.

175. Evidence held not sufficient to support a verdict of murder in the second degree: State v. Havercamp, 54-350.

176. Degree of offense to be determined by jury: Under the statute requiring the jury to determine by their verdict the degree of the offense on a trial for murder, held, that a verdict of "guilty as charged in the indictment" was fatally defective as not sufficiently ascertaining the degree of the offense although the indictment charged murder in the first degree: State v. Moran, 7-236.

177. Where defendant was charged with committing murder in the perpetration of robbery and burglary, and the verdict of the jury was "guilty as charged in the indictment," held, that this was a sufficient finding of the degree of the crime and was a conviction of murder in the first degree: State v. Weese, 53-92.

178. The jury may, if they do not find the defendant guilty of murder in either degree, convict him of manslaughter: Gordon v. State, 3-410.

179. The provision that the jury may determine whether the punishment for murder in the first degree shall be capital is not unconstitutional: State v. Hockett, 70—.

And see further as to conviction of included crime, infra, §§ 1238-1256.

180. In case of a plea of guilty, the record should show that witnesses were examined by the court and the degree of the crime thus fixed: McCauley v. United States, Mor., 486.

181. Manslaughter: The common law definition of manslaughter has not been changed by our statute: State v. Shelledy, 8-477; State v. Moore, 25-128. Further as to definition, see State v. Abarr, 39-185; State v. Hockett, 70—.

182. Homicide committed otherwise than wilfully, deliberately, and with premeditation, may be manslaughter or murder in the second degree, depending upon absence or presence of malice: State v. Spangler, 40-365.

183. A homicide committed in sudden passion or heat of blood, without premeditation and without malice, is not murder in the second degree, but manslaughter: Ibid.; State v. Decklotts, 19-447.

184. Great provocation may reduce a homicide to manslaughter, but can never render it justifiable or excusable: State v. Vance, 17-188.

185. Mere words will not constitute sufficient provocation to reduce a homicide to manslaughter. Held, also, that the fact that deceased had been criminally intimate with defendant's wife's sister was not sufficient: State v. Hockett, 70—.

186. Lawful and peaceful intentions will not excuse an unlawful homicide by subsequent violence, though they might bear upon the degree of the homicide. If the conviction is for manslaughter the previous intention is immaterial: State v. Castello, 62-404.

187. The careless use of a dangerous and deadly weapon, whereby a person is killed, constitutes manslaughter, although no harm is intended: State v. Hardie, 47-647.

188. Punishment for manslaughter in a particular case, where the facts indicated on the part of defendant an entire recklessness of the consequences in the unnecessary use of a dangerous weapon in self-defense, held not excessive: State v. Fitzsimmons, 63-656.

189. Where it appeared that defendant pointed a loaded gun at deceased under circumstances not justifying killing, and deceased seized it to prevent injury, and it was discharged in the struggle without any purpose on the part of defendant, held, that the latter would be guilty of manslaughter, and the circumstances of the case would not wholly excuse the homicide, but might be regarded by the court in fixing punishment. But held that if the gun was pointed under circumstances in which it might have been lawfully discharged, defendant would be guilty of no offense: State v. Benham, 23-154.

190. Where one by his negligence contributes to the death of another, he is guilty of manslaughter, and it is no defense that the death of deceased was caused by the negligence of others as well as that of the defendant: State v. Shelledy, 8-477, 507.

191. Manslaughter is not a degree of murder, but a distinct offense, included, however, in the crime of murder: State v. White, 45-325.

192. In a trial for murder, the jury should be instructed as to what constitutes manslaughter, so that they may convict of the lower offense if the higher is not established: State v. Clemons, 51-274.

As to instructions relating to conviction for included crimes, see infra, §§ 1209-1217.

193. On a trial for manslaughter, it is not necessary to define the crime of murder in either degree, nor is it necessary to define any included crime where it appears that defendant admits the killing but seeks to justify and excuse it. But if there is any evidence sustaining the claim that the blow was accidental, the law in relation to accidental killing should be given to the jury: State v. Hartzell, 58-520.

As to assault with intent to commit manslaughter, see infra, § 255.

b. Maiming; disfigurement.

194. Intent: While a specific intent to disfigure is an essential element of the crime,

Rape.

yet such intent may be inferred or presumed if the act is done deliberately, and the disfigurement is reasonably to be apprehended as the natural and probable consequence of the act: State v. Jones, 70—.

195. Assault with intent to disfigure: Where an assault is made with intention of committing a bodily injury which will constitute a disfigurement, no other intention to disfigure need be proven: State v. Clark, 60-196.

c. Rape.

196. What constitutes: The force necessary on the one hand, and the resistance required on the other, to constitute the crime, depend upon the relative mental and physical strength of the parties and the circumstances surrounding them: State v. Tarr, 28-397.

197. Where a female was imbecile, and the prisoner, knowing such fact (which might be inferred from his having had some conversation with her), used some force, and there was nothing to indicate consent on her part, held, that the act would be considered to have been against her will, and that in such case actual opposition or dissent need not be shown: Ibid.

198. It seems that a defendant might, under the statutory definition, be convicted of the crime of rape, committed upon a woman so destitute of mind that she was incapable of consent, without proof of any resistance on her part: State v. Atherton, 50-189.

199. By statute, the criminal knowledge and abuse of a female child under the age of ten years is rape, and an assault with intent to commit such crime is an assault with intent to commit rape. The fact that defendant does not know that the child is under ten years of age will be immaterial: State v. Newton, 44-45.

200. Where it does not appear that active resistance was made, the age of prosecutrix is important to be considered. If, though over ten years of age (the age of consent fixed by statute), she is still very young, with mind not enlightened upon the nature of the act, this consideration should lead the jury to demand a less clear opposition than if she were older and more intelligent.

Consent involves submission, but submission does not necessarily involve consent, and while in most cases such submission of the adult female would imply consent, yet the mere submission of a young and uninformed female in the hands of a strong man cannot be taken to show consent: State v. Cross, 12-66.

201. While a female over ten years of age is presumed capable of giving consent, yet the fact that a female over that age lacked puberal development may be considered in support of her claim that she did not understand the nature of the intended act: State v. McCaffrey, 63-479.

202. In a prosecution for rape committed upon a girl eleven years old, held, that though it appeared that she had allowed defendant improper liberties, yet that the evidence that she resisted before penetration was effected was sufficient to support a conviction: Ibid.

203. Two or more may be jointly indicted for the crime, one being the principal and the others accessories: State v. Comstock, 46-265.

204. The crime of rape necessarily includes both a simple assault, and an assault with intent to commit the crime: State v. Vinsant, 49-241; State v. Peters, 56-263.

205. On a trial for rape, defendant may be convicted of an assault with intent to commit the crime, and even though consent is shown at the time of the commission of the act, it may be shown to have been absent at the time of the commission of the assault: State v. Cross, 12-66; State v. Atherton, 50-189.

As to assault with intent to commit rape, see infra, §§ 256-267.

206. Indictment: The sex of the person injured in a particular case held to sufficiently appear from the language of the indictment, although not specifically alleged: State v. Hussey, 7-409.

207. The indictment in a particular case held to sufficiently indicate the person ravished: State v. Pennell, 56-29.

208. Evidence: It is not necessary to establish the non-consent or force, by proof of outcries or of a struggle, nor need actual penetration be shown by the testimony of the prosecutrix herself. But the jury may say whether, from all the circumstances, the requisite facts are shown: State v. Tarr, 28-397.

209. The absence of any marks of violence, or of outcries, etc., at the time, may be considered as against the evidence of prosecutrix: State v. Tomlinson, 11-401.

210. Absence of such outcries and complaints tends strongly to rebut the hypothesis of guilt, but is not conclusive, and the age, etc., of prosecutrix is to be considered: State v. Cross, 12-66.

211. The better rule is to admonish the jury as to the difficulty of disproving the charge, and call their attention to the fact whether outcry was made at the time: State v. Hagerman, 47-151.

212. The fact of prosecutrix making complaint is proper evidence, but the particulars of such complaint are not: State v. Richards, 38-420.

213. But the evidence as to complaints need not be limited necessarily to the fact of complaint being made. It may extend to showing what the person made complaint of: State v. Mitchell, 68-116.

214. The particular facts stated by the prosecutrix are not admissible in evidence except when elicited on cross-examination, or by way of confirming her testimony after an attempt to impeach it: State v. Clark, 69-294.

215. Therefore, held, that a letter written by prosecutrix, relating the circumstances of the alleged crime, was not admissible: Ibid.

216. Evidence that bruises were found upon prosecutrix two and one-half or three weeks after the alleged injury held properly admitted. The length of time that had elapsed would be for the jury as affecting the credibility of the evidence, but would not render it incompetent: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

217. Proof of another crime of the same character committed at a different time upon or against another person and having no connection with the crime charged is not admissible. So held in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit rape as to evidence of similar assaults at previous times upon other persons; but held, that proof of previous assaults on prosecutrix was admissible to show intent: State v. Walters, 45-389.

218. In a prosecution for rape, held, that statements of prosecutrix made on the same day on which the crime was charged to have been committed, that she had had criminal intercourse with defendant and would have it again, were admissible in evidence as tending to show the character of prosecutrix and her feelings toward defendant: State v. Cook, 65-560.

219. Evidence considered, and held insufficient to justify conviction for the crime: State v. Tomlinson, 11-401.

220. Corroboration: Under the statute (Code, § 4560) requiring corroboration of the testimony of prosecutrix in such cases in order to connect defendant with the crime charged, held, that the fact that the crime has been committed by some one may be established by the testimony of the injured party alone: but that to ascertain the guilty party it is necessary that the testimony of the person injured be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect defendant with the crime, and such as, when considered with the testimony of the person injured, shall establish defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt: State v. McLaughlin, 44-82.

221. Where prosecutrix testified to a rape committed by defendant, and that bruises afterward found upon her person were received at that time, and there was evidence that defendant admitted the criminal connection, held, that the court properly left to the jury to determine whether the injuries were received at the time of the alleged outrage and whether they, in connection with defendant's admissions, were sufficient to connect him with the offense: Ibid.

222. Evidence that prosecutrix was bruised, etc., and made complaint, would not tend to connect defendant with the commission of the offense, and therefore should not be considered as tending to corroborate the testimony of prosecutrix: State v. Stowell, 60-535.

223. The corroboration in particular cases held sufficient: State v. Comstock, 46-265; State v. Mitchell, 68-116.

Further as to corroboration, see infra, §§ 589-595.

224. Included crimes: Assault and battery is not necessarily included in the crime of rape: State v. McDevitt, 69-549.

Robbery.—Assault.

d. Robbery.

225. To constitute robbery, there must be animus furandi; compelling the payment of money which is due, by threats of violence, is not robbery: State v. Hollyway, 41-200.

226. The means used to put in fear need not be such as would put in fear one used to the ways of the world: State v. Carr, 43-418.

227. A sudden snatching from the hand of another is sufficient force and violence to constitute robbery: Ibid.

228. The crime of robbery includes all the elements of larceny from the person, defined in Code, § 9905, with the addition of the element of violence or putting in fear, and the fact that the evidence shows the crime to be robbery will not render erroneous a conviction under that section: State v. Graff, 66-482.

229. Indictment: An indictment for robbery need not in express terms charge an assault; if it charge putting in bodily fear and danger of life, it will be sufficient in this respect, the charge of an assault being thereby necessarily implied: State v. Brewer, 53-735.

230. An indictment stating that defendant, with force, etc., and by putting in fear, etc., "did take, steal and carry away from the said," etc., is not sufficient to charge this offense. It should charge a taking, etc., from the person: State v. Leighton, 56-595.

231. An indictment charging that defendant made an assault upon the person named, "and with force and violence unlawfully and feloniously did steal, take and carry away from the person of" said person, etc., held sufficient to charge robbery: State v. Kegan, 62-106.

232. Evidence that a person was robbed of a certain number of dollars in gold pieces of specified denominations and also of a certain number of dollars in silver coin, held sufficient to show that the person was robbed of gold and silver coins of denominations mentioned in the indictment: State v. Helvin, 65-289.

e. Assault; assault and battery; assault with intent to commit other crimes; malicious threats; carrying concealed weapons.

233. Assault; what constitutes: To constitute an assault, it is not necessary that defendant should have been in such position as to inflict injury on the person assaulted with the weapon used, provided it appears that he intended and endeavored to inflict such injury and had means and ability to do so, and was only prevented from doing so by the interference of others: State v. Malcolm, 8-413.

234. It is an assault to present an unloaded gun or pistol at another in a manner calculated to terrify the person aimed at, if the latter does not know or has no reason to believe that the weapon is not loaded: State v. Shepard, 10-126.

235. An indictment charging that defendant did make an assault with a certain dangerous weapon, to wit, a gun with which he was armed, etc., but not alleging that the gun was loaded, nor the manner of using it, nor that it was pointed or discharged, held sufficient to charge an assault: Ibid.

236. An assault may be committed without doing any personal injury: State v. Myers, 19-517.

237. Assault and battery: The statute merely prescribes the punishment for the offenses of assault, and assault and battery, and leaves them to be defined by the common law: State v. Twogood, 7-252.

238. Justification: Angry words are no justification for an assault and battery. Neither is it unlawful for a party to forbid an angry person coming upon the former's premises: Thompson v. Mumma, 21-65.

239. The fact that an officer has levied upon property exempt from seizure is no justification for an assault: Cokely v. State, 4-477.

240. In a prosecution for an assault, it is not proper to ask the prosecuting witness whether he had not at a previous time struck the defendant: State v. Montgomery, 65-483.

241. How charged: Information charging defendant with inhumanly beating his own child sufficiently charges the offense of assault and battery; but the name of the person on whom the offense was committed should be given: State v. Bitman, 13-485.

242. Necessarily included in higher crime: An indictment charging an assault and also a battery does not charge two offenses. Every battery necessarily includes an assault: State v. Twogood, 7-252.

Assault.

243. The offense of maiming and disfiguring necessarily includes an assault and battery: Benham v. State, 1-542.

244. An assault with intent to do great bodily injury necessarily includes a simple assault: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

245. While an assault with intent to murder may not in all cases include an assault and battery, yet under an indictment charging the former offense, in a particular case, held, that sufficient was charged to warrant a conviction of the latter: State v. Graham, 51-72.

246. Assault and battery is not necessarily included in the crime of rape: State v. McDerritt, 69-549.

247. An assault with intent to commit murder necessarily includes a simple assault: State v. Jarvis, 21-44; State v. Shepard, 10-126.

As to convicting for crime necessarily included in crime charged, see infra, §§ 1238-1256.

248. Assault with intent: In an indictment for assault with intent to commit an offense, it is not necessary to make all the averments required in an indictment for the offense itself: State v. Newberry, 26-467.

249. Assault with intent to commit murder: Therefore, in charging an assault with intent to murder, it is not necessary to charge that the assault was made with malice aforethought: Ibid.

250. In a particular case, held, that the evidence was sufficient to show that the assault was made with premeditation and intent to kill: State v. Brown, 67-239.

251. Assault with intent to commit murder does not admit of different degrees, the intent being the gist of the offense: State v. Jarvis, 21-44.

252. The facts in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, held sufficient to show that the punishment inflicted was excessive and sentence was modified accordingly: State v. Doering, 48-650.

253. Evidence in a particular case held sufficient to show defendant guilty as accessory to an assault with intent to murder: State v. Mower, 68-61.

254. What offenses included: An assault with intent to commit manslaughter is included within an assault with intent to commit murder, and a party may be convicted of the former under an indictment charging the latter: State v. White, 45-825 (overruling S. C., 41-816); State v. Schiele, 52-608; State v. Connor, 59-357.

255. Assault with intent to commit manslaughter is punishable under the statutory provision for assault with intent to commit a felony: State v. White, 45-825.

256. Assault with intent to commit rape: It must appear that the intent of defendant was to gratify his passions, notwithstanding any possible resistance prosecutrix should make: State v. Cross, 12-66; State v. Hagerman, 47-151.

257. The intent to commit the crime of rape necessarily includes an attempt to overcome the resistance of the woman and accomplish the connection by force; and to establish assault with intent to commit rape, the evidence must show that the assault was made with the intent to use whatever degree of force might be necessary to overcome the resistance and accomplish the object: State v. Canada, 68-397.

258. Assault with intent to commit rape does not necessarily include assault and battery: State v. McDerritt, 69-549.

259. Defendant may be found guilty of an assault with intent to commit, etc., although at the time of accomplishing the act there was such consent as to deprive the act of the character of rape: State v. Cross, 12-66; State v. Atherton, 50-189.

260. Assault with intent to carnally know a child under ten years, etc. (Code, § 3861), is an assault with intent to commit rape, and in such case it is not necessary to prove that defendant knew the fact as to the age of the child. Proof of that fact itself is sufficient: State v. Newton, 44-45. And upon a similar point, see State v. Ruhl, 8-447.

261. In a prosecution for this crime, the conduct of the parties towards each other, both before and after the alleged offense, may be shown in evidence: Mallett v. Beale, 66-70.

262. Facts in a particular case, held sufficient to show the intent with which the assault was committed: State v. McIntire, 66-339.

263. Evidence of intoxication is admissible for the purpose of showing absence of intent in such a case: State v. Donovan, 61-369.

Assault.—Burglary.

264. The jury should be told that if they find from the evidence that defendant was so drunk as to be incapable of an intent to ravish the prosecutrix, they should find him not guilty: Ibid.

265. There is no legal presumption that any offense or any specific result is intended by a man chasing a woman: Ibid.

266. Under the facts of a particular case, a new trial was granted for the insufficiency and unsatisfactory nature of corroborating testimony, and for want of proper instructions as to the effect of a jest as indicating criminal intent: State v. Warner, 25-200.

267. Whether the provisions of Code, § 4560, requiring corroboration of evidence of the injured party in a prosecution for rape are applicable in an assault with intent to commit rape, quære: State v. McIntire, 66-339.

As to what is sufficient corroboration, see supra, §§ 220-223; and infra, §§ 589-595.

268. Assault with intent to do great bodily injury: This crime is sufficiently charged in an information which accuses defendant of an assault and battery, alleging that defendant wilfully and maliciously struck and beat the person injured with intent of doing him great bodily injury: State v. Carpenter, 23-506.

269. An indictment charging an assault and battery with intent to inflict great bodily injury does not charge more than one offense. The battery is simply an aggravation: Cokely v. State, 4-477.

270. When the felonious intent is shown, that which would be an assault if unaccompanied with such intent will be such when thus accompanied: State v. Malcolm, 8-413.

271. Under an indictment for this offense, defendant may be convicted of a simple assault: Orton v. State, 4 G. Gr., 140.

272. A great bodily injury is an injury to the person of a more grave and serious character than an ordinary battery, but it cannot be definitely defined. The question whether the injury inflicted in a particular case constitutes a great bodily injury is for the jury: State v. Gillett, 56-459.

273. Where a person makes an assault on another and inflicts upon him an injury of a more grave and serious character than an ordinary battery, the presumption is warranted that he intended to inflict a great bodily injury, if there is no evidence tending to show that he intended a less injury: Ibid.

Assault with intent to disfigure, see supra, § 195.

274. Malicious threats: Extortion and pecuniary advantage are not necessary elements of the crime of maliciously threatening, etc., as defined by statute. An indictment charging defendant with maliciously threatening, etc., with intent "to compel the person, etc., to do an act against his will," is sufficient: State v. Young, 26-122.

275. An indictment charging defendant with verbally threatening to kill and murder two certain persons with intent, etc., held sufficient without setting out the threatening words used; also, held, that a threat to kill two persons constituted but one offense: State v. O'Mally, 48-501.

276. In the absence of a felonious intent, it is not robbery to compel, by means of threats of personal violence, the payment of money; but such an act is an offense under the statutory provision as to malicious threats: State v. Hollyway, 41-200.

277. Carrying concealed weapons: The intent or purpose with which the weapon is carried is not an element of the statutory offense (under Code, § 3379), nor is it required that it be carried with the defendant's knowledge, or wilfully, that is, with set purpose. The obvious purpose of the statute is to forbid the carrying of weapons on the person with the knowledge of the accused that the weapon was carried upon his person, and that the thing carried was a weapon. If the weapon was carried through restraint, or ignorance, or for any innocent or lawful purpose, such fact may be shown by the defense; it need not be negated in the indictment: State v. Williams, 70—.

2. Offenses against property.

a. Burglary and other breakings and enterings.

278. What constitutes breaking: The pushing open of a closed door is a sufficient breaking within the meaning of the law to constitute burglary: State v. Reid, 20-413.

279. Entry with intent: The crime of entering a dwelling-house in the night-time with intent to commit a public offense, as defined by statute, is included in the crime of burglary, so that under an indictment for the latter, defendant may be convicted of the former: State v. Maxwell, 42-208.

Burglary and other breakings and enterings.

280. Indictment; description of property: The offense is against the owner of the building, and his name, and not that of the owner of goods, etc., therein, which the accused intended to steal, should be given in the indictment. If the name of such owner is not known, it should be so stated: State v. Morrissey, 22-158.

281. An indictment charging burglary in breaking and entering a house described as the property of a man whose wife owned the legal title, the property being occupied as a homestead, held proper, the possession being in the person named, as head of the family: State v. Short, 54-392.

282. Where the indictment charged that the building broken and entered was the property of H., held, that proof that H. was in possession as tenant was sufficient proof of ownership: State v. Golden, 49-48.

283. Burglary is an offense against the possession. At common law the ownership was required to be laid in the tenant or person in possession, and this rule is not changed by any provision of statute, although under Code, § 4302, it would probably be immaterial whether the possession was laid in the land owner or the tenant if the offense was in other respects sufficiently described: State v. Rivers, 68-611.

284. In a prosecution for burglary, it is material only to prove that the person named in the indictment as owner was in occupancy and possession of the building: State v. Teeter, 69-717.

285. It is not necessary that the indictment for burglary should allege that some one was in the house at the time of the commission of the crime: State v. Reid, 20-413.

286. Time: In an indictment for burglary, held, that an allegation of breaking and entering on a certain day, in the night-time of said day, constituted a sufficient allegation that the offense was committed in the night-time: State v. Ruby, 61-86.

287. Intent: An indictment charging a breaking and entering with intent to commit larceny is sufficient without averring that the intention was to steal property of a greater value than twenty dollars: State v. Jones, 10-206.

288. The fact that an indictment for burglary does not charge the breaking and entry as "burglarious" does not render the indictment bad. The breaking and entering with the required intent constitute the crime: State v. Short, 54-392.

289. While an indictment under § 3894 of the Code defining the crime of breaking and entering a building in which goods are kept for use, sale or deposit, with intent, etc., may be similar to an indictment for burglary, yet the use of the words mentioned by the statute as peculiarly descriptive of the former crime will be sufficient to indicate that that crime and not the crime of burglary is intended to be charged: State v. Franks, 64-39.

290. Burglary and larceny, the latter committed in connection with the former, are distinct offenses and not parts of a compound offense: State v. Ridley, 48-370.

An indictment charging the breaking and entering and also the commission of a specific crime, such as larceny, does not charge two crimes in such sense as to be bad for duplicity: See infra, §§ 982-986.

291. Evidence: Proof of a larceny committed after the breaking and entering is admissible as showing the intent with which the breaking and entry were committed: State v. Golden, 49-48.

292. The fact of the breaking and entry may be considered in determining the intent with which the breaking and entry were committed, in connection with the other circumstances of the case: State v. Teeter, 69-717.

293. The possession of goods recently stolen in connection with the commission of a burglary is not of itself sufficient evidence upon which to find defendant guilty of the burglary: State v. Shaffer, 59-290; State v. Tilton, 63-117.

294. But such possession, in connection with other evidence of guilty conduct, such as the possession of burglarious tools, etc., is prima facie evidence of guilt, sufficient to convict: State v. Reid, 20-413.

295. The mere possession of goods stolen from the building in which the burglary is alleged to have been committed does not have the same tendency to connect the person found in the possession of such goods with the burglary, as it does with the larceny, and is not prima facie evidence of guilt of the burglary; but when it is shown that the two offenses were committed at the same time, and by the same person, the fact of the possession of goods stolen at that time from the building has necessarily the same tendency to prove the person in possession thereof guilty of burglary as of the larceny: State v. Rivers, 68-611.

296. Possession of burglarious tools within a few hours after the commission of the crime of burglary may be proven as tending to connect defendant with the commission of the crime, and such evidence is admissible for that purpose although it shows in itself a distinct substantive offense: State v. Franks, 64-39.

297. The intent being made a necessary element in the crime of burglary, intoxication may be weighed by the jury in considering whether such intent existed: State v. Bell, 29-316.

298. One who receives the stolen goods from a burglar is not an accomplice in the crime of burglary: State v. Hayden, 45-11.

b. Arson and statutory burnings.

299. Indictment: An averment that defendant set fire to certain material in the store of a person named is not sustained by proof that he set fire to such material in a building owned by such person but in a room occupied by a tenant as a store: State v. Tenny, 9-436.

300. But in such case an averment that the fire was applied in a room within the store building of such person, held proper: Ibid.

301. An indictment charging defendant with burning a certain "building, etc., called a barn," held sufficient, though in fact the building was not a barn but only a shed: State v. Smith, 28-565.

302. Attempt: Under a statutory provision for the punishment of any person setting fire to any material with intent to cause any building, etc., to be burnt, held, that one who was charged with setting a lighted candle in hay and other combustible material with intent to burn was sufficiently charged with such crime although neither the barn nor the material was ignited nor burned: State v. Johnson, 19-230.

Setting out fire: As to liability in damages for setting out fire by which the property of another is injured or destroyed, see NEGLIGENCE, §§ 42-49.

c. Larceny.

303. Felonious taking: To constitute larceny, the property must have been feloniously taken from the owner without his consent, or obtained by false representations, etc. If given by the owner to the defendant by virtue of his employment as agent, servant, or otherwise, and afterwards converted, the offense is embezzlement: Ennis v. State, 3 G. Gr., 67.

304. A felonious taking is a taking without color of right or excuse for the act, and it may safely be said that there was no color of right or excuse if the defendant knew that he had no authority to take the property, and with this knowledge he knowingly carried it away and converted it to his own use: State v. Rivers, 60-381.

305. A taking from the person is not necessary to constitute larceny (a special penalty therefor being provided in Code, § 3905), and picking up money dropped by another, with unlawful intent, and converting the same to one's own use without the knowledge of the owner, is sufficient to constitute the offense: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

306. If the original possession of the property was innocent, a subsequent conversion will not constitute larceny: State v. Wood, 46-116.

307. Where an auctioneer employed to sell impounded animals sold one of them as his own, and it was taken away by the purchaser, held, that there was sufficient taking to constitute larceny on the part of the person selling: State v. Hunt, 45-673.

308. A pledgee has such special property in the thing pledged that a taking from him by the pledgor may be larceny: Bruley v. Rose, 57-651.

309. Intent: Taking property into possession with intent to appropriate it is larceny, although the property is afterward let go, the latter fact being proper to be considered by the jury in determining the intent with which possession was taken: Georgia v. Keppord, 45-48.

Larceny.

310. To warrant a conviction for larceny, the prosecution should show that possession was taken with the intent then existing in the mind of defendant to steal the property. Such intent, however, may be shown by subsequent acts and conduct: State v. Wood, 46-116.

311. If one sell or dispose of the property of another under the well founded, though erroneous, belief that he is authorized so to do, he is not guilty of larceny: State v. Barrackmore, 47-684.

312. The act of an employee in giving away the employer's property, although without authority, may not necessarily constitute larceny, if the circumstances are such as to negative a criminal intent: Mielenz v. Quasdorf, 68-726.

313. In a prosecution for larceny of two colts, held, that evidence that the sale of the colts by a former owner to the prosecutor was a mere sham, and that they had afterward been sold by such former owner to defendant, should have been admitted: State v. Waltz, 52-227.

314. A pretended claim that money taken is due for services will not constitute a defense if it appears from the circumstances that such claim was a sham and that defendant intended to fraudulently appropriate the money: State v. Bond, 8-540.

315. Lost property: To render the finding or conversion of lost property larceny, it must be shown that the person so finding and converting knew the owner of the property: State v. Taylor, 25-273.

316. The crime of larceny as to lost property consists in the original taking and not in a subsequent lack of diligence in attempting to find the owner, nor in a subsequent conversion. The omission to take the steps required by statute for the finding of the owner will not render the party guilty of larceny, if the owner was not known at the time of the taking: State v. Dean, 49-73.

317. If one picks up a pocket-book which has been dropped from the pocket of the owner, and with an unlawful intent converts it to his own use without the knowledge of the owner, he is guilty of larceny: State v. Pratt, 20-267.

318. Ownership: In an indictment for larceny of chattels in which a person has a special property or which he holds in trust, the ownership may be laid in either the general owner or the one having the special property: State v. Mullen, 30-203.

319. The ownership of property need not be shown to have been in the party from whom it was taken, if it was in his possession: State v. Stanley, 48-221.

320. In the case of larceny of property in the possession of a receiver, the indictment may properly lay the ownership of the property in the receiver: State v. Rivers, 60-381.

321. From possession of officer: Larceny from a receiver in possession of property is not from the possession of an officer, in such sense as to constitute that specific crime as defined by statute: Ibid.

322. As intoxicating liquors seized by an officer on a warrant for their forfeiture are not subject to replevin, it would be a crime under the statute providing for the taking of goods from an officer to take possession of them under such a writ: State v. Harris, 38-242.

323. What property subject to larceny: A raccoon is not subject to larceny: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106.

324. Intoxicating liquors, although kept for sale contrary to law, are subject of larceny: State v. May, 20-305.

325. "Money" and "bank notes" are subjects of larceny: State v. Carr, 43-418:

326. Indictment; description of notes or bills: An indictment describing money and notes as "gold and silver coin" and "Clark's Exchange Bank bills of the value of," etc., held sufficient: Munson v. State, 4 G. Gr., 483.

327. So, also, an indictment held sufficient which charged the taking of "a promissory note for the payment of money, commonly called a bank note, purporting, etc., of the value of," etc.: State v. Bond, 8-540.

328. So also one charging the larceny of "$180 in bank notes, usually known and described as greenbacks:" State v. Hockenberry, 30-504.

329. So held, also, where the property was described as bank bills of the amount and value of, etc., "the number and denomination of which are to the jury unknown:" State v. Hoppe, 39-468.

330. It is not required that, in an indictment for larceny of an instrument in writing, the property shall be more particularly described than any other stolen property; therefore, held, that an indictment charging that defendant took, etc., a bill of exchange, to wit, an order for the payment of money (describing it), and of the value of $20.97, was sufficient: State v. Pierson, 59-271.

331. Where the indictment alleges the value of a check charged to have been stolen, such allegation must be taken as equivalent to an allegation that the instrument called for at least that amount of money: Ibid.

332. Indictment for larceny from a bank, describing the property as seven one hundred dollar notes, of the value and denomination of one hundred dollars each, consisting of national bank notes, national currency notes, called greenbacks, and all of the aggregate value of seven hundred dollars, held sufficient as to description: State v. Graham, 65-617.

333. Evidence: A pertinent, well-connected chain of circumstances, showing that certain money found is the same as that taken from the prosecutor, is sufficient evidence of larceny of such money from him, although he cannot identify any of the particular bills: State v. Hoppe, 39-468.

334. In a particular case, held, that the evidence was sufficient to identify the bills found on the person of defendant to be the same as those charged to have been stolen from the prosecutor, the general appearance, manner of folding and denomination of the bills being the same: State v. Buckley, 60-471.

335. Proof that defendant charged with the larceny of bank notes, and in whose possession notes resembling those stolen were found soon after the larceny, had money of the same denomination some two or three months before the larceny was committed, would not be admissible in behalf of defendant: State v. Graham, 65-617.

336. Evidence in particular cases held sufficient to sustain a conviction for larceny: State v. Lillard, 59-479; State v. Day, 60-100.

337. Corpus delicti: Where the evidence in a prosecution for larceny showed that the horse charged to have been stolen was put into the stable at night and was gone the next morning, held, that the corpus delicti was sufficiently proven: State v. Rodman, 62-456.

338. Circumstantial: In a prosecution for larceny, held proper to instruct the jury that the evidence to establish the facts necessary to convict the defendant may be direct or circumstantial, or partly direct and partly circumstantial: direct, as by persons who saw the act; or circumstantial, as by evidence of facts from which the guilt of defendants may be fairly presumed: State v. Brady, 27-126.

339. Proof of non-consent: The rule requiring the production of the best evidence of which the nature of the case admits would require the introduction of the owner of the stolen goods to prove his non-consent to the taking except in cases where the property is stolen from a bailee, or some other person holding possession thereof, or where it is impossible to produce the evidence of the owner: State v. Osborne, 28-9.

340. Proof of intent: In a prosecution for larceny, defendant offered to prove by one at whose house he stopped that his acts were such as to show that it was not his intention to steal the property; held, that such offer was too indefinite and the evidence was properly excluded: State v. Hart, 29-268.

341. Recent possession of stolen property: Possession of the stolen property immediately after a larceny is presumptive proof that the party so in possession is guilty of the larceny: State v. Brady, 27-126; State v. Golden, 49-48.

342. Such presumption is sufficient to convict unless rebutted: State v. Hessians, 50-135.

343. Recent possession of stolen property, unexplained, is evidence of guilt: Johnson v. Miller, 63-529.

344. But such possession is presumptive proof only after the stealing has been proved: State v. Taylor, 25-273.

345. The possession must be recent in order that it shall be admissible in evidence to prove the guilt of the accused: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106.

Larceny.

346. What is to be deemed recent possession depends very much on the character of the goods stolen. If they are such as to pass readily from hand to hand, the possession, in order to raise a presumption of guilt, should be much more recent than if they are of a class of property which circulates more slowly or is rarely transmitted: State v. Walker, 41-217.

347. There may be cases where the possession is so long after the commission of the crime that the court will refuse to submit the question to the jury, deciding as a matter of law that the possession is not recent, but in all other cases the question is one of fact: Ibid.

348. In a particular case, held, that an instruction directing the jury that, as a matter of law, proof of possession of part of the stolen goods four months after the commission of the crime was recent possession from which a strong presumption of guilt arose, unless such possession was satisfactorily explained, was erroneous: Ibid.

349. The admission of defendant that ten months previous to the time the property is found in his possession he had no such property does not show the possession of the property to be recent in such sense as to throw upon him the burden of explaining such possession: State v. Wallace, 47-660.

350. To warrant conviction of defendant on proof of subsequent possession of the stolen property, the identity of the property should be satisfactorily established: State v. Osborne, 45-425.

351. In a particular case, held, that the method of finding the goods at a place not in the dwelling-house of the defendant, and under circumstances indicating a knowledge on the part of others as to their location, were sufficient to prevent the recent possession relied upon from being satisfactory evidence of guilt: Warren v. State, 1 G. Gr., 106.

352. Where a stolen horse when found soon after the larceny was being ridden by a traveling companion of the defendant, held, that evidence of such fact was a circumstance tending to prove defendant's guilt, and sufficient to warrant his conviction: State v. Pennymann, 68-216.

353. It seems that where the party in whose possession recently stolen goods are found claims to have bought them of a real person, naming him, or of the thief, when there was no previous acquaintance or evidence of collusion, such explanation must be negatived by the state; but an explanation by such party that he bought of a stranger is not sufficient to oblige the state to disprove the statement before the presumption of guilt will arise: State v. Brown, 25-561.

354. The person charged with larceny may explain his possession of stolen property by showing what was said to him at the time he acquired possession: State v. Jordan, 69-506.

355. Evidence of recent possession of stolen property and falsity of explanations made thereof, held sufficient in a particular case to warrant a conviction: State v. Hallett, 68-259.

356. While the presumption of guilt from recent possession, being recognized by the law, may be termed a presumption of law, it may also be termed a presumption of fact, as implying that from such fact the law will raise a presumption: State v. Kelly, 57-644.

357. The presumption arising from the recent possession of stolen goods may be overcome by testimony establishing facts inconsistent with guilt. Good character may serve in some cases to overcome such presumption: Ibid.; State v. Richart, 57-245.

358. Where the prosecution relies upon possession by defendant of recently stolen property, the defendant is not required to overthrow such presumption by a preponderance of evidence of the honesty of such possession. Evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt in his favor is sufficient: State v. Richart, 57-245; State v. Emerson, 48-172.

359. In such cases it is sufficient to authorize an acquittal if the evidence is such as to raise a reasonable doubt whether defendant honestly came into possession of the stolen goods. An instruction that the jury should acquit if the evidence left it reasonably doubtful whether defendant acquired the possession by theft, held correct: State v. Peterson, 67-564.

360. If the jury fail to find from the evidence that defendant was in any manner engaged in the larceny of the property they should acquit, although he has failed to show that he came honestly into possession: State v. Jones, 33-9.

Larceny.

361. The fact that recent possession of stolen property has not been explained in a manner consistent with defendant's innocence will not in itself necessarily establish his guilt: State v. Jordan, 69-506.

362. Possession of other stolen property than that for the larceny of which defendant was on trial, held admissible, not as showing the commission of another crime, but as contradicting the explanation made by defendant as to the possession by him of the property stolen in the commission of the larceny for which he is on trial: State v. Ditton, 43-677.

363. Recent possession of property acquired by breaking into a store-room, if not explained, raises the presumption that the breaking and entering were with intent to commit larceny: State v. Golden, 49-48.

364. Grand and petit larceny: There are not two degrees in the crime of larceny, but only in the punishment; and a conviction for petit larceny bars a subsequent prosecution for grand larceny: State v. Murray, 55-530.

365. So, also, a conviction for petit larceny bars a prosecution for larceny from the person: State v. Gleason, 56-203.

366. Under an indictment for larceny of property of greater value than twenty dollars, defendant may be convicted upon proof of a larceny of part of the property less than twenty dollars in value. The offense is the same: State v. Hessian, 58-68.

367. In a trial upon an indictment for larceny charging the value of the property as exceeding twenty dollars, it is not necessary to instruct the jury as to the difference in the degrees of the offense of larceny. They should merely be instructed to find the value of the property: Ibid.

368. The finding of the jury that the value of the property did not exceed twenty dollars will not deprive the court of jurisdiction, under an indictment for larceny, to impose the proper sentence for the lesser offense, although larceny of goods less than twenty dollars in value is a misdemeanor exclusively cognizable before a justice of the peace: State v. Church, 8-252; State v. Stingley, 10-488.

369. Where the jury are in reasonable doubt as to whether the value of the property stolen exceeds twenty dollars in value, they should only convict of the lesser crime: State v. Wood, 46-116.

370. Value of property stolen: The verdict on an indictment for larceny should fix the value of the property stolen, so that the court may know of which degree of the offense the defendant is convicted. If the verdict does not so fix the value, a new trial should be awarded: Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr., 316.

371. Such new trial will not be unlawful as putting the defendant twice in jeopardy. (Const., art. I, § 12): State v. Redman, 17-329.

372. The jury should be instructed to assess the value of the property at what it would bring in the market, and not at what it was worth to the owner: State v. Smith, 48-595.

373. The fact that the value of the property was over twenty dollars, as well as the stealing itself, must be made out beyond a reasonable doubt to warrant a conviction of the higher offense. A preponderance of evidence alone will not be sufficient: State v. Wood, 46-116.

374. The question whether the offense is to be tried as a felony or a misdemeanor is to be determined by the value of the property as stated in the indictment or information, and not by the value as found by the trial jury: State v. Church, 8-252.

375. It is error to instruct the jury that the question is as to the value of the property to the owner. The true rule is the real value of the property in the market: State v. Smith, 48-595.

376. Where the testimony as to the value is conflicting, the supreme court will not reverse the case unless there is such want of evidence in support of the verdict as to give rise to the presumption that it was not the result of an honest and intelligent exercise of judgment by the jury: State v. Scott, 48-597.

377. Venue: Where property is stolen within the jurisdiction of another state and brought within this state, the offense is punishable as larceny in this state on the principle that the continued possession of property stolen is in itself larceny. Every act of the thief in the removal of the property and keeping it from the possession of the owner is, in contemplation of law, an offense: State v. Bennett, 14-479.

Compound larcenies.—Embezzlement.

378. In an indictment for larceny the venue may be laid in any county in which the thief was possessed of the stolen goods: State v. Lillard, 59-479.

379. Recovery of stolen property: Where stolen property is sold to a third person and afterwards retaken from him by the owner, he may recover the price paid in an action against the seller, even though the seller has not been convicted of the larceny: Barton v. Faherty, 3 G. Gr., 327.

d. Compound larcenies.

380. Nature of: Code, §§ 3903-3905, merely points out certain circumstances which are an aggravation of the offense of larceny, and will subject the offender to a severer penalty. The facts of the time and place of the commission affect only the degree of punishment which shall be imposed upon the offender: State v. Elsham, 70—.

381. Larceny from a dwelling-house in the night-time and in the day-time are not different offenses; but each differs from simple larceny only in the circumstances affecting the degree of punishment, and they may be charged in the same indictment: Ibid.

382. Where defendant was indicted for stealing personal property of less than twenty dollars in value from a dwelling-house in the day-time, held, that the offense was one within the jurisdiction of the district court: State v. Dawson, 17-584.

383. An acquittal of larceny from a dwelling-house in the night-time prevents a subsequent prosecution for robbery in the same transaction, as each includes the crime of larceny: State v. Mikesell, 70—.

384. Larceny from the person: A prior conviction or acquittal of the offense of larceny will bar a subsequent trial for larceny from the person committed in the same transaction charged on the first trial. Stealing from the person is larceny and nothing more: State v. Gleason, 56-203.

385. All the elements of the crime of larceny from the person are embraced in the crime of robbery as defined by statute. The fact that the evidence shows the additional element of putting in fear, such as to make the act robbery, will not prevent the punishment of defendant in a prosecution for larceny from the person: State v. Graff, 66-482.

386. Common thief: Under a statute providing that, if a person previously convicted of larceny commits another larceny or is convicted therefor, or is at the same term of court convicted of three distinct larcenies, he shall be deemed a common and notorious thief and subject to a punishment greater than that for larceny, held, that the punishment prescribed should be inflicted when the facts authorizing it appeared on the trial of the accused for larceny, and that the statute did not describe a distinct crime or contemplate that the indictment should state the facts necessary to show the accused to be a common and notorious thief or charge him with being such: State v. Riley, 28-547.

e. Embezzlement.

387. By public officer: The statute (Code, § 3908) making it criminal in a public officer to loan, convert, use or invest public moneys in his hands, differs from the statute (Code, §§ 911, 912) providing a penalty for loaning out public funds for private purposes, in this: that the latter sections contemplate cases where no loss results, while the former refers to cases where the money is unaccounted for. An indictment under the former section should allege that the money is unaccounted for: State v. Brandt, 41-593.

388. To constitute the offense of embezzlement described by Code, § 3908, just referred to, the money must have been both misapplied and lost, and the crime consists only in converting, using or loaning so much of the public money intrusted to the officer for safe-keeping as is taken and unaccounted for: State v. Parsons, 54-405.

389. It being provided that the boards of directors of independent school districts shall elect a treasurer, held, that an indictment against such treasurer, designating him as "treasurer of the board of directors of the independent school district of," etc., was sufficient: Ibid.

390. A deputy state treasurer is an officer within the meaning of the section just referred to: State v. Brandt, 41-593.

391. One who has acted de facto as a public officer cannot deny that he is such an officer when indicted for malfeasance: State v. Stone, 40-547.

392. Conversion is established by showing

Embezzlement.—Receiving stolen property.

demand and refusal, unless a sufficient excuse is shown for such refusal: State v. Bryan, 40-379.

393. A county treasurer prosecuted for embezzlement may show that the defalcation took place at such time that the prosecution is barred by the statute of limitations, although, by fraudulent statements to the board of supervisors, he made it appear subsequently to such actual defalcation that he had on hand the necessary balance and that his accounts were correct. The rule of estoppel applicable in a civil action against the treasurer cannot be enforced in a criminal prosecution: State v. Hutchinson, 60-478.

394. The fact that the officers of a municipal corporation loaned the public funds in violation of the statute does not prevent the same being recovered in an action by the corporation against the person to whom they were so loaned or his surety: District T'p v. Calvin, 59-189.

395. By common carrier: The offense of embezzlement by a common carrier can only be committed upon property which has, within the language of the statute, "been delivered to be carried for hire:" State v. Stoller, 38-321.

396. By officer, agent or servant: To constitute the crime of embezzlement as defined by statute in case of officers, agents, clerks, servants, etc., there must exist the relation of master and servant, or employer and employee, and the property stolen or converted must have been received by virtue of such employment: State v. Johnson, 49-141.

397. Under the statutory provision (Code, § 3909) an agent of a corporation may be guilty of embezzlement, although he is under the age of sixteen years: State v. Goode, 68-593.

398. Under this section an agent may be guilty of embezzling his employer's money by actual conversion, or by secreting with intent to convert: Ibid.

399. Where the owner of a watch delivered it to another under an agreement that the latter was to trade it for a wagon and receive a certain sum as compensation for his services, held, that the relation between the parties was such that the wrongful conversion by the person intrusted with the watch constituted embezzlement: State v. Foster, 37-404.

400. The clause of the statute, "without the consent of his employer," relates to the embezzling and converting as well as to the taking and secreting therein referred to, and the fact that the embezzling and converting is without the consent of the employer should be charged in the indictment: State v. Foster, 11-291.

401. Conversion may be shown either by direct proof of the fact of conversion or by proof of demand and refusal, but mere proof of the receipt of funds and failure to account therefor on demand, while sufficient to establish embezzlement by a public officer, under provisions above referred to, is not sufficient to show embezzlement by an agent or servant: State v. Bryan, 40-379.

402. The crime of embezzlement embraces all the elements of larceny except the actual taking of the property or money embezzled: State v. Baldwin, 70—.

403. Where the taking is not animo furandi, but the property is delivered to the defendant voluntarily while he is in the employ of the owner, and afterwards is appropriated by him, the crime is not larceny but embezzlement: Ennis v. State, 3 G. Gr., 67.

404. Where an agent, in order to make his books balance and cover up deficiencies on account of sums of money before appropriated to his own use, reported certain sums as unpaid which were in fact received by him, held, that he was guilty of embezzling such sums: Bowman v. Brown, 52-437.

405. "Money or property," as used in the statute, includes bills of exchange, etc. The crime of embezzlement as there defined is similar to that of larceny, and covers cases where, by reason of the trust reposed in defendant, the act would not be larceny at common law. Whatever would be property under one section would be under the other: State v. Orwig, 24-102.

f. Receiving stolen property.

406. Merely assisting the defendant by giving him his breakfast and feed for stolen horses, knowing that they were stolen, held not sufficient to warrant a conviction of this offense. The accused must have aided in Malicious mischief.—Cheating, fraud and conspiracy.

concealing or hiding the property: Upton v. State, 5-465.

407. The fact of aiding in concealing stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, necessarily implies a felonious intent: State v. Turner, 19-144.

408. The crime of concealing stolen property may be committed as to property procured by burglary or robbery as well as by larceny: Ibid.; State v. Lane, 68-384.

409. To receive stolen property, with knowledge of the theft, is sufficient to constitute the crime: State v. Lane, 68-384.

410. Evidence in a particular case, held sufficient to support a verdict for receiving and aiding in concealing, although no physical possession of the goods by defendant was shown: State v. St. Clair, 17-149.

411. Defendant's explanations in a particular case as to how he came into possession of the property being conflicting and unsatisfactory, a verdict of guilty of receiving stolen goods was held proper: State v. Mayer, 45-698.

g. Malicious mischief; trespass upon land; injuries to animals.

412. An indictment charging in one count that accused "injured and defaced" a building is not objectionable on the ground of duplicity. The clauses in the statute (Code, § 3985), being disjunctive, either one or all the acts there specified may be charged in one count and constitute the same offense: State v. Hockenberry, 11-269.

413. Malicious injury to a church building is punishable under this section of the statute, and it is sufficient to aver ownership in the trustees, as such, without setting out the character of their title: State v. Brant, 14-180.

414. Trespass upon land: A person may be punished for the crime of malicious trespass committed in cutting and carrying away timber from school land, although the title to the land is still in the United States: Chalfont v. United States, Mor., 214.

415. An indictment charging the cutting down and carrying away of standing timber upon the land of another is not sustained by proof that defendant carried away wood being on such land: State v. McConkey, 20-574.

416. The name of the owner of the land upon which the trespass is charged to have been committed should be set out in the indictment, or, if unknown, the indictment should so state: Ibid.

417. Where the statute did not make the punishment of the offense of wilful trespass depend upon the value of the property, held, that the value of the property need not be found by the jury, as it did not necessarily fix the amount of punishment: State v. Gigher, 23-319. (But the present statute, Code, § 3983, makes the punishment less in case the value of the property does not exceed fifty dollars.)

418. Injuries to animals: An indictment alleging the malicious killing of a sow held sufficient, without alleging and proving that a hog is a domestic beast within the language of Code, § 3977: State v. Enslow, 10-115.

419. An indictment charging the maiming and disfiguring of an animal is not bad for duplicity; any one or all of the acts mentioned may be charged in the same indictment, and the proof need only cover so much of the allegation as constitutes a complete offense. To constitute the offense of disfiguring the disfigurement need not be permanent or great: State v. Harris, 11-414.

420. While mere wanton injury to an animal without malice against any person may not be sufficient to constitute the offense of malicious injury to animals, yet though the owner may be unknown, if the act is done maliciously, for the purpose and with the intent of injuring such person, it is sufficient: State v. Linde, 54-139; State v. Williamson, 68-351.

421. The infliction of a wilful and wanton injury upon an animal is evidence that the act is malicious both as to the animal and the owner: State v. Williamson, 68-351.

422. A party has no right to prevent malicious trespass by the use of means dangerous to life, or by inflicting great bodily injury, as by a spring gun: Hooker v. Miller, 37-613.

3. Cheating, fraud and conspiracy.

a. Cheating by false pretenses and otherwise.

423. False pretenses: The statute changes the common law rule as to cheats, and a person may be guilty of cheating by false pretenses, consisting of representations and acts, although no false tokens are used (Code, § 4073; State v. Reidel, 26-420.

Cheating by false pretenses and otherwise.

424. The crime of cheating by false pretenses may be committed by means of false representations. Therefore, held, that the indictment charging defendant with obtaining the signature of prosecutor to a promissory note, by means of false representations and pretenses that such note was an order for a certain number of patent churns, etc., well knowing such representations to be false, was sufficient: State v. Joaquin, 43-131.

425. A false promise will not sustain the charge of a crime under this section. There must be a pretense and representation, in fact, that is false, and which was relied upon by the party defrauded; but the fact that a false promise was combined with the false pretense does not take away the criminal character of the act: State v. Doue, 27-273.

426. So, where a party, under the pretense of having come to pay a debt, on a promise to pay the same, fraudulently procured from his creditor and got into his possession a receipt for his debt, held, that the facts constituted an offense as here contemplated: Ibid.

427. An indictment for this offense cannot be predicated upon representations which are mere matters of opinion: State v. Webb, 26-262.

428. An indictment charging that by means of false token and pretenses, etc., the defendant obtained the property described, held, to sufficiently charge that the party to whom the pretense was made relied thereon: State v. McConkey, 49-499.

429. By statute (Code, § 3006) it is made larceny to obtain property by falsely personating another with intent to convert such property to one's own use. Such a case would not be larceny at common law, as it does not involve a trespass: State v. Brown, 25-531.

430. Where defendant was indicted for obtaining property in exchange for a lot of a certain description which he pretended to point out, but it was in fact located elsewhere than was indicated and was of no value, held, that the party to whom the lot was shown was justified in believing the lot described was located as indicated, and that it was not error to refuse to instruct the jury that it must be shown that the party to whom the representations were made exercised ordinary prudence and diligence to inform himself of the truth of the representations: State v. McConkey, 49-499.

431. Also held that in such case the crime would have been complete, even if it had appeared that defendant was the owner of the lot which he pointed out as that conveyed by him: Ibid.

432. Representations made by acts or declarations intended to induce the belief that the person making them is some one else may be sufficient to constitute the crime, although not amounting to direct representations that the party's name is that of the person whom he personates: State v. Golle, 60-447.

433. False promises, coupled with false statements of fact, may amount to false pretenses: State v. Montgomery, 50-195.

434. The question is for the jury whether the false representations actually misled the person claimed to have been defrauded, and in determining that question they should take into account his age, experience, state of health, etc.: Ibid.

435. Where defendant had borrowed money on the representation that his brother was to arrive with money, coupled with the promise to use it in payment of the sum borrowed, held, that such representation and promise amounted to a pretense that he had the money: State v. Fooks, 65-196.

436. To support a conviction, it need not appear that the false pretenses were the only inducements for giving credit or delivering property to the accused. It is sufficient if they had such effect that without their influence upon the mind of the party defrauded he would not have parted with the property or given credit: Ibid.

437. If the false representations are made with the design of deceiving and thereby obtaining property, and have that effect, the guilty party cannot escape on the ground of weak credulity: Ibid.

438. Where defendant procured property by representing that he had purchased a farm in the neighborhood, held, that the crime was committed: State v. Fooks, 65-452.

439. Where a buyer acquires property by reason of statements by him to the seller respecting his condition, made to induce the sale, which statements he knows to be false, it is no defense that he nevertheless intended to pay for the property: State v. Neimeier, 66-634.

Cheating by false pretenses and otherwise.

440. Indictment: In a particular case, held, that the indictment sufficiently charged that the party defrauded parted with his property on the faith of defendant's false representations: Ibid.

441. In an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, the false pretenses should be particularly set forth: United States v. Ross, Mor., 164.

442. Sentence: In a trial for obtaining money under false pretenses, the jury should be told that it is necessary to prove that defendant made the false representations, knowing them to be false, and that the other party was deceived and thereby induced to act: State v. Rivers, 58-102.

443. Evidence; other acts: Where defendant was indicted for false pretenses in procuring a bank to accept as collateral security an invalid mortgage, held, that previous and subsequent dealings with the bank might be shown as throwing light upon the intent of the defendant and the fact as to whether the cashier was in fact deceived: Ibid.

444. Obtaining property: To constitute the crime, the person must have obtained, by means of the false pretenses, either the title to the property, or the unqualified right of possession thereof, for some length of time: State v. Anderson, 47-142.

445. Obtained an indorsement of credit on a note by false pretenses, with intent to defraud, does not constitute an offense under this section: State v. Moore, 15-412.

446. An indictment charging the obtaining by false pretenses of certain notes, designating them as property, and in a second count charging the obtaining in the same manner of the same notes, but designating them as written instruments, the false making of which would be forgery, does not charge two offenses. Such charges might be contained in the same count without rendering the indictment bad for duplicity: State v. House, 55-466.

447. That the false representations were made in another county will not prevent the offense being punishable in the county where the property was obtained. The latter county is the one where the offense was committed: Ibid.

448. Gross frauds and cheats: Punishment is provided by statute (Code, § 4081) for gross frauds and cheats, and under this provision all frauds and cheats are certainly not punishable. Slandorous words charging a person with cheating, defrauding, etc., are, therefore, not actionable per se: Lucas v. Flinn, 35-9.

449. Sleight of hand: The statute (16 G. A., ch. 102; McClain's Ann. Stat., 1031) providing a punishment for swindling by three-card monte, sleight of hand, or other device, etc., embraces any sleight of hand performance, whether done by the use of cards or other devices: State v. Quinn, 47-368.

450. False brands: The fact of making and branding, with intent to deceive, without reference to whether the articles so marked or branded are to be sold or not, is sufficient to constitute a crime under the statute providing a punishment for the false marking or branding of packages: State v. Burge, 7-255.

451. False receipts: Where an auditor gave a paper purporting to be a certificate or receipt stating that a person had paid to the treasurer of the county certain interest due the school fund, which statement was false, held, that the giving of such paper was a crime under the statutory provision (Code, § 3908) relating to the giving of false receipts, and that an intent to defraud need not be charged: State v. Morse, 52-509.

452. Disposing of property covered by warehouse receipt: Under the statutory provision (Code, § 4088) prohibiting the selling, shipping, or removal by a warehouseman or other such person of any property received for safe-keeping and for which a voucher or receipt has been given, without the written consent of the person holding such receipt, it is not competent for a defendant charged with such crime to show that the shipment or disposal of the property was with the knowledge or verbal consent of the person holding the receipt. The provision is intended for the protection of the community as well: State v. Stevenson, 52-701.

Wrongful disposal of property.—Conspiracy.

b. Wrongful disposal or conversion of property; selling mortgaged property.

453. Fraudulent conveyance: The intention to hinder and delay creditors is the essential element of the crime defined by the statutory provision prohibiting the conveyance, etc., of property with intent to defraud creditors, and an instrument such as is referred to in the statute is void (Code, § 4074): Davenport v. Cummings, 15-219.

454. To establish the crime, a fraudulent intent in fact, as distinguished from an intent which may be presumed in law, must be shown: Lillie v. McMillan, 52-403.

455. The intention with which a conveyance is made cannot render the act criminal, if no legal or equitable rights of others are affected thereby. The statute applies only to cases where some one has or may have a claim or right to the property which may be enforced at law or in equity: Day v. Lown, 51-364.

456. Selling mortgaged property: The indictment under the statutory provision for the punishment of the illegal sale of mortgaged property (Code, § 3895) should aver that the mortgage remains unsatisfied: State v. Gustafson, 50-194.

457. The consent of the mortgagee, as referred to in the statute, while it prevents the act from being a crime, does not constitute a waiver of his lien on the property: Oswald v. Hayes, 42-104.

458. It is the selling of mortgaged property without the consent of the then holder of the mortgage that is made criminal. Consent of the mortgagor given before the execution of the mortgage, that the mortgaged property may be sold, may, however, constitute a continuing consent, at least until the act consented to could properly be done, and may prevent an act in accordance with such consent from being criminal. The rule as to the inadmissibility of parol evidence to contradict a written contract is not applicable in such case. If the consent is such, in whatever way it may be given, that the seller honestly believes that he is authorized to sell the property, his honest act cannot be converted into a criminal one by the rules of evidence: Walker v. Camp, 69-741.

459. Where a mortgage of personal property provided that, if the mortgagor removed it from the county, the mortgagee might take possession of and sell it, held, that a mere removal from the county would constitute no offense under this section, and a subsequent concealment or sale would not be an offense in the county where the mortgage was executed; but it seems the offense would be committed in the county from which the property was thus subsequently taken for the purpose of concealment and sale: State v. Julien, 48-445.

460. A subsequent mortgage of the same property by the mortgagor is not void under this statutory provision: Tootle v. Taylor, 64-620.

461. Driving away stock: Under the statute providing a penalty for the driving away of stock without the consent of the owner and allowing the recovery of damages therefor (Code, § 3896), it is necessary, in order to recover damages as provided, to allege and prove that defendant had knowledge of the fact that the animal entered his drove and was being taken away: Chamberlain v. Gage, 20-303.

c. Conspiracy.

When actionable, see CONSPIRACY.

462. What constitutes: To constitute the crime of conspiracy, the accused must confederate together to do, either a criminal act, or an act which is not criminal by criminal means. In the latter case the acts constituting the illegal means must be specifically charged: State v. Potter, 28-554; State v. Stevens, 30-391; State v. Jones, 13-269.

463. In order that the object of the conspiracy may be criminal, the injury intended should appear on the face of the indictment to be a criminal one, such an injury as the statute makes an offense: State v. Stevens, 30-391.

464. An indictment charging conspiracy with fraudulent intent wrongfully to injure the character of prosecutrix by obtaining a divorce from her by making false charges of adultery, etc., does not charge facts sufficient to constitute conspiracy as against such prosecutrix: Ibid.

465. Where the conspiracy is to do a criminal act, it is sufficient if it be described by the proper name or term by which it is usually known in law: State v. Potter, 28-554; State v. Savoye, 48-562.

466. Therefore, held, that an indictment charging a conspiracy to seduce prosecutrix was sufficient, without alleging that she was unmarried and of previously chaste character: State v. Savoye, 48-562.

467. An indictment charging defendants with conspiracy to procure prosecutrix to go with them with a view of bringing about a sham marriage and thus causing her seduction, held sufficient to charge a conspiracy to commit a crime: Ibid.

468. A charge that defendants conspired to "cheat and defraud," held not sufficient to charge the crime of conspiracy: State v. Jones, 13-269.

469. Where the intended act charged is not criminal, the indictment should charge with what means the act was to be done; but if the intended act charged is criminal, an indictment charging a conspiracy to commit such injury need not charge the means intended to be used: State v. Ormiston, 66-143.

470. While the offense of conspiracy may be complete without the commission of the overt act which the conspirators agreed to commit, and it is unnecessary to charge the commission of the overt act, even if committed, yet it is usual to set out the commission of the act by way of aggravation of the offense; and where the overt act is thus charged, it does not follow necessarily that the indictment is designed to charge anything more than conspiracy, and if it does not appear that defendant was or was intended to be put on trial for anything but the crime of conspiracy, such indictment will not be defective as charging more than one crime: Ibid.

471. An allegation that defendants conspired to assault a person with intent to inflict great bodily injury charges conspiracy to assault and inflict such injury, and is not open to the objection of charging conspiracy with intent to intend: Ibid.

472. The crime is completed when the conspiracy is formed, and it is immaterial whether the object intended be accomplished or not: State v. Savoye, 48-562.

473. A conspiracy to take from an officer on a writ of replevin intoxicating liquors seized under information for their forfeiture is a conspiracy to do an unlawful act, and therefore punishable by statute: State v. Harris, 38-242.

474. A charge of conspiracy to injure the property of another will not be supported where it appears that the acts complained of were done in the exercise of an avowed legal right, the existence of which the testimony strongly, if not conclusively, establishes, and that they were not done as a result of a conspiracy to wrongfully injure said property: State v. Flynn, 28-26.

475. The combination and agreement of the parties to commit a crime may be proven by the circumstances connected with the transaction which is the subject of the accusation. In other words, conspiracy may be shown by circumstantial evidence: State v. Sterling, 84-443.

476. An indictment for a conspiracy to "rob and steal" is not bad as charging more than one offense. Even should the conspiracy contemplate the commission of several distinct felonies, the crime would be single: Ibid.

As to how far the acts and declarations of one conspirator are receivable as against another, see infra, §§ 1479-1484.

4. Forgery and counterfeiting.

477. Forgery defined: Forgery is the feloniously making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, of any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability: State v. Johnson, 26-407; State v. Thompson, 19-299.

478. In a prosecution for forgery in altering a receipt, the fact that defendant could not reap any personal advantage from the alteration is not a defense; the making or alteration of any writing with a fraudulent intent, whereby another may be prejudiced, is forgery: State v. Wooderd, 20-541.

479. The criminal intent, inferred from forging an instrument and using it in support of a claim, cannot be negated by proof that the claim is a just one: Ibid.

480. In order to constitute forgery it is not necessary that the signature of the instrument be false; a fraudulent alteration, making the instrument such as was not signed by the maker, is sufficient: Caulkins v. Whisler, 29-493.

481. Alteration of an undated receipt by affixing a date thereto, so as to make it appear as a receipt for a subsequent account, is sufficient to constitute forgery: State v. Maxwell, 47-454.

482. The detaching of a condition from an instrument, by which it is converted from a non-negotiable to a negotiable instrument, held to constitute forgery: State v. Stratton, 27-420.

483. Where the defendant counterfeited the certificate of a justice of the peace as to the presentation and destruction of gopher scalps, for which a bounty is allowed by statute, held, that the act was sufficient to constitute forgery: State v. Johnson, 26-407.

484. To constitute forgery of a bill of exchange or order, it is not necessary that it contain the name of a payee or drawee. It is sufficient that it purports to create a liability against the person signing it: State v. Bauman, 52-68.

485. In a prosecution for forgery, held, that a particular instrument therein set forth sufficiently purported to create a liability against the person whose name was written thereto: Ibid.

486. It is not necessary to aver the genuineness or validity of the instrument forged. The essence of the crime consists in the doing of the act with intent to defraud. If the writing is invalid on its face, it cannot be the subject of forgery, but it may be if the invalidity must be made out from extrinsic facts: State v. Pierce, 8-231; State v. Johnson, 26-407.

487. The forwarding of a forged application for insurance by an insurance agent for the purpose of procuring the commission due to him upon such application, held to constitute forgery although the company refused to issue a policy upon such application: Fountain v. Smith, 70—.

488. The alteration of an unsigned indorsement, on the back of a note, of money paid, will not constitute forgery, where it does not appear but that such indorsement was a mere private memorandum made by the holder and not intended as a receipt: State v. Davis, 53-252.

489. The act of one who is intrusted with the making of an instrument, and who fraudulently makes a promissory note which is voluntarily signed by the other party, is not such a fraudulent making of the note as to constitute forgery: Douglass v. Matting, 29-498.

490. Where the indictment charged the forgery of an instrument signed by "Wright and Whaley," and the instrument when offered in evidence appeared to be signed "Wright Whaley," and it also appeared that this signature was an attempted signature of "Wright and Whaley," held, that the instrument was properly admissible: State v. Nichols, 38-110.

491. An indictment alleging in substance that the defendant falsely and feloniously, and with intent to defraud, made a negotiable promissory note, describing it and setting out a copy, is sufficient to charge the crime: State v. Stuart, 61-203.

492. The instrument should be set forth in the indictment, or some excuse for not doing so should be shown, but no technical form of words is necessary: State v. Johnson, 26-407.

493. It is not necessary that the indictment allege the name of the person to whom the instrument was uttered: State v. Hart, 67-142.

494. Forgery, and uttering and publishing as true a forged instrument, are distinct offenses, and an indictment charging both is bad for duplicity (overruling State v. Nichols, 38-110): State v. McCormack, 56-585.

495. Evidence: On a trial for the forgery of receipts, it is competent to show the payment of the indebtedness receipted for: State v. Wooderd, 20-541.

496. While proof of another act of forgery or uttering forged paper may be introduced, it is doubtful whether it ought not to be confined to a case where the former transaction was with reference to paper of the identical character of that involved in the act charged: State v. Saunders, 68-870.

497. When such other transaction is sought to be shown in evidence, it must appear that in the transaction a crime was committed: Ibid.

498. And it is necessary that the other instrument referred to must be produced or its absence accounted for: Ibid.; State v. Breckinridge, 67-204.

Forgery and counterfeiting.— Offenses against public justice.

499. That defendant, on the trial of a civil cause in the county of his residence, produced the forged instrument which he is charged with forging, may be considered by the jury as tending to show that the forgery was committed in that county: State v. Thompson, 19-299.

500. Passing forged instruments: The fact that defendant, in uttering a forged note, falsely represented himself to be the payee of the note, is sufficient evidence of intent without other evidence that he had knowledge of the forgery: State v. Williams, 66-573.

501. To justify a conviction for passing a forged instrument, the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had knowledge of the forgery: Ibid.

502. Having counterfeit money in possession: On the trial of an indictment for having five or more pieces of counterfeit money in possession, knowingly, with intent to pass, it should be proved that accused had in his possession five or more pieces, in order to make out the offense: State v. Pepper, 11-347.

503. In the section of the Code, § 3925, providing that if any person forges or counterfeits coin, "and has in his possession five or more pieces," etc., the word "and" is construed to mean "or," and either of the acts prescribed will constitute the offense. Therefore an indictment charging both of them will charge but one offense and will not be open to the objection of duplicity: State v. Myers, 10-448.

504. So, if the indictment charges the counterfeiting and the having in possession with intent, etc., in different counts, it will not be bad if both counts refer to the same transaction: State v. McPherson, 9-53.

505. The possession, as contemplated in the statute, may consist in having the counterfeit coin deposited in a secret place, within the knowledge and the control of the accused: State v. Washburn, 11-245.

506. Counterfeiting: It is not necessary in an indictment for counterfeiting to charge that the coin was counterfeited in a similitude to the current coin of the United States, or that it was of any value: State v. Williams, 8-533.

507. The counterfeiting of coin of the United States may be punished under the state statute providing for the punishment of that offense; the jurisdiction of the federal courts over such offense is not exclusive: State v. McPherson, 9-53.

508. Intent to defraud: In an indictment for having in possession counterfeit bank bills, with intent to defraud, knowing them to be counterfeit, copies of the bills must be set out: State v. Callendine, 8-288.

509. In such case, intent to defraud any person or corporation need not be averred. An averment in the statutory language, charging the having in possession with intent to defraud, is sufficient. Nor need it be averred that the intent was felonious or wilful: Ibid.

510. The description of bank bills in a particular case held insufficient: Ibid.

511. The person intended to be defrauded, or the extent or particulars of the fraud, need not be stated: State v. Maxwell, 47-454.

512. It is not necessary, in such case, to charge an intent to defraud any particular person: State v. Barrett, 8-536.

513. But if the name of the bank intended to be defrauded is mentioned, it must be proved as stated: State v. Newland, 7-242.

514. The existence of the bank or corporation must be proved, but proof of that fact by reputation is sufficient: Ibid.; State v. Barrett, 8-536.

515. And this is equally applicable to the charge of falsely indorsing a note or bill: State v. Pierce, 8-281.

516. An indictment charging accused with uttering, passing and tendering in payment, etc., is not bad as charging more than one offense: State v. Barrett, 8-536.

517. In an indictment for the uttering of counterfeit money, the name of the person injured must appear, if known, and if not known such fact must be stated. The provision that no indictment shall be quashed if an indictable offense is named therein does not apply to such defect: Buckley v. State, 2 G. Gr., 162.

5. Offenses against public justice.

a. Perjury.

518. What constitutes: The matter falsely sworn to must be material, and its materiality must be established by the evidence, and cannot be left to presumption or inference: State v. Aikens, 82-403.

519. Held, that a defendant, who, under a former statutory provision that a claim barred by the statute of limitations might be established by the testimony of the opposite party, was called by plaintiff as a witness for the purpose of establishing a claim by his own testimony, and who testified falsely, might be punished for perjury: State v. Voght, 27-117.

520. Under the provisions of the bankruptcy act requiring a schedule to be sworn to and providing that false swearing should prevent the applicant's discharge, and also providing that he might be examined, and for false swearing in such examination should be deemed guilty of perjury, held, that mere false swearing in the schedule would not constitute perjury: United States v. Dickey, Mor., 412.

521. Falsely swearing in an affidavit for continuance that a witness is absent from the county will constitute perjury, and it cannot be said that the oath is not material to the issues in the case: State v. Shupe, 16-36.

522. Indictment: The materiality of the false testimony must be shown by averment in the indictment, but this may be done either by express averment or the statement of such facts as show its materiality: State v. Cunningham, 66-94.

523. In an indictment for perjury in making a false return to the assessor under oath, it must be averred, not only that certain property was withheld from the statement, but also that such property was assessable within the township within which the assessor was authorized to act: Ibid.

524. Indictment for false statement in a schedule sworn to in a proceeding in bankruptcy should state wherein such statement is false and incorrect: United States v. Morgan, Mor., 341.

525. An indictment charging perjury in testifying before a grand jury, and alleging that they were investigating a specified charge against a party named; that they had authority to investigate such charge, and that the matters sworn to by the defendant (particularly stated and their falsity charged) were material in that investigation, held sufficient. It is not necessary in such a case to allege that the party charged with the offense under investigation by the grand jury was or was not guilty thereof, in order to state the facts constituting such offense: State v. Schill, 27-263.

526. In an indictment for perjury, it is not necessary nor usual to aver that the court trying the case in which the perjury was committed had jurisdiction of such acts. It is sufficient to aver that the issue was duly joined in such court which came on for trial in due form of law: State v. Newton, 1 G. Gr., 160.

527. By statute (Code, § 4312), it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the offense charged and before what court the oath was taken, averring such court to have full power to administer the same, etc.: Ibid.

528. It is sufficient to charge that defendant was duly sworn before a court having authority, etc., and it is not necessary to allege that the oath was administered by any one: State v. O'Hagan, 38-504.

529. But an indictment not averring that the court or person before whom the oath was taken had authority to administer the same, is not sufficient: State v. Nickerson, 46-447.

530. An indictment for perjury is bad which alleges that the oath was administered by one not clothed with authority to administer it: State v. Phippen, 62-54.

531. Therefore where the indictment charged that the oath was administered by a certain person as an officer, but at a time which by law was prior to the time when he was authorized to enter upon the discharge of his duties, held, that the indictment was subject to demurrer: Ibid.

532. It is necessary to aver the jurisdiction and authority of the officer before whom the oath was taken to administer the oath, but this may be done by express averment that the officer had such right or by setting out such facts as make it judicially to appear that he had such authority and jurisdiction. Under the averment that he was authorized and empowered by law to administer the oath, the facts essential to his jurisdiction and authority to administer it may be shown: State v. Cunningham, 66-94.

533. An indictment for perjury need not charge that the prisoner knew the falsity of the matter sworn to, unless the assignment of perjury is upon a statement of the accused as to his belief: State v. Raymond, 20-532.

534. Variance: Where the indictment charged that defendant testified that he saw M. enter upon premises of "Jason P." and saw him "getting and carrying away" corn therefrom, while the negative averment was that defendant did not see M. enter the premises of said "Joseph P." nor see him "gather and carry away" said corn, held, that the substitution of Joseph for Jason was clearly a clerical error, not affecting the substantial rights of the party, and that the effect of "gather" was, in the connection used, the equivalent of the word "getting:" Ibid.

535. Knowledge: Under a statute defining perjury as "wilfully and corruptly deposing, affirming or declaring any matter to be fact, knowing the same to be false, or denying any matter to be fact knowing the same to be true," held, that an indictment was not sufficient which omitted to charge such knowledge: State v. Morse, 1 G. Gr., 503.

536. It should be clearly and distinctly averred in the indictment that defendant swore "falsely," that word being used in the statutory definition: State v. Nickerson, 46-447.

537. An indictment for perjury which charged that defendant at a certain time testified to certain matters whereas he "did know" they were false, held, by fair construction, to charge knowledge at the time defendant testified and to be sufficient in that respect: State v. Wood, 17-18.

538. Advice of counsel: In a prosecution for perjury, it being material to determine whether the testimony given was wilfully false, the fact that advice of counsel was taken by defendant as to the facts about which he testified is material: State v. McKinney, 42-205.

539. Evidence: It is not necessary that there be two witnesses to the giving of testimony upon which the perjury is assigned, but only as to its falsity: State v. Wood, 17-18.

540. The evidence of one witness as to the falsity of the matter sworn to, supported by evidence of strong corroborating circumstances, is sufficient to warrant a conviction: State v. Raymond, 20-532.

541. While the jury cannot consider any other perjury than that assigned in the indictment for the purpose of determining defendant's guilt as to such other perjury, yet when the evidence thereof is legitimately brought out, and relates to the subject-matter of the perjury charged, it may be considered in determining defendant's corrupt intent: Ibid.

b. Compounding felonies.

542. If a person corruptly exacts a consideration from another for an agreement not to prosecute, he is guilty of compounding, although he took such consideration for the benefit of another: State v. Ruthven, 58-121.

543. The fact that a person guilty of the crime of compounding a felony is an officer, and therefore punishable as such under other statutory provisions, does not exempt him from the higher punishment prescribed for the compounding: Ibid.

544. A contract entered into for the compounding of a felony is void, and the law will not afford either party thereto affirmative relief: Allison v. Hess, 28-388.

545. An instrument based upon an agreement not to prosecute for a felony is void: Peed v. McKee, 42-689.

Further as to contracts for compounding felonies, see CONTRACTS, §§ 854, 855.

546. A delivery of a forged note to the forger on payment thereof by him which he is authorized to make, although made with the intent of enabling the party to destroy or suppress such paper and thereby to hinder and prevent a prosecution for the forgery, does not constitute the offense of compounding: Deere v. Wolff, 65-32.

c. Resisting officers; assisting prisoners to escape.

547. Resisting service of process: It is no defense, in a prosecution for resisting an officer (under Code, § 3960), that the process under which he acts is irregular or defective, if it is one that the magistrate has authority to issue: State v. Foster, 10-435.

548. It will be presumed that the officer was proceeding to execute the process in a proper manner, and the indictment need not set forth the acts showing that he complied with the requisites of the statute: State v. Freeman, 8-428.

549. The officers contemplated are those only who are authorized to execute legal writs, orders, etc., and resistance to a road supervisor engaged in removing obstructions from a public road in his district is not within this section: State v. Putnam, 85-561.

550. Under a statute providing for the punishment of any person resisting an officer in executing process, held, that one who resisted a peace officer in making an arrest without a warrant was not punishable: State v. Lovell, 23-304. (But the statute now provides otherwise: Code, § 3960.)

551. One who resists an officer in making arrest of another cannot justify such resistance on the ground that the person to be arrested was not guilty: Montgomery v. Sutton, 67-497.

552. A receiver properly appointed and directed by the court to take possession of property is an officer within the meaning of the statutory provision, and resistance to him in an attempt to take such possession is a crime under the statute: State v. Rivers, 66-653.

553. Assisting a prisoner to escape from an officer having him in charge under a warrant issued by a magistrate for threatening to commit a public offense is a crime under the statute. Whether the prisoner had in fact threatened to commit the offense as charged in the warrant is immaterial: State v. Bates, 23-96.

d. Wrongfully acting as officer.

554. Falsely assuming to be officer: Where a constable who was re-elected proceeded to perform the duties of his office without qualifying anew as required by statute, held, that he was not guilty of the crime of falsely assuming to be an officer: State v. Bates, 23-96.

555. Exercising office without authority: A constable may be guilty of this offense: State v. Berans, 37-178.

556. False entries by officer: It is not necessary in charging this offense to charge an intent to defraud any particular person: State v. Morse, 52-509.

557. Illegal fees: Any contract for higher fees than those provided by law or for an amount which might prove to be higher would be void: Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 40-200.

6. Offenses against right of suffrage.

a. Bribery of electors.

558. It does not constitute bribery at an election to relocate a county seat, for persons interested in the location at a particular place to agree to give certain facilities for the convenience of the whole county, such as offering a building for courts and officers, conveying real estate to the county, paying money toward the erection of a bridge, subscribing toward a high school, etc.: Dishon v. Smith, 10-213; Hawes v. Miller, 56-395.

559. A promise by a candidate to pay into the public treasury, if elected, a part or all of his compensation, is an offer of a bribe to electors, and disqualifies the person making it, if elected, for holding the office: Carrothers v. Russell, 53-346.

b. Illegal voting.

560. In an indictment for this offense, it is not necessary to show that the election was held by the proper and legal officers, or to state the manner in which defendant was disqualified: State v. Douglass, 7-413.

561. It is no defense in a prosecution for illegal voting that defendant consulted others (not persons learned in law) as to his right to vote, and was advised that he was qualified: State v. Sheeley, 15-404.

562. Voting in a township other than that of the voter's residence is an offense under the statute, and it is not necessary to charge that accused voted for or against any one. The casting of a ballot being proved, it will be presumed that it designated the name of some person for some office: State v. Minnick, 15-123.

7. Offenses against chastity, morality and decency.

a. Seduction.

As to civil action for SEDUCTION, see that title.

563. What constitutes: Mere unlawful sexual commerce for a consideration paid is not seduction. There must be some artifice or false promise by which the virtuous female is induced to surrender her person. But the allegations in the indictment in a particular case, of representations as to the innocence of the act and promises of presents, etc., held sufficient on demurrer: State v. Fitzgerald, 63-203.

564. To "debauch" implies to "have carnal knowledge of" (arguendo): Wood v. Mathews, 47-409.

565. Where the evidence fails to show artifice, promise, flattery, deception, or the like, it will not be sufficient to sustain a conviction: State v. Crawford, 34-40.

566. An indictment charging that defendant seduced and debauched, etc., etc., is sufficient, without charging the facts as to the means made use of to accomplish such end: State v. Curran, 51-112; State v. Conkright, 58-338.

567. Evidence: The exact amount or kind of seductive arts necessary to establish the offense cannot be defined. Every case must depend upon its own peculiar circumstances, together with the conditions in life, advantages, age and intelligence of the parties: State v. Higdon, 32-202.

568. It is not necessary that the false promises or seductive arts be reasonable in their character and likely to have been relied upon by the prosecutrix; but the fact that they were extraordinary and made by a person who, to the knowledge of the prosecutrix, was not capable of performing them, should be considered by the jury in determining whether they were sufficient: State v. Groome, 10-303.

569. The fact that false promises of marriage were made at the time, with intent to break them, would be immaterial. Such false promises of marriage would be sufficient: State v. Prizer, 49-531.

570. To warrant a conviction of defendant upon the evidence of prosecutrix, there should not be any strained construction put upon her language in order to sustain the verdict. It is to be expected that she should, so far as possible, shield herself and cast the blame upon defendant. Therefore, in a particular case, a conviction was reversed on the ground that the evidence of prosecutrix did not, by fair and reasonable construction, show any arts, false promises, etc.: State v. Haven, 43-181.

571. Where, in a prosecution for seduction, prosecutrix testified that she resisted, and defendant overcame such resistance by force, held, that the court should have instructed the jury that, if they found such to be the fact, defendant was entitled to an acquittal, the crime under such facts being rape, and not seduction: State v. Lewis, 49-578.

572. In a particular case, held, that it sufficiently appeared from the evidence that prosecutrix was an unmarried woman; also that the seductive arts were such as were sufficient to constitute the crime, being promises to marry, etc.; also, that the corroboration was sufficient: State v. Heather-ton, 60-175.

573. Where it appeared that defendant was a suitor of prosecutrix before and for some time after the illicit intercourse, held, that his conduct during the entire time might be inquired into in determining whether her consent was gained by seductive means: State v. Curran, 51-112.

574. Previously chaste character of prosecutrix: The word character as used in the statute defining the crime as the seduction of any unmarried woman "of previously chaste character" is used in its true sense as distinguished from reputation, but a female may be of unchaste character without being guilty of any act of sexual intercourse. Obscenity of language, indecency of conduct and undue familiarity with men may serve to indicate the true character. It is for the jury to decide, under all the circumstances, as to the character of the prosecutrix: Andre v. State, 5-389; Boak v. State, 5-430.

575. A female who has been unchaste may reform and acquire a chaste character, such as is referred to in the statute: State v. Carron, 18-372.

576. Evidence that prosecutrix has a bad reputation for chastity is not admissible, but evidence that her reputation in that respect is good may be received in rebuttal of evidence tending to prove acts of lewdness: State v. Prizer, 49-531; State v. Shean, 32-88.

577. Proof of unchaste conduct on the part of prosecutrix just prior to the alleged seduction would entitle defendant to acquittal; therefore, an instruction that proof of such conduct should be considered against prosecutrix, held erroneous, in that it did not go far enough in stating the effect of such conduct: State v. Carr, 60-453.

578. Where the woman is examined as a witness to prove the seduction, she may, on cross-examination, be asked as to matters which would show a want of chastity previous to such seduction. The question of chastity is directly in issue: State v. Sutherland, 30-570.

579. Instruction as to effect of proof of improper liberties allowed to others than defendant, prior to the alleged crime, held misleading, in that the meaning of such term was left ambiguous: State v. Carr, 60-453.

580. Evidence of improper conduct of prosecutrix occurring eight years before the trial and when she was but fourteen years of age, held properly excluded: State v. Dunn, 53-526.

581. Presumption: The previous chaste character of the prosecutrix is presumed, and the onus is upon defendant to overcome such presumption by preponderance of evidence: State v. Wells, 48-671; State v. Higdon, 32-262; Andre v. State, 5-389.

582. Such presumption may be rebutted by proven or admitted facts or circumstances in the case: State v. Bowman, 45-418.

583. The presumption in favor of the chastity of the prosecutrix is not a presumption against the innocence of defendant. He is presumed innocent of the fact, but the presumption is also entertained in favor of the rectitude of her character: Andre v. State, 5-389.

584. An instruction that the presumption of chastity might be overcome by proof of wantonness or indiscretion indicating an unchaste character, but which made no reference to other matters which might indicate unchastity, held, not erroneous where there was no evidence of other facts indicating unchastity: State v. Bell, 49-440.

585. As to the presumption of chastity in a civil action for damages and evidence to overcome it, see West v. Druff, 55-335.

586. Only the previous character is put in issue, and all evidence of improper conduct after the time of seduction should be excluded: State v. Wells, 48-671.

587. Questions as to chastity refer to a time previous to State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

588. Previously chaste character essential in a civil action by a seduction of a minor daughter Bennett, 8-72.

589. Corroboration: Under provision (Code, § 4560) requiring prosecutions for seduction the person injured must be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect with the commission of the offense to warrant conviction, proof of attendant circumstances may be sufficient corroboration: State v. Curran, 51-112; Bellnap, 6-97, 103.

590. The corroborating evidence not be confined to the facts of course alone, but facts showing opportunity and inducement may be for that purpose: Andre v. State.

591. The mere proof of opportunity is not sufficient. Corroborating evidence must be such as connects defendant with the commission of the offense: State v. Painter, 50-31; Smith, 54-743; State v. Araah, 1-10.

592. A fact testified to by the prosecutrix alone cannot be considered as corroborating of her other testimony: Kingsley, 39-439.

593. Corroboration in particular instances may be sufficient: State v. Shean, 32-8; Fitzgerald, 63-268.

594. The court is to determine whether the evidence is corroborative, that is, whether it is competent, and the jury is to determine the credibility of the corroborating evidence and the weight of their testimony. Instruction to the effect that the jury determine whether the testimony of the prosecutrix was sufficiently corroborated: State v. Bell, 49-440.

Corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix is also required in a prosecution for seduction. See supra, §§ 220-223.

595. The rule requiring corroboration of the testimony of the injured party applies in bastardy proceedings by the putative father with the support of the child: State v. McGlothlen, 56-544.

Enticing away female child; defilement.—Adultery.

596. Resemblance of child: The resemblance of an infant three months old to its father is too indefinite and uncertain to constitute evidence of paternity, and it is error in a prosecution for seduction to allow a child of that age, claimed to be the result of the connection, to be shown to the jury. (Explaining Stumm v. Hummel, 39-478): State v. Danforth, 48-43.

597. But this rule is not applicable in case of a child two years old; and held, in a bastardy case, that a child of that age might be shown to the jury, and its family resemblance, if any, to defendant considered by them as tending to prove that defendant was its father: State v. Smith, 54-104.

598. Offer to compromise: Evidence that prosecutrix, after the commencement of the prosecution, offered to settle the case for a sum of money, held incompetent: State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

599. Marriage a bar: Under the statute providing that marriage of defendant with the person injured should bar the prosecution for seduction (Code, § 3838), held, that such a marriage is encouraged by the law, and that contracts entered into in contemplation thereof are not invalid as being made under duress, and will be upheld: Armstrong v. Lester, 43-159.

b. Enticing away female child; defilement.

600. Enticing away: Under a statute making it a crime to entice away an unmarried female under the age of fifteen years, from her parents, guardian or other person having legal charge of her, for the purpose of prostitution (Code, § 3865), held, that the fact that defendant believed and had good reason to believe that the female was over the age of fifteen years constituted no defense, if she was in fact under that age: State v. Ruhl, 8-447; and see State v. Newton, 44-45.

601. If the parents are dead and no guardian has been appointed, the persons with whom the female resides as a member of the family and who have her wholly under their care and protection would be the persons having "the legal charge of her person." State v. Ruhl, 8-447.

602. It is not sufficient to constitute an offense under this section that the accused entice away the female for his own carnal enjoyment, and such enjoyment would not constitute prostitution: Ibid.

603. Defilement: No particular amount of force is necessary to constitute the offense of defilement under the statute (Code, § 3862), and it was probably intended to cover cases in which there is no force, excepting that which is constructive, and in which the act is accomplished principally by menace or duress, acting to subdue the will; but it contemplates at least an act against the will. The defendant is not required to show an affirmative act of consent to make out a defense: Pollard v. State, 2-567.

c. Adultery.

As a ground of DIVORCE, see that title.

604. Void divorce: Where a decree of divorce is void for want of jurisdiction, it will not bar a prosecution for adultery: State v. Fleak, 54-429.

605. Where a husband procured a divorce and remarried, but subsequently the decree of divorce was set aside and declared void at the suit of the wife on the ground that it was procured by fraud, held, that the divorce was no defense in a prosecution for adultery committed in cohabiting with the second wife: State v. Whitcomb, 52-85.

606. An erroneous belief of the validity of a divorce will not constitute a defense in a prosecution for adultery committed in a second marriage: Ibid.

607. Connection by force: The act may constitute adultery as to the man, although as to the woman it is effected by force and against her will: State v. Donovan, 61-278.

608. To constitute adultery on the part of the man, the consent of the woman need not be established. If willingly done on his part, the crime is complete: State v. Sanders, 30-582.

609. Commencement of prosecution by husband or wife: Under the statute (Code, § 4008) providing that no prosecution for adultery can be commenced but upon the complaint of the husband or wife, it is sufficient if the prosecution is commenced by the husband or wife. It may be continued without further co-operation on the part of such party: State v. Baldy, 17-39.

Adultery.

610. Where the wife instituted the proceedings before an examining magistrate, in which the defendant was held to answer, but did not appear before the grand jury or otherwise in the further prosecution of the case, held, that the prosecution was sufficiently commenced upon the complaint of the wife: State v. Dingee, 17-232.

611. An unmarried person may be guilty of the crime of adultery, and complaint against such person may be made by the husband or wife of the married party, although such married party is not prosecuted: State v. Wilson, 22-364.

612. The appearance of the wife before the grand jury, in response to a subpoena, and giving testimony against the husband without intending to prefer a charge, but supposing she was required to do so, would not constitute a complaint by the wife: State v. Donovan, 61-278.

613. The prosecution may be sufficiently commenced by the husband or wife, either by making complaint before the grand jury or by filing a preliminary information before a magistrate. If commenced by filing information it is not necessary that the husband or wife appear further in the proceedings. It is not necessary that the name of the husband or wife be indorsed on the indictment as private prosecutor: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

614. The words "husband or wife," as used in the statutory provision above referred to, refer to and mean the spouse of the person charged with the offense: Bush v. Workman, 64-205.

615. An averment in the indictment that the prosecution was commenced by the husband or wife is not conclusive, and if not so commenced, advantage of that fact may be taken by defendant: State v. Roth, 17-336.

616. It is essential that the state prove that the prosecution was commenced by the husband or wife. The averment in the indictment that it was so commenced will not be presumptive proof thereof: State v. Henke, 58-457.

617. The allegation that the prosecution was commenced under complaint of the husband or wife must be proven by the state like other material averments of the indictment, and is to be determined by the jury upon the evidence given at the trial, and not by the court on affidavits upon a motion to dismiss the prosecution. The allegation of the fact in the indictment is sufficient to raise the question before the jury: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

618. The fact that the prosecution is commenced by the husband or wife does not enter into or constitute any of the facts which go to make up the crime, and therefore, although such fact must be proven, it is not necessary that it be established beyond a reasonable doubt: State v. Donovan, 61-278.

619. Failure to instruct the jury as to the necessity of the prosecution being commenced by the husband or wife is not error, where the fact appears without dispute in the evidence that the prosecution was so commenced and such instruction is not asked by the defendant: State v. Hazen, 39-648.

620. Indictment: As any act of adultery committed between the parties within the statutory period of limitation might be proven under an indictment charging one such act, the allegation in the indictment of other acts committed on divers other days may be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment will not be bad: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

621. The better practice is to indict the parties guilty of adultery separately, although they may be indicted jointly: State v. Dingee, 17-232.

622. Evidence: The provision that the prosecution can be commenced only by the husband or wife leads to the inference that the offense is a crime by the husband or wife against the other rather than against society in general, and upon such prosecution the one may be a witness against the other: State v. Bennett, 31-24; State v. Hazen, 39-648.

623. In a prosecution for adultery, record proof of marriage is not indispensable. It may be established by the testimony of the husband or wife: State v. Wilson, 22-364.

624. Admissions of defendant as to the fact of marriage, when voluntary, and not of the character of confessions exacted by improper inducements, are admissible as evidence of the marriage: State v. Sanders, 30-582.

Further as to evidence of MARRIAGE, see that title.

Bigamy.

625. Admissions of the woman with whom the husband is charged to have committed the crime are not competent evidence: State v. McGuire, 50-153.

626. The provisions of Code, § 4010, as to the presumption arising from absence, in the case of a prosecution for bigamy, do not apply as against a defendant in a prosecution for adultery to establish the validity of his marriage with a wife who had previously been married: State v. Henke, 58-457.

627. Different acts: Where but one act of adultery is charged and evidence as to different acts is introduced, but the prosecution after the close of the evidence elects to rely upon one particular act referred to in the evidence, such election withdraws from the jury the evidence as to the other acts and cures any errors which may have been committed in admitting evidence with reference thereto: State v. Donovan, 61-278.

628. Evidence of other acts of adultery committed between the same parties prior to the statutory period of limitation or in another county than that in which the indictment is found are admissible to show the disposition of the parties, and may be taken, in connection with opportunity to commit the crime within the statutory period and within the jurisdiction of the court, as evidence that the crime was then committed: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

d. Bigamy.

629. Continuing to cohabit within the state after a bigamous marriage is a crime by statute (Code, § 4009), whether the marriage was consummated within or without the state: State v. Sloan, 55-217; State v. Nadal, 69-478.

630. Defendant may be prosecuted for continuing to cohabit within the state, although a prosecution for the bigamous marriage is barred: State v. Sloan, 55-217.

631. Venue: The prosecution may be had in any county where the defendant unlawfully cohabits with a second wife, although the marriage was consummated in another county: State v. Hughes, 58-165.

632. Indictment: An indictment for this crime, stating that the date of the lawful marriage was to the grand jury unknown, that it took place in Illinois, and that at the time of the second marriage the former marriage relation still existed, held sufficient as against the objections, first, that it did not state the date of the first marriage; second, that it did not state that such marriage was lawful and valid by the laws of Illinois; third, that it did not appear that the lawful wife was still living at the date of the second marriage: Ibid.

633. The indictment need not negative the facts of absence, etc., which are by another section of the statute made a defense: State v. Williams, 20-98.

634. Evidence: The testimony of a witness who saw the marriage is sufficient without record evidence thereof: Ibid.; State v. Hughes, 58-165.

635. While admissions of marriage or cohabitation will not authorize conviction, yet, when the evidence shows a long recognition by defendant of the woman as his wife, and actual marriage, proof of admission of marriage and cohabitation may be shown: State v. Nadal, 69-478.

636. The testimony of either husband or wife, together with proof of continued cohabitation as husband and wife, raises such a presumption of an actual legal fact as to make it incumbent upon the defendant to rebut such presumption: Ibid.

637. In a prosecution for bigamy in cohabiting in this state after a void marriage in another state, it is not necessary to prove the marriage to have been in accordance with the laws of such state, if it would have been sufficient under the laws of this state, there being no evidence that the laws of the state where it was celebrated are different from those of this state: Ibid.

638. Under an indictment alleging the celebration of the void marriage at a particular place, evidence will be sufficient which shows the celebration of the marriage anywhere within the same state: Ibid.

639. In a prosecution for bigamy in cohabiting with a second wife, evidence of the bigamous marriage in another county is proper, not to show a crime in that county, but to fix the nature of the subsequent cohabitation: State v. Hughes, 58-165.

640. It seems that the fact that defendant acted under reputable legal advice in contracting the second marriage would be no defense: Ibid.

Incest.—Abortion.—Exposing child.—Prostitution, etc.

641. The crime is one by the husband or wife against the other within the statutory provision (Code, § 3841) allowing the husband or wife to be a witness against the other in such cases: State v. Sloan, 55-217; State v. Hughes, 58-165.

642. In a prosecution for bigamy, evidence of lewdness on the part of the injured party is incompetent: State v. Nadal, 69-478.

Further as to evidence of MARRIAGE, see that title.

e. Incest.

643. What constitutes: The marriage of persons sustaining to each other any of the degrees of relationship specified in the statute (Code, § 4030) is incest. Carnal knowledge in such case need not be alleged or shown: State v. Schaunhurst, 34-547.

644. The words brother and sister used in the statute refer to illegitimate as well as to legitimate children of the same parents: Ibid.

645. To constitute incest the parties must have carnal knowledge of each other. A woman who is ravished cannot be said to have carnal knowledge of the man. Connection between persons within the prohibited degrees, consummated by force, is rape and not incest: State v. Thomas, 53-214.

646. Under a statute providing that brother and sister who, being of the age of sixteen years or upwards, should have sexual intercourse together, having a knowledge of their consanguinity, should be guilty of incest, held, that it was essential in order to constitute the crime that both parties be over the age specified: United States v. Hiler, Mor., 330.

647. Evidence: The register of marriages is sufficient evidence of the incestuous marriage: State v. Schaunhurst, 34-547.

648. Admissions and declarations of the parties are also admissible to show the fact of marriage: Ibid.

Further as to evidence of MARRIAGE, see that title.

f. Abortion.

As to civil liability for, see ABORTION.

649. What constitutes: Abortion is the act of miscarriage and producing young before the natural time or before perfectly formed. It is not a violation of murder and is not criminally made so by statute: Foshee, 3-274.

650. The crime of administering, with intent of procuring, complete where the drugs are with the intent specified, and the crime is properly laid in the county in which the medicine is thus administered although the miscarriage occurred in another county: State v. Hollenbeck, 3-

651. It is not necessary to prove a crime that the woman should have a child, nor, providing there is no child, is it necessary that the substance administered should be such as would produce a miscarriage: State v. Fitzgerald, 4-

652. Under the provisions of the statute it is not a crime for a woman to procure an abortion on herself: Hatfield, 177.

653. Where death is caused in procuring an abortion, it is error to instruct the jury that defendant in procuring such death may be convicted of manslaughter. He will be guilty of murder in the second degree or nothing less: Moore, 25-128.

g. Exposing child

654. The statute (Code, § 387) that if "the father and mother expose" a child, etc., is to be construed to mean father or mother. Either may commit the crime: State v. Rice, 670.

h. Prostitution and lewdness, or leasing houses of ill-fame

655. What constitutes prostitution: It is for the jury to say what acts, under the circumstances, sufficient to constitute a prostitute, and it is not for the court to instruct as to what sexual intercourse is not sufficient to establish the crime: State v. Rice, 56-431.

656. Lewdness: Acts of prostitution are not sufficient to constitute lewdness as defined by statute: State v. Rice, 12-499.

Houses of ill-fame.—Betting and gambling.

657. Occasional acts of sexual intercourse in a secret manner between parties living in the relationship of master and servant may not be sufficient alone to constitute the crime of lewdness. But such acts and the birth of a child may be shown as tending with other circumstances to prove that the parties were in fact living together as husband and wife: State v. Kirkpatrick, 63-554.

658. An indictment for lewdness should charge that the parties were not married to each other: State v. Clinch, 8-401.

659. Evidence that defendant in a prosecution for lewdness had a wife and children whom he had deserted, held admissible: State v. Lyon, 10-340.

660. Keeping house of ill-fame: Evidence that the owner of a house kept as a house of ill-fame by the tenant was in the habit of spending a part of his time there, held insufficient to show that such owner was guilty as a keeper of such house: State v. Pearsall, 43-630.

661. Instructions to the effect that evidence showing that defendant was keeping a house and using it as his own, and exercising such control over it as men usually have over their own houses, will authorize the jury to find that defendant kept the house, and that the jury might find that defendant had knowledge of the character of the house and assented thereto, from the publicity of the lewd conduct carried on there and the public reports of its ill-fame, and his knowledge of such reports, as well as his personal conduct and his conversation with inmates and visitors, held proper: State v. Wells, 46-662.

662. An indictment against a person for keeping a house of ill-fame is sufficient if it charges the offense as committed within the county. The house need not be more specifically described: State v. Shaw, 35-575.

663. If the facts constituting the offense of keeping a house of ill-fame, as defined by statute, be properly described in the indictment, the fact that the term nuisance is used to designate it will not invalidate the indictment nor make it an indictment for the offense of keeping a nuisance as defined by statute: Ibid.

664. This offense is distinct from that of nuisance consisting in keeping such a house, in that, in the latter case, it must be to the detriment of others: State v. Odell, 42-75; State v. Alderman, 40-375.

665. The previous conviction of keeping a nuisance consisting in the keeping of a house of ill-fame to the disturbance of others will not render a subsequent conviction for the offense of keeping such a house a second conviction for that offense so as to warrant the infliction of the penalty for a second conviction: State v. Holmes, 56-588.

As to the crime of nuisance committed in keeping a house of ill-fame, see infra, § 702.

666. Reputation as evidence: The state may prove the bad character of the house by evidence of the bad character of the persons resorting thereto, and of the inmates thereof; but the general reputation of the house itself should be excluded: State v. Lyon, 39-379.

667. The fact that defendant is the keeper of such a house cannot be proven by evidence of common reputation as to his character: State v. Hand, 7-411.

668. Leasing house for purposes of prostitution: The various acts described by the statute providing for the punishment of leasing a house for purposes of prostitution or lewdness, etc. (Code, § 4015), constitute but one offense, and an indictment charging all of them is not bad for duplicity: State v. Abrahams, 6-117.

669. To render the defendant guilty of knowingly permitting the use, something more must be shown than his mere inactivity, or failure to take steps to prevent such illegal use. Some act or declaration showing an affirmative assent must be shown: Ibid.; Abrahams v. State, 4-541.

i. Betting and gambling; keeping gambling-house.

Gambling contracts void, see CONTRACTS, §§ 333-353.

670. Game of chance: A horse-race is not a game of chance within the terms of a statute providing a punishment for betting upon such games: Harless v. United States, Mor., 169.

671. The offering by an agricultural society of a premium to the winner of a horse-race, held under its auspices, does not constitute the offense of making a bet or wager for money, etc.: Delier v. Plymouth County Agl. Society, 57-481.

Gambling-houses.—Lotteries.—Nuisances.

672. Gambling and keeping gambling-house: To constitute gambling within the statutory provision for the punishment of any person keeping a house or place resorted to for the purpose of gambling, or permitting any person in any house or other place under his control to play cards, etc., "or other game for money or other thing" (Code, § 4026), it is not necessary that the money or "other thing" should be "put up." Playing at a game with the understanding that the loser shall pay for the drinks around, which arrangement is carried out, is sufficient: State v. Maurer, 7-406; State v. Cooster, 10-453; State v. Leicht, 17-28; State v. Bishel, 39-42.

673. Playing at billiards or "pin pool" with an agreement or understanding that the losing party shall pay for the game is gambling: State v. Book, 41-550; State v. Miller, 53-154.

674. Whether the game played is one of skill or one of chance is immaterial under this statutory provision: State v. Miller, 53-154.

675. But playing at cards for recreation or amusement is not prohibited: State v. Leicht, 17-28.

676. It is not necessary that the place occupied be generally or habitually resorted to, if it is kept for that purpose. One act of gambling, as well as many, will complete the offense: State v. Cooster, 10-453.

677. The offense of keeping a gambling-house is as complete if the house is kept for one day as if kept for a year. It does not consist in causing or continuing a public nuisance, as contemplated in other sections of the statute providing for the punishment of a person keeping a place where gambling, etc., is resorted to, to the annoyance of others. (Code, § 4091): State v. Crogan, 8-523.

678. An indictment substantially charging that defendant did keep a house, etc., in which he did permit divers persons, to the jurors unknown, to play at cards, etc., for money, cigars, beer and other things, held sufficient: State v. Kaufman, 59-273.

679. A charge that defendant keeps a house resorted to, sufficiently charges intent and knowledge, and still more does the charge that he permits, etc., gambling, imply knowledge: State v. Cure, 7-479.

680. And an indictment charging that accused, being the keeper of a house resorted to for the purpose of gambling, knowingly and unlawfully did permit, etc., held sufficient, although it would have been better to have expressly charged that the house was under the control of accused: State v. Middleton, 11-246.

681. The "keeping," etc., and the "permitting," etc., constitute one and the same offense, and an indictment charging them both in separate counts is not objectionable on the ground of duplicity: State v. Cooster, 10-453.

682. An indictment against a tavern-keeper for suffering gaming in violation of statute need not state the names of the persons who played nor the sums of money for which they played, nor the property lost or won: Romp v. State, 3 G. Gr., 276.

j. Lotteries.

683. Under a statute (Code, § 4048) providing for the punishment of any person making or establishing a lottery or selling lottery tickets, etc., held, that a disposal of lands by a scheme in which parties were to buy tickets and draw for such land was a lottery and that a contract of purchase thus entered into was void: Guenther v. Dewein, 11-133.

8. Nuisances, including obstruction of highways and railways and keeping disorderly houses.

As to a civil action for damages for injury from a NUISANCE, see that title.

684. Public or private: While the acts mentioned in the statute (Code, § 4069) are each declared to be a nuisance, they are public or private nuisances as they tend to the public injury or only to the injury of private individuals: State v. Close, 35-570.

685. The close proximity of a nuisance, such as described by statute, to a public highway, so as to affect those passing, would constitute it a public nuisance. So would causing the water of a mill-dam to become corrupt and to overflow, thus rendering the adjoining land marshy, etc., whereby the air should become corrupt and infected: Ibid.

686. The punishment provided in Code, § 4098, is applicable to public as well as private nuisances embraced within the definition of § 4089: State v. Kaster, 85-221.

687. Obstructing highway: A party obstructing a highway, by fence or otherwise, may be punished under this statutory provision, although the road supervisor might under other provisions of the statute rightfully remove the obstruction: State v. Berry, 12-58.

As to when shade trees will constitute an obstruction to a highway and may be removed, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 126-128.

688. Platform scales erected in a public street for private business may be removed by order of the city council: Emerson v. Babcock, 66-257.

689. It is not a punishable offense to obstruct a highway which, by reason of natural obstacles, cannot be used by the public: State v. Shinkle, 40-131.

690. But if part of the line of road is traveled, it would not excuse a party who obstructs it that another part was impassable as laid out: State v. McGee, 40-595.

691. In prosecutions for obstructing a public highway, the state is not confined to documentary proof of the establishment thereof, but may show the highway by proof of consent and user, and the fact that the highway is not of statutory width will be no defense: State v. Robinson, 28-514.

692. A party failing to remove a fence where a newly established highway crosses his land is not liable to indictment for obstructing a highway, at least until after reasonable notice by the supervisor to remove the same: State v. Ratliff, 82-189.

693. Malice is not a necessary element of the offense of obstructing a highway; intent is only important to show whether it was wilful or merely accidental: State v. Gould, 40-372.

694. Where a highway is duly laid out, the fact that it is not yet traveled will not prevent the act of obstructing it from being criminal: Harrow v. State, 1 G. Gr., 439.

695. Error in the description of the highway, so long as its identity is not doubtful, will not vitiate a conviction for obstructing it: Ibid.

696. Under an indictment for obstructing a "county road," a road established by statute only can be shown. Evidence of a highway by use or prescription is not admissible: State v. Snyder, 25-208.

Further, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 125-141.

697. Defacing highway: No one has a right to make a material change in a highway inconsistent with the plans of the road supervisor. To do so will constitute a defacing of the highway within the meaning of the statute (Code, § 3992½) providing a punishment for such defacement. The judgment of the supervisor must govern as to the proper plan: State v. Hunter, 68-447.

698. Obstructing highway by railway track: As a railroad company is allowed (Code, § 1262) to temporarily obstruct a highway for the purpose of constructing its track, an allegation in an indictment showing such obstruction will not be sufficient to charge a crime, without averments showing a violation of the provisions of that section of the statute: State v. Chicago, B. & P. R. Co., 68-506.

699. Obstructing railway track: In a prosecution for obstructing the track of a railway (Code, § 3990), it is not necessary to allege or prove that the obstruction did actually obstruct and hinder trains: State v. Clemens, 88-257.

700. It being found that defendant knew the railroad was being used for the purpose of carrying freight and passengers, and intended to place the obstruction on the road, malice will be implied: State v. Hessenkamp, 17-25.

701. The fact that the land where the obstructions were placed on the track belonged to defendant, and the railroad company had no right of way over it, or had violated the covenants of its contract with respect thereto, would be no defense in a prosecution under this section: Ibid.

702. Keeping disorderly houses: "To the disturbance of others" is the feature of the offense of keeping a house of ill-fame, which renders it a nuisance under Code, § 4091, and distinguishes such a case from the offense of keeping such a house as defined by Code, § 4018: State v. Alderman, 40-875; State v. Odell, 42-75.

 Keeping disorderly houses; illegal sale of liquors.

As to the offense of keeping houses of ill-fame, see supra, §§ 660-665.

703. Failure to use the words "to the disturbance of others," in charging the keeping of a house where drunkenness, etc., are carried on, renders the indictment insufficient to charge a nuisance: State v. Dean, 44-648.

704. Although the quarreling, fighting, etc., relied upon to show that the place where they occurred was a nuisance, appears to have taken place on the sidewalk in front of, and not in, the house of defendant, yet if it is the character of the house which attracts the disorderly persons, the defendant is guilty of keeping a nuisance: State v. Webb, 25-285.

705. Where defendant, at a farm-house, kept and sold wine which was not drunk on the premises by the persons buying it, but upon the highway a half mile or more from the house, resulting in riotous conduct, etc., held, that the person keeping the house at which the wine was sold was not guilty of keeping a nuisance: State v. Dieffenbach, 47-638.

706. A defendant may be convicted of keeping a nuisance on proof that he kept a place described in the indictment as a brewery and saloon where drinking, quarreling, fighting and breaches of the peace were carried on and by the defendant permitted to be carried on, to the disturbance of others, although there is no recurrence of such acts, and this even though the indictment charges such acts as occurring on more than one occasion: State v. Pierce, 65-85.

707. The prosecution may show that drinking, quarreling, etc., occurred at the place, but without the building, if they occurred by defendant's permission or where occasioned by the business which he carried on in the building: Ibid.

708. Evidence is admissible to show that the actions and appearance of persons immediately after going from the place indicated that they were intoxicated: Ibid.

709. A person is drunk in the legal sense within the meaning of the statute when he is so far under the influence of intoxicating liquors that his passions are visibly excited or his judgment impaired: Ibid.

710. A boat may be, within the meaning of the term, a house of ill-fame, as used in defining acts constituting a nuisance: State v. Mullen, 35-199.

711. An indictment charging all the offenses mentioned by statute in the alternative as constituting a nuisance is not objectionable as charging more than one offense: State v. Spurbeck, 44-667.

712. The nuisance may be single, although all the various acts which may constitute a nuisance by Code, § 4091, are charged: Ibid.

713. So, an indictment charging the doing of acts prohibited in the section last above mentioned, and also acts declared to be a nuisance in connection with the sale of intoxicating liquors, is not bad for duplicity. Such acts committed at one time constitute but one nuisance, and could not be the basis of separate indictments: State v. Dean, 44-648.

714. Intoxicating liquors: The punishment provided for the crime of nuisance is to be applied to a person found guilty of that offense under the statutory provisions with reference to keeping a building, etc., where intoxicating liquors are sold contrary to law: State v. McGrew, 11-112; State v. Collins, 11-141; State v. Schilling, 14-455; State v. Little, 42-51, 54; State v. Dean, 44-648.

715. A person keeping intoxicating liquors for sale for a proper purpose will not be guilty of the crime of nuisance on account of unlawful sales made by a clerk without his knowledge or authority: State v. Hayes, 67-27.

716. As the so-called prohibitory amendment submitted to the people by the Nineteenth General Assembly was not properly submitted, the act of selling beer which was therein prohibited did not become a nuisance within the general terms of the statute describing that offense: State v. Johnson, 61-504.

See further, INTOXICATING LIQUORS, V.

717. Public benefit no defense: A defendant indicted for nuisance will not be permitted to show that the public benefit resulting from his act is equal to the public inconvenience arising from it: State v. Kaster, 35-221.

718. Evidence of offense not charged: Under an indictment charging the use of premises for the keeping of hogs, etc., occasioning noxious exhalations, offensive smells, Abating nuisances.—Misdemeanors.—Riots.—Police regulations.

etc., held, that evidence of noise made by the animals at night, annoying persons living in the vicinity, was receivable as part of the facts connected with the nuisance, although such disturbance could not be proved under the allegation of "other nuisances" specified in the indictment: Ibid.

719. Abatement: A petition asking the abatement of a nuisance should be definite enough to enable the court to identify with certainty the obstruction to be removed: Sloan v. Rebman, 66-81.

720. Where it was shown that the nuisance was occasioned by the keeping of hogs within certain pens, held, that it was not proper in the abating of such nuisance to require the removal of lumber and materials composing the fence around such pens: State v. Kaster, 85-221.

721. The statutory provisions for the abatement of the nuisance do not take away the common law right of the person injured by the erection of a mill-dam from abating it as a private nuisance: State v. Maffett, 1 G. Gr., 247.

722. Punishment: The court may order a defendant, fined under the statute providing for the punishment of nuisances, to be imprisoned until the fine is paid, or imprisoned at hard labor under general statutory provisions: State v. Jordan, 89-387; State v. Anwerda, 40-151.

9. Misdemeanors in general.

723. Under the statutory provision (Code, § 8966) that when the performance of any act is prohibited by statute, and no penalty for the violation of such statute is imposed, the doing of such act is a misdemeanor, punishable as elsewhere specified, held, that supervisors violating the provisions of the statute by voting to erect a public building without submitting the question to vote, in a case where such submission to vote of the electors is required, were guilty of a misdemeanor: State v. Conlee, 25-237.

10. Riots.

724. In order to constitute a riot it is necessary that the persons implicated shall be actually engaged in some physical act of violence: Spott v. United States, Mor., 142.

11. Police regulations.

725. Importing diseased sheep: Under a statute prohibiting the importing of diseased sheep (Code, § 4055), held, that a contract for the sale of sheep having such disease as specified by the statute could not be enforced against the purchaser, even when he knew of such disease before purchasing, the statute being intended not for the protection of the purchaser only, but of the public. But held, that the statute would not apply where the seller did not know that the disease with which the sheep were inflicted was contagious, and that in such case the contract could be enforced: Caldwell v. Bridal, 48-15.

726. Running threshing machine without boxing tumbling-rod: The statute (Code, § 4064) providing a penalty for running a threshing machine without having the tumbling-rod boxed, etc., does not make a person guilty of such act absolutely liable for damages resulting. Proof of running a machine not secured as required establishes negligence, but the rule still applies that contributory negligence on the part of the person injured will defeat a recovery: Reynolds v. Hindman, 82-146.

727. A person injured through a violation of this provision has a right of action, and it is sufficient to allege the violation as the basis of the right to recover, and as constituting the negligence complained of: Messenger v. Pate, 42-443.

728. Where a contract was made for threshing to be done with a machine not boxed, etc., as here required, held, that the contract was void, and that such fact was a good defense in an action for services rendered thereunder: Dillon v. Allen, 46-299.

729. Allowing minors in saloons: Under the statute (15 G. A., ch. 59; McClain's Ann. Stat., 1019) providing a punishment for the keepers of billiard halls, saloons, etc., permitting minors to remain in such halls or saloons, it is the duty of saloon-keepers not only not to permit, but to prevent minors remaining in their saloons, and the same duty is imposed on their employees. If the keeper or employee fails to take proper measures to prevent, he is to be deemed to permit it, and the liability will not depend upon the knowledge of the keeper or his employee of the fact that the person is a minor: State v. Probasco, 62-400.

Selling intoxicating liquor to minors, see INTOXICATING LIQUOR, §§ 68-76.

III. PROCEDURE IN COURTS OF RECORD.

1. What deemed a criminal procedure.

730. Violation of a city ordinance: A proceeding before a magistrate in the name of the city accusing defendant of the violation of a city ordinance is a criminal prosecution: Davenport v. Bird, 34-524.

731. The violation of an ordinance of a city punishing acts therein specified by a fine is a crime, and a prosecution to enforce the punishment is a criminal proceeding: Jaquith v. Royce, 42-406; State v. Vail, 57-103.

732. A proceeding before a mayor of an incorporated town to punish the violation of an ordinance is in the nature of a criminal prosecution: Columbus City v. Cutcomp, 61-672.

733. The provision of the constitution requiring prosecutions to be in the name of the state of Iowa refers to such criminal prosecutions as shall be instituted and prosecuted before a tribunal provided for in the constitution under the statutes of the state, and does not refer to prosecutions for violations of city ordinances: Davenport v. Bird, 34-524.

734. In name of city: A proceeding for violation of a city ordinance may be brought in the name of the city when so provided by law or ordinance; but if such prosecution is brought in the name of the state, without objection thereto until upon appeal, an objection on that ground will not be sustained: State v. King, 37-462.

735. An appeal by a city in a proceeding commenced in its name before a mayor by information to punish for the violation of a city ordinance is to be governed by the rules regulating appeals in criminal cases: Columbus City v. Cutcomp, 61-672.

736. Penalty; forfeiture: Where the statutes provide for a forfeiture in behalf of the school fund and also authorize a recovery of a penalty by the party injured, the provisions not being in the alternative, the enforcement of one does not prevent the enforcement of the other: Herriman v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 57-187.

737. Penalty implies prohibition, and where a penalty is imposed upon the doing of an act a prohibition is thereby implied, and a contract in violation of such prohibition is void: Gilman v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 40-200.

A bastardy proceeding is not criminal: See BASTARDY.

A proceeding to punish for contempt is quasi criminal: See CONTEMPT, §§ 20-22.

2. Prevention of crime; security to keep the peace.

738. Threats of violence to another may be ground to bind over to keep the peace, although coupled with a condition which includes the performance of a professional duty: Ritchey v. Davis, 11-124.

739. Appearance in court: The plaintiff is not bound to appear in the district court at the next term, and further prosecute the proceeding, and a failure to appear and prosecute does not subject him to judgment for costs: State v. Holliday, 22-397.

740. But he may become liable if he does further prosecute and his complaint is found groundless: State v. Leathers, 16-406.

741. If plaintiff does not appear, defendant is not entitled to a trial, but should be discharged. The decision of the justice in binding over is not to be called in question: State v. White, 47-555.

742. Evidence: Before the enactment of a statutory provision allowing defendant in a criminal prosecution to be a witness in his own behalf, he could not be a witness in his own behalf in a proceeding in the district court for security to keep the peace: State v. Darrington, 47-518.

743. That the evidence before the justice of the peace in a proceeding for security to keep the peace was not taken down in writing is not a ground for dismissing the proceeding against defendant in the district court. On the hearing, other evidence may be received than that produced before the justice: Gribble v. State, 8-217.

744. Costs: If defendant is discharged on the hearing in the district court, the costs in such court cannot be taxed against him: Ibid.

Extent of jurisdiction.—Venue.—Change of.

745. A person bound over to appear in the district court under security to keep the peace may be held liable for the costs, although the prosecutor does not appear in that court: Houston v. United States, Mor., 174.

746. Action on bond: Insanity is a defense to an action for breach of a bond to keep the peace: State v. Geddis, 42-264.

3. Extent of jurisdiction.

a. Venue.

747. Offense on Mississippi river: Jurisdiction being given to the state to punish offenses committed on the Mississippi river between the north and south boundaries of the state, the jurisdiction of the district court of each county bounded upon the river extends over the crimes committed upon such river between the north and south boundaries of such county: State v. Mullen, 35-199.

748. The jurisdiction of such court may extend to the punishment of the act of keeping a nuisance upon a boat moored to the east shore of an island situated on the east side of the center of the channel, and floating or resting upon the ground according to the stage of the water: Ibid.

749. Venue in larceny: Stealing property in another state and bringing it within this state constitutes the crime of larceny in the county into which the property is taken: State v. Bennett, 14-479.

750. Such offense is not, however, a crime commenced in one state and consummated in another, within statutory provisions as to such cases: Ibid.

751. Offenses committed near county boundaries: Under the statutory provision that an offense committed within five hundred yards of the boundary line of two counties may be prosecuted in either, held, that the county which had taken jurisdiction of the crime committed in an adjoining county within five hundred yards of the boundary between the two could not recover from the county in which the crime was committed the costs of the prosecution: Floyd County v. Cerro Gordo County, 47-186.

752. Offense partly in one county: The provision that an offense committed partly in one county and partly in another may be prosecuted in either does not apply to the crime of administering a drug to procure abortion, where the drug is administered in one county and the miscarriage takes place in another. In such case the crime is completed where the drug was administered with that intent: State v. Hollenbeck, 36-112.

753. Offense on boat: Under a statutory provision (Code, § 4161), an offense committed on a boat, raft, or vessel, may be prosecuted in any county through which such boat, raft or vessel may pass in the course of the voyage: Nash v. State, 2 G. Gr., 286.

754. Evidence as to venue: In a prosecution for assault it is sufficient for the state to prove the county in which the offense was committed. It is not requisite to prove either the village, city or township: State v. Gibson, 29-295.

755. The venue of a crime must be proven to warrant a conviction. Therefore where the prosecuting witness testified that the offense was committed at her father's house, and her father testified that he lived in the county where the case was tried, but there was no proof to show where he lived when the offense was committed, held, that the venue was not sufficiently proven: State v. Carr, 60-453.

756. Testimony in a particular case considered, and held to show that the crime charged in the indictment was committed in another county than that in which the indictment was found, and that the conviction was erroneous: State v. Byam, 54-409.

757. Judicial notice: The court will take judicial notice of the county in which an incorporated town is situated. Proof of the commission of the act in a certain town is sufficient proof of the commission within the county in which the town is located: State v. Reader, 60-527.

b. Change of venue.

758. Affidavits: Where the petition is based upon the prejudice of the judge, the statute does not require affidavits in support thereof, nor contemplate the introduction of testimony, but the judge is not required to allow a change in such case as a matter of course: State v. Mewherter, 46-88.

Change of venue.

759. In a particular case, held, that the showing for a change was sufficient to render the action of the court in refusing it erroneous: State v. Nash, 7-347, 366.

760. An attorney appointed by the court to defend a prisoner is not incompetent to make an affidavit to prove the facts necessary to entitle the prisoner to a change of venue: State v. Mooney, 10-506.

761. Counter-affidavits: In a prosecution for violation of a city ordinance, it is not improper to consider, upon an application for a change of venue, counter-affidavits of the citizens of the city that there is no such prejudice against such defendant in the county as to entitle him to such change: State v. Wells, 46-662.

762. Discretion of the court in granting: The question of allowing the change rests in the sound discretion of the court, and unless such discretion has been abused the supreme court, on appeal, will not interfere with the decision: State v. Ostrander, 18-435, 447; State v. Ross, 21-467; State v. Collins, 32-86; State v. Feller, 32-49.

763. But this discretion is not absolute, nor an arbitrary discretion: State v. Hutchinson, 27-212.

764. If it appear that this discretion has been improperly exercised, the action of the court will be reviewed and reversed; and in a particular case the refusal to grant a change was held error: State v. Canada, 48-448.

765. The rule that the court is to pass upon the question of granting a change of venue in the exercise of a sound discretion applies to cases where the change is asked on the ground of prejudice of the judge, or excitement and prejudice of the people of the county, and although these grounds may be averred in the very language of the statute, they do not entitle the prisoner to a change as a matter of right (explaining State v. Nash, 7-347; State v. Mooney, 10-506): State v. Arnold, 12-479; Gordon v. State, 8-410; State v. Barrett, 8-536.

766. Abuse of discretion in denying a change of venue must be made to appear, or the decision of the court will not be interfered with, even when the ground alleged is the prejudice of the judge: State v. Ray, 50-520; State v. Knight, 19-94; State v. Ingalls, 17-8; State v. Freeman, 1 Mewherter, 46-88.

767. To justify a reversal of the action of the judge in granting a change of venue, it must be shown affirmatively that there was an abuse of the discretion reposed in the court in terminating the same: State v. ...

768. Therefore, where an application for a change of venue was a mere matter of belief of the applicant that he was prejudiced, founded on alleged facts, the existence of which the applicant could not prove by personal knowledge, held, that such showing was insufficient to overcome the discretion arising from the action of the court in granting the change: Ibid.

769. Even though the petition for a change of venue is based upon the prejudice of the judge, it shows sufficient ground, if the change is granted, it does not follow that the petition should be granted as a matter of course. Some latitude is left to the judge in granting or refusing upon such petition. He may consider the feelings, as well as the paper evidence, in denying the change as he may deem proper. In a particular case, showing for a change in such venue was sufficient to require the reversal of the court in refusing it: 65-61.

770. Where an application for a change of venue on account of the prejudice of the judge, and overruled, and in response to an objection to the change by defendant, the judge refused to grant it, intended to give the defendant a fair trial, than he was entitled to, held, that the mark showed prejudice on the part of the judge, and that the motion for a change of venue should have been sustained: 49-85.

771. Where the record fails to show that the evidence is all that was presented at the hearing of the application for a change of venue, the supreme court cannot review the correctness of the action of the court: State v. Mallory, 11-241, 416.

772. Where a showing is made for a change of venue based on the ground of excitement and prejudice of the inhabitants of the resisted by affidavits on the part of the state, the supreme court will, on appeal, be slow to interfere with an order denying the change. The record must show that there was an abuse of discretion in determining the matter: State v. Williams, 63-185. And in a particular case held that the showing was not sufficient to necessitate a reversal: State v. Perigo, 70—.

773. It does not follow that because a change of venue on the ground of prejudice of the inhabitants of the county has been improperly denied, and the case is reversed on that ground, that when the case comes on for trial anew, the defendant will be entitled to such change on the affidavits before filed: State v. Nash, 7-347, 374.

774. Error in overruling an application for change of venue will not entitle the defendant to a release on habeas corpus: Jackson v. Boyd, 58-536.

775. In police court: There is no provision for change of venue in proceedings before a police court for violation of a city ordinance. The provisions in that respect with reference to prosecutions before justices of the peace do not apply: Zelle v. McHenry, 51-572.

776. The transcript of record entries which is required to be made by the clerk in transferring the case upon change of venue to another county does not include the indictment itself, which is required to be transmitted in its original form: Sharp v. State, 2-454.

777. It is not error to allow the clerk of the court from which a change of venue is taken to amend his certificate by interlineation to supply an omission, there being no question as to the truthfulness of the amendment: State v. Gibson, 29-295.

778. Where an indictment upon which defendant is put on trial appears to have been properly found in the county from which the change is taken, and no objection is made thereto until after verdict, defendant cannot object that it is not filed in the court in which the trial is had: Sharp v. State, 2-454.

779. Bail: The clerk of the court to which the change is granted has power to take a recognizance for the appearance of the prisoner: State v. Merrihew, 47-112.

780. The form of bond required upon granting a change of venue is substantially the same as that prescribed in other cases of bail: Ibid.

781. The statutory provision as to giving a new bond upon change of venue, for appearance in the court to which the case is changed, is directory, and does not operate to release the sureties on the original bail bond, who are still responsible for defendant's appearance: State v. Brown, 16-314.

782. Costs: Under a statutory provision that the county from which a criminal case is taken by change of venue shall pay to the county to which it is taken all costs of the change and trial, "which shall be audited and allowed by the court trying the cause" (Code, § 4381), held, that an indorsement by the judge not purporting to act as the court, recommending the allowance of an amount for costs, was not an auditing and allowance binding upon the county: Barnes v. Marion County, 54-482.

4. Limitation of time for commencing prosecution.

783. How raised: The statute of limitations in a criminal proceeding cannot be raised by demurrer to the indictment: State v. Hussey, 7-409; State v. Groome, 10-808; State v. Deitrick, 51-467.

784. The clause of the section of the statute of limitations in criminal proceedings providing that the statute shall not run during the time of the non-residence of defendant is not to be restricted to offenses committed when the defendant is out of the state, but applies equally to all cases: State v. McIntire, 58-572.

785. A defendant in a prosecution for embezzlement is not estopped by subsequent fraudulent statements from showing that the defalcation actually took place at such time that the prosecution therefor is barred: State v. Hutchinson, 60-478.

786. Under former provisions, held, that the filing of information before a justice of the peace under which defendant was arrested and bound over to appear before the district court was a sufficient commencement of the prosecution: State v. Groome, 10-808. (But the present statute requires the indictment to be found within the time specified: Code, § 4166.)

Acquiring jurisdiction; arrest; extradition.

787. It is not error to instruct the jury that they must find that the crime was committed on or about the time charged or at any date within the statutory period of limitations prior to the finding of the indictment: State v. Fry, 67-475.

788. Where an offense is charged as committed on a particular day, defendant may be convicted by proof of the commission of the offense on any day within the statutory period of limitations: State v. Briggs, 68-416.

Further as to allegations in the indictment as to the time of commission of the offense charged, see infra, §§ 1029-1036.

5. Acquiring jurisdiction; arrest; extradition.

789. Jurisdiction first acquired: The court first acquiring authority over the accused by his arrest, or by otherwise obtaining custody of his person through its officers, first acquires jurisdiction of the case. The finding of an indictment does not confer jurisdiction of the person of the accused: Ex parte Baldwin, 69-502.

790. The power to imprison necessarily includes the power to arrest: Davenport v. Bird, 34-524.

791. What constitutes arrest: It is not essential in order to constitute an arrest that the sheriff should have informed the prisoner of his intention to make the arrest, and that he was a peace officer. While the prisoner might ordinarily be entitled to such information, the legality of the arrest as between the sheriff and other parties is in no manner affected by the sheriff's failure in these respects: Miller v. Dickinson County, 68-102.

792. Peace officer: A special constable appointed by a justice of the peace under the provisions of Code, § 3630, is not a peace officer: Foster v. Clinton County, 51-541.

793. The marshal is a peace officer and may therefore arrest a person guilty of vagrancy and serve the order of a justice of the peace committing such person to imprisonment, and hold the prisoner under such order: State v. Watson, 66-670.

794. Bench warrant: The issuance of a bench warrant is not essential to give the court jurisdiction of defendant. Appearance and submission to the jurisdiction of the court renders a warrant unnecessary: v. Ray, 50-520.

795. Warrant, when returnable: That the warrant for arrest is returnable after its issuance, instead of being void, does not render it void: State v.

796. Arrest by officer without warrant: Where an officer makes an arrest without a warrant on proper cause, he is not liable for taking an offender for a reasonable time before a magistrate, and will not be liable for doing so: Hutchinson v. San, 340.

797. A peace officer may arrest without a warrant, when a person has in fact been committed, and he is not liable for believing that the person has committed it; and it is not error to charge the jury in such a case that an officer makes an arrest without a warrant, and he will be liable, unless the person was likely to escape: Montgo, 67-497.

798. Resistance to arrest: Where a person is arrested for murder committed in violation of a lawful arrest, the information under which the arrest was made may be given in evidence: Meshek, 61-316.

799. Wrongful arrest out of state: It is no defense that defendant was arrested in another state without a warrant, and brought to this state by force: State v. Ross, 21-467.

800. A court will not, upon a plea of not guilty, inquire into whether or not the defendant was properly or improperly brought within the jurisdiction of the court: State v.

As to reward for arrest: See CONTRACTS, §§ 57-63.

801. Search of person of arrested: Police officers upon the arrest of a person with felony may make search of the person for stolen property, instruments of the crime, or anything that may give a clue to its commission: Lee, 44-101.

802. The sheriff is justified in the person arrested and taking from him money or property connected in any way with the crime charged, or which may serve in identifying the prisoner, or be used by him in effecting an escape: Commercial Exchange Bank v. McLeod, 65-665.

803. Property thus taken from a prisoner by the officer, and which is not connected with nor the fruit of the crime for which he is arrested, is in the possession of the officer for the person under arrest, and is no more subject to attachment than if it were in the prisoner's personal possession: Ibid.

804. But where the money taken from the prisoner was the money obtained by him through the commission of the crime for which he was arrested, held, that it was subject to garnishment in the hands of the officer at the suit of the person rightfully entitled thereto: Reifsnnyder v. Lee, 44-101.

Further, see SEARCH WARRANTS.

805. Extradition; fugitive from justice: To constitute a person a fugitive from justice, he must have been in the state where the crime is alleged to have been committed, must have there committed the crime, and must have fled therefrom to escape punishment. The state is not bound to surrender one of its citizens who has constructively committed a crime in another state, without having been there in person: Jones v. Leonard, 50-106.

806. The fact that the governor considers the evidence submitted to him sufficient, and issues his warrant accordingly, does not preclude inquiry by the courts as to the sufficiency of such evidence, and his decision may be questioned in a habeas corpus proceeding: Ibid.

807. The sufficiency of evidence in a particular case, doubted: Ibid.

808. Compensation of officer: Under Code, § 4172, a contract to pay an officer a fee or reward for arresting and bringing back an escaped prisoner by means of a requisition is not valid, even though entered into by a surety on the bail bond of such prisoner: Day v. Townsend, 70—.

809. Detention to await requisition: Under a statute (Code, § 4176) authorizing the arrest and binding over of a person found within the state liable to be demanded from another state upon requisition, held, that such a proceeding was only applicable where the person arrested was charged with a crime committed in some other state, before some court, magistrate or other officer of such state by an indictment, information or other accusation known to its laws, and that unless such fact was made to appear, the magistrate had no jurisdiction to bind over the person arrested to await a requisition: State v. Hufford, 28-891.

810. If in such case bail is taken without its being shown that the person arrested is properly charged in some other state, the proceedings are void and a recovery cannot be had on the bail bond: Ibid.

811. A party thus arrested charged with murder in the second degree is entitled to release on bail under the provisions of the constitution: Ibid.

6. Preliminary examination.

812. Defendant as a witness: Before the Code was amended so as to allow defendant in a criminal prosecution to be a witness in his own behalf, he might testify in a preliminary examination: State v. Laffer, 38-422.

813. But he was not a competent witness for himself on a trial on an information for security to keep the peace: State v. Darrington, 47-518.

814. Minutes of the evidence taken down by the examining magistrate as required by law are not competent as evidence on the trial of the case: State v. Collins, 33-36; State v. Hull, 26-292.

815. Neither are such minutes admissible for the purpose of impeaching the witness on the trial: State v. Hayden, 45-11.

816. But the testimony given on the preliminary examination, by a witness who dies before the trial, may be proved on the trial by witnesses who heard it: State v. Fitzgerald, 63-268.

817. Although the minutes are not properly certified to by the magistrate, yet if the grand jury act thereon, and return a proper memorandum thereof to the court in connection with the indictment, as required by Code, § 4289, the defendant cannot object to the calling of witnesses whose names are indorsed on the back of the indictment, and a memorandum of whose testimony is thus returned: State v. Kepper, 65-745.

Grand jury.—Formation; challenges.

818. Fees: The magistrate or a person appointed by him to write out the minutes of the testimony cannot recover compensation therefor from the county. The usual fees of the magistrate, in such cases, for conducting the examination are all that are allowed: Sanford v. Lee County, 49-148.

819. The magistrate is entitled to be reimbursed by the county for expenses of stationery used in taking down minutes of the evidence: Evans v. Story County, 35-126.

820. Commitment; warrant: The warrant of commitment in a particular case held sufficient: Cowell v. Patterson, 49-514.

821. The fact that the defendant was bound over by the justice will be presumed in an action on a bail bond given upon such commitment, but if it appears that no such order was made, that fact is a proper matter of defense: State v. Patterson, 23-575.

822. Prosecuting witness: The person filing complaint is to be treated as the prosecuting witness, and the fact that he is subpoenaed as a witness by the state does not change his situation: In re Trenchard, 16-58.

823. Appeal by prosecuting witness from an order taxing the costs of the prosecution to him must be taken at the time judgment is rendered and not afterwards: State v. Knapp, 61-522.

824. Putting witness under bond to appear; witness fees: A witness who is required by a committing magistrate to enter into a written undertaking, with security, to appear and testify on the trial of the case, and is committed to jail for failure to furnish security, is not entitled to witness fees for the time he is thus held in confinement: Markwell v. Warren County, 53-422.

7. Grand jury and its action.

a. Formation; challenges.

825. Irregularity in jury lists: It is not a valid objection to a grand jury that the judges of election, in making returns of names of persons to serve as grand jurors, returned in all eighty-five names instead of seventy-five, as required by law, if the extra names had been stricken off before the grand jury was drawn and fifteen jurors have been regularly drawn and summoned.

Neither is it a sufficient objection that the names thus returned were not entered in the election book: State v. Knight, 19-94.

826. Filling panel: If a grand juror is discharged subsequently to the formation of the jury, the panel should be filled by the summoning of another juror: Norris' House v. State, 3 G. Gr., 513.

As to filling panel after challenges have been allowed, see infra, §§ 862-867.

827. Objection to the substitution of one grand juror for another without having the vacancy filled in the manner required by law must be made at the time of such substitution: State v. Howard, 10-101.

828. New precept: The provision of statute (Code, § 244) for the issuance of a new precept applies only to a case where all the jurors fail to appear, or it is determined that the whole panel has been illegally selected or drawn. Such provision has no reference to the case of failure of jurors to attend: State v. Pierce, 8-231.

829. Where a part of the grand jury fails to appear, the court may orally direct the sheriff to summon a sufficient number to complete the panel, which order should be entered of record, but a written precept is not necessary: State v. Miller, 53-84; State v. Miller, 53-154.

830. The discharge of one grand juror and the impaneling of another to which there is no objection except the fact that the first has been erroneously discharged will be no ground for quashing an indictment found by the second: State v. Hughes, 58-165.

831. At least this is so where there is no allegation or showing of prejudice or possible injustice to defendant from the fact of the discharge of the first jury: State v. Hart, 67-142.

832. Re-summoning: A grand jury having once been discharged may be re-summoned at the same term: State v. Reid, 20-413.

833. Talesmen chosen to fill the places of absent grand jurors are to serve during the term at which they are summoned, and if the jury is discharged and re-summoned during the term, such talesmen are to be re-summoned with the others: Ibid.

834. Expiration of term: The grand jury does not terminate by reason of the fact that the term of court commencing within the year for which they were chosen extends into the following year without an adjournment of the term; State v. Winebrenner, 67-230.

835. Defects, how raised: Under a statute requiring the board of county commissioners to deliver copies of jury lists to the clerk thirty days before the commencement of the term, held, that failure to comply therewith was a defect in the proceedings which might be raised by plea in abatement: United States v. Cropper, Mor., 190.

836. The court has no power to remove, reform or change the members of the grand jury: Keittler v. State, 4 G. Gr., 291.

837. Irregularities not prejudicial: Where there has been no substantial departure in the selection, drawing, etc., of the grand jury affecting substantially the rights of defendant, a motion to set aside the indictment for irregularities in connection with their selection should not be sustained: State v. Brandt, 41-593.

838. It would seem that deviations from the method pointed out for the selection, etc., of the grand jury, of a slight and unimportant nature, should not be regarded: State v. Carney, 20-82.

839. Selection of foreman may be made either from grand jurors regularly drawn or from those summoned to supply a deficiency: State v. Brandt, 41-593.

840. Grounds of challenge; exemptions from service: Although justices of the peace, supervisors, ministers of the Gospel, etc., are exempt from service upon a grand jury, they are not necessarily incompetent, and their presence will not vitiate the panel. The exemption is a personal privilege which may be waived: State v. Adams, 20-486.

841. Alienage: That a member of the grand jury is an alien is a ground of challenge, but not a ground for setting aside an indictment: State v. Gibbs, 39-318.

842. Alienage will not be presumed. The party asserting it as a ground of challenge has the burden of proving it: State v. Haynes, 54-109.

843. Bias; opinion of guilt or innocence: Under a statute somewhat different from the one now in force, held, that it was only where a juror had formed or expressed an unqualified opinion of defendant's guilt that he was disqualified as a juror, and that the fact that he had formed an opinion which, upon further interrogation, he stated was not unqualified, did not render him incompetent: State v. Hinkle, 6-380.

844. The statement of a juror that he had read some portion of the evidence taken at a coroner's inquest upon the body of the person with whose killing defendant was charged, but did not know that he had read the whole of it, and that he thought he had formed an opinion from what he had read as to the guilt of defendant, but that he had no prejudice or bias such as would prevent him from listening to the evidence and passing upon the question of guilt as impartially as though he had never heard of the case, held, not sufficient to show that he was disqualified: State v. Shelton, 64-333.

845. Where a case is sent back to the same grand jury after a former indictment found by them is set aside, it is a sufficient cause of challenge to the jurors that they have heard the evidence upon which the previous indictment was found, and by the finding of such indictment have formed and expressed an opinion as to the guilt of defendant: State v. Gillick, 7-287; State v. Osborne, 61-330.

846. It seems that a challenge to a grand juror may be allowed for any cause that would constitute an objection to a petit juror: State v. Gillick, 7-287.

847. Challenge to panel: That the grand jury is reorganized during the term is not a ground of challenge to the panel: State v. Mooney, 10-506.

848. Who may challenge; prosecution: In the absence of express statutory authority the prosecution has no right to challenge members of the grand jury: Keittler v. State, 4 G. Gr., 291. (Such challenge is authorized as to individual jurors by Code, § 4259.)

849. Defendant bound over: Where defendant was bound over to appear before the grand jury after the grand jury was organized, held, that he was still entitled to exercise his right of challenge to such grand jury: State v. Mooney, 10-506.

850. A defendant under arrest in a preliminary proceeding but not yet bound over to appear before the grand jury is not entitled to challenge grand jurors although it is possible that his case may afterwards come before them: State v. Fitzgerald, 63-268.

851. Time for challenge: The time within which the right of challenge to grand jurors shall be exercised is not prescribed, and the prisoner ought to be permitted to exercise it at any time before the consideration of his case. Therefore, where a case is re-submitted to the same grand jury after a previous indictment has been set aside, the prisoner should be allowed an opportunity to challenge the members of such grand jury on the ground that they have previously formed and expressed an opinion in returning the first indictment: State v. Osborne, 61-330; State v. Gillick, 7-287.
